Secondly, I anſwer, He may be ſaid to hate right that doth not approve right, that doth not love and delight in it; not to love, not to delight in that which is right, is to hate the right. As he that doth not love God, is a hater of God; the ſecond Commandment ſpeaks thus, I the Lord thy God am a jealous God, viſiting the iniquity of the fathers upon the children, unto the third and fourth generation of them that hate me, and ſhewing mercy to thouſands of them that love me, and keep my Commandments. Hating of God, and loving of God, divide the whole world; they that do not love God hate him; there is no middle of participation between theſe two, between the love and hatred of God; ſo there is a hatred of Juſtice or right in him who loves it not; though a man do not make profeſſion againſt it, yet if he hath not an affection to it, he will at laſt be found amongſt that moſt hateful company, the haters of righteouſneſs: Not to hate evil is to love it; and not to love good, is to hate it in Gods account. Many ſtand as Neuters in the dayes of this world; but in that great day of the end of the world, there will be no Neuters ſeen; all ſhall ſtand in two parts, either among the Sheep or Goats; and among all the Sheep there will not be one found, who hath not been a lover of Goodneſs and Righteouſneſs; nor one among all the Goats, who hath not been (in the judgment and eſteem of God) a hater of them.

Thirdly, They may be ſaid (in a degree) to hate right, who though they have ſome love to it, yet love it in a leſs degree then they ſhould, or leſs then they ought; A lower or leſſer degree of love, is a kind of hatred in Scripture Language: The Law of Moſes ſaith (Deut. 21.15,16,17.) If a man have two wives, one beloved, and another hated, and they have born him children, both the beloved and the hated; and if the firſt-born ſon be hers that was hated; then it ſhall be when he maketh his ſon inherit that which he hath, that he may not make the ſon of the beloved firſt-born before the ſon of the hated, &c. But what doth he mean by the wife that is hated? Surely the wife that is not ſo much loved; though he loved both truly, yet not loving both in the ſame degree, he is ſaid to hate one of them: So I conceive that Scripture is to be underſtood (Luke 14.26.) where Chriſt gives the rule concerning Diſciple-ſhip, If any man come to me, and hate not his father, and mother, and wife, and children, and brethren, and ſiſters, yea, and his own life alſo, he cannot be my Diſciple: When Chriſt layeth this charge upon his Diſciples, to hate wife, and children, &c. would he have his Diſciples turn their hatred upon thoſe relations? The rule of the Word forbids that: So then, his meaning is only this, if in caſe of following me, a man find any ſtop or hindrance by theſe, he muſt not let out his love, ſo to wife, and children, &c. as to hinder his coming to, or following of me. Every man maſt take off ſo much love from theſe deareſt worldly enjoyments, as hinders men in following Chriſt; and he who through grace is enabled to do ſo, is in a true and clear Goſpel ſenſe ſaid to hate them. That which we can leave for Chriſt, we hate in compariſon of that love which we bear to Chriſt. Thus in the Text and Point, they may be ſaid to hate the right, who bear not a due proportion of love unto it; not to love righteouſneſs with higheſt and warmeſt affections, is a degree of hatred. Some love the right, but they love it lightly, they love it leſs then riches and gain; and therefore for ſelf-gain they turn aſide from, and forſake the right. Some will ſpeak fair for Juſtice, till the offer of private advantage either put out their eyes, or ſtop their mouths; he that loves not to do right to others more then to inrich himſelf, will quickly wrong others to inrich himſelf: Now he that upon any terms or conſideration whatſoever (though it were to the advantage only of ſome others who are poor and diſtreſſed, much more when it's for his own advantage) is drawn to pervert the right, is a hater of it. Remember, any leſſer degree of love to that which is right, may at any time be interpreted the hatred of it; and when we love it leſs then our own concernments, we cannot reſiſt temptations which intice us to do that which will declare a direct hatred of it.

Thirdly, From the whole tenour of theſe words, Shall he that hateth right govern?

Note, They that hate right, or righteouſneſs, are altogether unfit to govern, or to be Governours.

Nothing is more contrary to the ſtate of Government, or the qualification of a Governour, then to hate right; Righteouſneſs is the ſphere wherein he ought to walk, and never to move out of it; 'tis the buſineſs he hath to do, the trade which he hath to drive; whatſoever he doth in that capacity, he muſt be doing righteous things. So far as any man hath the power of Government in his hand, if it be but over a Family, much more over a Nation, he ought to do right; David's prayer for himſelf as a King, and for his Son who was to ſucceed him in the Kingdom, was only and altogether this (Pſal. 72. 1.) Give the King thy Judgments, O Lord, and thy Righteouſneſs unto the Kings Son; that is, teach both me and him what is right, give us a heart conformable to it, and a readineſs of mind alwayes to do it: That's the ſcope of his prayer when he ſaid, Give the King thy Judgments, O Lord, and thy Righteouſneſs to the Kings Son: Nor doth he barely pray for the gift of Judgment and Righteouſneſs, but he puts the ſtamp of God upon them; Give them thy Judgments, and thy righteouſneſs. It is poſſible for Kings to have a judgment of their own, and a righteouſneſs of their own, which are not the Judgments nor the Righteouſneſs of God. For as there is a Righteouſneſs of God, which ſome being ignorant of, truſt to a righteouſneſs of their own for the juſtification of their perſon; ſo there is a Righteouſneſs of God for the government of man, which ſome neglecting, uſe only a righteouſneſs of their own, both in condemning and juſtifying other mens both perſons and cauſes; Princes being in Gods place, ſhould exalt the Righteouſneſs of God in the governing of men. And therefore the ſame David in his dying ſong ſpake thus (2 Sam. 23. 3.) He that ruleth over men muſt be juſt, ruling in the fear of God; whoever he is he muſt be juſt, and he muſt be juſt in the fear of God, which he can never be, but in giving out the Righteouſneſs of God; that is, in diſpenſing that for righteouſneſs, which is right according to the will of God. And if he muſt do right thus, how ſhall he do it if he hate it? No man will do that willingly or conſtantly which he hateth; he that hates right is ſo far from doing it himſelf, that he cannot abide others ſhould do it. Whereas a Governour is not only to do right himſelf, but to appoint others to do it, and to ſee that they do it; or elſe to puniſh them for not doing it. The Rulers of the earth are ſaid to bear the Sword (Rom. 13. 4.) And they are ſaid to be Shields (Pſal. 47. 9.) They are Shields to protect the good, and Swords to take vengeance of thoſe that do evil; both which are the works of righteouſneſs. And if ſo, Shall ever he that hateth right govern?

Fieri ne poteſt ut qui omnibus imperat, juris amans non ſit, aut quicquam injuſte agat. Merc.

And wilt thou condemn him that is moſt juſt?

The ſcope of Elihu in the former part of the verſe was to demonſtrate that God is no hater of right, or righteouſneſs, for he is not only a Governour, but the Governour, all the world over, or over all the world; and it were a moſt abſurd thing, to think that he ſhould be the Governour of the world, and yet be a hater of right: Can it be imagin'd, that he who ruleth all men ſhould wrong any man? Now ſeeing God who ruleth all is alwayes moſt righteous, Wilt thou (O Job) condemn him (ſaith Elihu) that is moſt juſt? God our Governour is ſo far from hating, that he is ever promoting Juſtice; he that is ſo is moſt juſt; And wilt thou condemn him that is moſt juſt?

Wilt thou condemn?] To condemn is to ſit in judgment, and give ſentence againſt another. Wilt thou condemn, or give ſentence againſt God? Wilt thou (as ſome tranſlate according to the ſtrictneſs of the Original) make him wicked, that is moſt juſt? Elihu makes uſe of a very hard and ſevere word, and it is conceived that he purpoſely pitcht upon it, or pickt it out, to convince Job, that it is no ſmall fault, or offence, to complain of or to quarrel with the dealings of God. 'Tis indeed to condemn God, and to make him wicked, as the word imports; Wilt thou condemn him, Et an juſtū inſignem impium facis? Heb.

That is moſt juſt?] Here are two words; in the Hebrew we put them together, and ſo render them by a ſuperlative, moſt juſt. Some tranſlate, Wilt thou condemn him that is ſtrong and juſt? That is, ſtrongly juſt, mightily juſt: God is full of ſtrength and might, ſo full that he, and he only is Almighty; yet his might never exceedeth right, nor his ſtrength his juſtice. Strength and juſtice are commenſurate in God. And while he is ſo ſtrong, that he can do what he will, he is ſo juſt that he will do nothing but what is righteous.

כביר צדק Validum juſtum, i. e. qui valdè juſtus eſt. Druſ. Num eum, qui κατ' ἐξοχὴν juſtus eſt, ut Deus omniū judicio eſt, injuſtitiæ damnare ſuſtines, 1 כביר poteſt exponi validum, num juſtum & potentem eum qui ſimul & juſtus & potens eſt damnare audes, ſed malo 2 כביר exponere per מאד multum valde, q.d. enim qui ſumme juſtus eſt audes damnare, de eo queri, quaſi tibi ſit iniquior. Rab. Sel. Merc.

Further, I find others joyning the word ſtrong, with the word condemn: As if Elihu had ſaid, Wilt thou ſo confidently, and pertinaciouſly condemn the juſt God? To condemn God, though but a little, to paſs the eaſieſt ſentence of condemnation upon him is bad enough; but wilt thou ſtrongly condemn him? We render clearly to the ſcope of the place, Wilt thou condemn him that is moſt juſt?

Hence Note, Firſt, God is moſt juſt, or altogether juſt.

He is ſtrongly juſt, mightily juſt; as he is ſtrongly merciful, putting forth a power in pardoning ſin, and ſhewing mercy, ſo he is ſtrongly juſt, or altogether juſt. The rule given to Judges by Moſes ſpeaketh thus (Deut. 16. 20.) That which is altogether juſt ſhalt thou follow. We put in the Margin, Juſtice, Juſtice, ſhalt thou do; that is, thou ſhalt do pure juſtice, nothing but juſtice, or juſtice without the leaſt mixture, tincture, or (if it be poſſible) without the leaſt ſhadow of injuſtice. I may ſay, juſtice, juſtice is God; that is, he is altogether juſt, ſtrongly juſt, everlaſtingly and unchangeably juſt. God is juſt under a threefold notion.

Firſt, As to be juſt is taken largely, importing a perſon accompliſhed with concurrence of all perfections, and vertuous qualities. In that ſenſe, I ſuppoſe, the Apoſtle uſeth the word (1 Tim. 1. 9.) The Law is not given for (that is, to terrifie or condemn) a juſt man; that is, for a man who is holy and good. Thus God is altogether juſt; for he hath all the lines of perfection, of holineſs, and goodneſs centring in him; he is not only juſt and vertuous, but juſtice and vertue it ſelf.

Δικαιός ἐστιν ὁ πᾶσαν ἀρετὴν ἔχων. Phavor.

Secondly, To be juſt, imports the keeping of promiſes, and the performance of our word. He is a juſt man, who when he hath ſpoken, you may know what to have of him, and where to have him. Some give words, and you can get nothing of them but words, that's injuſtice, becauſe our words bind us, and ſhould be as laws to us. A man may chuſe whether he will make promiſes, but when he hath promiſed it is not in his choice whether he will perform or no; his Word binds him. In this ſenſe God is altogether juſt. Whatſoever word you have had from God (and he hath given us many comfortable words for every condition) God is a juſt God, and will perform it to a tittle. That glorious and everlaſting witneſs is born to him by dying Joſhua (Joſh. 23. 14.) And behold this day I am going the way of all the earth, and ye know in all your hearts, and in all your ſouls, that not one thing hath failed of all the good things which the Lord your God ſpake concerning you; all are come to paſs unto you, and not one thing hath failed thereof. In this ſenſe God is ſaid to be, not only merciful, but juſt in forgiving our ſins (1 John 1. 9.) If we confeſs our ſins, he is faithful and juſt to forgive us our ſins, and to cleanſe us from all unrighteouſneſs. If we confeſs our ſins ſpiritually and believingly, deeply, humbly, and affectionately; if we confeſs thus, he is juſt to forgive; Why, Becauſe he hath given a promiſe to forgive thoſe who make ſuch confeſſions of ſin. And thus 'tis in any other promiſe; he keeps his word, he keeps touch with man, he will not fail nor come ſhort in the leaſt, therefore he is altogether juſt.

Thirdly, He is juſt in the ſtricteſt acception of juſtice, giving every one his due. It is poſſible for a man to be juſt in neither of the two former notions, he may neither be vertuous in his actions, nor a keeper of his word as a man, and yet he may be juſt as a Magiſtrate, juſt as in a cauſe committed to his determination. But God is juſt in all theſe three conſiderations of a juſt man, and therefore he is eminently, or altogether juſt. And I conceive, the latter of the three is chiefly intended here, God is moſt juſt; that is, he never did, nor ever will, give an undue or an undeſerved ſentence upon any man.

I might ſhew diſtinctly, that God is juſt, and how juſt he is; Firſt, In rewarding thoſe that do well; Secondly, In puniſhing thoſe that do ill. And that becauſe he doth it; Firſt, By a Law; Secondly, By a Law publiſhed; Thirdly, By a Law poſſible (our inability of keeping the Law is conſequential to the giving of it; man hath drawn it upon himſelf) though now he cannot perform it at all, yet God is juſt in puniſhing, becauſe he ſins againſt a Law that he had a power (in his head or repreſentative) to have fulfilled. Fourthly, God is juſt, becauſe the penalties which he inflicteth flow from a right and juſt Law (as the Apoſtle ſpeaks, Rom. 7. 12.) The Law is holy, and juſt, and good; and therefore all the awards that are grounded upon it muſt needs be juſt too. Fifthly, He puniſheth juſtly, becauſe he never puniſheth but upon proof and evidence; yea, he will make every mans Conſcience a witneſs againſt himſelf, or condemn him out of his own mouth. Sixthly, He puniſheth juſtly, becauſe he puniſheth impartially, neither fear, nor hope, nor favour, can divert him (Iſa. 27. 11. Jer. 22. 24.) Seventhly, He doth not only puniſh in a proportion to the Law, but often in a proportion to the ſin, and that not only to the meaſure of the ſin, but to the manner of the ſin; as that cruel King Adonibezek confeſſed, when himſelf was cruelly dealt with (his thumbs and great toes being cut off, Judg. 1. 7.) As I have done ſo God hath requited me: As if he had ſaid, God is juſt not only becauſe he hath puniſhed me in meaſure according to my ſin, but after the very ſame manner in which I ſinned, he hath, as it were, hit my ſin in the eye of all beholders; what I have done may be ſeen by what I ſuffer.

> Note, Secondly, To condemn God, who is moſt juſt, is the higheſt point of injuſtice.

Wilt thou condemn him that is moſt juſt? Wilt thou do ſuch a thing? What? Condemn him that is moſt juſt! How great a wickedneſs is this, if we conſider, Firſt, That whatever God doth, we ought to be patient under it. Secondly, That whatſoever God doth, we ought to acquieſce or reſt quietly and contentedly in it; that's more then to be patient. Thirdly, That whatſoever he doth, we ought to approve and juſtifie God in it. Fourthly, That we ought to magnifie God whatſoever he doth, though his diſpenſations are bitter and burthenſom; and if we do ſo we ſhall find the bittereſt diſpenſations ſweet to us. Now if we ought to be patient under, to acquieſce in, to approve of, yea, to magnifie and exalt the Name of God in all his dealings with us and determinations concerning us, then how ſinful is it to condemn him? What? Shall ſuch poor creatures as we take upon us to cenſure and condemn the works of God! Some ſay it at leaſt in their hearts, if they had the reins of government in their hands, they would carry things evener then God doth; they would put all things right, if they might have the rule; if they might a while do as they think fit, they would do all things fitly. Some will talk thus arrogantly of their fitneſs to govern the whole world, who have not wit enough to govern their own families; nor any grace at all to govern themſelves; yea, they will preſume they could govern all men, who are ſcarce fit to govern a heard of ſwine, or as Job ſpeaks (Chap. 30. 1.) To be ſet over the dogs of a mans flock; ſuch as theſe will take upon them to govern the world, and ſay they could do it better then 'tis done. Things ſhould not go thus, if they might have their will. Though indeed (like that raſh and inconſiderate young man in the fabulous Poet, who deſired for one day at leaſt to be Charioteer to the Sun) if they might have their will, they would ſet the whole world a-fire, or put all into a flame in one day. Thus, Vain man would be wiſe (as Zophar ſaid, Chap. 11. 12.) though man be born like a wild Aſſes Colt; that is, being altogether unwilling to be governed by any right Law, he would fain give the Law to and govern all; What is this but to condemn the moſt juſt? And how great, how blaſphemouſly impudent a wickedneſs is this!

But ſome may ſay, Did Job ever thus condemn God?

I anſwer; He did not condemn him in ſo many words, he did not formally ſit upon his Tribunal and condemn God, but he ſpake ſuch words as did ſhew a condemning of God, and Elihu juſtly condemned him for ſpeaking them.

> Hence Note, Laſtly, Not to ſubmit freely to, or to complain of the dealings of God, is a condemning of God.

This is a hard ſaying, we may be almoſt aſtoniſhed to hear it, What? Condemn God? Yea, ſo far as any man murmurs againſt the dealings of God, ſo far he condemns God. The Works of God muſt be ſubmitted to as well as his Word, his Diſpenſations muſt be obeyed as well as his Laws and Conſtitutions. Our complaints of what he doth are cenſures of his Perſon. We queſtion not only the Soveraignty and Power of God, but his very Wiſdom, and Truth, and Juſtice, when we reluct againſt any of his actings or awards concerning us, though they produce our greateſt ſufferings. This Elihu further aggravates in the next words, Is it fit to ſay to a King, Thou art wicked? And to Princes, Ye are ungodly? If men will be mannerly to Princes, how much more mannerly ought they to be towards God?

VERS. 18, 19.

Is it fit to ſay to a King, Thou art wicked? And to Princes, Ye are ungodly?

How much leſs to him that accepteth not the Perſons of Princes, nor regardeth the rich more then the poor? For they are all the work of his hands.

These two verſes are both an illuſtration, and a confirmation or proof of what Elihu ſpake laſt in the cloſe of the ſeventeenth verſe, Wilt thou condemn him that is moſt juſt? Hereupon he inſers, Verſe 18. Is it fit to ſay to a King, Thou art wicked?

Thoſe words, Is it fit, are not literally and expreſly in the Hebrew; and therefore ſome connect theſe two verſes immediately with the former; Wilt thou condemn him that is moſt juſt? Who ſaith to a King, O thou wicked; and to Princes, O ye ungodly. That is, Who is ſo juſt, that he ſpares not to tell the greateſt Kings and Princes of their wickedneſs and ungodlineſs: Or as the Vulgar Tranſlation hath it, Who ſaith to a King, O thou Apoſtate: I tell thee, thou art fallen from that Juſtice and Righteouſneſs which thou didſt once exerciſe in thy Government. It is ſaid of Nero, he had his five years wherein he govern'd excellently, but afterward he proved Apoſtate, cruelly tyrannizing over (inſtead of ruling) his people: As there are Apoſtates in Spirituals, ſo in Civils; An Apoſtate is an Hypocrite revealed; an Hypocrite is an Apoſtate vail'd: God unvails Hypocrites of all ſorts, and will not fail ſooner or later to reprove their Apoſtacy. It is better not to be good, then not to continue good: Backſliders are worſe then they who never ſet one ſtep in the wayes of God and goodneſs.

Qui dicit Regi Apoſtata, qui vocat Duces impios, &c. Vulg.

An dicentē Regi O nequam, O improbe ingenuis, condemnares? Jun.

Quinquennium Neronis.

So then, according to this reading, the ſenſe may be given out thus: As if Elihu had ſaid, How canſt thou (O Job!) poſſibly imagine that God ſhould be unjuſt, when he doth not forbear to tell the greateſt Kings of their injuſtice, and convince them of it; he who calleth degenerate Kings Apoſtates, and unjuſt Princes wicked; he that is thus impartial in reckoning with Kings, and the mighty men of the earth (as indeed God hath alwayes been, and will ever be) how ſhould he be unjuſt? Wilt thou condemn the moſt Juſt? Even him who is ſo juſt, that he rebukes injuſtice whereſoever he finds it, and who can find it whereſoever it it? (Pſal. 105.14.) He reproved Kings for their ſakes (that is, for the ſake of his peculiar people, when they did them wrong,) ſaying, Touch not mine anointed, and do my Prophets no harm: Implying, that he truſts Kings with that great power to protect his anointed, and to ſave his Prophets from harm; and therefore would not take it well at their hands, if they abuſed their power to hurt and afflict them. This is a good reading, but I ſhall not inſiſt upon it, though ſome inſiſt much upon it, becauſe I would rather favour our own Tranſlation, and carry the Interpretation that way, as containing an argument to prove, that it is a moſt wicked thing to condemn God as unjuſt, becauſe men are ſcarce any where found ſo preſumptuous, or bold, as to ſay to a King, Thou art wicked, or to Princes, ye are ungodly. It is much eaſier for any man, much more for great men to do evil, then for others to tell them ſo: And as the faults of Princes ſeldom find reprovers. ſo it requires a great deal of wiſpom, not to commit a fault in reproving them.

Is it fit to ſay to a King, thou art wicked?] Is this a comly thing? Or will Kings endure it? And if ſo, doth it become thee, O Job, to ſpeak hardly of God? Or will he endure it? Elihu did not charge Job with ſpeaking evil of God directly; but would intimate to him, that while he was ſo unquiet under the afflicting hand of God, and preſſed him ſo often for a further hearing of his cauſe, he did very dangerouſly reflect upon his Juſtice; and that ſeeing we ſtand in awe of Kings and Soveraign Princes, and dare not misbehave our ſelves before them, nor let fall an unreverend word concerning them, how durſt he preſume to ſpeak any thing unſeemly of God? Is it fit to ſay to a King,

Thou art wicked?] Kings are ſupream, they are cloathed with Soveraign power over all perſons within their Dominion; is it therefore fit to uſe ſuch coarſe language, ſuch down-right unhewn ſpeeches in any addreſs to them; Is it fit to ſay to a King, Thou art wicked? The Original word imports the worſt ſort, the moſt infamous among wicked men; So Mr Broughton renders, Is it meet that one ſay to a King, Belial? Some give it in the Vocative caſe, is it meet for a Subject to ſay to his Soveraign, O thou Belial! O thou wicked one? Dare any ſpeak thus to a King?

This word Belial is often uſed in Scripture, to note, not only a wicked man in general, but an eminently wicked man, even a man in whom all wickedneſs is (as it were) centred and ſetled, the very lees and dregs of all men, who may be called wicked. When Jezabel procured and ſuborned two falſe witneſſes againſt Naboth, it is ſaid, There came in two men, Children of Belial (1 Kings 21. 13.) and ſate before him: And the men of Belial witneſſed againſt him, even againſt Naboth in the preſence of the people, ſaying, &c, Theſe witneſſes were perjured perſons; to tell a lie is the worſt of ſins, what then is it to ſwear a lie? No word could reach the height of this wickedneſs more fully, then to call them Children of Belial. When the Lord comforted the Church with the glad tydings of the Goſpel (Nah. 1. 15.) Behold the feet of thoſe upon the Mountains that preach peace; O Jeruſalem keep thy ſolemn Feaſts, perform thy Vows; He ſubjoyns this promiſe as a reaſon, The wicked ſhall no more paſs through thee, he is utterly cut off: We put in the Margin, Belial ſhall no more paſs through thee; that is, thou ſhalt then be freed from thoſe Belialiſts who formerly interrupted thy peace, by vexing and percecuting thee, or prophaned thy holy Aſſemblies by mixing themſelevs with thee: But I give thee aſſurance the time is coming, when Belial ſhall no more trouble thee. Yea Belial is a Title ſo full of wickedneſs, that it fits the Devil himſelf, whom the Scripture brands with that black mark, The wicked one, or the evil one. The Apoſtle puts that queſtion with much holy diſdain; (2 Cor. 6. 14, 15.) What communion hath light with darkneſs? And what concord hath Chriſt with Belial? That is, Chriſt with the Devil? They differ from the Devil only in fleſh and blood, in nature they are as bad as he, who bear his name.

Aliqui à בלי ſine, & טול jugo deducunt, qui nullis legum vinculis teneatur aut jugo.

This may yet further appear, if we look into the Grammatical derivation of it, Belial, is commonly expounded a man without a yoak, or a man that will not be yoaked; that is, a man who will not come under command, a lawleſs perſon; ſo we tranſlate the Apoſtle's word, (1 Tim. 1. 9.) The Law is not made for a righteous man, but for the lawleſs and diſobedient, for the ungodly, and for ſinners, &c. That is, for the Sons of Belial, or, for ſuch as will not endure the yoak; the Law is a yoak, Chriſt calls the Law of the Goſpel his yoak (Matth. 11. 29.) and they that will not bear the yoak of Chriſt, ſhall never have benefit by the Croſs of Chriſt; we muſt take up the yoak of Chriſt, if we would taſte the fruit of the Croſs of Chriſt. Now a Beliallist, will not hear of, nor have to do with the yoak; he is like the wild Aſs deſcribed in the thirty ninth of Job, who will not be taught to plow, nor be bound in the furrow; you cannot make the wild Aſs work like the Ox. Wicked men have hard and ſtony hearts, yet ſuch ſoft, tender, and delicate necks, that they cannot abide the yoak; tis their bondage to be tyed to obedience.

Alii à יעל proficere deducunt, quaſi ſignificet hominem qui ad nihil ſit utilis. Merc.

Again, The notation of the word Belial, imports a perſon of no uſe, or altogether unprofitable, a man that is good for nothing; a meer unthrift, or ſpendthrift, a man that neither doth good to himſelf, nor to any others; as if he were born only to ſpoil and devour all that is before him, as if he came into the world to eat other mens labours; and not to labour that he might have to eat. Chriſt calleth the idle or ſlothful Servant, an unprofitable Servant (Matth. 25. 30.) and to be an unprofitable Servant, is to be a Son of Belial; one that hath no good in his heart, nor doth any good in his place, neither in his private nor publick capacity; neither in his own family, nor in the neighbourhood, and Nation where he lives. No man is born for himſelf, nor ought any man to live to himſelf. It were better not to live, then not to be doing good while we live. He that liveth only to profit himſelf, liveth to little purpoſe; to what purpoſe then doth he live, whoſe life is altogether unprofitable to himſelf? And indeed, he that is not in ſome reſpect or other a common good, or good to others, cannot be good, nor do any true good to himſelf; yet ſuch is the wicked man repreſented under the notion of this Text. Seeing then there are ſuch bad and baſe ſignificancies in the bowels of this word; is it ſufferable by a King? Is it fit to ſay to a King, thou art Belial, or wicked?

What can be ſaid more unfitly? What greater reproach can be caſt upon a King (who ought to be a living Law, a breathing Law, as alſo the Keeper of the Law by way of conſervation and protection) then to call him Belial, or one that will not keep the Law at all by way of obſervation? There are two wayes of keeping the Law, Firſt, By Conſervation; ſo Kings preſerve the Laws that they may have their free courſe to others, and be obeyed by others; in which ſenſe Kings are commonly called Keepers of both Tables. Secondly, By Obſervation; and as in the former ſenſe 'tis the prerogative of Kings to be Keepers of the Law, ſo it is their piety and their goodneſs to be Keepers of them in the latter. 'Tis poſſible a King may be a Keeper of the Law by Conſervation, and yet not be a Keeper of it by Obſervation; but then he ſhines moſt bright in the ſphere of his Royal Soveraignty, when he is every way a Keeper of the Law of God, and (ſo far as they reſpect himſelf) of his own,

Further, Is it fit to ſay to a King, Belial? As Belial deſigns an unprofitable perſon, a man good for nothing, a man of no uſe; what? Upon the Throne, and yet of no uſe to a Nation? How high an indignity is this to Regal dignity? Kings are ſet up for the greateſt uſe, for the moſt important ſervices, even for the profit and advantage of mankind, eſpecially of all within their Kingdoms and Dominions; as all are to ſerve them in their ſtate, ſo they count it their chiefeſt honour to advance the peace and profit of all their peaceable and profitable ſubjects: Therefore nothing can be ſaid more diſhonourably to a King then this, Thou art good for nothing, an unprofitable perſon, Belial. Is it fit to ſay to a King, Thou art wicked?

And to Princes, ye are ungodly?

Principes hic vocantur. נריבים à liberalitate & munificentia: quaſi tu dicas εὐεργέτας. Drui.

The word rendred Princes, ſignifies munificent, bountiful, free, willing; ſo Princes are called, to ſhew what they are or ſhould be, men of bountiful, noble, munificent, heroick, free ſpirits, open hearted, and open handed; they who are ſo, are Princes in truth as well as in Title. The holy Spirit of God, or God the holy Spirit, is called a Princely Spirit (Pſal. 51. 12.) we read it Free Spirit; and this free Princely Spirit of God, makes all his people of a free Princely Spirit, of a large heart, both as to duty Godwards, wards, and as to Charity man-wards; (Pſal. 110. 3.) In the day of thy power the people ſhall be willing; they ſhall be as Princes; they ſhall ſerve thee as Sons, not as Slaves; a Royal Spirit is conveyed into them by the Spirit in the day of the Power of Jeſus Chriſt, or when he conquers them to the obedience of himſelf. By this appellation, worldly Princes, the Princes of this World are expreſſed in ſacred language, that ſo their very names might mind them of being ſuch, and of doing ſuch things as are the ornament both of their perſons and places. Theſe two high Titles in the Text, Kings and Princes, are ſometimes taken for the ſame; and in ſtricteſt ſenſe, Princes are the next Degree, or but one remove from Kings.

Again, There are ſome called Princes, who have the ſupream power within their own Territories. Others are called Princes, who have a delegated or derived power from Kings. The Apoſtle ſpeaks of ſuch (1 Pet. 2. 13.) charging the Church and people of God, to ſubmit to every Ordinance of man for the Lords ſake, whether to the King as ſupream; or unto Governours as ſent by him, for the puniſhment of evil doers, and for the praiſe of them that do well. Elihu brings in both, for the fuller confirmation of his point, and the ſtronger conviction of Job, Is it fit to ſay to a King, thou art wicked? And to Princes (who ſtand about his Throne, and ſerve him in his Government) ye are ungodly? Ye regard neither right nor reaſon, neither what's fit to be done, nor what to be adviſed? That's the ſenſe of the words as they are an argument from the leſs to the greater; if it be an uncomely and undecent thing (ſaith Elihu) to ſay to a King thou art wicked; and to Princes ye are ungodly: How much more to him that accepteth not the perſons of Princes? &c.

Hence Note, Firſt, Men are not all of a rank, or all are not of an equal ſtate in this World.

This Text ſpeaks of Kings and Princes; and the moſt of men are inferiour not only to Kings, but to Princes. God hath not made man upon earth as minims in writing, all of a height; but as in the Alphabet of Letters, ſome are longer and deeper then others; ſo in the Alphabet of mankind, ſome men are bigger and higher then others. Kings and Princes are but men, yet they are men in a great Letter, or they are among men as the Aleph among the Letters, which as it is firſt in order, ſo it ſignifies a Prince, a Chief, a Leader. And if the moſt wiſe God had not ordered ſuch an inequality among men, how ſhould order have been kept among men? Nothing (conſidering the corruptions and luſts of men) can be more unequal then that equality which ſome have vainly contended for among men. All men would fall down into confuſion, if ſome were not above. That which keeps all up, is, only that ſome are uppermoſt, Kings and Princes.

Secondly, (which is here principally aimed at,) Note, It is moſt uncomely and ſinful, to revile or give reproachful words to Kings or Princes.

When we ſay It is not fit, we ſay leſs then the thing is, or then the Text intendeth; there is more evil in it then a bare unfitneſs, 'tis indeed a very great wickedneſs, and ungodlineſs, to ſay to a King, thou art wicked, and to Princes ye are ungodly. To ſay ſo, is expreſly againſt the Rule (Exod. 22. 28.) Thou ſhalt not revile the Gods (or, as we put in the Margin, Judges) nor curſe the Ruler of thy people: And the Apoſtle Paul quotes this Text (Acts 23. 5.) when himſelf had ſlipt in that point, as he ſtood before the Judgment ſeat, and pleaded his own integrity; for when Ananias the high Prieſt commanded them that ſtood by to ſmite him on the mouth; Paul ſaid unto him, God ſhall ſmite thee, thou whited Wall: This drew a reproof upon him preſently from them that ſtood by (verſ. 4.) Revileſt thou Gods high Prieſt? And what doth Paul anſwer? (verſ. 5.) I wiſt not Brethren, that he was the high Prieſt; for it is written, Thou ſhalt not ſpeak evil of the Ruler of thy people. There hath been much diſpute about that anſwer, I wiſt not that he was the high Prieſt: Certainly Paul ſaw and knew that he was the high Prieſt; and it is as certain, that he did not tell a lie, when he ſaid, I wiſt not that he was the high Prieſt: His meaning I conceive was only this, as if he had ſaid, having received ſuch unjuſt uſage in the Court, as to be openly ſmitten in time of hearing, I confeſs I was in a paſſion, and did not conſider, as I ought, that it was the high Prieſt; I ſpake raſhly and unadviſedly. I wiſt not, that is, I deliberated not with my ſelf who it was I ſpake to, for I ought not to have uſed ſuch language; the Scripture alſo having forbidden it, which ſaith, Thou ſhalt not curſe the Ruler of thy people. It will not bear us out, to uſe ill words to Magiſtrates, though (as Paul's caſe was) we are ill uſed by them. Shimei taking the advantage of David's affliction, roſe up to this height of impudence againſt him, mentioned with indignation by Elihu in the Text, he openly and to his face called him Belial (2 Sam. 16. 5. 7.) Come out thou bloody man, and thou man of Belial: But we know what the iſſue was, he paid dear for it at laſt; though David forgave him at preſent, and did not ſuffer Abiſhai to take a ſudden revenge, yet upon his death-bed he delivered him over to his Son Solomon, to deal with him as he ſhould ſee good. And ſo great is the offenſiveneſs and unfitneſs of ſpeaking thus unto a King, that the Jews joyned it with blaſphemy againſt God himſelf. We read (1 Kings 21. 13.) how two falſe Witneſſes came againſt Naboth, ſaying, Naboth blaſphemed God and the King; as much as to ſay, we heard Naboth ſay of the King, Belial; and as ſoon as theſe two had brought in their evidence againſt him, that he had blaſphemed God and the King, they drew him out, and ſtoned him: Blaſphemy againſt God was death by the expreſs letter of the Law (Lev. 24. 15, 16.) It was alſo death by the ſame Law for any man to curſe his Father or his Mother (Exod. 21. 17.) And becauſe the King is (Pater Patriæ) the Father of his Country, it ſeems the curſing or blaſpheming of him, was alſo puniſhable by death. The Apoſtle Jude uſeth an equivalent word in the Greek (Ep. of Jude, ver. 8.) reproving a wicked Sect in thoſe times; They fear not to blaſpheme, or ſpeak evil of Dignities: There is blaſphemy againſt Princes, who are titular Gods, as well as againſt the only true God. Kings are to be feared, to be ſubmitted to, they are to be prayed for, therefore not to be reviled. Is it fit to ſay unto a King, Belial?

'Ουκ ἤδειν.

Yet this doth not ſtop the mouths of all men from telling Kings and Princes their faults, nor doth it juſtifie a ſilent diſſembling of them; much leſs doth it open the mouths of any to dawb Kings and Princes with the untempered morter of flatteries; Kings are no more to be flattered then they are to be reproached. Dignities muſt not be ſpoken evil of, yet they may be prudently and humbly told of their evils, and informed of their failings plainly. When Eliah met Ahab, who ſaid, Art thou he that troubleth Iſrael? Eliah anſwered (1 Kings 18. 18.) I have not troubled Iſrael, but thou and thy Fathers houſe, in that ye have forſaken the Commandments of the Lord, and thou haſt followed Baal. And we read how boldly Eliſha carried it to the King of Iſrael (2 Kings 3. 13, 14.) What have I to do with thee? Get thee to the Prophets of thy Father, and to the Prophets of thy Mother: And Eliſha ſaid, as the Lord of Hoſts liveth before whom I ſtand; Surely, were it not that I regard the preſence of Jehoſhaphat the King of Judah, I would not look toward thee, nor ſee thee. Thus the Prophets dealt with much gracious ſeverity towards mighty Princes. The Prophet Iſaiah feared not to ſay (Iſa. 1. 10.) Hear the Word of the Lord ye Rulers of Sodome, Give ear unto the Law of our God, ye people of Gomorrah; implying, that the Rulers of Jeruſalem were then but ſuch as the Rulers of Sodom once were, and that the people were no better then the people of Gomorrah; and it is conceived, that for this plainneſs and liberty of ſpeech, which the Prophet Iſaiah uſed toward the Princes and Rulers of Judah, he was put to death, being cut or mangled aſunder with a wooden Saw. One might think that Ezekiel did much forget himſelf, when he gave thoſe opprobrious terms to Zedekiah King of Judah (Ezek. 21. 25.) And thou prophane wicked Prince of Iſrael, whoſe day is come, when iniquity ſhall have an end; yet he ſinned not in this harſh reproof of his ſin, becauſe commanded of God to do it, and eſpecially directed by the holy Spirit. The Prophets might not diminiſh a word, but muſt give out what God gave in. John the Baptiſt reproved Herod for Herodias his Brother Philips Wife, and for all the evils which he had done (Luke 3. 19.) And Jeſus Chriſt himſelf called Herod, Fox; (Luke 13. 32.) The Prophets were often inſtructed and Commiſſioned to propheſie againſt the Mountains; that is, againſt the Princes and

Powers of the world; and therefore take the ſtate of the point, and of our duty about it, in theſe few concluſions, that we may not run upon the Rocks either way; neither upon the Rock of blaſphemy againſt Kings and Princes on the one ſide, nor upon the Rock of flattery on the other.

Firſt, The Power or State of Princes muſt never be reviled nor evil ſpoken of; kingly Power and Authority is alwayes to be reverenced and honoured; though the Prince be wicked, yet his Power is to be reverenced, and that's the pureſt reverence. For to reverence the Powers, only, becauſe, or when they are good, and do us good, and rule every way according to our mind, this is but a piece of ſelfiſhneſs; but when Princes are evil and bring evils upon us, yet to bear reſpect to the Power and Authority which they Exerciſe; this is to honour God, and to give true ſubmiſſion to his Ordinance. Whatſoever the perſon is, the power muſt be reverentially ſubmitted to.

Regia per ſe dignitas, nunquam non eſt colenda, etiam cum princeps iniquus eſt.

Secondly, It is high wickedneſs to ſpeak evil of the perſons of juſt and righteous Princes; that every man will acknowledge.

Thirdly, Kings and Princes muſt not be reproved for perſonal or private faults publickly. To do ſo is againſt the rule in any mans caſe; much more in the caſe of Kings and Princes.

Fourthly, Kings are not to be reproved for any of their faults, but by whoſe who have a Call to it; that was the reaſon of the liberty which the old Prophets uſed towards Kings, they were ſpecially commanded and Commiſſioned by God for it, and the peril was upon their own heads if they did it not; it is not for every one to reprove Princes, but for thoſe that are called to it.

Laſtly, Even thoſe that are called to it muſt do it with much ſubmiſſion; though they muſt not do it to halves and deceitfully, yet they are to do it reſpectfully. It is not fit to ſay to a King, Belial; ſuch rough and unhewn language is not for Princes: their fauls muſt only be inſinuated, if that may ſerve, as Nathan dealt with David, who though he knew what his ſin was, yet he did not ſay to him, Thou Murtherer, thou Adulterer, but intimated the matter by a Parable, and made him covertly, or in a third perſon charge himſelf, before he charged him, or applyed the Parable perſonally to him, with, Thou art the man. When Miriam the Siſter and Aaron the Brother of Moſes ſpake againſt him, becauſe of the Ethiopian Woman whom he had married (Numb. 12. 1.) though they were thus neerly related, yet ſpeaking irreverently of Moſes the Chief Magiſtrate, the Lord ſaid to them (ver. 8.) Wherefore were ye not afraid to ſpeak againſt my Servant Moſes ? Yet how common is this ſin ? The tongues of men walk exceeding looſly in their diſcourſies about the perſons and powers of Princes; and we every where find moſt pleaſed to hear well of themſelves, and ill of others, or to ſpeak well of themſelves, and ill of others, and the higher they are who are ſpoken of, or of whom they ſpeak evil, the more they are pleaſed both in hearing and ſpeaking evil of them. How unruly are their tongues, who cannot forbear their Rulers! Thus much of Elihu's queſtion, as it is reſolved into a Negative propoſition, It is not fit to ſay to a King, thou art ungodly. We may further conſider it as an argument from the greater to the leſs, to prove, That it is a moſt wicked thing to ſpeak a word unduely of God. Is it fit to ſay to a King, Thou are wicked ? And to Princes, ye are ungodly ?

Verſe 19. How much leſs to him that accepteth not the perſons of Princes?

Who is that ? The words are a clear Periphraſis of God, he accepts not the perſons of Princes. As if Elihu had ſaid; the Kings and Princes of the Earth, expect ſuch great reſpect from their ſubjects, that no man ſhould dare to cenſure them or ſpeak evil of them, though they do evil, or deal unjuſtly; how much more unfit is it to ſpeak evil of God, or to charge his government with injuſtice, who never doth any evil, all whoſe wayes are not only juſt, but juſtice. He that accepteth not the perſons of Princes, who are the greateſt of men, can have neither will nor motive to deal unjuſtly with any man. I ſhall not ſtay to ſhew what it is to accept perſons ? Becauſe that hath been ſhewed at the ſeventh verſe of the thirteenth Chapter, as alſo Chap. 32. 21. only I'le give it in one word; To accept perſons is to have more reſpect to the man then to the matter; and that's a very common fault among men, and as commonly condemned by God. 'Tis a received axiom; He that would or doth put on the perſon of a Judge, muſt put off the perſon of a friend; that is, he muſt not be ſway'd by any reſpect whatſoever of friendſhip, or allyance, but muſt judge purely as the cauſe deſerveth.

Nor ſhall I ſtay to urge the greatneſs of the ſin of ſpeaking any thing uncomely of God, that alſo hath been ſpoken to in many former paſſages of this Chapter. Only from theſe words, How much leſs to him that accepteth not the perſon of Princes ?

Note Firſt, That which ought not to be done or ſpoken to the greateſt of men, ought much leſs to be either done or ſpoken to God.

The reaſon is, becauſe, Firſt, God is infinitely more to be reverenced then any man. Secondly, Becauſe God is infinitely more able to take vengeance, and certainly will, of any that ſhall do or ſpeak evil to him, then the greateſt among the Children of men. Yet how many are there who dare not offend a man not a great man eſpecially, either by word or deed, who are not afraid by both to offend and provoke the great God ? O remember, the force of this Text; if it be not fit to ſpeak unduely of Princes, How much leſs of him that accepteth not the Perſons of Princes ?

Hence Note, Secondly, God is no accepter of perſons.

He hath no reſpect to Princes in prejudice to truth and righteouſneſs, but in every nation he that feareth him and worketh righteouſneſs (be he never ſo poor) is accepted with him (Acts 10. 35.) and in every Nation he that feareth him not, but worketh unrighteouſneſs (be he never ſo great) is unacceptable yea abominable to him. The Scripture often attributes this glory to God (Deut. 10. 17. 2 Chron. 19. 7. Gal. 2. 6. Col. 3. 25.) And as it is the glory of God, that he is no accepter of perſons, ſo it is the duty of man (Deut. 1. 17.) Judgment muſt proceed and conclude with reſpect to the Rule, and command of God, not with reſpect to the perſons of men, or our relations to them. Levi was highly commended for this (Deut. 33. 9.) who ſaid unto his Father and to his Mother, I have not ſeen him; neither did he acknowledge his Brethren, nor knew his own Children, &c. When man accepteth not the perſons of men he acteth moſt like God, of whom Elihu ſaith, He accepteth not the perſons of Princes,

Nor regardeth the rich more then the poor.

That's a further deſcription of God; he doth not regard that is, acknowledge or know the one more then the other; he is (in the beſt things) as communicative to, and converſeth as familiarly with the poor as the rich; yea he doth not value or prize the rich man more then the poor; the poor man is worth as much as the rich man in Gods account; ſuppoſe the rich man worth thouſands, yea ten thouſands of Gold and Silver, and the poor man ſo poor that he is not worth a Shilling, yet in the account of God the poor man is worth as much as the rich man.

The Scripture ſpeaks of two ſorts both of rich and poor men; there are men rich in ſpirituals, ſuch Chriſt intimates, who are (Luke 12. 20.) rich towards God, or as he ſpeaks of the Church of Smyrna (Rev. 2. 9.) rich in grace, I know thy poverty, but thou art rich; That is, I know thou art poor in earthly pelf, but rich in ſpirituals. The Apoſtle James puts the queſtion (Chap. 2. 5.) Hath not God choſen the poor of this World rich in faith, and heirs of the Kingdome. Now, it is moſt certain, that God regardeth the rich in ſpirituals, more then the poor in ſpirituals, he highly regardeth thoſe that are poor in ſpirit, and pronounceth them bleſſed (Matth. 5. 3.) for theirs is the Kingdom of Heaven, but he regardeth not thoſe who are poor in ſpirituals; not them eſpecially who boaſt of their ſpiritual riches when they have none (they that have them are thankful for them, they do not boaſt of them) as the Church of Laodicea did, of whom Chriſt ſaid (Rev. 3. 16, 17.) I will ſpew thee out of my mouth, becauſe thou ſayeſt I am rich and increaſed in goods, and knoweſt not that thou art poor. Thus you ſee, there are a ſort of rich men, whom Chriſt regardeth more then the poor of that ſort. But as poor and rich are diſtinguiſhed meerly by abundance and want, by the ſmalneſs and greatneſs of their portion in the things of this world, as Dives and Lazarus in the Parable were, ſo he regardeth not the rich more then the poor. When a poor man is gracious as well as poor, God regardeth him more then any rich man who hath no grace; and when either both have grace alike, or both are alike without grace, he regardeth them both alike. When rich and poor have grace, they are both greatly regarded, and when neither of them have grace, neither of them are at all regarded by the God of all grace. Thus 'tis plain, God regardeth the rich no more then the poor, nor the poor any whit leſs then the rich.

The word rendred rich, ſignifieth alſo bountiful (Iſa. 32. 5.) 'Tis alſo rendred, The helpful, the ſaving man; for though rich men are not alwayes helpful with their riches, nor ready to ſave others in diſtreſs; yet rich men may do both: They have alwayes in their hand power and uſually opportunity to be helpful to the poor, and to ſave the diſtreſſed. And ſurely, as the Lord regardeth not the rich more then the poor; ſo he regardeth thoſe rich men leaſt of all, who have no regard to help and ſave the poor. Once more, Some derive the word which we tranſlate rich, from a root which ſignifieth to clamour, or to ſpeak out and boldly, which complies well with that ſentence of Solomon (Pro. 18. 23.) The poor uſeth intreaties (that is, he ſpeaketh humbly or by way of ſupplication) but the rich anſwereth roughly. And as God regardeth not the rich more then the poor, ſo he regardeth thoſe rich men leaſt, who ſpeak loudly and roughly to the poor. Having thus opened the aſſertion of Elihu, that God regardeth not the rich more then the poor; let us conſider the reaſon of it in the next words.

For they are all the work of his hands.

As if he had ſaid, God cannot but deal impartially with all, becauſe all are the work of his hands: What reaſon hath he to reſpect one more then another, ſeeing the one is no more to him then t'other, they are all the work of his hands. Man as man is the Off-ſpring of God (Acts 17. 28.) He is alſo the work of his hands; that is, man is made by his power; as man deſcendeth from man, ſo he is called the fruit of the womb; but as man is the Off-ſpring of God, ſo he is called the work of his hands, and his hands have wrought the poor man as well as the rich; They are all the work of his hands in a two-fold reſpect.

Firſt, In their natural conſtitution God hath moulded them in the ſame faſhion, he hath given each of them a body and a Soul; a body framed of the ſame parts, a Soul conſiſting of the ſame powers. God hath beſtowed as much care and coſt upon the making of a poor mans body and Soul, as upon the rich mans. The richeſt man in the world, cannot boaſt that he hath any one member in his body or faculty in his Soul, more then a poor man hath.

Secondly; Look upon the rich and poor in their Civil ſtate, and ſo likewiſe they are the work of his hands: And that I conceive, is here intended as much as, if not more, then the former; not only is God the maker of the poor and of the rich in their natural ſtate, Soul and body; but as poor, and rich, he is the maker of them; that is, he maketh one man poor, and another man rich, as himſelf pleaſeth. (Prov. 22. 2.) The rich and the poor meet together, the Lord is the maker of them all. He hath made them men, and he hath made them rich or poor men. There is as much of the power and wiſdom of God ſeen in making ſome men poor and others rich, as there is in making them men; yea God thinks himſelf as much honoured in our acknowledgements that the poor with their poverty, as that the rich with all their riches, are the work of his hands.

Hence Note, Firſt, Poor men are as much the work of God as the rich.

As they have the ſame nature, and are of the ſame matter, as they are both made of the ſame ſtuff, or are both of a piece, ſo they have the ſame maker: And their maker hath been at as much charge in the making of the one, as in the making of the other: yea, and uſually, the poor man yields him a better rent, and brings more into his Treaſury then the rich man doth.

Secondly Note, It is the Lord who makes men poor, and makes men rich.

Agur prayed (Prov. 30. 8.) Give me neither poverty nor riches. Agur knew poverty was a gift of God as well as riches. It hath been ſaid (though prophanely) Every man is the faſhioner of his own fortune, or the contriver of his own condition. Some who acknowledge God hath made them men, think they have made themſelves rich, or great men; and we commonly look on thoſe who fail in their worldly Eſtates, that they have made themſelves poor and low in the world. I grant, there is a ſenſe wherein men make themſelves rich, and make themſelves poor; that is, when they do either by their ſins. God is not ſo engaged in the making of a man rich, when he enricheth himſelf by his ſin, by deceiving or oppreſſing his Brethren, as when he groweth rich in a way of Righteouſneſs: He that is inriched by oppreſſion, or deceit, or ſets his neſt on high by flattery, or by fraud, cannot thank God for his riches, or honours; and if he doth, he blaſphemouſly makes God a partner in thoſe ſins by which he hath got his riches and honours. For though it be a truth that there is a hand of God in his gettings (for all the craft, and policy, and oppreſſion which men uſe, will never be able to make them either rich or great, if God did not permit and order it ſo) yet the heart of God is not with him in it, and God will not own his own hand in giving them wealth or power, further then as they are a teſtimony againſt them, of his goodneſs, and their ingratitude. We may alſo ſay of ſome poor men, they have made themſelves poor, not God; He made Job poor, The Lord gave, and the Lord hath taken away, was his humble acknowledgement (Chap. 1. 21.) but there are ſome, of whom we cannot ſo much ſay God hath made them poor by his ſad providences to them, as that they have made themſelves poor by their idleneſs and improvidence, or by their prodigality and vain profuſeneſs; yet even of ſuch poor men we may truely ſay, there is a righteous hand of God upon them in leaving or giving them up to the luſts of their own heart, their lazineſs, or laviſhneſs, which produce their utter undoing, and bring them to a morſel of bread. So that let men be in what condition they will, the Lord is the former of it. The diligent hand maketh rich, but it is with the bleſſing of God; and when an indiligent man becomes poor, it is the curſe of God upon him for his ſin, as well as the conſequent of his ſin. Yea, when an honeſt diligent man becomes poor (that's the caſe of ſome) it is the Lords with-holding of his bleſſing, which makes all his labours fruitleſs and ſucceſsleſs; ſuch a man is indeed one of God's poor, or a poor man of God's making; and God will ſurely make the poverty of ſuch a man (if he continue in a believing dependance upon him, and in an humble ſubmiſſion to him, if he know how to want as well as to abound, how to be hungry as well as to be full, and in every eſtate hath learned therewith to be content, as the holy Apoſtle had) then (I ſay) God will ſurely make the poverty of ſuch a man better to him then riches, or the largeſt portion of this worlds enjoyment. The poor of God's ſpecial making, are under his ſpecial keeping and bleſſing: As they have but little, ſo they want nothing; God himſelf will alwayes be not only enough, but all to them.

Take two further inferences from the whole verſe.

First, Princes, great and rich men muſt not expect to fare better with God becauſe of their greatneſs or riches. For,

He doth not regard the rich more then the poor.

Secondly, The meaneſt man needs not fear that he ſhall fare the worſe before God for his meanneſs.

The moſt high God will not overlook thoſe in a low eſtate, he regardeth the poor as well as the rich; and that's matter of great comfort to the poor, when diſregarded by the rich. Though the Lord doth not make all men of an equal reſpect in the world, 'tis his will that ſome men ſhould be more regarded by men then others are, yet himſelf (in the ſenſe opened) beareth an equal reſpect to them all; He regardeth not the rich more then the poor, for they are all the work of his hands.

VERS. 20, 21, 22.

In a moment ſhall they die, and the people ſhall be troubled at midnight, and paſs away: And the mighty ſhall be taken away without hands.

For his eyes are upon the wayes of man, and he ſeeth all his doings.

There is no darkneſs nor ſhadow of death, where the workers of iniquity may hide themſelves.

IN theſe three verſes Elihu doth two things principally: Firſt, he ſets forth the judgments of God: Secondly, He gives an account of the equity of them. He ſets forth the judgments of God, Firſt, More generally, Upon People and Nations.

Secondly, Upon Princes and Governours; all this in the twentieth verſe. And in this judgment of God upon Nations we may take notice,

Firſt, Of the nature of it, and how it is deſcribed; and that is laid down three wayes. Firſt, They ſhall die. Secondly, They ſhall be troubled. Thirdly, They ſhall paſs away. Under theſe Notions the judgment of God upon People and Nations is expreſt.

Secondly, We may here conſider the ſuddenneſs of all this, In a moment they ſhall die.

Thirdly, We may conſider the ſeaſon (or rather as to man, the unſeaſonableneſs) of it, it ſhall be (though in a dreaming time) when they little dream of it; The people ſhall be troubled at midnight. Thus we have the judgment or ſad diſpenſation of God deſcribed in this twentieth verſe, both as to the acts of it, and likewiſe as to the manner of it upon the people.

Elihu having ſhewed the judgment of God upon the people in the former part of this twentieth verſe, declares alſo his judgment upon the Princes in the latter end of it; The mighty ſhall be taken away without hand. Where we ſee, Firſt, How Princes are expreſſed or called, They are the mighty. Secondly, What kind of judgment befalleth them, They are taken away. Thirdly, The manner how this is brought about, They are taken away without hand.

From the matter of the judgment of God both upon people and Princes, Elihu proceeds to give the reaſon why the Lord deals thus with both; this he doth in the two verſes following, Firſt, Becauſe of their ſin; They are workers of iniquity; in the cloſe of the twenty-ſecond verſe.

Secondly, Becauſe, as they are workers of iniquity, ſo God is fully acquainted with all their iniquity, &c. He ſeeth all their works, and the iniquity of their works, nothing can cover it or them from his ſight; and therefore, as Elihu aſſerts the omniſcience of God poſitively in the twenty-firſt ver. ſo negatively in the twenty-ſecond verſe, There is no darkneſs, nor ſhadow of death, where the workers of iniquity may hide themſelves. Now ſeeing the works of thoſe Nations and Princes were naught, and the naughtineſs of them was evident to God, how could he but puniſh them? And how juſt and righteous is he in puniſhing of them? By all this Elihu clears his general Aſſertion, or the point he drives at all this Chapter over, namely, to prove that God is righteous; againſt which poſition, he tells us before, Job having ſpoken dangerouſly, he was engaged to maintain it vigorouſly; which he doth here, eſpecially in that eminent branch of it, mentioned at the nineteenth verſe, That he accepteth not the perſons of Princes, nor regardeth the rich more then the poor. For, Princes as well as common people fall under his hand. So much for the parts and reſolution of theſe three verſes, as alſo for the general ſcope of them.

Yet before I go on to the particular explication of them, I would only mind the Reader of another Tranſlation of the whole twentieth verſe, which varieth ſomewhat from ours, rendring it as a deſcription of the judgment of God upon Princes, by the violence of the people; whereas according to our Tranſlation, it is a deſcription of the judgment of God both upon people and Princes. The Tranſlation I mean, is that of the Vulgar Latine, which runs in this form.

Verſe 20. Suddenly ſhall they die, at midnight the people ſhall be in a tumult, and ſhall paſs over, and take away the violent man without hand.

Subito morientur & in media nocte turbabuntur populi, & pertranſibunt, & auferent, violentum abſque manu. Vulg.

This Reading, and the Expoſitions given upon it, prove, That God is ſo far from accepting the perſons of Princes, that he does not only tell them their own, and reprove them to their face for their wickedneſs and Apoſtacy (as was ſhewed from the former reading of the eighteenth verſe) but deprives them alſo of their dignity, and pulls them from their power; and he doth it in ſuch a manner, that every man may underſtand and ſee the hand of God in it, becauſe they ſee no hands in it. The leſs of man appears in any work of providence, whether it be in a way of mercy or of judgment, the more of God is to be acknowledged in it: And where nothing of men appeareth, all, or the whole muſt be attributed unto God. The judgment which Elihu ſpeaks of here, ſeems (according to this Interpretation) to have much of man in it; yet becauſe the men ſuppoſed to be in it, are looked upon as ſuch as can do little in it, or ought to do nothing in it, therefore 'tis ſaid to be done without hands. Hiſtories have given many examples, and dreadful inſtances of ſuch calamities falling upon Princes by the riſing of the people; and then they are ſaid to be taken away

Without hand.] That is, Without any foreſeen appearance of ſuch a miſchief; a hand which was not thought of being lifted up againſt them. It is ſaid of wicked Zimri, who ſlew his Maſter, that when he ſaw the people conſpire againſt him, and the City taken, he went into the Palace of the King's houſe, and (in the heat of his rage) ſet it on fire, and burnt the Kings houſe over him, and dyed (1 Kin. 16. 18.) Juſtine reports the like concluſion (upon a like occaſion) of Sardanapalus, that effeminate and voluptuous Monarch of the Aſſyrian Empire. They who proſecute this Tranſlation, conceive Elihu reflecting upon Job in all this, who was very uncivilly treated by his own people, from whom he had deſerved higheſt reſpects, as he complained at the thirtieth Chapter, they raiſed up againſt him the wayes of their deſtruction; they uſed him very rudely, even deſpightfully; and he was in a pining conſuming condition, as a man taken away without hand. But I ſhall not inſiſt upon this reading, but take the words according to the ſcope before given, as a deſcription of a mixt judgment from God; a judgment partly upon the people, and partly upon Princes, a judgment upon the many, and a judgment upon the mighty; In a moment ſhall they die.

In a moment.] The Text is, a moment they die; Not, that they ſhall die but a moment, or be only for a moment dead, but they ſhall die before a moment is over; there is an Ellipſis of the prepoſition [Beth,] in the Hebrew, which we ſupply in our Tranſlation, In a moment they ſhall die: A moment is the leaſt particle or parcel of time; we cannot imagine any thing ſhorter then a moment, 'tis the very point of time (Pſal. 30. 5.) His anger endureth for a moment (ſaith David, when he would ſhew how very ſhort (comparatively) the anger of God towards his people is) but in his favour is life: Thus Solomon (Prov. 12. 19.) He that ſpeaketh truth, his tongue ſhall be eſtabliſhed; but a lying tongue is for a moment: A lye cannot laſt long; he that ſpeaks truth, what he ſpeaks to day, is good to morrow, and to morrow, and will be good for ever; but a lying tongue is for a moment; that is, his lies will be diſcovered, and uſually they are quickly diſcovered; though he live long to tell lies, or doth nothing but tell lies as long as he liveth, yet his lies ~~are not~~ long-lived. Job deſcribing the joy of the hypocrite (Chap. 20. 5.) ſaith, It is but for a moment; like a fire of Thorns, a blaze and gone: When the Apoſtle would ſtrengthen and encourage the hearts of Believers againſt all the troubles and ſorrows of this preſent life, he calls them (2 Cor. 4. 17.) Firſt, Light, Secondly, ſhort; Our light afflictions that are but for a moment, work for us a far more exceeding and eternal weight of glory. And that we might know how quick the Devil was at his work with Chriſt, the Scripture ſaith (Luke. 4. 5.) He ſhewed him all the Kingdoms of the World in a moment of time. As to ſhew the inſtantaneouſneſs of our change from death to life in the reſurrection, it is ſaid (1 Cor. 15. 52.) In a moment, in the twinkling of an eye, at the laſt trump, we ſhall be changed: So to ſhew the extream ſuddenneſs of theſe mens change from life to death, it is ſaid here, In a moment

רגע: Punctum, momentum, tempus exiguum: Ellipſis præpoſitionis ב

They ſhall die.] They? Who? Both great and ſmall, one and another of them ſhall die, or be ſwept away by death in a moment. There is a twofold death;

Firſt, Natural; When either ſickneſs or old age diſſolves the earthly houſe of this Tabernacle. The natural death of ſome is very lingring and ſlow, others are ſuddenly ſnatcht away, they die in a moment.

Secondly, There is a violent death; thus many are taken away by the ſword Martial, or Civil, others caſually: The Text is true both of natural and violent death, either of them may overtake us in a moment, yet I conceive the latter is here chiefly intended, In a moment ſhall they die; that is, ſome ſudden deſtruction ſhall come upon them, they ſhall be ſurprized by an unlooked for diſaſter, and removed out of the World, while they had not a thought of their removal.

Hence Note, Firſt, Death of any ſort, may befall all ſorts of men.

None can plead exemption or priviledge from the grave. It is appointed to men once to die; moſt die a natural death, and any man may die a violent death; who knows how he ſhall go out of this World? Chriſt told Peter (John 21, 18.) When thou ſhalt be old, thou ſhalt ſtretch forth thy hands, and another ſhall gird thee, and carry thee whither thou wouldſt not. This ſpake he, ſignifying by what death he ſhould glorifie God. And what kind of death was that? The Church Hiſtory aſſureth us, 'twas a violent death. He (as his Maſter Jeſus Chriſt) was nailed to a Croſs, and died. We come but one way into the World, but there are a thouſand wayes of going out.

Note Secondly, Death comes ſuddenly upon many men, and may upon all men.

The whole life of the longeſt liver in this World, is but a moment, compared to eternity; and there is not any moment of our life, but (with reſpect to ſecond cauſes) we are ſubject to death in it: We alwayes in ſome ſenſe (though at ſome times more) carry our lives in our hand, and how ſoon, or by what hand they may be ſnatcht out of ours, we know not.

Now if our whole life be but a moment, and we ſubject to death every moment, how ſhould we ſtand prepared for death every moment? And how ſad is it to think, that they who may die the next moment, ſhould for dayes, and Weeks, and Moneths, and Years, never prepare for death? Moſt are loth to think of the end of their lives, till they are nearer the end of them; yet no man knoweth how near he is to the end of his life. Many put off the thoughts of death till it cometh, yet none can put off the coming of death; they would remove the meditation of death to the fall of their leaf, to the Winter, and worſt of their old age, yet they are not able to remove death one moment from the Spring and beſt of their youth.

Note, Thirdly, Violent death, by the ſore and ſevere judgment of God, often ſweeps multitudes away in a moment.

God can thruſt whole throngs of men, yea whole Nations into their graves together; it is ſaid (Numb. 16. 21.) of Corah and his Companions, The earth did cover, or ſwallow them up in a moment: And the Lord commanded Moſes, to ſay unto the Children of Iſrael (Exod. 33. 5.) ye are a ſtiff-necked people; I will come up into the midſt of thee in a moment, and conſume thee: As if the Lord had ſaid, I will take no long time for it; I can quickly diſpatch you; how many ſoever there are of you, I will do it in a moment. We have a like deſcription of the ſudden and quick diſpatch of men at the Lords word of Command (Pſal. 73. 19.) How are they brought into deſolation, as in a moment, they are utterly conſumed with Terrors? The final ruine of Babylon was thus propheſied (Iſa. 47. 9.) Theſe two things ſhall come to thee in a moment, in one day, the loſs of Children and widowhood, they ſhall come upon thee in their perfection; Thou ſhalt utterly be deſtroyed, and periſh at once for ever. The Prophet Jeremiah (Lam. 4. 6.) bewailed the deſtruction of Jeruſalem, whoſe Calamity was greater then that of Sodome and Gomorrah, which God deſtroyed in a moment: Sodome and Gomorrah were great Cities, yet how ſoon conſumed! In ſome ſenſe, there is a greater evil in a lingring deſtruction, then in a ſpeedy one; ſo the Prophet aggravates death by Famine, beyond death by fire; becauſe to die by Famine is a lingring death. Cæſar being warned that ſome lay in wait to deſtroy him ſuddenly, ſlighted it, and ſaid, unexpected death is moſt deſirable. And that's the Lot of many great men; to which ſome conceive the Pſalmiſt had reſpect, when he ſaid (Pſal. 82. 7.) Ye ſhall die like men, and fall like one of the Princes; that is, ſuddenly. But though in ſome ſenſe a ſpeedy death is more eligible then a lingring one, yet in many reſpects, to die ſuddenly, or in a moment, may be concluded a far greater judgment, then to ſee death coming by Degrees, and deſtruction walking towards us ſtep by ſtep. Solomon (Prov. 1. 27.) ſpeaks of ſwift deſtruction, of deſtruction coming like a Whirlwind; ſwift deſtruction overtakes them who are ſlow paced to receive and obey inſtruction. Thus the Lord can deal both with perſons and with Nations; he needs not make any delays, nor take time to do it, their deſtruction ſhall come (if he will ſend it) in a day, in an hour, yea, in a moment ſhall they die.

And the people ſhall be troubled at midnight.

That is, the body, or generality of the people, the many ſhall be troubled; they ſhall be as men amazed, or as the Metaphor imports, they ſhall be disjoynted; Men aſſociated under due Laws of Government, are as ſo many members of a well compacted Body; but when broken and ſcattered, they are like a body whoſe members are diſlocated, or out of joynt; unfit for any uſe or ſervice. And as there is a laxation of the members of the Body, a disjoynting of the bones, ſo there is a disjoynting of the faculties of the mind; in times of great trouble, not only is the body Politick, which conſiſts of many men, but the mind of every body, or of every ſingle man is much out of joynt. The word is applyed to thoſe great concuſſions of the world (Pſal. 18. 17.) The earth ſhook and trembled, the Foundations alſo of the Hills were moved, and were ſhaken at the preſence of the Lord, becauſe he was wroth; which we may interpret of the Princes and Powers of the earth, who are as Hills and mountains; if the Lord do but touch them in anger, they move, yea tremble, The word is applyed alſo to the Waves of the Sea (Jer. 5. 22.) which roar, and toſs themſelves: We commonly ſay, as in the Text, The Sea is troubled, or 'tis a troubled Sea, a toſſing Sea. That expreſſion is alſo common among us, when we ſee a man much diſquieted, he is (we ſay) in a great toſs; even as a ſhip at Sea upon the proud Waves. Thus ſaith Elihu, the people ſhall be in a toſs, they ſhall feel a Storm in their minds, ſudden guſts of fear and ſorrow ſhall carry them they know not whither; or they ſhall be lifted up to heaven in vain confidences, and then fall down to Hell in deſpairing thoughts, as the Tempeſt at Sea is deſcribed in Pſal. 107. There is yet another rendring of the Text, in alluſion to Drunkards, who are overcome with Wine (Jer. 25. 16.) And they ſhall drink, and be moved, and be mad; the word which we tranſlate move, is that in the Text; now we know drunkenneſs moves men and puts all into diſorder and diſquietment: Thus the people (through the fierce anger of God, and the Wine of aſtoniſhment which he gives them to drink) ſhall be moved, they ſhall reel to and fro, and ſtagger like a drunken man. Great troubles and afflictions are called in Scripture the Wine of aſtoniſhment, becauſe they make many ſay and do they ſcarce know what; great troubles bereave men not only of their comforts, but of their reaſon; they do not only ſtraiten them, but aſtoniſh them. They who have drowned their wits in cups of worldly pleaſure, may ſoon have them drowned in full and overflowing cups of worldly ſorrow.

Beſides this expoſition of the peoples being troubled with perplexity, fear, and doubt, with anxiety, and uncertainty of ſpirit what to do, I ſay, beſides this, there is another way of being troubled, upon which ſome Expoſitors ſpecially inſiſt. The people ſhall be troubled; that is, ſhall be in a Tumult; they ſhall riſe up ſeditiouſly, and (as we ſay) make a commotion, they ſhall gather together as many Waters, with a roaring noiſe. Many people, are compared to many Waters; and there is ſometimes a confluence, a great confluence or flood of them tumbling together: The Poet tells us elegantly what rude work a people make when they riſe up like a flood of troubled Waters. Their rage (ſaith he) finds out weapons, one throws ſtones, another throws firebrands, till all's in a ſad combuſtion: Theſe waters, if let alone, may quickly put all into a flame. The Pſalmiſt aſcribes the quieting of the Sea, and the quieting of the people to God in one verſe; Yea, I conceive the one is but the explication of the other, (Pſal. 65.7.) Which ſtilleth the noiſe of the Seas, the noiſe of their waves, and the tumult of their people. Thus ſaith Elihu, the people ſhall be in a tumult, (this ſuits with that expoſition firſt given) ready to deſtroy whomſoever they meet next, or thoſe eſpecially who never did nor meant them any other hurt but to keep the peace, or bridle their head-ſtrong fury.

Yet, I rather adhere to the former Interpretation, The people ſhall be troubled, That is, they ſhall be in a great conſternation of ſpirit, neither being able (which they ſeldom are) to adviſe themſelves what to do, nor fit to receive (which they ſeldom will) advice from others. And (as Elihu adds) they ſhall be thus troubled.

At midnight.] Or, In the half of the night, as the words may be rendred; that's a great aggravation of the judgment. The night is a time of reſt, and midnight is the time of deepeſt reſt; ſo that for the people to be in a tumult, or troubled at midnight, is to be overtaken with matter of fear, when fear ſeemed furtheſt off, or when they ſuſpected nothing to make them afraid. David ſaith of ſome, (Pſal. 3.5.) There were they in great fear, where no fear was. To fear at midnight, is to fear when uſually no fear is, that is, when people are at reſt in their beds: And ſo to ſay, the people ſhall be troubled at midnight, ſignifieth either, Firſt, the coming of trouble upon a ſecure people, upon a people who thought themſelves, and while they thought themſelves not only out of the noiſe, but reach of danger: Or Secondly, It may ſignifie the coming of trouble upon a people altogether unfit to help themſelves; when a man is aſleep, he cannot give counſel how to prevent danger, and while he is in his bed, he is in no poſture to oppoſe it. All this may well be included in what Elihu ſaith, The people ſhall be troubled at midnight.

Cum maximè ſecuri.

Hence Note, Firſt, There are National troubles as well as perſonal.

God can ſcare not only a family, or this and that particular man, but a whole people at once; he cannot only make a child, or a woman, but a multitude, yea an Army of mighty men tremble like a child, and faint as the weakeſt woman. A people are many, yet every man ſhall be as if he were alone, or but one in the midſt of innumerable dangers, and of a thouſand deaths. Moſes in his Song foreſaw the dread of Nations upon the report of the Lords miraculous conduct of Iſrael through the red Sea, Exod. 15. 14, 15, 16.) The people ſhall hear, and be afraid; ſorrow ſhall take hold on the inhabitants of Paleſtina, all the inhabitants of Canaan ſhall melt away. And when Chriſt ſpeaks of thoſe dreadful Prognoſticks of his coming, he not only ſaith, There ſhall be ſigns in the Sun, and in the Moon, and in the Stars, but upon the Earth diſtreſs of Nations, with perplexity, (Luke 21.25.)

Secondly, Obſerve, Both perſonal and publick troubles are at the command of God, as both publick and perſonal peace are.

A people as well as a perſon, may and ſhall be troubſed, even at the midnight of their greateſt ſecurity, if God give the word. I make peace (ſaith the Lord, Iſa. 45.7.) and create evil; that is, the evil of trouble. There will be occaſion afterward to ſpeak further of this point from thoſe words (Ver. 29.) When he giveth quietneſs, who can give trouble, and when he hideth his face, who can behold him? Whether it be done againſt a nation, or againſt a man only; trouble of all ſorts is at the command of God; If he ſaith to ſuch or ſuch a miſchief, go to a nation, it will go; if he bid the ſword trouble them, if he bid peſtilence trouble them if he bid famin trouble them, if he bid their own diviſions trouble them, the people ſhall be troubled; Yea, they ſhall be troubled at midnight.

Whence Note, Thirdly, Trouble takes or ſeizeth upon many when they leaſt expect it.

God can ſend trouble when no man thinks of it. At midnight every one is in bed, all are for reſt and quiet. The Lord uſually executes his judgments upon the unwary world, upon a ſecure people (Exod. 12.29.) At midnight the Lord ſmote all the firſt-born in the land of Egypt, &c. And Pharaoh roſe up in the night, he and all his ſervants, and all the Egyptians, and there was a great cry in Egypt. We read alſo (2 Kings 19.35.) In that night the Angel of the Lord went out and ſmote in the camp of the Aſſyrians, an hundred four-ſcore and five thouſand. It was not a day-battel, but a night-battel; When they were all gone into their tents, and were at reſt, when the Army was ſecure; In that night did the Lord fight them by an Angel, and made a mighty ſlaughter among them. Belſhazzar King of the Chaldeans was ſlain in the night (Dan. 5.30.) even in that night wherin he made a feaſt to a thouſand of his Lords, and drank wine before the thouſand (Ver. 1.) In that night not only of his ſecurity, but of his jollity and ſenſuality, when he had even drowned himſelf and his great Lords with wine and belly-chear, in that very night the City was broken up, and Belſhazzar ſlain; Hiſtory tells us what dreadful work was made upon the Babylonians that night. The great Judgment day is ſo deſcribed; Jeſus Chriſt will, at laſt, trouble the world at midnight; The Day of the Lord ſo cometh (ſaith the Apoſtle, 1 Theſ. 5.2.) as a thief in the night; when they ſhall ſay peace and ſafety, then ſudden deſtruction cometh upon them, &c. Chriſt himſelf ſhadowing his coming under the parable of the ten Virgins, who all ſlumbred and ſlept, tells us (Matth. 25.6.) At midnight there was a cry made, Behold the Bridegroom cometh, go ye out to meet him. Though ſome were in a better condition then others, ſome wiſe, ſome fooliſh, yet all ſlept, and it was a kind of midnight to them all. Chriſt will come, and the people ſhall be troubled at midnight, and then there will be a dreadful Cry among the ſecure drowſie world. Therefore the Counſel of Chriſt is moſt proper (Matth. 13. 35.) Watch, becauſe ye know not at what hour your Maſter may come, whether at even, or at midnight, or at Cock-crowing, or in the morning. It is hard to be put to it at midnight, 'tis ſad to be in a ſleepy or ſlumbring condition when evil comes. The Goſpel ſheweth us, how much that man was troubled, when his neighbour came to borrow bread of him at midnight (Luke 11.5,7.) Trouble me not, my Children are with me in bed, I cannot riſe and give thee. If it be matter of trouble to be called out of our bed to do a courteſie for a friend at midnight, O what will it be to be called up to Judgment, or to be ſurprized with any Judgment at midnight! Therefore prepare and be ready for all changes. At midnight the people ſhall be troubled,

And paſs away.] Theſe words are a third part of the deſcription of the Judgment of God upon a people; they ſhall die, they ſhall be troubled, they ſhall paſs away; That is, ſome of them ſhall die, all ſhall be troubled, others ſhall paſs away. There is a three-fold notion of paſſing away.

Firſt, Some expound it thus. They ſhall be carried Captive out of their own Country; This with the former two make up a perfect Judgment upon any people; Some ſhall die, or be ſlain, all ſhall be troubled and vext, they ſhall be at their wits end, and the reſt ſhall be carried away Captive.

Secondly, They ſhall paſs away; That is, they ſhall paſs into their graves; the form of ſpeech here uſed may well bear that ſenſe, for death is a paſſing away, a paſſing out of this world (Pſal. 37.36.) Lo he paſſed away and was gone, That is, he died; And that which is death to the Heavens and the Earth (their great change when ever it ſhall be) is called a paſſing away (Matth. 5.18.) Till Heaven and Earth paſs away, one jot or one tittle ſhall in no wiſe paſs away from the Law till all be fulfilled; That is, the Law ſhall ſtand in force as long as the world ſtands. Thus to paſs away is to die. But I conceive, we are to expound this third branch of the Judgment diſtinctly from the former two, and therefore for as much as we have death in the firſt words, it will not be proper to take in death here again, or to expound paſſing away by dying. The third notion of, they ſhall paſs away, is, they ſhall run or flee for it, they know not whither, they ſhall flee for their lives from the danger impending over them. As ſome ſhall die, and all be troubled, ſo not a few ſhall endeavour to ſave their lives by flight. Chriſt in the Goſpel foretold the great troubles and afflictions which ſhould come upon Tranſire intelligo, non pro migrare alio, ſed pro abire in ſepulchrum. Merc.

Jeruſalem, and in them there was a ſad concurrence or meeting of theſe three Judgments in the Text. For when after forty years the Romans invaded and ruin'd their City, many dyed and were deſtroyed by ſword and famin, all the people were troubled; O in what a hurry were they to ſee the Roman Eagle diſplayed before their Gates! and then they paſſed away; That is, as many as could, withdrew and got out of the danger. It is reported in Hiſtory, that before the Siege of that City, a voyce was heard in Jeruſalem, ſaying, (Migremus hinc) let us paſs from hence, they who believed that warning, departed ſoon after; And as ſome paſſed away before the Judgment came, ſo when it was come, many were ſtriving to be gone, or to paſs away. Therefore Chriſt admoniſhed them (*Matth.*24.20.) Pray that your flight be not in the winter, nor on the Sabath day. I conceive, we are to underſtand this Text diſtinctly of ſuch a paſſing away. In a moment ſhall they die, and the people ſhall be troubled at midnight, and paſs away; they ſhall do what they can to ſecure themſelves by out-running the danger.

Note from it, Firſt, God hath variety of means to humble a ſinful people.

Into how many ways do the Judgments of God divide themſelves; ſeveral perſons bear ſeveral parts; here is death to many, trouble to all, flight to ſome. That, in the Prophet, anſwers it fully (*Jer.*15.1.) where the Lord proteſting that nothing (no not the interceſſion of Moſes and Samuel) ſhould take off from his reſolve againſt that people, ſaith, Such as are for death to death, and ſuch as are for the ſword to the ſword, and ſuch as are for the famin to the famin, and ſuch as are for the captivity to the captivity. There's peſtilence, and ſword, and famin and captivity ready at the call of God to take away a provoking People.

Secondly, Note, To paſs away, or to be put to our flight, is a grievous Judgment.

To flee from the face of the purſuer, to run for our lives, who knows the trouble and terror of it, but they that have been in it? What a mercy is it that our dwellings are continued to us? That we abide in our places, that we neither die in a moment, are not ſurpriz'd by midnight-fears, but reſt quietly in our beds, though fears at midnight have been ready to ſurprize us. What a mercy is it, that we are not paſſing away, running, fleeing into the wilderneſs, as the poor Churches of God have done in ſeveral ages?

So much of Judgment upon the people in that threefold notion of it. We have here alſo Judgment upon Princes.

And the mighty ſhall be taken away without hand.

Not only the many, but the mighty ſhall feel the Judgments of God; For as 'tis ſaid in the former verſe, He accepteth not the perſons of Princes, nor regardeth the rich more then the poor; The mighty and the meaneſt of men are alike to God, when they are alike in ſinning againſt God: If they do evil alike, they ſhall ſuffer evil alike; God accepteth no mans perſon.

The mighty ſhall be taken away.] The word rendred, mighty, taken plurally, is uſed in Scripture to denote not only mighty men, but any creature that excels in might. And therefore according to the exigence of the place, it ſignifies ſometimes Angels, who being ſpirits, exceed all fleſh in might. The people of Iſrael in the wilderneſs did eat Angels food (Pſal. 78. 5.) the food of the Abirims, of the mighty or ſtrong ones: And as it is applyed to Angels who exceed the ſtrongeſt men in ſtrength, ſo it is applyed to any ſort of ſtrong beaſts, to the horſe (Jer. 47. 3.) to Bulls, (Iſa. 34. 7. Jer. 50. 11. Pſal. 22. 13. Pſal. 68. 31.) Thus the word riſeth above man to Angels, and falls below man to the beaſts of the earth; here 'tis applyable only to ſtrong and mighty men, of whom yet there are three ſorts.

Firſt, Some are men of a mighty arm.
Secondly, Others are mighty in Arms.
Thirdly, There are men mighty in Authority.

The firſt of theſe is a natural mighty man, he hath a mighty arm, a ſtrong body, or he excells in bodily ſtrength. The ſecond is a martial mighty man, a ſouldier, a man of war. The third is the Magiſtratical mighty man, he is cloathed with power both to puniſh and reward. Poſſibly he may have no bodily might, Yea, poſſibly he is no Souldier, yet a man of ſuch power he is, that he commands whole Nations. Now take the word Mighty in any of theſe three ſenſes, and it is a truth, the mighty ſhall be taken away, the mighty in ſtrength of the Arm, the mighty in ſtrength of Armies, the mighty in power and dignity, are by the hand of the Almighty God

Taken away.] They ſhall take them away (ſaith the Hebrew Text) That is, ſay ſome (according to the firſt tranſlation mentioned) the people ſhall violently take away the mighty. But by an uſual Hebraiſm we may read it Impersonally, the mighty ſhall be taken away, concealing or leaving it to be underſtood by whom. Like that ſpeech to the rich man (Luke 12. 25.) This night do they require thy Soul of thee, (ſo we put in the Margin) That is, (as the Text hath it) this night thy Soul ſhall be required of thee, they ſhall take thy Soul, that is, it ſhall be taken away; ſo here they ſhall take away the mighty, that is, the mighty ſhall be taken away or removed. We may take notice of a two-fold remove or taking away.

ויסירו אביר Et amovent potentem, imperſonalitèr. Piſc.

Firſt, There is a remove out of place and power; Thus a man is taken away when his Authority is taken away.

Secondly, There is a removing or taking of a man out of the world; Thus they are taken away whoſe perſons are deſtroyed, cut off, and periſh. The mighty, both ways or either way are often taken away. The perſons of many mighty men have fallen, and many more of them have fallen from their places and powers. Here they are under a general threatning, They ſhall be taken away. But how ſhall they be taken away? The Text anſwers.

Without hand.] It is ſomewhat ſtrange that they who are mighty, and have ſuch power in their hand, ſhould be taken away, and no hand touch them, or without hand. We uſe to ſay of a thing ſtrangly gone, or gone we know not how, It cannot be gone without hands; yet thus the Lord deals judicially with the mighty of the world; They ſhall be taken away without hand. There may be a threefold underſtanding of that expreſſion.

Firſt, Thus; The mighty ſhall be taken away without hand; That is, they ſhall have no hands to help them, or they ſhall be deſtitute of all human help. Sometimes God leaves or ſtrips the mighty naked, they who have had great power, and many thouſands ſtanding up to defend them, have not a hand for them, and ſo are taken away without hand, no man drawing a ſword or ſtriking a ſtroak for them.

Frequenter manus pro miniſterio, ſed frequentiſſime pro ope & auxilio ponitur. Pin.

Secondly, To do a thing without hand, is to do it with the ſmalleſt appearance of ſecond cauſes or inſtruments. We are ready to ſay, there muſt be a great deal of tugging to get the mighty down, who like Oaks are ſtrongly rooted and highly grown, who look like mountains, which cannot be removed, yet (ſaith Elihu) the Lord can take them away without hand; that is, eaſily, without any trouble at all, little means or very improbable means being uſed to effect it. So then to do a thing without hand, is to do it as if we put no hand no ſtreſs to it when we do it. As they who move ſwiftly or lightly are ſaid to go without ſetting a foot on the ground (*Dan.*8.5.) the He-Goat came and touched not the ground, he hid rather fly then go. So to do a thing, as if we did not put a hand to it, is to do it with the greateſt eaſe imaginable.

Thirdly, To do a thing without hand, is to do it without any viſible means at all, even by the immediate ſtroak or power of God. There is a hand of God in all things that are done in the world, but ſome things are done without any other hand, and are therefore moſt properly ſaid to be done without hand. Thus the Lord is able to do the greateſt things, even to take mighty men from the earth, no hand of man appearing or joyning with him in the action. Now, becauſe God uſually ſets inſtruments awork to effect his will in the world, and to bring about his counſels, therefore in what work ſoever he either quite leaves or ſeems to leave inſtruments out, that work is ſaid to be done without hand. The Stone which ſhall grow up to be a great mountain, That is, the Kingdom of Chriſt, is called a ſtone cut out without hands (Dan.2.34.) That is, without without humane power. The kingdom of Chriſt ſhall be ſet up ſo much by the power of God without any earthly contribution, that it ſhall confeſſedly be ſaid to be ſet up without hands. Though we ought not to neglect the coming and advancement of the Kingdom of Chriſt in the world, yet we ſhould not be anxiouſly careful about it, when we ſee little or no means for it, yea though we ſee great very great means ſet againſt it, becauſe a ſtone cut out without hands ſhall do it.

The Apoſtle uſeth this form of ſpeaking, both as to eternals and ſpirituals. Concerning the former he is expreſs (2 Cor. 5. 1.) We know that when the earthly houſe of this Tabernacle is diſſolved, we have a building of God, a houſe not made with hands, eternal in the Heavens; That is, a houſe of Gods own immediate making, a houſe to the making whereof man hath added nothing. The fabrick of this viſible world is a houſe made without hands, much more is Heaven, and the glorious unſeen ſtate which Saints ſhall have hereafter. The houſe above, or ſtate of Glory is wholly of Gods making. And as our eternal eſtate is expreſſed by a houſe made without hands, ſo our ſpiritual eſtate is called by the ſame Apoſtle, A work done without hands (Col. 2. 11.) where having aſſerted our compleatneſs in Chriſt (Ver. 10.) he adds, In whom alſo ye are circumciſed with the circumciſion made without hands. The external literal circumciſion was made with hands; there was an operation of man in it, the cutting off the foreskin of the fleſh, but in the ſpiritual circumciſion, man hath no hand, it is the work of God alone; as alſo that effectual faith is which always accompanieth it, and is therefore called (Ver. 12.) the faith of the operation of God. There is a temporary faith which we may call a faith of the operation of man, but true ſaving faith is the operation of God, and may be ſaid as the ſpiritual circumciſion (which was ſignified and ſhadowed by the corporal) to be made without hands.

Indicatur divinum ſupplicium, cujus nulla humana cauſa aſſignari, aut quod nulla humana vi declinari poteſt.

Now as the Scripture ſpeaks both of ſpirituals and eternals which are made without hands, ſo this Text ſpeaks of externals and providentials in the ſame language, The mighty ſhall be taken away without hand, That is, without any creature-help or viſible human hand; what ever is done without a viſible hand, is done by the hand of God. Elihu intimates a puniſhment upon the mighty, which (as to the effecting of it) cannot be aſſigned to any thing in man, much leſs can the effecting of it, be hindred by man. The hand of God is moſt viſible, in doing that which no viſible hand hath done, or can undo. They ſhall be taken away without hand.

Hence Note, The mightieſt have no might againſt God.

That cannot be avoyded by any human power, which is done without human power. God ſlew the firſt-born of Egypt, and deſtroyed the Aſſyrian hoſt without hand, he did it by his Angel, no hand appearing againſt them. The Lord ſmote Herod, and he died without hand (Acts 12. 23.) Immediately (that is, preſently, as the Greek word imports, 'tis true alſo, immediately, that is, without human means, as our Engliſh word alſo imports) the Angel of the Lord ſmote him, and he was eaten of worms, and gave up the Ghoſt. What a poor worm was that mighty man in the hand of God, when God ſlew him without hand, and commanded the worms to eat him? Jeſus Chriſt, who is alſo the mighty God (Iſa. 9. 6.) called himſelf a worm and no man, in his humiliations for the redemption of loſt man (Pſal. 22. 6.) What are the mightieſt men but worms to God, who is ſo mighty, that if he ſay the word, worms become their Maſters. The mighty Giants are before God but pigmy's, punies, or Children. The Prophet gives a good warning (Jer. 9. 23.) Let not the mighty man glory in his might. Let him not glory in the might of his arm, Let him not glory in the might of his arms or Armies, though man have an Army of mighty men about him, yet let him not glory in them, no nor in the might of his power or authority. If any man uſeth his might againſt God, what is his might unto God? (Pſal. 52. 1.) Why boaſteſt thou, O mighty man, that thou canſt do miſchief? If a man be mighty, and have a mind to do miſchief with his might, eſpecially if he boaſteth in his might, becauſe he can do miſchief with it, he is not only ſinful, but weak and fooliſh. There is no greater moral weakneſs then to boaſt either of natural, martial, or civil ſtrength. Could any of the mighty men of this world ſtand before the might of God, they had ſomewhat to boaſt of. Read the word of the Lord againſt the mighty (Iſa. 2. 10.) Behold the Kings and Captains of the earth trembling before the preſence of the Lamb (Rev. 6. 15.) and then Judg how weak the ſtrongeſt are before the Lord? All ages are full of teaching examples, that there is no might to his who is Almighty.

Secondly, Note, What ever God will do he can eaſily do it.

He can effect it with a look, with a caſt of his eye, he can do it with a breath of his mouth, he can do it with a word. It is ſaid (Exod. 14. 24.) God looked unto the hoſt of the Egyptians through the pillar of fire and through the cloud, and troubled the hoſt of the Egyptians, and took off their Chariot wheels, that they drave them heavily. To look upon them was an eaſie thing, God did not give them a ſtroak with his hand, but only a look with his eye, and that overthrew them.

Thirdly, Note, God can do the greateſt things alone.

He can ſubdue the mighty, though none come forth to his help againſt the mighty; they are curſed who do not help the Lord againſt the mighty, when they ſet their might againſt the Lord; (Judg. 5. 23.) Curſe ye Meroz, (ſaith the Angel of the Lord,) curſe ye bitterly the inhabitants thereof, becauſe they came not forth to the help of the Lord, to the help of the Lord againſt the mighty. But though it be the ſin of man not to help the Lord againſt the mighty, yet the withdrawing of their help doth not hinder the Lord in his purpoſe againſt the mighty: For, He taketh away the mighty without hands. Though men ſtir not, though Angels ſhould not ſtir to his help, yet his own arm can bring either ſalvation or deſtruction. It is ſaid of the Lord (Iſa. 44. 24.) He ſtretched out the Heavens alone; there was none to help him to unfold that vaſt canopy of Heaven, he ſtretcht out the Heavens alone. As in the Creation he made all alone, ſo in Providence he can act and effect all alone. It is a great glory to God, that he hath many inſtruments to help him, many tongues to ſpeak for him, many hands to work for him; but it is a greater glory to God that he needs none to help him, none to ſpeak or work for him. In this the glory of the Lord infinitely outſhines the glory of all the mighty Kings and Princes of the earth. They have done, and can do mighty things, but not without hands, and therefore they have the hands of thouſands at command for them; 'tis not their place to put their hand to the work, 'tis enough that they give commands and orders, 'tis the duty of others to execute all their righteous commands, and fullfil their orders. But the Lord hath not only a commanding power, but an executing power too in himſelf; though no hand move, yet his affairs ſtand not ſtill. God, and all creatures put together, are no more then God alone without any creature: Many are uſeful, but none are neceſſary unto God. Take two inferences from it.

Firſt, This is matter of terror to wicked men; though they ſee no hand in the world againſt them, much leſs any able to match them, leaſt of all to check them, yea though they ſee all hands for them, yet this is no ſecurity to them, this is no aſſurance of one hours ſafety, ſeeing the Lord taketh away the mighty without hand, and he uſually doth it when they ſee not which way any hand can reach them. It is the concluſion of one of the Ancients upon this place in reference to a mighty oppreſſour; He is inviſibly pull'd down, who did viſibly pull down; He ruined others with hands, but himſelf ſhall be ruin'd without hand; he ſaw him whom he took away, but he ſhall not ſee him who takes him away. Let them who live without fear of any hand, remember the Apoſtles admonition, (Heb. 10. 31.) It is a fearful thing to fall into the hand of the living God, who takes away the mighty without hand.

Inviſibiliter rapitur, qui viſibiliter rapiebat, Greg.

Secondly, This is matter of wonderful comfort, to all that fear God, and truſt upon him, whether Princes or people, whether mighty men or mean men. What though ye ſee no hand for you? yet 'tis enough if he be for you who ſaves you without hand. The protecting and ſaving power of God, is as great and as effectual as his deſtroying power is; yea, he oftner ſaves without hand, then he deſtroys without hand. As the Kings of the Earth, ſo the great King of Heaven and Earth, loves to deal his favours, and beſtow his rewards immediately with his own hand, but uſually afflicts and puniſheth by the hands of others. That's a moſt pregnant Scripture to this purpoſe, (Hoſ. 1.7.) where the Lord promiſeth to ſave Judah; But Judah might ſay, I am in a very low condition, and no help appears: Therefore he addeth, I will ſave them by the Lord their God; and will not ſave them by Bow, nor by Sword, nor by Battel, nor by Horſes, nor Horſemen. Judah ſhall be ſaved, though there be no hand to ſave them. I will ſave them (ſaith the Lord) by the Lord their God. I will do it immediately. And the Lord doth not only ſay (in the affirmative) he will ſave them without hand; but he ſaith alſo (in the Negative) that he will not ſave them with hands, But I will not ſave them by Bow, nor Sword, nor Battel, nor Horſes, nor Horſemen; there ſhall be no appearance of theſe helps, I have heretofore deſtroyed you by Sword, and Bow, by Horſes, and Horſemen, but I will have all the honour and thanks of your ſalvation to my ſelf, Though the Lords people have neither Horſes nor Horſemen, though they are as helpleſs as is imaginable, yet the Lord is able to ſave them, and he will do it in the fitteſt ſeaſon. As this is true in reference to Princes and Nations in their publick capacity, ſo private Chriſtians may take up the comfort of it. What though great diſtreſs and affliction be nigh, and no hand to ſave you, yet the Lord can ſave without hand; if you are low, he can raiſe you, though none lend a hand to raiſe you; if poor, he can enrich you; if weak, he can ſtrengthen you, though you have no means for either: It is an everlaſting ſpring of comfort, that the Lord can do all things without hand, that he needs not be beholden to the creature, nor ſtands in need of their help to effect either threatned judgments againſt Babylon, or his promiſed mercies unto Sion.

Thus we have ſeen Elihu deſcribing the righteous, though ſevere dealings of God, both with people and Princes, who deſpiſe his counſels, and provoke his wrath: The reaſon why they fall under his wrath, is further diſcovered in the next words.

VERS. 21, 22.

For his eyes are upon the ways of man, and he ſeeth all his goings.

There is no darkneſs nor ſhadow of death, where the workers of iniquity may hide themſelves.

IN the former verſe Elihu reported the judgment of God both upon the people and upon the Princes of the earth, In a moment ſhall they die, &c. In theſe two verſes, he gives us a proof that the Lord is righteous in judgment both upon Princes and people, or he aſſigns the ground of it. That the words are a reaſon of the former, the Cauſal Particle in the beginning of the 21. verſe puts it out of queſtion.

Verſ. 21. For his eyes are upon the ways of men.

As if he had ſaid, God doth not theſe things, he troubles not Nations, and Nobles, People, or Princes, by an abſolute and ſoveraign power, or becauſe he will, but he finds juſt cauſe to do it; What men do, is enough to juſtifie God in what they ſuffer: He hath always power enough in his hand to deſtroy all men, and to turn this world back into its firſt nothing, but he never uſeth his power, nor puts it forth without cauſe.

For his eyes are upon the ways of man, &c.] God is a Spirit, the ſimplicity of his Eſſence is his firſt and higheſt perfection, he is purely incorporeal; yet as the paſſions of man's mind, ſo the members of his body are often in Scripture attributed unto God; we read of the face of God, of the hand of God, of the ear of God, and as in many other places, ſo in this, of the eye of God: Now as the ear of God notes only his power of hearing, and the hand of God his power of working, ſo the eye or eyes of God note only his power of ſeeing, knowing and diſcerning the ways of men. And when Elihu ſaith, his eyes are upon the ways of man, his meaning is only this, he clearly diſcerns and underſtands the ways of man.

Theſe words, his eyes are upon the ways of man, intimate, Firſt, A preſent act, he doth not ſay, they were, or they will be upon the ways of man, but they are. Secondly, They imply as a preſent, ſo a continued act; his eyes are ſo upon the ways of man, that they are never off them. The eyes of God dwell, as it were, upon the ways of man: His eyes are ſaid indeed to run to and fro through the whole Earth, (2 Chron. 16.8.) yet they do not wander from one object to another, but are fixed and ſetled upon every one. Thirdly, they imply an intentive act, or the ſeriouſneſs of the heart of God upon the ways of man. We may behold a thing, and yet take no great notice of it; but when our eyes are ſaid to be upon any thing, this imports they are buſied much upon it. Fourthly, This manner of ſpeaking ſignifieth not only a clear ſight, but that which is operative, carrying with it a moſt exact ſcrutiny or diſquiſition of the ways of men, according to that expreſſion of the Pſalmiſt, (Pſal. 11.4.) His eyes behold, his eye-lids try the children of men. God doth not only behold, but his eye-lids try the ways of men; That is, he ſo looks upon them, that he looks through them, and diſcerneth what they are to the utmoſt. God doth not only behold the body and bulk of our actions, but the ſoul and ſpirit of them, and while he ſeeth them, he ſeeth into them. All this, and much more then we can apprehend, is comprehended in thoſe words, His eyes are upon

The ways of man.] The word is plural, not way, but ways; which ſhews the extenſiveneſs of the ſight or knowledg of God: The word being put indefinitely, is to be taken univerſally: His eyes are not confined to this or that object, to this or that place, to this or that perſon, but his eyes look over all, His eyes are upon the ways of man.

Yet further, the ways of man may be diſtinguiſhed; Firſt, As they are either internal or external. The internal ways of man, are the ways of his heart, as the Prophet hath it, (Iſa. 57.17.) He went on frowardly in the way of his heart. And theſe ways of the heart, our inward ways are, firſt, our thoughts, what we imagin and conceive; ſecondly, our affections, what we love, and what we hate, what we rejoyce in, and what we mourn for, declare the way of our hearts. Thirdly, The ways of the heart are a man's purpoſes, reſolutions, and intentions what to do. Fourthly, The ways of the heart are man's deſigns, or his aims, what he drives at, or propoſeth as his end in all that he doth. In this latitude we are to underſtand the preſent Text; when Elihu ſaith, the eyes of God are upon the ways of man, remember they are upon his thoughts, upon his affections, upon his purpoſes, upon his deſigns and aims, all theſe are before the Lord; as it is ſaid of Chriſt, (John 2.25.) He needed not that any ſhould teſtifie of man; for he knew what was in man; That is, both the ſtate of his heart, and all the movings of it. And if the Lord's eyes be upon the internal ways of man, then certainly they are upon the external ways of man; if he knoweth what work the heart is at or about, certainly he knoweth what the hand is at or about. He that knoweth which way the mind goeth, cannot but know which way the foot goeth. His eyes are upon the external ways of man, but 'tis his chief glory that his eyes are upon the internal ways of man, (Gen. 6.5.) The Lord ſaw that the wickedneſs of man was great upon the earth: He ſaw man's actions or outward ways were very wicked, but beſides that, ſaith the Text, He ſaw, that every imagination of the thoughts of his heart was only evil continually. He ſaw the ways within, what was formed up, or (as the word there notes) what creatures were made and faſhioned in the mind of man. Thus, if we take the ways in that diſtinction of internal and external, the eyes of God are upon them.

Secondly, Take the ways of man as differenced in their kinds, as they are either good or evil; the eyes of the Lord are upon both. They are (ſaith Solomon, Prov. 15.3.) in every place, beholding the evil and the good: That is, the evil ways and the good ways of men. But ſaith not the Prophet (Hab. 1.14.) Thou art of purer eyes then to behold evil? Which may ſeem, at firſt reading, to imply, that God doth not behold the evil ways or actings of men. I anſwer, if we diſtinguiſh the word behold, we ſhall ſoon reconcile theſe Scriptures. To behold, is either to diſcern what is before us, or to behold, is to approve what is before us. There is a ſeeing of knowledg, and there is a ſeeing of contentment; now when the Prophet ſaith, the Lord is of purer eyes then to behold evil, his meaning is, he doth not, he cannot behold with evil contentment or approbation, otherwiſe the Lord beholds evil, even all the evil in the world; both good and evil are before him, who is himſelf only and altogether good. His eyes are upon the ways of Man.] Not only upon the ways of this or that man, but of every man; let man be what he will for a man, let him be a great man, or a mean man, let him be a rich man or a poor man, let him be a wiſe man or a fool, let him be an ignorant or a knowing man, let him be holy or a prophane man, let him be a ſubtle or a ſimple man, his eyes are upon him. Thoſe things which difference men among themſelves, make no difference at all among them, as to the eye of God. His eyes are upon the ways of (whomſoever you can call) man.

איש

And he ſeeth all his goings.] This latter clauſe of the verſe is of the ſame ſenſe with the former, therefore I ſhall not ſtay upon the opening of it. The Scripture often uſeth Synonyma's, and repeats the ſame thing in other terms, to ſhew the truth and certainty of it; and ſurely the Spirit gives a double ſtroke here, to ſtrike this truth home into our hearts, and faſten it in our minds, He beholdeth the ways, and he ſeeth all the goings of man. The word tranſlated ſeeing, ſignifieth a very curious or critical ſight, as was opened before.

ראה

Again, theſe latter words ſay, he ſeeth

All his goings.] Where we have the univerſal particle expreſt, which was only underſtood in the form. And though theſe two words, ways and goings may be expounded for the ſame thing, yet in this conjunction we may diſtinguiſh them, by underſtanding the word ways, for the conſtant courſe of a man's life, and the word goings, for his particular and renewed motions in thoſe ways. The Original word rendred goings, ſignifies ſometimes going with much caution, yea with a kind of ſtate or pomp, yet frequently any ordinary going.

Incedere cum pompa, propriè deambulare.

Now, when Elihu aſſerts, The Lord ſeeth all his goings; we may ſum up the matter under theſe five conſiderations; He ſeeth Firſt, Where he goeth, what his path is. Secondly, He ſeeth whither he is going, what he makes the end of his journey or travel. Thirdly, when he goeth, or ſets out, what time he takes for every undertaking. Fourthly, how far he goeth, the Lord takes notice of every ſtep, what progreſs he makes in any buſineſs good or bad. Fifthly, he ſeeth in what manner he goeth, with what heart, with what mind, or frame of ſoul he goeth. Thus diſtinct and exact is the Lord in beholding the ways, and in ſeeing all the goings of man.

Hence Note, Firſt, Surely the Lord is a God of knowledg.

If we could conceive a man to have his eyes in all places, and upon all perſons, an eye upon all hearts, and an eye in all hearts, as well as an eye upon all hands, you would ſay this man muſt needs be a knowing man, eſpecially if he have ſuch an eye, as the eye of God is, a diſcerning eye, a diſtinguiſhing eye, a trying eye, an eye which ſeeth to the bottom of whatſoever it ſeeth. Hannah ſaid this in her ſong (1 Sam. 2. 3.) Speak not ſo proudly, let not arrogancy come out of your lips; for the Lord is a God of knowledg, and by him actions are weighed. 'Tis not a ſlight ſuperficial knowledg which God hath of things or perſons, by him actions are weighed, and ſo are the Actors. God puts all into an even ballance, and he will weigh both perſons and actions to a grain, yea every word and thought ſhall go into the ballance. It was ſaid to that great Monarch Belteſhazzar, by a hand-writing upon the wall, Thou art weighed in the ballances. The Lord weighed that great King, he weighed all his power, and the exerciſe of it; and he that weigheth Kings, will not leave the meaneſt ſubject unweighed; by him actions are weighed. We many times paſs over our actions without conſideration, and never take the weight of them, at leaſt, we never weigh them in the Sanctuary ballance. If they will bear weight in the ballance of the world, we preſume they will in Gods ballance alſo. But as the Lord is a God of knowledg otherwiſe then man is, ſo by him actions are weighed otherwiſe then by man. It is ſaid of Idols (Pſal. 115. 15.) They have eyes and ſee not; but we may ſay of the Lord Jehovah the true God, the living God, he hath properly, no eyes, yet he ſeeth; and his faculty of ſeeing is infinitely above that which himſelf hath planted in man. The Atheiſt while he is about the worſt work in the world, the breaking in pieces of the people of God, and afflicting his heritage, while he is ſlaying the widow, and the ſtranger, and murdering the fatherleſs, while he is (I ſay) at ſuch kind of work as this, he ſaith (Pſal. 94. 7.) The Lord ſhall not ſee, neither ſhall the God of Jacob regard it. But what ſaith the Pſalmiſt to him and ſuch as he (Ver. 8. 9.) Underſtand ye brutiſh among the people, he that formed the eye, ſhall not he ſee? Thoſe words of the Prophet to King Aſa (2 Chron. 16. 9.) The eyes of the Lord run to and fro through the whole earth, are an alluſion to a man who having a deſire to know much, or to ſee all in the world, runs up and down, travels from place to place, from Country to Country for information. The Lord would have us know that he knoweth every thing as exactly, as they who run from place to place to ſee what's done in every place. It is prophecyed of the latter times (Dan. 12. 4.) Many ſhall run too and fro, and knowledg ſhall be increaſed; That is, many ſhall be ſo graciouſly greedy of knowledg, that they will refuſe no labour nor travel to attain it. They will run to and fro, to inquire and ſearch for it, they will not think any time or labour loſt, if they may but gain that precious commodity by it, called true knowledg, or the knowledg of the truth. And that expreſſion of running to and fro, may well be expounded, they ſhall by diſcourſe and arguing beat out the truth; In diſcourſing the mind runs to and fro faſter then the feet can in travelling; In diſcourſe we run from point to point, from reaſon to reaſon, from objection to objection, from queſtion to queſtion, till we come to ſolid anſwers and concluſions, and ſo knowledg is increaſed. The Lord is ſurely a God of knowledg, whoſe eyes run to and fro without motion, and ſee the bottom of all things, without diſcourſe or argumentation.

Secondly, Note, The Lords knowledg of man never abateth, he is always obſerving and alike obſerving what men do and what men are.

The beſt the moſt waking men, have their ſlumbrings and ſleepings; but the Lord neither ſlumbreth nor ſleepeth, his eyes are upon the ways of man. And when the Scripture ſaith, The Lord doth neither ſlumber nor ſleep, we may underſtand it in a twofold reference. Firſt, as to the protection of his people (Pſal. 121. 4.) Behold he that keepeth Iſrael, ſhall neither ſlumber nor ſleep, that is, he watcheth over them ſo unceſſantly, ſo unweariedly, that no danger can approach them without his knowledg. Secondly, he never ſlumbereth nor ſleepeth as to the obſervation and conſideration of all people, he never takes his eye off from the ways of man.

Thirdly, Note, The Lords knowledg or ſight of mans ways, is univerſal and everlaſting.

The All-ſeeing God ſeeth all our ways, and he ſeeth them always. And he ſeeth them all always by one act. The Lords view or proſpect of things is not ſucceſſive one after another, but conjunctive, all at once. The Lord hath a large eye, and an everlaſting eye, yea is all eye. He knows all things; Firſt, paſt or that have been; Secondly, preſent or that are; Thirdly, future, poſſible or that ſhall be. Thus ſaith the Lord in the Prophet (Iſa. 46. 10.) I am God, and there is none like me, declaring the end from the beginning, and from ancient times the things that are not yet done. And upon this read the Lords challenge of all the Idols in the world (Iſa. 41. 21, 22, 23.) Let them ſhew the former things what they be, that we may conſider them and know the latter end of them, or declare us things to come; Shew the things that are to come hereafter, that we may know that ye are gods. As if the Lord had ſaid, if ye can tell us all that's paſt, or any thing that is to come, as I can, then ye may take the honour of God, otherwiſe ye are but lies and vanities. Again the Lord knows all things; Firſt, without diſtraction; and ſecondly, he knows all things with cleareſt diſtinction; it is no more trouble to the Lord to ſee all things then to ſee one, and he ſeeth all things as if he had but one thing to ſee.

From the conſideration of this knowledg of God, let me give four or five inferences for inſtruction.

Firſt, (which is moſt natural to the Text) If the Lords eyes be upon the ways of man, if he ſeeth all his goings, then all the Lords Judgments are right.

The Judges of this world, may have a principle of righteouſneſs in them, and we may call them juſt and righteous Judges, yet all their Judgments are not always right. For, as ſome men are ſo ignorant, that they know nothing at all, ſo there are none ſo knowing as to know all things; the cleareſt ſighted Judges do not ſee all that may concern them in giving Judgment; even among them ſome may be blind, and many blinded, ſome are blind and cannot ſee much, others are blinded and will not ſee all that they ſee, they are blinded poſſibly with bribes and gifts, with hopes or fears, with paſſions and prejudices. And how clear-ſighted and honeſt-hearted ſoever any are, yet they cannot ſee all, ſomewhat may lie out of their ſight. Hence it cometh to paſs, that a juſt Judg may do that which is unjuſt, he cannot ſee quite through every matter, though he ſet himſelf to ſearch the matter before he giveth Judgment. But as the Lord is all righteouſneſs in his principle, and bears an everlaſting love to righteouſneſs; ſo he hath a clear ſight of all things and perſons, and therefore he muſt needs give a righteous Judgment concerning all things, actions, and perſons; Though he overthrow nations he is righteous, though he overthrow Princes he is righteous, becauſe he ſeeth into all things, and proceedeth upon certain knowledg of every mans caſe and condition. He cannot erre in Judgment, who hath no error in his Judgment, nor any deviation in his will.

Secondly, If the Lords eyes are upon all the ways of men, then, certainly ſinners, whoſe ways are evil, ſhall never go unpuniſhed.

For if he have a principle of righteouſneſs in him, and an eye to ſee all their unrighteous ways, they cannot eſcape his juſtice; Say to the wicked, wo to him, for he ſhall eat the fruit of his doings (Iſa. 3.11.) The righteous God knoweth the unrighteouſneſs of man, and therefore wo to the unrighteous man.

Thirdly, Take this concluſion, Then no godly man, no good man ſhall go unrewarded, or loſe the reward of that good which he hath done.

The Lord is righteous, and he ſeeth every one that doth right, or the righteouſneſs of every mans way; and it is his promiſe to reward the righteous, therefore they ſhall be rewarded. This is matter of ſtrong conſolation, and great encouragement to all that are righteous; If the Lord ſeeth all they do, nothing which they have well done ſhall be loſt in the dark, or lie in the duſt. God will bring forth their righteouſneſs as the light, and their juſt dealing as the noon day. And as the knowledg which God hath of their ways, aſſureth the righteous that they ſhall be rewarded for, ſo that they ſhall be aſſiſted and protected in their doing righteouſneſs. The Prophet makes that inference in the place before-cited (2 Chron. 16.9.) The eyes of the Lord run too and fro through the earth (what followeth?) to ſhew himſelf ſtrong in the behalf of them, or (as we put in the Margin) ſtrongly to hold with them whoſe heart is perfect towards him. The Lord is always ſtrong, and alike in ſtrength, his hand is not ſhortned at any time, that he cannot ſave, yet he doth not always ſhew his ſtrength; but as he is ſtrong, ſo he will ſhew himſelf ſtrong for the perfect or upright in heart; That is, he will act his ſtrength to the utmoſt for the ſafety and aſſiſtance of thoſe whoſe hearts are perfect with him. So then, as they that are good, and do good, ſhall be rewarded for the good they have done, ſo they ſhall be protected in the dangers and evils they incur while they are doing good. Another Prophet ſpeaks both theſe inferences from this principle of the knowledg or ſight of God (Jer. 32.19.) He is great in Counſel, and he is mighty in working, for his eyes are upon all the ways of the ſons of men, to give to every one according to his ways, and according to the fruit of his doings.

Fourthly, If the eyes of the Lord are upon all the ways of the Children of men, then the Lord will call all men to an account for their ways.

Why doth he take notice of their ways, but to bring them to a reckoning? That's the Apoſtles concluſion (Rom. 14.12.) So then every one of us ſhall give an account of himſelf to God; God would not take an account of our ways while we live, if he did not intend to bring us to an account when we die. As the omniſcience of God fits him to call every man to an account, ſo it is an evidence that he will. Why ſhould our ways and works be ſtrictly obſerved and recorded, if they were not to be judged?

Fifthly, This truth that the eyes of God are upon all the ways of man, ſhould awaken every man to take heed (as David reſolved he would, Pſal. 39.1.) to his ways. Did we walk as remembring we are under his All-ſeeing eye, O how circumſpectly ſhould we walk! Doth the Lord inſpect our ways, O how ſhould we inſpect our own ways! It argueth a great deal of Atheiſm in the heart, if not the groſſeſt Atheiſm, yet Atheiſm, (quo ad hoc) as to this or that thing: while that which ſome are afraid to do, if a man, yea if a child ſee them, they are not afraid to do though they hear that God ſeeth them. To fear to do a thing when the eye of a creature is upon us, and yet to do it notwithſtanding God ſeeth us, what is this but either an unbelief that the eye of God ſeeth us, or a contempt of his All-ſeeing eye? This Divine Attribute, the All-ſeeing eye of God, well wrought upon the heart by faith, is enough to over-aw the ſinfullneſs of our hearts. And though the people of God have a higher principle, upon which they forbear the doing of evil, then this, becauſe God will ſee it, and puniſh it, yet to keep the heart in a holy fear of doing evil upon that principle, is both needfull and our duty. The Apoſtle would not have ſervants do their Maſters commands with eye-ſervice as men-pleaſers. It is indeed a baſeneſs in a ſervant to do his duty meerly becauſe his Maſters eye is upon him, or to forbear to do what is againſt or beſide his duty, becauſe his Maſter ſeeth him; but how great is the impudence and wickedneſs of that ſervant who will not keep to his duty, when his Maſters eye is upon him! So, in this caſe, meerly to forbear doing evil, becauſe we hear God ſees us, is eye-ſervice, but how great is their wickedneſs, who will not forbear to do evil, though they hear and know that God ſeeth it? Which Elihu confirms yet further in the next words.

Verſ. 22. There is no darkneſs nor ſhadow of death, where the workers of iniquity may hide themſelves.

This verſe holds out that truth negatively, which the former held out affirmatively. There Gods knowledg of mans ways, was aſſerted, here his ignorance or neſcience of the ways of man is denied.

There is no darkneſs, &c.] The words ſeem to be the prevention of an Objection. For ſome poſſibly might ſay, 'Tis true indeed, God hath a large knowledg, his eye ſeeth far, but we hope we may ſometime be under covert, or compaſſed about with ſuch darkneſs, that the Lord cannot ſee us. Therefore (ſaith Elihu) there is no darkneſs nor ſhadow of death, where the workers of iniquity may hide themſelves. The Prophet gives a parallel proof and teſtimony of this knowledg of God both in the affirmative and negative part of it. (Jer. 16.17.) where he firſt aſſerts that God ſeeth all, mine eyes are upon all their ways, and then denyeth, that any thing is a ſecret unto him, They are not hid from my face, neither is their iniquity hid from mine eyes. Theſe latter words of the Prophet are of the ſame ſignification with theſe of Elihu,

There is no darkneſs, &c.] We may take darkneſs two ways; Firſt, for natural darkneſs, that darkneſs which ſpreads it ſelf over the face of the earth upon the going down of the Sun, 'tis the privation of Light. Secondly, there is artificial darkneſs, that darkneſs which men make to hide themſelves, and their actions in, from the eye of God or man; many are very skilful, yea and ſucceſsful in making ſhaddows to hide their actions from men: They cover the evil which they have done with ſuch cunning excuſes or flat denyals, and they cover what they purpoſe to do (how foul ſoever) under ſuch fair trappings of words, and ſpecious pretences, they gloſs their worſt actions and intentions with ſuch appearances of good, that the wiſeſt and beſt ſighted men cannot find them out. When Abſalon had a moſt unnatural as well as a moſt diſloyal purpoſe to raiſe a rebellion againſt his King-father, he coloured it with a devout profeſſion of performing a vow; This was artificial darkneſs. 'Tis reported by the natural Hiſtorian, of a little fiſh, which ſeeing its enemy near, caſts out a kind of blackneſs from it ſelf, which darkens the water, and ſo eſcapes the danger. Thus men indeed hide themſelves from man, and they would hide themſelves from God too; but there is no darkneſs, neither natural nor artificial, that can cover their ways from his eye; No,

Nor ſhadow of death.] The importance of this expreſſion hath been opened more then once in this Book, (Chap. 3. 5. Chap. 10. 21. Chap. 12. 22. Chap. 28. 3.) therefore I ſhall not ſtay upon it here; only conſider, when he ſaith, There is no darkneſs nor ſhadow of death, by ſhadow of death, he means extreameſt darkneſs. If there be any darkneſs (as Job ſpeaks Chap. 10. 22.) like darkneſs it ſelf, and whoſe light is as darkneſs, that is it. The metaphor is taken from the grave, where the dead being buried, have not the leaſt glympſe, ray, or ſhine of light coming in to them, death wraps us up in extreameſt darkneſs. And we find in Scripture, the ſhadow of death put, firſt, to expreſs the extreameſt of ſpiritual darkneſs, or the darkeſt ſpiritual ſtate, (Iſa. 9. 2.) The people that walked in darkneſs, have ſeen a great light, they that dwell in the land of the ſhadow of death, upon them hath the light ſhined: That is, they that were wrapped up in the ignorance and utter unbelief of God in Chriſt, to theſe is Chriſt, the true light of God, the Sun of righteouſneſs preached and openly revealed, and they preſſed to the receiving of him, that their ſouls may live. Further as the ſhadow of death is put for the worſt of ſpiritual evils, or to note man's natural ſtate before converſion, ſo likewiſe, it is uſed in Scripture to note the worſt of his ſpiritual evils, who (being converted) is in a ſpiritual ſtate; He that is in a ſpiritual ſtate, may be under great ſpiritual evils, great ſoul afflictions and troubles may fall upon him; which I conceive David intended while he ſhewed ſuch high confidence, (Pſal. 23. 4.) Though I walk through the valley of the ſhadow of death, I will fear none evil: as if he had ſaid, Though I were in the worſt of ſoul-afflictions, having no light of the favour of God ſhining upon me, nor any comfort in my ſpirit, though (as Heman bemoans his deſerted condition, Pſal. 88. 3.) My ſoul is full of troubles, and my life draweth nigh unto the grave, though I am laid in the loweſt pit, in darkneſs, in the deep, yet I will fear no evil, for thou art with me, thy rod and thy ſtaff they comfort me. Again, the ſhadow of death is often put in Scripture for the worſt of outward worldly evils, (Jer. 13. 16.) Give glory to the Lord your God before he cauſe darkneſs, &c. And while ye look for light, he turn it into the ſhadow of death; That is, while ye expect good times and things, ye fall into the worſt, or the worſt befal you. Now as theſe words, the ſhadow of death, ſignifie the worſt of, both in ſpirituals and temporals; ſo here they ſignifie the cloſeſt concealment of moral evils; ſome ſinners think themſelves as much out of ſight as a buried carcaſs, and they vail their wickedneſs with ſuch darkneſs as is like the very ſhadow of death. Sin is it ſelf a ſhadow of death, yea death it ſelf, and they who are dead in ſins and treſpaſſes, will do their beſt that their ſins may be no more ſeen then the dead are. But there is no darkneſs nor ſhadow of death,

Where the workers of iniquity may hide themſelves.

What it is to be a worker of iniquity, was opened at the 8. verſe of this chapter, and thither I refer the Reader. Only in general know, Workers of iniquity are more then ordinary ſinners, they are cunning at the committing, and cunning at the hiding of ſin. Some are but bunglers at ſin, they cannot ſin with ſuch an helliſh skill as others do, and when they have ſinned, they have not the art of hiding it; but others are (as we ſay) their crafts-maſters both ways, and they are properly called workers of iniquity. Yet (ſaith Elihu) the very workers of iniquity, they that make it their profeſſion, their ſtudy, and their buſineſs to do evil, and to hide the evil they have done, to work miſchief in the dark, and to keep their works in the dark, even they cannot be hid in any darkneſs. And when the Text ſaith, there is no darkneſs, &c. wherein the workers of iniquity may hide themſelves; the meaning of it is, they ſtand naked, and in the open light before the eyes of God.

For though Elihu doth not ſay from what they cannot hide themſelves, yet we may take it two ways; they cannot hide themſelves, firſt, from the ſight of God; he will diſcern them. The Prophet ſaith of God (Iſa. 45. 15.) Thou art a God that hideſt thy ſelf, (it is the word of the Text in another conſtruction) that is, as I conceive, it may be expounded, Thou art an inviſible God. God hides himſelf naturally, or in his own nature, for that is inviſible: likewiſe God ſometimes hideth himſelf voluntarily, as ſometimes he manifeſteth or ſheweth himſelf voluntarily; but he is a God always hid as to his nature, becauſe he is inviſible; and ſo he is called a God that hideth himſelf, in oppoſition to Idols or falſe gods, who are obvious to the eyes of men; Idols have eyes and ſee not, but themſelves are ſeen by every eye. Jehovah the true God ſeeth, but hath no eye, neither can any eye ſee him; Thus he is a God hiding himſelf in the ſpirituality of his own being, which groſs Idols cannot: the following words in that Text in the Prophet ſeem to make out this ſenſe, (Verſ. 16.) They ſhall be aſhamed and confounded all of them, (That is, all Idol-makers, and Idol-worſhippers, ſhall be aſhamed and confounded) they ſhall go to confuſion together, that are makers of Idols. Now, as God hideth himſelf both theſe ways, ſometimes voluntarily, or in his will, he reſolves to hide himſelf from his people, as David complain'd, (Pſal. 13. 1.) How long wilt thou hide thy face from me?) always in the ſpirituality of his own nature; ſo ſinful men would be hidden too: though they cannot be hidden as to their nature, that being corporeal, yet they would hide themſelves in their will, their wits are bent upon it, to make covers and ſhadows for themſelves, that they may keep out of the ſight of God, or that they may not be ſeen of him, who cannot be ſeen, but is, in that ſenſe, a God that hideth himſelf.

And as men cannot hide themſelves from the ſight of God, ſo not, Secondly, from the revenging power of God: This followeth the former; for he that would keep out of the ſight of another, doth it uſually that he may be hid from that danger and evil which he fears that other might bring upon him. Thus it is with the ſinner, he hath his hiding places, he wou'd withdraw himſelf from the revenging power of God, like a malefactor, who is unwilling to appear and come to the Bar before his Judg, but all in vain.

Meer natural or unregenerate men are much hidden from themſelves; That is, they ſee little what themſelves are, they know not their own condition, nor upon what terms they ſtand; even a godly man is much hidden from himſelf, his life is hid with Chriſt in God, (Col. 3. 3.) his life is not only hidden from the world, but in a great meaſure from himſelf: the excellency of his ſpiritual ſtate ſurpaſſeth his preſent ſight: but a wicked man is much more hid from himſelf, he doth not ſee the wickedneſs of his own heart, nor the danger, the deſperate danger he is in, he ſeeth not that he is within a ſtep of the pit, or that there is, as it were, but a wainſcot between him and hell fire; he ſeeth none of theſe things. Thus a wicked man is hidden from himſelf, and 'tis his work to prepare darkneſs and ſhadows of death to cover his dead works from God. But there is no darkneſs will ſerve his purpoſe, nor ſhadow of death wherein he may hide himſelf.

Hence Note, Firſt, It is uſual for, and natural to ſinners, to ſeek hiding places.

When Elihu ſaith, There is no darkneſs, &c. He plainly intimates, that it is the deſign and buſineſs of ſinners, to make darkneſs to hide themſelves; It is as much their buſineſs to hide themſelves when they have done evil, as it is their buſineſs to do evil. While the workers of iniquity confeſs in general the eyes of God behold their ways (they deny not in word that God is All-ſeeing) yet, as they often blear the eye of man, ſo they are not out of hope to put darkneſs and raiſe a miſt between themſelves and the eye of God; Or if they riſe not to this vain thought, that they can hide themſelves from God, yet they come to this, that God hideth himſelf (as not regarding what they do) from them. Hence David affirms of the wicked man, (Pſal. 10. 11.) He hath ſaid in his heart, God hath forgotten, he hideth his face, he will never ſee it. Many ſay in their hearts, God ſeeth them not, while with their tongues they confeſs he is an all-ſeeing God. The heart hath a tongue in it as well as the head, and theſe two tongues ſeldom ſpeak the ſame language: While the head-tongue ſaith, we cannot hide our ſelves from the ſight of God, the heart-tongue of wicked men will ſay, God will hide himſelf from us, he will not ſee. But if their heart ſpeak not thus, then as the Prophet ſaith, (*Iſa.*29.15.) They dig deep to hide their counſels from God; ſurely they have a hope to hide their counſels, elſe they would not dig deep to hide them. Their digging is not proper, but tropical; as men dig deep to hide what they would not have ſeen in the earth; ſo they by their wits, plots, and devices, do their beſt to hide their counſels from God, and they ſay who ſeeth, who knoweth? We, ſurely, are not ſeen either by God or man.

Now 'tis very natural for ſinners to endeavour the hiding of themſelves from God upon a two-fold account; Firſt, To avoid ſhame; All ſinners are not altogether deboiſt, all have not altogether baffled their own conſciences, they have a kind of modeſty, they would not be ſeen ſinning; it troubles them not to do evil, but a fear to be detected in doing it is their trouble. Secondly, Sinners hide themſelves for fear; ſo Adam did, he was afraid as well as aſhamed, I was afraid (ſaid he) becauſe I was naked, and I hid my ſelf, (Gen. 3. 10.) The Prophet tells us of ſuch (Iſa. 2. 21.) They ſhall go into the clefts of the rock, and into the tops of the ragged rocks, for fear of the Lord, and for the glory of his Majeſty, when he ſhall ariſe to ſhake terribly the earth. We find all ſorts call to the hills to hide them, for fear of him that ſate on the throne, and from the wrath of the Lamb, (Rev. 6.15,16.)

Secondly, Obſerve, How much ſoever ſinners attempt, yet they cannot hide themſelves from God.

Let them ſtudy never ſo long, and dig never ſo deep, they cannot be hid: Where can a ſinner be hid from him who is every where? Or, what thing can be our covering from him, in whoſe ſight all things are open? Then let none think they have made a good market in ſinning, when they have hid their ſins from the eyes of men; what will it avail to hide your ſelves from men, when you lie open and manifeſt to the eye of God? Read (Pſal. 139. 12. Amos 3. 2.) The Apoſtle ſaith (1 *Tim.*5.24,25.) Some mens ſins are open before hand, going before to judgment; (That is, other men quickly ſee what they are, and can judg what they have done) and ſome men, they follow after; though they were hidden at the firſt, yet they are afterward diſcovered unto men often, as always unto God: As they are not hid from God now, ſo he will bring them forth at laſt, in the ſight of men: that the Apoſtle adds in the next verſe, Likewiſe alſo the good works of ſome are manifeſt before hand, and they that are otherwiſe cannot be hid. The word otherwiſe may have a two-fold reference; Firſt to the word manifeſt: As if he had ſaid, though the good works of a man be not preſently manifeſt, yet they cannot be long hid, they ſhall be opened and revealed. Secondly, The word otherwiſe may refer to good works, and ſo it reaches the point fully; That is, thoſe works which are not good, or otherwiſe then good, cannot be hid, though men labour much to hide them. Sinners, leave off your hiding, leave off your hiding, for you ſhall not be hid. There is no way for ſinners to hide themſelves from God; they may hide themſelves in God, in the love, in the favour and mercy of God. Thus ſinners may hide themſelves in God, but from God they cannot be hid. Chriſt is a hiding place unto his people, and he is ſo in a double reſpect; Firſt, from trouble, or in time of trouble; thus David ſpake (Pſal. 32.7.) Thou art my hiding place: The name of the Lord is a ſtrong Tower (ſaith Solomon, Prov. 18 10) the righteous runneth into it (for ſhelter in time of trouble) and is ſafe. The Prophet is expreſs in this, (*Iſa.*32.2.) A man (that is Chriſt) ſhall be for a hiding place from the wind, and a covert from the Tempeſt: Chriſt is truly ſo, as to the outward troubles and ſtorms which men raiſe againſt his people in the things of this life; he is ſo, eſpecially as to thoſe internal troubles and ſtorms which Satan, or our own unbelieving hearts raiſe againſt us about the things and concernments of the next life. That man who is alſo God, who is God-man, is the hiding place of humbled ſinners, againſt the aſſault of all evils, whether temporal or ſpiritual. Secondly, As Chriſt is a hiding place from thoſe troubles which men bring us unto for righteouſneſs ſake, or which Satan and our own hearts bring us into by raiſing queſtions about our intereſt in the righteouſneſs of Chriſt; So he is a hiding place for us againſt our own unrighteouſneſs. Sinners or unrighteous perſons cannot hide themſelves from Chriſt. And as Chriſt is the beſt hiding place from bodily dangers, ſo he is the only hiding place from ſoul-danger: Any ſinner may hide himſelf in Chriſt, as to the guilt of ſin, whoſe eyes are opened to ſee and acknowledg his ſin. Or more diſtinctly, ſinners under a fourfold conſideration may hide themſelves in Chriſt; Firſt, if humbled ſinners. Secondly, if confeſſing ſinners. Thirdly, if reforming ſinners. Fourthly, believing ſinners; Chriſt is a hiding place to all ſuch ſinners. And ſeeing no ſinner can hide himſelf from the wrath of God by any means of his own deviſing or contriving: Let all ſinners give over ſuch vain contrivements, and learn that Goſpel wiſdom, to hide themſelves in Chriſt from that wrath which is to come. When we labour to hide our ſelves any other way, we loſe our labour, and do not hide our ſelves from God, but God from our ſelves; that is, we hide the favour and mercy of God from our ſelves.

Cum videri nos non credimus, in ſole clauſos oculos tenemus. Illum à nobis abſcondimus, non nos illi. Greg. l. 25. c 6.

Laſtly Obſerve, Men are not eaſily perſwaded that they cannot hide themſelves from the ſight of God.

That hath much hold of us, which we are often warned to avoid. This is not the only place of the whole Scripture, no nor of this particular Book where this truth is held forth. There are many and many Scriptures wherein this common truth is preſſed upon us. And doth not this (if not ſtrongly infer, yet) intimate at leaſt that man doth not eaſily believe it? Yea, Is it not an argument that man is apt to nouriſh himſelf in thoſe vain hopes, that he can hide himſelf from God, or that he ſhall be hid from God? I may caſt the fooliſh preſumptions of men about this thing into four ſorts. Firſt, Some hope to be hid in the croud, or that they ſhall not be taken notice of among ſo many. Secondly, The eyes of others are ſo darkned, that their ſins are hid from themſelves, yea they take their vices for vertues, their evil acts for good; and becauſe they ſee no evil in what they do, they are perſwaded, or preſume God doth not. Thirdly, Many are never ſo well pleaſed as when they are flattered, or when others not only hide the ſinfulneſs of their ways from them, but commend and extol them as vertuous and praiſe-worthy. And becauſe their evil ways appear good to ſome men, they cannot be convinced that there is any evil in them appearing to God. Laſtly, As all impenitent ſinners put their ſins out of their own ſight, ſo nothing pleaſeth them more then this imagination, that they ſhall never come into the ſight of God.

Surely the Lord would never urge this matter ſo often upon the children of men if it were not ſo. But let ſinners conſider what they will do, and what will become of them, ſeeing, as it is impoſſible that they ſhould be hid, ſo it will be moſt intolerable for them to appear and ſtand before God in the day of judgment, (*Pſal.*1.5.) All muſt come to judgment, and appear at the Bar, but it will be an inexpreſſible grief to appear, and not be approved, or to appear and then be condemned. Therefore be wiſe, and hide your ſelves where you may be hid; do not attempt to hide your ſelves (which is the attempt of moſt ſinners) where you cannot be hid: They who will needs hide themſelves in that darkneſs and ſhadow of death, here ſpoken of, ſhall be caſt into utter darkneſs, and abide for ever in that infernal valley of the ſhadow of death, in which there is no eaſe to be had, and from which there is no releaſe to be got. Darkneſs and death will be the portion of thoſe ſinners in the next world, who have ſtudied to ſhadow their ſins with any kind of darkneſs in this.

VERS. 23, 24, 25.

For he will not lay upon man more then right, that he ſhould enter into judgment with God.

He ſhall break in pieces mighty men without number, and ſet others in their ſtead.

Therefore he knoweth their works, and he over-turneth them in the night, ſo that they are deſtroyed.

IN the 23. Verſ, being the firſt of the context, Elihu further juſtifieth the ſevereſt proceedings of God with man; He that layeth upon man no more then is right, may be juſtified in whatſoever he layeth upon him; But God layeth upon man no more then is right, Therefore, &c. The Aſſumption is expreſs in the Text.

Verſ. 23. For he will not lay upon man more then is right.

The Text ſtrictly rendred, is, He will not lay upon man more. Our tranſlaters ſupply the words, then is right to determin what that more is which God will not lay upon man.

The words have a two-fold ſenſe.

Quia non ultra unquam ponet Deus ſuper virum. i. e. poteſtatem homini nunquam faciet, ut de ſe ille queri poſſit. Merc. Neq; enim ultra in hominis poteſtate eſt, ut veniat cum Deo in judicio, Vulg.

Firſt, Some interpreters render them as a direct denial of any power ſeated in or liberty given unto man, to plead, capitulate, or to come in judgment with God; Elihu charging it upon Job, that he had not done well in taking or uſing ſuch a liberty to complain about his condition; addeth here (according to this interpretation) God neither hath nor will indulg man a liberty (as he hath not given him a juſt cauſe) to complain as if he had done him wrong. And if man when God hath once declared his mind, and publiſhed his ſentence, ſhould make his defence or offer to produce his reaſonings againſt it, the Lord will not ſuffer it, he will not permit man to proceed in ſuch a way, ſeeing the ſentence of God and what he doth upon it is always juſt, and the right ſtands ever on his ſide, as well as the ſoveraignty is ever veſted in him. Mr. Broughton tranſlates the whole verſe to this ſenſe, Therefore it is not for man ever to purpoſe to enter into judgment before the Omnipotent; there is no appeal from God, nor will he admit ſinners by any artifices, or delays, to interrupt the progreſs of his juſtice.

Secondly, The words (as we render them) carry both an aſſertion, that God is juſt, and a demonſtration of it; For he will not lay upon man more then is right, that he ſhould enter into judgment with God; That is, man hath no cauſe to enter into judgment with God, if God ſhould give him leave, and let him be at his liberty in that point; for God will not lay upon man more then is right.

Non imponet ei amplius quam ferro poſſit. Druſ.

There is another ſupply of a word which alſo beareth a good ſenſe, and ſuites well with this expoſition; thus, God will not lay upon man more then he can bear, (or hath ſtrength to bear) that he ſhould enter into judgment with him; if we read the Text ſo, then that of the Apoſtle (1 Cor. 10. 13.) is a clear expoſition of it, There hath no temptation taken you, but ſuch as is common to man; but God is faithful, who will not ſuffer you to be tempted, above that you are able, but will with the temptation alſo make a way to eſcape, that ye may be able to bear it. A temptation or affliction common to man, is but ſuch as man may bear; God will not overburden his people, he knoweth what fleſh and blood, as alſo what Grace can bear. As a man would not lay ſuch a weight upon a child, as would burthen a man, (we lay a childs burthen upon a child, and a mans burthen upon a man) ſo the Lord meaſures and weighs out his judgments in proportion to every mans ſtrength, he will not lay upon him more then he is able to bear. That's a good ſenſe, and hath a clear reaſon in it, why man ſhould not complain of what God layeth upon him, it being only proportionate to his ſtrength.

But I ſhall rather proſecute the Text according to the ſupply given in our tranſlation, which makes the reaſon why all ſuch complaints ſhould be forborn and ſilenced, to be this, becauſe the ſufferings of man are never proportion'd beyond his deſert.

He will not lay upon man more then right.] That is, more then he hath deſerved, or is equitable in his caſe; whatſoever is laid, or impoſed upon man beyond right, he hath cauſe to complain of, and may traverſe the Judgment, or deſire another hearing, yea he may appeal to ſome higher Judg if there be any; But if what is awarded againſt him be right according to Law, and ſutable to Juſtice, let the ſentence be what it will (let him be able to bear it or no, much more if he be able alſo to bear it, as in this caſe it is) he hath no cauſe at all to deſire a review of it. Thus it is (ſaith Elihu) in all the dealings of God with man, He will not lay upon man more then is right,

That he ſhould enter into judgment with God.

To enter (or go) into judgment (as the word is) is either to begin or renew a ſute, and to deſire the hearing of the cauſe again. God makes no faulty Judgments, why then ſhould any cauſe determin'd by him come to a ſecond hearing? There may be reaſon enough among men to hear a cauſe again, but what God reſolves, needs not be reviewed much leſs reverſed. Here then Elihu meets with thoſe frequent complaints of Job under his afflictions, and likewiſe with thoſe his ſeveral motions, and earneſt petitions, to have his cauſe heard afreſh, as if God had preſt him too ſore, or, at leaſt, had not done him right in ſuffering him to be ſo ſorely preſt by men. Thus Elihu ſeems to ſay; God never gave any man any juſt cauſe, to plead his cauſe over again with him, nor hath he given thee (O Job) any cauſe to deſire it of him. 'Tis true, carnal men, yea and ſometimes godly men, when (as Job here) they are greatly afflicted, are ready to think and ſay they are overſeverely dealt with; But the reaſon of Elihu ſtands good and firm againſt all theſe thoughts and ſayings. For he will not lay upon man more then is right.

Hence Note, God never wronged, nor will wrong any man.

There are two ſpecial caſes, in which God never did, nor ever will wrong man; Firſt, he will not wrong man by denying him that reward, which he hath freely promiſed, no man ſhall ſerve God for nought; he ſhall not ſay, God hath promiſed, but he hath not performed. The experience of his people ſeal to the truth of his promiſes, as well as their faith imbraceth it. That hope of man which is anchored in a promiſe of God, never miſcarried nor made any man aſhamed. Secondly, God will not wrong man, by laying upon him a greater puniſhment then he hath threatned. The Magiſtrate cannot be charged with laying more puniſhment upon an offender, then is right, if he puniſheth him not more then the Law alloweth. There may be a great deal of ſeverity (I grant) in puniſhing up to the rigor of the Law, but there is no unrighteouſneſs in it. The Moſaical law allowed of forty ſtripes; now if they had laid forty-one upon any offender, they had laid upon him more then was right, becauſe they exceeded the Law; and to have laid full forty ſtripes, which was the utmoſt they could by Law, had been ſevere, therefore they uſually abated one ſtripe at leaſt; Hence the Apoſtle Paul ſaith (2 Cor. 11.24.) Of the Jews five times received I forty ſtripes ſave one; if they had given Paul forty ſtripes they had done no wrong as to the Law, though one had been too many for and a wrong to him who had not broken their Law. Seeing the Lord lays no more upon the worſt of ſinners, then the law alloweth, he doth not lay upon man more then right. Yea not only the chaſtiſements which the Lord layeth upon his own ſervants, but the greateſt puniſhments which he layeth upon the worſt of the wicked, in this world, are much leſs then might with Juſtice be inflicted. This was Ezra's humble acknowledgment before the Lord (Ezra 9. 13.) And after all that is come upon us, for our evil deeds, and for our great treſpaſs, ſeeing that thou our God haſt puniſhed us leſs then our iniquities deſerve. The puniſhment that was upon the people of Iſrael, was exceeding great, in ſo much that Daniel ſaith in his prayer (Chap. 9. 11, 12.) Under the whole heavens, hath not been done, as hath been done upon Jeruſalem, yet Ezra ſpeaking of that very diſpenſation, ſaith, Thou haſt puniſhed us leſs, then our iniquities deſerve: In this life the greateſt of our puniſhments, are leſs then the leaſt of our ſins. Every ſin, or tranſgreſſion of the Law, deſerves eternal death; therefore in this life the greateſt puniſhments that fall upon ſinners, are leſs then their ſins: As the leaſt mercies which God beſtoweth upon them, are greater then the greateſt of their deſervings. (That was Jacobs free confeſſion (Gen. 32.10.) I am not worthy of the leaſt of (or I am leſs then) all the mercies, and of all the truth which thou haſt ſhewed unto thy ſervant) So the greateſt puniſhments that fall upon them in this life, are leſs then the leaſt of their ſins: And in the next life, where ſinners ſhall have full meaſure, heaped up, preſſed down, running over, and that for ever, yet then they ſhall not have one grain more, either of weight or meaſure, then they have deſerved: The Lord layeth upon no man in this life ſo much, nor in that to come more then is right.

Hence it followeth, Secondly, Man hath no cauſe to complain of God, or God hath not given any man any cauſe to complain, whatſoever his ſufferings are.

Why ſhould he complain who hath but his right? As God hath not given any man a liberty to complain, ſo he hath not given any man juſt occaſion, or a true reaſon to complain. If the burden of puniſhment be heavy upon any man, let him thank his own ſin, or ſelf for it, he hath but his due from God. We are often cruel to and wrong our ſelves, God is uſually merciful, and never but juſt to us; yea how great ſoever any affliction is, 'tis a mercy that 'tis no greater; and God can quickly make it greater, how great ſoever it is, and ſtill be juſt. As he never doth more then he may, ſo he never doth ſo much as he can in puniſhing us. The Lord hath more in the treaſures of his wrath, then yet he hath poured upon the worſt of ſinners. Nor indeed can the moſt capacious veſſels of wrath, hold all his wrath; 'tis, as himſelf is, infinite. Cain ſaid, My puniſhment is greater then I can bear (Gen.4.13.) yet God could have made his puniſhment greater then it was. Therefore Jeremy confeſſed (Lam. 3.22.) It is of the Lords mercies that we are not conſumed, becauſe his compaſſions fail not. Whatſoever is leſs then utter conſumption, hath ſome mixture of compaſſion in it, every puniſhment hath ſomewhat of compaſſion in it, except that of everlaſting damnation. O then let all fleſh fear and tremble to enter into Judgment with God, to complain or take offence at any of his proceedings with them.

There are four things conſiderable in God, which ſhould ſtop all mens mouths, from daring to do ſo.

Firſt, He is moſt powerful; there is no eſcaping out of his hands.

Secondly, He is moſt wiſe and ſeeth quite through all that man hath done with his hand, yea all that hath been contrived in his heart.

Thirdly, He is moſt juſt, and will not be taken off from doing leſs, neither can he be provoked to do more then is right to any man.

Fourthly, How ſhould man fear to enter into Judgment with God, ſeeing his judgments are paſt finding out; they are, as the Scripture ſaith, a great deep, we are not able to fathom them; therefore wo unto thoſe that complain of, or murmure againſt them: we ſhould always pray with David, (Pſal. 143.2.) Lord, enter not into judgment with thy ſervant, for in thy ſight ſhall no man living be juſtified: and we ſhould always be afraid to enter into judgment with God, for he will not only juſtifie, but magnifie himſelf and his works in the ſight of all men living. We ſhould be ſo far from entring into judgment with God (which many do when they think they do it not) that we ſhould continually beg him, not to enter into judgment with us; for we are not only unable to ſtand before him, but muſt certainly be broken before him; as it followeth, Verſ. 24. He ſhall break in pieces mighty men without number, and ſet others in their ſtead.

As Job had often complained of his own troubles, ſo he had ſometimes of the proſperity of wicked men, or that God ſuffered them who were not worthy to live, yet to live in pomp, power, and pleaſure. Thus he expoſtulated the matter, (Chap. 21.7.) Wherefore do the wicked live, become old, yea, are mighty in power? &c. We may conceive Elihu removing that ſtumbling ſtone, and anſwering him in theſe words, while he telleth us what work the Lord often maketh in the world in thoſe his leſſer and particular days of judgment, among the mighty of the world. He not only ſtriketh and woundeth, troubleth and vexeth them, but breaketh them, yea, breaketh them in pieces. The words are a compariſon between the mighty, and a potters veſſel, of whom David ſaith (Pſal. 2.9.) Thou ſhalt break them with a rod of Iron, thou ſhalt (not only give them a knock, or a crack, but) daſh them in pieces as a potters veſſel; and he can break them ſo ſmall, that there ſhall not be found in the burſting of them (as the Prophet ſpeaks, Iſa. 30.14.) a ſherd to take fire from the hearth, or to take water withal out of the pit. Thus the Lord ſhall break in pieces, not the poor, and weak, and mean, but

Mighty men.] Or as ſome render, He ſhall break in pieces many men; the Hebrew word refers to both quantities, to great in bigneſs, and great in number; but becauſe we have their innumerableneſs mentioned diſtinctly in the next clauſe, it is beſt to render the word by greatneſs in power or might here. For leaſt any ſhould think God could break only a few mighty men, therefore it is ſaid, he ſhall break in pieces mighty men, in all the notions of might the mighty in corporal ſtrength, the mighty in civil ſtrength, power, or authority, yea martial mighty men, if they ſtand in his way, and hinder his work.

Hieronymus interpretatur multos.

כביר Ad utramque quantitatem refertur, ſed malè fortes. Merc.

Without number.] All theſe God breaketh in pieces like a Potters veſſel, as if they were but a ſwarm of flies, and ſweeps them away in a moment: As if he had ſaid, God will give innumerable examples of his infinite power and unbyaſs'd juſtice in deſtroying the wicked, he hath and will deſtroy ſo many of them, that no man knoweth how many he hath deſtroyed, or will deſtroy.

There is another reading of the words, Our Tranſlaters put it in the margin of our Bibles, He ſhall break in pieces mighty men without ſearching out, which may have a twofold interpretation.

First, He ſhall break them in pieces, and no man ought to ſearch or enquire into his doings, or ſay unto him (as that mighty Monarch confeſſed, Dan. 4.35.) What doſt thou? And thus it anſwers what was ſaid in the former verſe, They ſhall not enter into judgment with God. Some have a priviledg at Sea to paſs without ſearching, no man muſt inquire what they carry, or what their lading is; ſurely when the Lord breaketh mighty men, no man may ſearch into his doings, or inquire into his actions, further then for his own inſtruction and admonition, that he may anſwer the purpoſe of God in them, and give him glory.

Secondly, He will break them in pieces without ſearching; that is, without any formal examination or uſual ways of Proceſs, at leaſt without any known to us. The Lord needs not to ſtand ſearching as men do, to find out matters againſt the mighty, to frame Articles, or to bring in his Bill of Attainder againſt them; God needeth not ſearch to know, becauſe he knoweth all things without ſearching, and therefore may juſtly break men in pieces without this kind of ſearching; or, He will break them in pieces without inquiſition; That is, without ſhewing cauſe why. God doth not always publiſh the reaſons of his proceedings, his judgments are often ſecret, though never unjuſt. We render well, He will break in pieces mighty men.

Deus cui omnia nota ſunt, non opus habet, in facta hominum inquirere, Druſ.

Without number.] That is, how many ſoever they are, or though they are innumerable, yet he will break them in pieces as one man: Thus the word is uſed (Chap. 5.9. Chap. 9.11. In both which places the Reader may find the extent and emphaſis of this expreſſion, without number, further explained) only conſider, that theſe mighty men without number, may be taken two ways.

Firſt, Collectively, as combined by leagues, or as marſhall'd by orders into an Hoſt: as if he had ſaid, though an Army of them be gathered together, even a numberleſs Army, yet the Lord can break them in pieces, (Iſa. 8.9.) Aſſociate your ſelves, and ye ſhall be broken in pieces; gird your ſelves, and ye ſhall be broken in pieces.

Secondly, We may take theſe mighty men ſingly or perſonally; Thus the Lord breaketh in pieces mighty men without number, one after another, one at this time, and another at that time; how many of them ſoever ariſe up one after another to oppoſe him, to oppreſs his people, or to do wickedly, they ſhall ſurely be broken. Mr. Broughton renders to this ſenſe, He bruiſeth mighty men without end, he doth not break them without end, as having no end in breaking them, but as without end, notes his breaking them endleſly, or for ever. If men will ſin without end, he can break them without end; he can renew deſtruction, as faſt as they renew tranſgreſſion.

Hence Obſerve, Firſt, God can eaſily ruin the mightieſt men of the world.

He can break them in pieces, as an earthen veſſel, with an iron rod, and how ſoon is that done? Both the holy Scriptures, and human Hiſtories abound with ſuch examples. What a number of mighty men inhabited the old world? There were Giants in the earth in thoſe days, (Gen.6.4.) yet God overthrow them all by a flood, they ſank like lead in thoſe mighty waters. What mighty men inhabited Canaan, before the Children of Iſrael came to poſſeſs it? The ſearchers of the land brought in a report, that they were but as Graſhoppers to them, and they had Cities walled up to Heaven, yet the Lord broke in pieces all thoſe mighty men, Sihon the King of the Amorites, and Og the King of Baſhan; and when David came to the Crown, he (in Gods ſtrength) deſtroyed the reſt of them. What mighty men were they that ſate upon the Throne of the four Monarchies? They had in their days the rule of the whole world, yet the Lord brake them in pieces. Firſt, the Aſſyrian, then the Perſian; the Grecian, and the Roman Monarchs were alſo broken in pieces: This was revealed to the golden head in a dream, (Dan. 2. 35.) Then was the Iron, the Clay, the Braſs, the Silver, and the Gold broken in pieces, and became like the chaff of the Summer threſhing floor. The mighty men of Iſrael, (when they ſinned mightily) the mighty men of the ten Tribes, yea the mighty men of the two Tribes of Judah and Benjamin, God brake in pieces; his own mighty people could not ſtand before him, when they corrupted themſelves, and would not be made clean. God breaketh mighty men, as eaſily as they break his commandments: And uſually when mighty men come to that height of ſinning, to ſin, or break his Commandments with eaſe, he commands them (for his own eaſe, as he is pleaſed to ſpeak, Iſa. 1. 24.) to be broken in pieces. To ſin with eaſe, is a ſure ſign of a hard heart, yea of a prophane heart. He was a mighty man of this temper, whoſe breaking in pieces the Lord threatned in ſuch wrathful Rhetorick by his holy Prophet, (Ezek. 21. 25, 26, 27.) And thou prophane wicked Prince of Iſrael, whoſe day is come, when iniquity ſhall have an end; thus ſaith the Lord God, Remove the Diadem, and take off the Crown: this ſhall not be the ſame, Exalt him that is low, and abaſe him that is high. I will overturn, overturn, overturn, and it ſhall be no more, until he come whoſe right it is, and I give it him. What breaking words are here! Even a treble overturn denounc'd againſt the mighty. Thus ſaid the bleſſed Virgin while her Soul was magnifying the Lord, and her Spirit rejoycing in God her Saviour, (Luke 1. 52.) He hath put down the mighty from their ſeats, and exalted them of low degree.

Secondly, In that, he breaketh in pieces the mighty without number, Obſerve, 'Tis no matter to God either how mighty or how many the wicked are.

I have heretofore ſpoken of the multiplied acts of Divine Juſtice, and of the unwearied out-goings of his powerful providence to abate the pride of man, and therefore I ſhall not ſtay upon it, but only caution the mighty ones of the earth, in the words of the Pſalmiſt upon this point, expreſt in the very words of this Text; for, God having ſaid to his Son, to whom he had given the Nations for an inheritance, (Pſal. 2. 9.) Thou ſhalt break them with a rod of iron, and (in caſe of their non ſubmiſſion to his Scepter) daſh them in pieces like a Potters veſſel, he preſently adds, (Ver. 10.) Be wiſe now therefore, O ye Kings, be inſtructed ye Judges of the earth; ſerve the Lord with fear, and rejoyce with trembling; Kiſs the Son, leſt he be angry, and ye periſh from the way.

Yet though God be often at breaking work, he is not always at it; for when he hath broken in pieces mighty men without number, he (as it followeth in the Text) will Set others in their ſtead.] We may ſuppoſe theſe words given in upon a two-fold account.

Firſt, To ſhew the abſoluteneſs of the power of God, as well in ſetting up, as in caſting down.

Secondly, To ſhew that we need not be diſmayed nor diſcouraged, when we ſee God breaking in pieces ſome or many mighty men, for he can find out others to ſupply their room, and fill up the breaches which he hath made. He ſets others in their ſtead. The force of the Hebrew is, He ſhall make others to ſtand; and that's more then barely to ſet another in the ſtead or place of thoſe that are removed and broken. God is able not only when many fall to raiſe up others, but he can alſo eſtabliſh and ſettle thoſe whom he raiſeth up. That's the meaning of Elihu, when he ſaith,

Ne ex hoc credatur deperire humani generis ſtatus, addit & ſtare facit alios, Aquin.

And ſet others in their ſtead.] Elihu doth not determin who or what theſe others are; God may make his choice where and of whom he pleaſeth, in what family or tribe he pleaſeth, to ſet up in the place of thoſe mighty men, whom he, at any time, is provoked to break in pieces. The words are plain; Note only two things from them.

Firſt, God hath as abſolute a power to ſet up, as to pull down when and whom he pleaſeth.

(Pſal. 75. 6, 7.) Promotion cometh neither from the Eaſt, nor from the Weſt, Nor from the South, but God is the Judg, he putteth down one, and ſetteth up another. The ſame Soveraignty of God is aſſerted (Dan. 4. 17.) To the intent that the living may know, that the moſt high ruleth in the Kingdom of men, and giveth it to whomſoever he will, and ſetteth up over it the baſeſt of men. God ſometimes ſetteth up thoſe that are baſe in their conditions or manners for a ſcourge or puniſhment; ſometimes he ſetteth up thoſe that are baſe in their ſtate or condition, being either men of meaneſt birth, or men laid loweſt by affliction, (Pſal. 113. 7, 8.) He raiſeth up the poor out of the duſt, and lifteth the needy out of the dunghil; that he may ſet him with Princes, even with the Princes of his people. No man is ſo poor, but the Lord can enrich him; no man ſo low, but he can raiſe him up He can bring a man from a dunghil to a Palace, and from the duſt to a Throne. Saul was caſt down, God broke him in pieces, though a mighty man, and ſet up David in his ſtead; He choſe David his ſervant, and took him from the ſheepfolds, from following the Ewes great with young, he brought him to feed Jacob his people, and Iſrael his Inheritance: (Pſal. 78. 70, 71.) When God pull'd down Haman (the great favourite of Ahaſuerus) who had plotted to advance Mordecai to the gallows, and ruin the whole ſeed of the Jews, God did not only break him and his plot, but really advanced Mordecai into greater favour and confidence with his Prince then ever Haman had before.

Secondly, Note, from the force of the word, to make to ſtand,

The Lord can eſtabliſh thoſe whom he ſetteth up.

The Lord doth not only ſet up, but keep up whom he pleaſeth. Though they are weak whom he ſetteth up, yet he can keep them up; though they whom he ſetteth up, are oppoſed by the ſtrong, yet he can keep them up. He can make a ſhrub ſtand faſt, though oppoſed by a Cedar; and a reed to ſtand firm like a rock, though oppoſed by an Oak.

Thirdly, Note, The Lord taketh care of the Government of the world.

He is not for breaking work only, he is for ſetting and ſettling too. God will not let the body of a people periſh for want of a head; but when in judgment he hath broken one in pieces, he in mercy ſets up another. Mighty men are like pillars, which bear the weight of a whole Common-wealth or Kingdom. God rarely deals with Nations, as Sampſon did with the houſe wherein the Philiſtims were aſſembled, who at once pull'd away the pillar, and pull'd down the houſe; but if he pulleth away one pillar, he puts in another, that the houſe may ſtand. God will not leave the world without rule or rulers; when he takes with one hand, he gives with another; when Judas the Traytor was broken, Chriſt found out (a better man) Matthias to ſet in his ſtead. And when the whole Nation or Church of the Jews was broken and rejected, God called in the Gentiles, and ſet them up for a Church and people to himſelf in their ſtead; and (which is the greateſt inſtance of all) when Jeſus Chriſt was taken from the earth, when he left the world, who was the mighty one (he was firſt broken in pieces for our ſins, and afterwards taken away) yet he gave a ſupply, and left us another in his ſtead; I will not leave you comfortleſs, (ſaith he John 14. 18.) I will come unto you, though not till the great day in perſon, yet every day in the gifts and graces of my Spirit. I will pray the Father and he ſhall give you another Comforter, that he may abide with you for ever; (John 14. 16.) Again, (John 16. 13.) When he the Spirit of Truth is come, he will guide you into all Truth. God ſent the Spirit in Chriſt's ſtead; he doth that for us which Chriſt did for us while he abode on the Earth: and therefore the holy Spirit is not unfitly call'd Vicar of Chriſt here on earth, he feeds the flock of Chriſt, he looks to his people, he teacheth, he comforteth them in Chriſt's ſtead. And thus in Nations, when God breaketh one Governour, he ſets up another in his ſtead; he will not leave Nations without guides and leaders, nor ſuffer the ſtaff of Government to be utterly broken, which is the greateſt plague that can come upon any people. From the whole verſe take theſe three deductions.

First, There is a vanity and an uncertainty, at leaſt the vanity of uncertainty in all worldly greatneſs and powers.

God blaſts and breaks them as he pleaſeth: The moſt ſubſtantial things on earth are but as a ſhadow; or like the Land-ſea's continually flowing and ebbing. One is caſt down, and another is exalted; one is broken, and another is ſet up; Yea, the ſame man who was lately exalted and ſet up, may quickly be caſt down and broken. There is no aſſurance to be had of the beſt things here below, but only this, that we cannot be ſure of them: and 'tis good for us, that we cannot be ſure of the beſt things here below, both becauſe we are ſo apt to ſay, It is good for us to be here, where yet our beſt things are not to be had, as alſo becauſe by this conſideration we may be provoked to look after, and make ſure of better things then any are here enjoyed, even thoſe beſt things which are under hope.

Secondly, Great examples of God's judgments, are to be eyed and marked.

Why doth Elihu call Job to this conſideration, but that he might be humbled, and give God glory; it is not for nought that God breaks in pieces the mighty ones of the Earth, (1 Cor. 10. 11.) All theſe things have hapned unto them for enſamples; and they are written for our admonition, upon whom the ends of the world are come. As all thoſe things among the Jews were Types; ſo all that God doth to this day upon the Princes, and powers of the world, are but as types and enſamples; they are for admonition, that we ſhould conſider thoſe ſins which have brought ſuch judgments upon men, ſuch breaking judgments, and avoid them. Some will never ſee ſin in it ſelf, but in the judgments of God all may ſee what ſin is; when mighty men are broken in pieces, what will God do with the reſt, if they ſin againſt him, and provoke the eyes of his glory? Senacherib, that proud Prince, who invaded the land of Iſrael in the time of Hezekiah, being broken in pieces by his own bowels (his ſons ſlew him) it was ordered to be writ upon his Tomb, Let every one that ſeeth me, learn to fear God, and not to defie him, as I have done. The breaking of the powers of the earth, ſhould exceedingly exalt the fear of God in our hearts. It is better to learn wiſdom by the puniſhment of others, then by our own.

Nunquam culpam ſuam reprobi niſi in pœna agnoſcunt. Greg. lib. 25. Moral. cap. 9.

In me intuens pius eſto. Herod. lib. 2.

Thirdly, If God will break the mighty, though many, yea though innumerable; This is comfort to the people of God when they are oppreſt, and broken by oppreſſors, let them remember God is able to break their oppreſſors, though they riſe up like Hydra's heads one after another; read the whole fifty and ſecond Pſalm, as alſo the 39. and 40. verſes of the 107. Pſalm, as a clear proof of this. Elihu having ſhewed what ſad breaches God makes upon mighty men, makes a fourth inference in the words following.

Quicunque celſa dominatur aula me videat & te Troja, nunquam documenta dedit ſors majora, quam fragili loco ſtarent ſuperbi. Senec. in Troad. de Hecuba, Act. 1. Sc. 1.

Verſ. 25. Therefore he knoweth their works, and he overturneth them in the night, ſo that they are deſtroyed.

For as much as God breaketh them, it is an argument that he knoweth what they are, and what they have been doing; There is a threefold reading of theſe words.

Propterea facit ut nota ſint facta ipſorum. Bez.

First, Some read them as implying God's making others to know their works, God maketh the ſecret ſins of men viſible, by his viſible judgments. Wrath ſeen, may give us a ſight of ſin. Some inſiſt much upon this expoſition; and 'tis a truth, the Lord by his judgments brings to light, and doth as it were ſpread open, as in the face of the Sun, the wickedneſs and wicked deeds of mighty men: that all may know his judgments are deſerved by their works, he makes their works known.

Secondly, Others render, He maketh them know or acknowledg their works; The Lord at laſt by ſore, and ſevere judgments, will extort confeſſions from the worſt of them, he will make the mighty acknowledg that their works have been naught, and their ways perverſe. In Scripture the ſame word ſignifies to know, or to confeſs and acknowledg. Thus here, he makes them to know or to acknowledg what their works have been.

Thirdly, Rather take it, as we render, of Gods act in taking notice of all they had done; Therefore he knoweth their works: As if Elihu had ſaid, theſe mighty men of the earth, thought themſelves under covert, or that the Lord took no notice of them, nor of their works, their works were done in the dark, and they ſuppoſed the Lord could not pierce into them; but he will make it appear, that he knew their works, when he maketh his juſtice appear in puniſhing them for their works.

Hence Note, We have an aſſurance that God knoweth the works of all men, becauſe he puniſheth all wicked works, or the works of the wicked ſo punctually and exactly.

He puniſheth many of them here, and will puniſh them all hereafter: when we ſee him breaking the mighty men of the world, 'tis a proof that God was in their Cabinet counſels, and ſaw what was done there, we may conclude he knew their works, though men knew them not; he could never lay his judgments ſo exactly upon them as he doth, if he did not know their works: That God knows the works of all men, is a point I have met with before, and therefore paſs from it here.

And he overturneth them in the night.] There are ſeveral readings of this clauſe.

First, Some thus, Therefore the Lord knoweth their works, and turneth into night; That is, he turneth their proſperity into adverſity, he bringeth trouble and affliction upon them; they lived before in a day of proſperity, in a day of power and worldly greatneſs, but he turneth them into night.

Secondly, Or, as others thus, He turneth the night, that is, he changeth the night into day, he takes away the dark and cloſe covers of their ſins, and makes them as manifeſt as the light; Now, as the Apoſtle ſaith (Eph. 5. 13.) That which maketh manifeſt, is light; If God were not light, he could not bring to light the hidden things of darkneſs, nor manifeſt the counſels of the heart.

Simul atque mutavit noctem &c. Jun. i. e. Lucem protulit, qua revelantur omnia in judicio ejus. Id.

Thirdly thus, Therefore he knoweth their works, and when the night is turned, he deſtroyeth them; That is, they are deſtroyed and periſh as ſoon and as eaſily as the day takes place of the night: or as ſoon as the night is turned into day, ſo ſoon doth the Lord deſtroy them, he can quickly make an end of them, he can deſtroy them with the morning Light.

We render, and I judg that beſt, He overturneth them (their perſons) in the night; and ſo Elihu points at the ſeaſon, or time, of Gods breaking and overthrowing them, he doth it in the night. We make take it ſtrictly, as in the caſe of Pharaoh and the Egyptians, (Exod. 12. 29.) as alſo in that of Belſhazzar, Dan. 5. 30.) or, in the night, that is, ſuddenly, unexpectedly; Though a man be deſtroyed in the day, yet if it be done ſuddenly, he looking for no ſuch matter, we may ſay it was done in the night; becauſe then men are moſt ſecure: This way of expreſſing an unlookt for evil, the coming of in the night, was opened at the twentieth verſe, therefore I ſhall not ſtay upon it, He overturneth them in the night.

So that they are deſtroyed.] Elihu ſaid before, He ſhall break in pieces mighty men; Here he ſaith, they are deſtroyed; That is, they ſhall be broken to purpoſe, or throughly; God doth not break them in pieces for correction, but for deſtruction; there are great breakings upon the perſons and eſtates of ſome men, and yet it is but for correction, others the Lord breaketh for utter ruin, (as here) ſo that they are deſtroyed. The Original word ſignifieth to deſtroy as it were by pounding in a Morter; and the ſame word is uſed to ſignifie a contrite heart, a heart broken by godly ſorrow under the ſenſe of ſin. They are deſtroyed, or, as it were ground to powder; you may break a thing into many pieces, yet not grind it to powder or duſt, as corn in a Mill, or ſpice in a Morter; but theſe (ſaith Elihu) are not only broken to pieces, but beaten to duſt, that's the ſtrength of the word which we render, they are deſtroyed.

Hence Note, What God hath a mind to do, he can do it certainly, and will do it throughly.

He breaks men in pieces, ſo that they are deſtroyed and brought to duſt; When the Prophet declares the breaking of the four Monarchies, it is ſaid (Dan. 2. 35.) They ſhall be as the chaff of the Summer threſhing upon the Mountains; if the Lord will deſtroy the mightieſt, they ſhall certainly be deſtroyed; as Balak ſaid to Balaam; I wot that whom thou curſeſt are curſed; as if he had ſaid, thou canſt curſe effectually, if thou wilt ſet thy ſelf to it; 'tis not in the power of all the Balaams in the world to effect a curſe, though they pronounce a curſe, 'tis only in the power of the Lord to curſe effectually; he can bleſs whom he pleaſeth, and they are bleſſed; he can curſe whom he pleaſeth, and they are curſed. Thus as Ephraim lamenting his ſin and ſorrow confeſſed, (Jer. 31. 18.) Lord, thou haſt chaſtiſed me, and I was chaſtiſed; God paid him home (as we ſpeak) if we chaſtiſe a child, he is chaſtiſed, but when Ephraim ſaith, thou haſt chaſtiſed me, and I was chaſtiſed; his meaning is, I was greatly and effectually chaſtiſed; that is, Firſt, In a literal ſenſe, I found thy hand heavy upon me, it was a ſore affliction that I was under. Secondly, In a ſpiritual ſenſe; Thou haſt chaſtiſed me, and I was chaſtiſed; that is, my heart was humbled and broken under thy chaſtiſements; in either notion we ſee the effectualneſs of the Lord's work; Thou haſt chaſtiſed me, and I was chaſtiſed. And therefore Ephraim invited the Lord to another work; Turn me, O Lord, and I ſhall be turned; if thou wilt but turn thy Spirit upon this hard heart of mine, it will be effectually turned, it will be not only broken for ſin, but from ſin: As if he had ſaid, I have received reproofs and counſels from men, and they have not turned me, but Lord, if thou wilt reprove and counſel me, I ſhall be turned; thus the Lord carrieth his work home to converſion, in his ſpiritual dealings with ſome, and to confuſion in his temporal puniſhments upon others. Thus he threatned his own people for their confidence in Egypt, and contempt of his holy Word (Iſa. 30. 13.) This iniquity ſhall be unto you as a breach ready to fall, ſwelling out in a high wall, whoſe breaking cometh ſuddenly at an inſtant. And he ſhall break it as the breaking of a potters veſſel, that is broken in pieces, he ſhall not ſpare; ſo that there ſhall not be found in the burſting of it, a ſherd to take fire from the hearth, or to take water withal out of the pit; that is, ye ſhall be made utterly uſeleſs and unſerviceable. That piece of a veſſel is of no uſe, which will not ſerve for either of thoſe little uſes, the taking of a little fire from the hearth, or a little water out of the pit. And if God ſometime break his own profeſſing people thus ſmall for their ſins, how ſmall will he break his profeſſed enemies! Read for this the laſt breaking and down-fall of Babylon (Rev. 18. 21, 22, 23.) Therefore take heed how you fall into the Lords hand; for he can not only break you in pieces, but break you to powder, he can break you to deſtruction: The Lords purpoſes, and the effects of them, his works, are never without effect, for good or evil, for the better or for the worſe.

VERS. 26, 27, 28.

He ſtriketh them as wicked men, in the open ſight of others:

Becauſe they turned back from him, and would not conſider any of his ways.

So that they cauſe the cry of the poor to come unto him, and he heareth the cry of the afflicted.

Elihu having in the former words ſhewed the impartial vengeance of God upon the wicked, proceedeth to ſhew two things further about it in theſe words;

Firſt, The manner of it, verſ. 26. He ſtriketh them as wicked men in the open ſight of others.

Secondly, The cauſes, grounds, or reaſons of it in the 27. and 28. verſes; why doth God ſtrike them? it is becauſe they turned back from him, and would not conſider any of his ways; So that they cauſe the cry of the poor to come unto him; their impiety in turning from God, and their iniquity in oppreſſing the poor, provoked the Lord to ſtrike them as wicked men in the open ſight of others.

Verſ. 26. He ſtriketh them as wicked men.

The word which we render ſtrike, ſpecially notes the ſtriking of one hand againſt the other; our hands claſht, or ſtruck together, make a ſound, or noiſe: Thus ſome Interpret the word here, He ſtrikes them with an ignominious ſound. Many rejoyce and clap their hands when they fall; They are deſtroyed with ſhouting. Others take the Metaphor from a bladder filled with wind, which being caſt on the ground, and ſtampt upon with the foot, breaks with a noiſe, or gives a crack in the breaking: Wicked men, in all they think, and purpoſe, and do, are but wind, and when they break, they break like bladders, which have nothing of ſolidity, only breath and fume in them. Such an Elegancy there is in this word, hitting the vanity and vacuity or emptineſs of wicked men, all their filling being but like that of a bladder, which puffs them up, but never makes them wiſe or ſolid men.

ignominioſa cum ſibilis exponunt. Alij volunt peti metaphoram à veſica vento turgente, quæ pede compreſſa cum ſonitu rumpitur. Scult. Pro improbis complosit eos. Tharg. In loco improborum complodit eos. Jun.

Further, I find this word uſed for ſtriking in a threefold ſenſe.

Firſt, For ſtriking with ſorrow and ſhame; ſuch was that of repenting Ephraim (Jer. 31. 19.) Who when he thought on his ways, was aſhamed and ſmote upon his thigh.

Secondly, For ſtriking with ſcorn and deriſion (Lam. 2. 15.) All that paſs by clap their hands at thee, they hiſs and wag their head at the daughter of Jeruſalem.

Thirdly, There is alſo a ſtriking with anger and indignation; Thus Balak being vext, becauſe he could not have his purpoſe to bribe Balaam to curſe the people of God, Smote his hands together (Numb. 24. 10.) and the Lord himſelf is expreſt expreſſing his angry indignation againſt his own people the Jews by this geſture (Ezek. 22. 13.) Behold therefore I have ſmitten my hands at thy diſhoneſt gain, &c. There is then a ſpecial Emphaſis in the ſmiting or ſtriking here intended, beſides the general meaning of it. The Lord deſtroys wicked men in ſuch a manner, that all who behold it are filled with the admiration of his righteouſneſs, and with a deteſtation of their lewdneſs. The Septuagint ſay, He hath extinguiſhed wicked men; As if they were but ſmoaking firebrands, or the ſtinking ſnuff of a candle. Another renders it, He binds them, the word ſignifying alſo to bind or ſtraighten; The Lord brings forth evil men, as it were, bound hand and foot to Judgment. We ſay clearly, He ſtriketh them, and that in no ordinary way, but

*Ἔσβεσε δὲ ἀσεβεῖς; Extinxit autem impios. Sept. Pro impijs ſtrinxit eos. Bold. i. e. vinculis funibuſq; ligare fecit eos tanquam impios atq; ita ſpectandos palam deduci & proponi. Bold.

As wicked men.] So we tranſlate; yet the particle which we render, as, may (here according to its frequent uſe elſewhere) carry in it a reaſon, He ſtrikes them becauſe they are wicked; ſo ſome read the Text, not as we by way of ſimilitude, how God ſtriketh them, but as giving an account why God ſtriketh them, even becauſe they are wicked men. Mr. Broughton ſaith, For the wicked, he maketh plentiful riddance of them, which hath a good ſenſe in it, but takes ſomewhat too great a liberty with the original Text; And becauſe the reaſon of this ſtriking is held forth in the verſes following, it is more diſtinct to ſay he ſtrikes them (not becauſe they are wicked men, but) as wicked men; that is, as wicked men uſe to be ſtrucken, or as they uſe to be proceeded againſt in a way of Juſtice. God ſtriketh the mighty men (of whom he ſpake before) as common offenders or malefactors; Though they are great on earth, yea though they are (in title) Gods upon earth, yet God ſtrikes them as the baſeſt of wicked men, they ſhall not only dye (as 'tis ſaid, Pſal. 82. 7.) or fall like one of the Princes, but they ſhall dye like the worſt of men, like wicked men.

תחת cauſalis eſt, propterea quod impij ſunt. Illud quaſi ſæpe non ſimilitudinem ſed veritatem ſignificat; & idem valet quod utpote, &c.

Hence note, Firſt, They that do like the wicked, ſhall be dealt with by God as the wicked, how high, or mighty ſoever they are in this world.

And as they who are openly wicked ſhall be dealt with as wicked men, though they be high in the world; ſo they that are really wicked ſhall be dealt with as wicked men, though they make a high profeſſion of godlineſs in the Church, even them will God ſtrike alſo as wicked men. Chriſt ſpeaks of ſome (Matth. 7. 22.) who made a loud profeſſion of religion, with whom yet he dealt as with wicked men: Depart from me (ſaith he) I know ye not, ye workers of iniquity. Though God doth not deal alike with all wicked men, yet he deals with them all like wicked men. There is not one wicked man in the world, but he ſhall be dealt with according to his kind, that is, as a wicked man, and ſhall have that for his portion which is the portion of their Cup, who are wicked. As the Godly, ſo the wicked, whether prophane or falſe and hypocritical, ſhall be eſteemed and handled by God like themſelves, or as they are.

Secondly, From the firſt word, as it is taken cauſally, (upon which many inſiſt) Note,

The reaſon why wicked men are ſtricken is becauſe they are wicked.

Were not men wicked they ſhould never feel ſuch ſtroaks from the hand or rather iron rod of God. If any ſmart and are ruin'd, they may thank themſelves for it, that is, their ſins for it; their ſufferings are the fruits of their ſin. The Prophet told the ſinful Jews ſo (Jer. 4. 18.) they had an affliction upon them, which did reach even to the heart, God made their hearts ake, he ſtruck them to the heart; but why did he ſo? the anſwer is, Thy ſin and thy doings have procured theſe things to thee, &c. He ſtriketh them as wicked men,

In the open ſight of others.] Theſe words are a further deſcription of the manner how God ſtrikes the wicked, he doth it openly, or (as we put in the margin) In the place of beholders, that is, in ſuch a place, and in ſuch a manner that all may behold it: we ſay, He ſtrikes them in the open ſight of others; that is, he puniſheth them in an exemplary way, or that they may be an example of warning unto others. For, The place of ſeers, or of beholders, is ſome open and eminent place oppoſed to a Corner; as Paul ſaid pleading his cauſe before King Agrippa (Acts 26. 26.) This thing was not done in a Corner; no, it was done, as upon the houſe-top, even in the place of beholders. The Lord will not have to do with wicked men only in a Corner. He will have witneſſes of his doings with them. There ſhall be enow to take notice how he handles them, therefore he often takes open vengeance on them, in the frequent aſſembly and concourſe of many beholders, both approving and reverencing, yea adoring the impartial equity of the ſupream Judg, and his care of humane affairs. So then, the words are an alluſion to the execution of common maleſactors, who dye by the Judgment of the Magiſtrate, ſuch being condemned and ſentenced by the Judg, are not put to death in the priſon, or in a hole, but are taken out and carried to ſome noted place of execution, or a Scaffold is purpoſely erected, where a multitude of ſpectators are admitted to come and behold the Tragedy. When our Lord Jeſus Chriſt, who (to deliver us from our tranſgreſſions) was numbred with tranſgreſſors, when he (I ſay) was crucified, The Evangeliſt ſaith (Luke 23. 35.) The people ſtood beholding, and the Rulers alſo with them derided him. Chriſt himſelf was ſtrucken as a wicked man in the place of Beholders. And ſo have many thouſands of his faithful witneſſes. The wicked deal with them often, as the Lord dealeth ſometimes with wicked men, they are brought forth from priſon to death, and executed in the open ſight of others. All things (in this world) come alike to all, no man knoweth love or hatred by all that is before them (Eccl. 9. 1, 2.) The Apoſtle Paul ſpeaking of himſelf and his fellow-Apoſtles (to ſhew the publick diſgrace which they were put to) ſaith, We are made a ſpectacle to the world, to Angels, and to men (1 Cor. 4. 9.) The Greek is, we are a Theatre to the world, &c. As if he had ſaid, all ſee how we are uſed; And as bloody perſecuters make the faithful ſervants of Chriſt a ſpectacle, ſo Chriſt will at laſt make wicked men a ſpectacle to the world, to Angels, and to men. Thus it is propheciced (Iſa. 66. 24.) that all fleſh who come to worſhip before the Lord, ſhall go forth and look upon the carcaſſes of the men that have tranſgreſſed againſt him, &c. They ſhall be ſtricken in the place of Beholders or Seers.

Locus videntium, locus patens, frequens, celebris, omnium oculis expoſitus. Par. Importat viſionem paradigmaticam & exemplarem. Merc.

Some expound that word Seers, as implying more than ordinary ſeers, or more than barely ſuch as ſee what is done; namely, ſuch as are delighted and pleaſed with what is done, yet not as it is a ſuffering of pain by man, but as it is an act of Juſtice from God.

Videre ſæpe ſignificat cum voluptate aliquid ſpectare. Scult.

Hence note, God oftentimes doth Juſtice upon ſinners openly.

The Judgments of God are of two ſorts: Some are ſecret, others are manifeſt; he can do execution upon men when none ſee it; nay he doth the ſevereſt executions upon ſome men when they themſelves do not ſee it (that's the ſting and ſeverity of the Judgment, that) they have not ſo much as any ſenſe of the wrath of God, when the full vials of his wrath are pouring out upon them. But many of the Judgments of God are open; As he ſtriketh ſome ſo ſecretly, that none can ſee it, ſo others ſo viſibly that all may ſee it. Thus the Lord commanded Moſes (Numb. 25. 4.) when Iſrael had joyned themſelves unto Baal-peor, Take all the heads of the people and hang them up before the Lord againſt the Sun. By the heads of the people, we may underſtand either the capital offenders, thoſe who were moſt active and ready in that wickedneſs; or their principal Rulers, who in ſtead of ſtopping them from or puniſhing them for thoſe offences, gave way to them or at leaſt winked at them: Theſe muſt be hanged againſt the Sun, that is, as Elihu ſpeaks here, in the open ſight of others, or, in the place of ſeers. Thus they were made an example of caution that all might ſee and fear and do no more preſumptuouſly. Read the like executions of divine Judgment threatned (2 Sam. 12. 11, 12. Iſa. 26. 11.) John in the Revelation (Chap. 15. 4.) prophecyeth of the Saints triumphing at the fall of Babylon, and ſinging the ſong of Moſes, and the ſong of the Lamb, ſaying, Great and marvellous are thy works, &c. for thy Judgments are made manifeſt: God hath now ſtricken Babylon his great enemy in the open ſight of others; his Judgments were right before, (they are always right) but till then not manifeſt. David ſaith (Pſal. 9. 16.) The Lord is known by the Judgment which he executeth: now if the Lord be known by the Judgment which he executeth; then the Judgment which he executeth muſt be known; it muſt be an open Judgment; and ſuch are very many of the Judgments of God, they are acted as upon a ſtage. And I may give you an account in three particulars why the Lord will ſometimes do Juſtice, in the place of beholders, or in the open ſight of others.

Firſt, That there may be witneſſes enow of what he doth, and ſo a record of it kept, at leaſt in the minds and memories of faithful men for the generations to come.

Secondly, The Lord doth it not only that he may have witneſſes of his Juſtice, but alſo that his Juſtice and the proceedings of it, may have an effect and a fruit upon thoſe who did not feel it, nor fall under it. This was the reaſon why the Lord threatned to puniſh Jeruſalem in the ſight of the nations (Ezek. 5. 5, 6, 7, 8, 14, 15.) Thus ſaith the Lord God, this is Jeruſalem, I have ſet it in the midſt of the nations and Countries that are round about her. God is ſaid (Pſal. 74. 12.) To work ſalvation in the midſt of the Earth; that is, in Jeruſalem, or among his people, who were placed as it were in the Center, and middle part of the world: not that Jeruſalem ſtood exactly in the midſt of the world, but becauſe many Nations ſtood about it, that might well be called a City ſtanding in the midſt of the nations; and therefore it is added (verſ. 8.) Thus ſaith the Lord God, Behold I, even I am againſt thee, and will execute Judgment in the midſt of thee, in the ſight of the nations. God would execute Judgment in Jeruſalem a City placed in the midſt of the nations, that as the nations had taken notice of the extraordinary favours, benefits, deliverances, and ſalvations which God wrought for Jeruſalem; ſo they might alſo take notice of his judgments and ſore diſpleaſure againſt them. Jeruſalem was not ſeated in ſome nook, corner, or by-place of the world, but in the midſt of the nations, that both the goodneſs and ſeverity of God towards them might be conſpicuous; And that the nations round about ſeeing the ſufferings of that people for their ſin, might fear and tremble to ſin as they had done; for if Jeruſalem the ſeat of inſtituted worſhip and God's peculiar people were not ſpared when they provoked God, their neighbours might well conclude, ſurely we ſhall not be ſpared: As the Lord himſelf argued it againſt thoſe uncircumciſed nations (Jer. 25. 20.) Behold I will bring evil upon the City that is called by my name, and ſhould ye go utterly unpuniſhed? Certainly no! If God puniſh his own people in the ſight of the heatheniſh nations when they do wickedly, what then are heathen nations to expect, who do nothing but wickedneſs?

Jeruſalem dicitur medium terræ, utpote quæ ſit in quarto climate ideo autem urbem in medio mundi conſtitutam & quaſi in loco videntium elegit deus, ut ſicut beneficia ita & ſupplicia eorum omnibus eſſent conſpicua. Pined.

And this (by the way) may give the Alarm, and be a very awakening conſideration to all the Churches and people of God at this day throughout the world. If God did ſtrike Jeruſalem of old, that is, his people there, as wicked men even in the open ſight of others; if the Lord was ſo wrath with his people, that he polluted his inheritance, and gave them into the hand of the Chaldeans (Iſa. 47. 6.) If he forſook his houſe and left his heritage, and gave the dearly beloved of his ſoul into the hands of her enemies (Jer. 12. 7.) and ſaid (verſ. 9.) Mine heritage is to me as a ſpeckled bird, the birds round about her are againſt her; yea if he (in the he (in the cloſe of that verſe) invited the worſt of men under the name of beaſts to ſpoil them, Come ye, aſſemble all the beaſts of the field come to devour; Now (I ſay) If God ſtruck his ancient people, the Jewiſh Church, as wicked men, by wicked men, in the open ſight of others, O let the Gentile Churches take heed, leſt they alſo be ſtricken after the ſame manner. Many Churches in Germany and elſewhere have been ſtricken ſo already in this laſt age, let the remnant both there and elſewhere remember themſelves and give glory to God, before he cauſe ſuch darkneſs to come upon them, and ſtrike them alſo as wicked men in the open ſight of others.

God lets ſome ſinners ſuffer or puniſheth them openly, both becauſe he would have all others take notice that he diſlikes what they have done, as alſo becauſe he would not have others do the like, leſt they be made like them, both in the matter and manner of their ſufferings. 'Tis a favour (as well as our duty) to be taught by other mens harms, and to be inſtructed by their ſtroaks, to prevent our own.

And as the Lord ſtrikes ſome wicked men openly, that others may fear and not do the like, ſo, that they who have done the like may be humbled for, and repent of what they have done. God doth not always pour out the ſame Judgments upon all thoſe that have done the ſame wickedneſs, (the whole world would be in blood if he did ſo) but he takes here and there one that the reſt bethinking themſelves, and (with repenting Ephraim) ſmiting upon their thigh, may prevent the Lord from ſmiting them at all, eſpecially from ſtriking them as wicked men in the open ſight of others. It is ſaid (Rev. 11. 13.) that, after by a great earthquake the tenth part of the City fell, and in the earthquake were ſlain of men ſeven thouſand, the remnant were affrighted and gave glory to the God of heaven. And ſurely the reaſon why after one man hath been chaſtiſed or ſtricken, others take their turns too, is becauſe they did not take warning by his chaſtiſements and ſufferings. Did we but mind the ſcope of God in puniſhing any openly, the ſtriking of one might ſave hundreds, or thouſands from being ſtricken; but becauſe men are ſo ſecure and ſo ſlow to take warning by what God doth to others, therefore they are called forth one after another, to ſuffer and feel his heavy hand in their own perſons.

Thirdly, God ſtrikes ſome wicked men in open view, or in the place of beholders for the comfort of his own people, and for their encouragement (Pſal. 58. 10, 11.) The righteous ſhall be glad when he ſeeth the vengeance; not that he ſhall be glad of the vengeance, purely as it is a hurt, or a ſuffering to the creature, but the righteous ſhall be glad when he ſeeth the vengeance of God, as it is a fulfilling of the threatning of God againſt the ſin of man, and an evidence of his own holineſs (Pſal. 64. 9, 10.) God ſhall ſhoot ſuddenly at the wicked, all that ſee them ſhall flee away; that is, they that ſee how God deals with them, ſhall get away, leſt ruine overtake them, or they ſhall flee away (which is their beſt courſe) from ſuch courſes and practices as procured them that ruine. Thus the righteous rejoyce when they ſee the vengeance, yea, they waſh their feet in the blood of the ungodly; that is, they get comfort and encouragement by ſeeing the Lord avenge their cauſe againſt their adverſaries. It is ſaid (Exod. 14. 30, 31.) that God having overwhelmed the Egyptians in the red Sea, the Iſraelites ſaw the Egyptians dead upon the ſhore; God did not ſuffer the carcaſſes of the Egyptians to ſink to the bottom of the Sea, but cauſed them to lie upon the ſhore, that the Iſraelites might ſee them: And when Iſrael ſaw that dreadful ſtroak of the Lord upon the Egyptians, It is ſaid, The poeple feared the Lord, and believed the Lord and his ſervant Moſes: Thus they were confirmed in their faith by God's open Judgments upon the Egyptians; They were ſmitten ia the place of beholders, or in the open ſight of others.

There are yet two other interpretations of theſe words, which I ſhall touch.

He ſtriketh them in the place of beholders, that is (ſaith my Author) in ſuch an eſtate or condition wherein themſelves might ſee, both by that natural light which every man hath, and eſpecially by the light of doctrine and inſtruction, what they ought to do, and what to ſhun or avoid. In this ſenſe to be ſmitten in the place of Seers, is, to ſee and behold, to have light and underſtanding what to do or forbear doing, and yet to act againſt that light, and ſo provoke the Lord to ſtrike us; which is a great aggravation both of the ſin, and puniſhment of man.

In loco videntium. i.e. exiſtentes in ſtatu in quo videre poterant tum per naturalem rationem tum per ſacram doctrinam quid eſſet faciendum & quid eſſet vitandum. Aquin.

A ſecond gives it thus, He ſtriketh them in the place of ſeers, or where they ſaw; that is, he ſtriketh them in the eye of their underſtanding, or in their Judgment, he ſtriketh them with ſpiritual blindneſs, as the Sodomites were with corporal, ſo that they are not able to ſee their way, or what becomes them to do. This is a moſt ſevere ſtroak. There are many who when they have abuſed the light, and would not do what they ſaw they ought, God hath ſtruck them with ſuch blindneſs, that they ſhould not ſee what they ought to do. Both theſe are rather tropological Expoſitions than literal, yet they may have their uſe and improvement by way of alluſion. In this place Elihu having thus held out the openneſs and exemplarineſs of the judgments of God upon wicked men, proceeds in the following words, to ſhew the equity and righteouſneſs of them.

Verſ. 27. Becauſe they have turned back from him, and would not conſider any of his ways.

Here, I ſay, leſt any ſhould ſurmiſe that God takes vengeance without cauſe, the cauſe is named and aſſigned why God takes vengeance; 'tis becauſe they turned back from him, they in the pride and ſtoutneſs of their hearts (which great men eſpecially are much ſubject to) refuſed to obey and follow God, and therefore his wrath followed and brake them.

They turned back from him.] There is a twofold turning back; Firſt, Corporal; Secondly, Moral or Spiritual, none can corporally turn back from God, though ſome attempt it; to what hiding-place ſoever we turn our ſelves, we cannot be hid from him who filleth every place? But there are many who morally turn back and depart from the living God. Sinners would turn their perſons back from God, and hide their heads, they would get quite out of his ſight and reach, though they cannot; but all of them turn back from God in their hearts.

In two reſpects ſinners in general, may be ſaid to turn back from God; Firſt, when he commands and they will not obey him, or withdraw their obedience from his commandments; Secondly, when he intreats and invites them, and they will not come to him, nor accept his tendred reſpects and favours. Thus the Lord complained of his own people (Pſal. 81. 11.) Iſrael would none of me; God wooed them, but they had other lovers, and after them they would go; even Iſrael lightly regarded the God of Iſrael, yea they made a defection from him. More diſtinctly.

There is a threefold turning back from God, or they who turn back from God are of three ſorts.

Firſt, There is a turning back from God, by thoſe who have openly followed him, or made profeſſion of his name; Thus hypocrites and formaliſts turn back from God. This the Scripture calls back-ſliding, revolting, and going a whoring from God. Such as theſe, are like perfidious Souldiers, who enter and liſt themſelves in an Army, marching with them for a while, and taking their pay, yet ſoon after forſake their colours, and turn to the enemy: Thus many apoſtatize from God to the Devil, and to the creature, or (as Paul ſaid of Demas) they forſake Chriſt and embrace this preſent world. Luther was charged by his enemies that he was an Apoſtate, and he acknowledged, he was, but he thanked God for it, he indeed turned back from what he did once profeſs, but it was to a better profeſſion; he did not turn from God to the world, but he turned from the world to God, and that's a bleſſed Apoſtacy; he did not turn from truth to error, but from error to truth; he did not turn from pure worſhip to Idolatry and ſuperſtition, but from Idolatry and ſuperſtition to pure worſhip. How wretched is their condition who are indeed Apoſtates! who turn from God to the world, from truth to error, from pure worſhip to Idolatry and ſuperſtition, from a holy converſation to prophaneneſs, looſneſs and libertiniſm, to a compliance with the world, and a ſymbolizing with them in their luſts and wickedneſs. This abominable apoſtacy is a fruit of hypocriſie, Hypocrites turn only their faces to God, and Apoſtates turn their backs upon him, or, turn back from him. And all they who turn only their faces unto God, will for their own advantage, or to ſave themſelves turn their backs upon him. Hypocrites when put to it, when the ſtorm comes, ever prove Apoſtates.

Secondly, There is a turning from God found even in the beſt followers of God; who is there among the Saints on earth that keeps conſtant uninterrupted communion with God? The leaſt degree of inordinate letting down or turning the heart to the creature, is, a degree of turning back from God. As holineſs is our motion toward God, and to act holily is to keep the eye of the ſoul always upon God; ſo, unholineſs is an averſion from God. David did not ſay, nor could he ſay (though as holy a man as lived) that he had never turned from God; he could only ſay that he had not wickedly departed from God (Pſal. 18. 21.)

Thirdly, There is a turning back from God, proper to all unregenerate perſons, whether they be ſuch as are civilly honeſt and poſſibly ſuch as do not decline the outſide of that religion wherein they were born and bred; or ſuch as are flagitious in their lives and ways, ſcorning to own religion, and being even aſhamed of the ways of God. Theſe may be ſaid to turn back from God, becauſe they have many calls to God, and are invited to come unto him; which yet they either neglect and mind not at all, or refuſe and reject, and ſo thruſt away God from them; and when the light comes, they love darkneſs rather then light, becauſe their deeds are evil (Joh. 3. 19.) Such were they of whom Job ſpake (Chap. 21. 14.) They ſay to God, depart from us: he doth not intend it of Apoſtates in a ſtrict notion, who once made profeſſion of godlineſs; but he ſpeaks of common and prophane perſons, who have no mind at all to obey or walk with God, but mind only the fulfilling of their luſts, or the affairs of this preſent life; and ſo their whole life is nothing elſe but a turning from God. Thus the vulgar tranſlation renders the Text with a good ſignificancy, though not with a clearneſs to the Hebrew; who have purpoſely turned from God; diſtinguiſhing them from thoſe who through daily Infirmity turn from God, as the beſt of his people do; whereas, theſe ſin willingly, yea wilfully and reſolvedly againſt God. I conceive, the words of Elihu in this Text are to be underſtood of turning from God in this third ſenſe; For he is not here ſpeaking of thoſe who were eminent profeſſors before, and did Apoſtatize; much leſs of thoſe that turn from God by daily failings in duty, or ſome neglect of duty, but he is ſpeaking of ſuch, whoſe whole courſe of life is as a continued turning from God, themſelves never having been wrought upon by the grace of converſion, or ſavingly turned to him. This third ſort of turners back from God are moſt proper to the preſent Text, though ſuch alſo are within the reach and compaſs of it, who do wickedly after they have made fair pretenſions to the beſt things. This is the reaſon why God ſtriketh the mighty to deſtruction; They have turned back from God. The reaſon being thus explicite and expreſs, teacheth us,

Qui quaſi de induſtria receſſerunt ab eo vulg. i. à deo peccantes ex certa malitia Aquin.

First, God never puniſheth any man without cauſe.

God doth not always ſhew the cauſe why he puniſheth this or that man, but he never puniſheth any man without cauſe; if he ſtriketh, 'tis becauſe men turn back from him, either by a plain apoſtacy from what they once profeſſed, or by a notorious courſe of impiety, refuſing ſo much as to own his ways or make profeſſion. God electeth ſome, and paſſeth by others without reſpect to any thing in them; Jacob have I loved, and Eſau have I hated; God hath mercy on whom he will have mercy (Rom. 9. 13. 15.) thus, I ſay, God electeth us without reſpect to any good in us; but God never ſtriketh or puniſheth us, but with reſpect to ſome evil in us or done by us.

Secondly, Note, It is the duty of all men to follow after God.

To follow God in his way, and to propoſe God as our end, contain the ſum of all duty. That, God hath made man & given him a being, that, he placed man in the higheſt form of his viſible creation, ſhould draw man after him. We ought to follow God becauſe we are his creatures, becauſe we have our all from him, or becauſe in him we live, and move and have our being, as the Apoſtle ſpeaks of mankind in general, even of the heathens (Acts 17. 28.) And foraſmuch as we are his off-ſpring (verſ. 29.) our hearts ſhould ſpring, or riſe up to him in love and thankfulneſs; as the rivers, becauſe they come from the Sea, go back thither: ſo we being the offſpring of God, and derived from him, ſhould be always returning to him. This nature tells us; And therefore the Apoſtle ſaith (Acts 17. 27.) God hath made of one blood all nations of men, that they ſhould ſeek after him, &c. The light of nature, though dim and dark, ſhews that a man ſhould feel after God, as a man in the dark doth after his way. And if all men ought to follow God, becauſe they have their natural life and breath from him; much more ſhould believers, who have a new, a ſpiritual life breathed into them, and beſtowed upon them, be always following after God; And the truth is, where true faith, or the life of grace is, that ſoul cannot live without daily returnings back to and breathings after God, even as meer carnal men, who are alienated from the life of God through the ignorance that is in them, are daily turning back from him.

Hence thirdly, Note, The whole life of every unconverted ſoul, and notorious ſinner, is a turning from God.

They who ſet their faces ſin-ward, turn their backs Godward. They who purſue their luſts, their covetous, their ambitious purpoſes, they who gratifie the fleſh, their pride, their luxury, their wantonneſs, their malice, what do any of them, what do all of them, but turn back from God? The beſt of Saints have their turnings from God, but they do not make it their buſineſs to turn from him; their buſineſs is, to draw near, to keep cloſe to God, to keep as it were in his eye; but as for the natural man and groſs ſinner, his buſineſs is a departing from God (Heb. 3. 12.) Take heed (ſaith the Apoſtle) leſt there be in any of you an evil heart of unbelief in departing from the living God. He gives Caution to the Church, ſearch your ſelves, leſt there be found in any of you an evil heart of unbelief, &c. Where unbelief remains in any meaſure unmortified, it may quickly do a great deal of miſchief. And where it remains in full power or altogether unmortified, it doth all manner of miſchief. All which is wrapt up in that one word, a departure from the living God. Unbelief is the root of Apoſtacy; The reaſon why ſinners turn from God, is, becauſe they give no Credit to the word of God; they are not perſwaded God is ſuch a one as he hath declared himſelf to be, and will either do that for the obedient which he hath promiſed, or that againſt the rebellious which he hath threatned. They who believe not in God cannot but depart from God; And therefore the life of an unbeliever is a continual departure from God. He ſets out with his back upon God; the very firſt ſtep he takes into the world is from God. As ſoon as we are born we naturally go aſtray ſpeaking lyes; we are ever out of our way, till we look toward God, and aim at him; which we never do, till he by his mighty power changeth our hearts; turneth our courſe, and bringeth us home to himſelf.

Further, Conſider, how did theſe mighty men turn back from God? they might ſay, where did we ſee God? where did God appear to us? that we are thus charged with turning back from him?

I anſwer; Firſt, God manifeſts himſelf to man in his works, or in his providences. Secondly, He manifeſts himſelf in every part of his word, eſpecially in his Commands, in his promiſes, and in his threatnings; in his Commands, he manifeſts himſelf a holy God; in his promiſes, a gracious and bountiful God; in his threatnings, a juſt and righteous God, who will neither do wrong nor ſuffer himſelf to be wronged. The Septuagint make this Expoſition the Text, tranſlating theſe words of Elihu, thus; Becauſe they have turned from the Law of God.

Ὅτι ἐξέκλιναν ἐκ νόμου Θεοῦ. Quia declinaverunt de lege Dei. Sept.

Hence note, They who turn from the word of God, turn back from God.

When a commad comes, if you ſlight the authority and obligation of it, you turn back from God; when a promiſe comes, if you do not believe the truth of it, and hope for the good of it, you turn back from God; look what of the mind of God is manifeſted to you in the diſpenſation of the word, if you do not obedientially cloſe with it, you neglect to cloſe with God himſelf, and while you turn from it, you turn from God himſelf. Thus the Apoſtle ſpeaks concerning back-ſliders (2 Pet. 2. 20, 21.) If after they have eſcaped the pollutions of the world, through the knowledg of our Lord and Saviour Jeſus Chriſt they are again entangled therein and overcome, the latter end is worſe with them them then the beginning. For it had been better for them not to have known the way of God, then after they have known it, to turn from the holy commandment delivered unto them; ſo that, a turning from the Commandment of God, is a turning from God himſelf; He turneth back from the holy commanding God, who turneth back from the holy Commandment of God, and he turneth back from the God of the promiſe, who turneth back from the promiſe of God.

Fifthly, Note, As it is exceeding ſinful to turn back from God, ſo they who do ſo, grow every day more and more ſinful.

If a man be once upon a courſe of back-ſliding and Apoſtatizing from the commands and promiſes of God, he will find himſelf worſe and worſe day after day; for ſtill the further from God any man goeth, the more vain he groweth; and the more doth luſt get a hand over him. As unbelief is the root of Apoſtacy from God, ſo Apoſtacy increaſeth all that wickedneſs which is in man. As the cauſe of all evil, whether of puniſhment or of ſin, is our departure and turning from God; ſo the very nature of ſin is a turning from God; and therefore the more we turn from God, the more ſinful and the fuller of ſin we are. As the nearer we come to God, the more holy and ſpiritual and heavenly we are (while we with open face as in a glaſs (ſaith the Apoſtle, 2 Cor. 3. 18.) Behold the glory of God (that is, while we draw near to him in his holy ordinances) we are changed into the ſame image, that is, we become more like to God) ſo the more we keep at a diſtance from God, the more unlike we are to him, that is, the more unholy we are. And as perſons unconverted, or in an unholy ſtate, are wholly alienated from the life of God, and cannot endure to come near him; ſo it is in a degree by any of our withdrawings or turnings from him: we are made more unholy, and are changed more into the image of thoſe carnal and earthly things which we behold, and with which we over-intimately converſe in the time of thoſe withdrawings.

Laſtly, Note, A holy life conſiſts in following of and keeping cloſe to God.

To keep cloſe to God is both a holy and a comfortable life; 'Tis the perfection of Saints to walk with God: Enoch walked with God, and that was his holineſs (Gen. 5. 24.) Caleb followed God fully, and that was his holineſs. A ſpiritual life, is nothing elſe but our following God. The moſt religious worſhip of God is to imitate whom we worſhip. And our imitation of God is our following of God, no man can imitate any thing but when his eye is upon its pattern, or the Idea of it abides in his mind. And therefore it is ſaid of the ungodly man (Pſal. 10. 4.) God is not in all his thoughts (then followeth, verſ. 5.) his ways are always grievous. If God be not in the thoughts of a man, nothing of God is ſtampt upon the ways of that man. In vain are we called Chriſtians, unleſs we keep cloſe to Chriſt, and in vain do any pretend to godlineſs, unleſs they walk with God. Jeſus Chriſt hath called himſelf the way (Joh. 14. 6.) chiefly upon this account, becauſe by him we go to the Father, and have acceptance with God by the grace of Juſtification; but Jeſus Chriſt is the way alſo, of our Sanctification; we muſt walk in him, and as he walked (1 John 2. 6.) that we may be holy: every departure from God lets the heart looſe to ſin. That which ſhall maintain the Saints holineſs to Eternity, is, They ſhall always behold the face of God; they ſhall never turn back from God, they ſhall never be taken off one moment from the actual viſion, enjoyment and contemplation of God in glory; therefore they ſhall never be taken off from actual holineſs and purity; now in proportion, as we keep our hearts and ſpirits ſteady upon God, and do not turn back from him, ſuch is our holineſs in this life; and as our holineſs is, ſuch will our comfort and peace and joy be in this life. For as becauſe when we arrive at glory, we ſhall never turn back from God, much leſs turn our backs upon him, therefore in glory there is fulneſs of Joy, and pleaſure for evermore; ſo the nearer we keep to God, and the cloſer we walk with him in this life, the fuller and more laſting will our joys and pleaſures be.

Optima vivendi ratio eſt deum ſequi. Religioſiſſimus dei cultus eſt imitari quem colis. Lact. lib. 5. Inſtit. cap. 10.

As in this former part of the 27. verſe, we have had the firſt cauſe opened why God ſtriketh the mighty as wicked men in the open ſight of others, namely, their apoſtacy from God, Becauſe they turned back from him. So in the latter part of this verſe we have another reaſon aſſigned why God doth it, and that is, becauſe

They would not conſider any of his ways.

The word which we render Conſider, ſignifies alſo to underſtand or know, which is an act precedent to conſideration; Conſideration is a contemplative act; by conſideration we become more knowing, but we cannot conſider any thing till we have ſome underſtanding or knowledg of it. And this word is often (in another Conjugation) uſed in the title of ſome ſpecial Pſalms. The 32. Pſalm, as alſo the 42. Pſalm, is called Maſchil, as much as to ſay, a teaching, or an inſtructing Pſalm, a Pſalm giving underſtanding and requiring deep and ſerious conſideration. Thus in the Text, they would not conſider, nor underſtand, nor know, nor contemplate

Any of his ways.] The Hebrew is, all his ways; that is, none at all of them. The ways of God in Scripture are taken in a twofold notion; Firſt, for thoſe wherein he would have us walk; ſuch are the ways of his commandments: they are called the ways of God, becauſe he directs us to walk in them. A holy life conſiſts in our walking with God; and we cannot walk with God any further, or any longer, than we keep in the ways of his commandments. It is ſaid of the children of Iſrael, after the death of Joſhua (Judg. 2. 17.) they turned quickly out of the way, which their fathers walked in, obeying the commandments of the Lord; but they did not ſo. To obey the commandments, is to walk in the way of them. Taking the ways of God in this ſenſe, when Elihu ſaith, They would not conſider any of his ways, his meaning is, they did not intend nor had any heart to ſet themſelves to learn the mind of God revealed in his word concerning their duty, or what they ought to do; they know not the ways of God practically. The word properly denotes the wiſdom and prudence, which ſtayeth not in notion, but proceeds to action. Theſe men lived as if they had never heard of, at leaſt never underſtood the Law of God, which is the rule of life. They conſidered not the ways of God to walk in them, as Moſes exhorted the people of Iſrael (Deut. 29. 9.) Keep therefore the words of this covenant to do them.

Secondly, The ways of God are thoſe wherein himſelf walketh, the works of God are the ways of God; the works of his providence either in mercy or in judgment, either in doing good or in doing evil (that is, pœnal evil) theſe are the ways of God; in theſe God ſhews himſelf as in a way, in theſe he goeth forth in his power and goodneſs, in his mercy and juſtice. All theſe divine glories and perfections are diſcovered in the works of God. Thus David is to be underſtood when he ſaith (Pſal. 25. 10.) All the ways of God are mercy and truth, to them that fear him, and keep his Covenant; that is, all the providential works of God are mercy and truth; though all of them are not mercy in the matter, or preciſely taken as works done, though none of them are mercy, reſpecting ſome perſons to whom they are done, for many of them are materially chaſtiſements, afflictions and croſſes to good men, and all of them are wrath and judgment to evil and impenitently wicked men; yet they are all mercy in the iſſue or reſult of them to good men, or to thoſe who fear God, and keep his covenants. For whether he do good, or whether he do evil, whether he wounds, or whether he heals, all theſe providential ways of God, are as truth in themſelves, ſo mercy to his people; or, as the Apoſtle concludes (Rom. 8. 28.) They work together for good to them that love God, and are the called according to his purpoſe. In both theſe ſenſes we may expound this Text, They would not conſider any of his ways; that is, they would neither conſider the Laws of God, which were the way wherein they ſhould walk towards him, nor would they conſider the works of God, which are the ways wherein himſelf walketh towards them. This was the ſpirit of that evil generation intended in this Scripture; they had not much underſtanding in, and leſs conſideration of the ways of God.

Hence, firſt we may take notice, Elihu doth not ſay, they did not conſider his ways; but, they would not; It was not ſo much an act of careleſneſs and negligence as of contempt and rebellious reſolution.

Hence Obſerve, Evil men have no will to conſider or underſtand the good ways of God; yea, their will is againſt ſuch an underſtanding.

A natural man liketh not to retain God in his knowledg, (Rom. 1. 28.) Now, he that doth not like to retain God in his knowledg, or had rather think of any thing than of God, he can never (while ſuch) like to retain the ways of God in his knowledg, he that layeth God out of his thoughts, will much more lay the law of God out of his thoughts. The natural man hath not only a blindneſs in his mind, which hinders him from diſcerning the things of God, (they being diſcernable only by a ſpiritual eye) but he hath an obſtinacy in his Will; or, he hath not only an inability to know, but an enmity againſt the knowledg of that which is ſpiritual: He ſhuts his eyes, and draws a curtain between himſelf and the light which is ready to dart in upon him; away with this light, ſaith he; Thus he rebelleth againſt the light, and as his underſtanding is dark, ſo his affections are corrupt. Solomon gives us all this in the expoſtulations of wiſdom with wicked men, (Prov. 1. 20, 21, 22.) Wiſdom cryeth, &c. How long ye ſimple ones will ye love ſimplicity, and the ſcorners delight in their ſcorning, and fools hate knowledg? That which a man hateth, he hath no will, no mind to know. An impotency or inability unto good, argues a very ſad condition, but a rebellion, a frowardneſs, a wilfulneſs againſt it, demonſtrates a condition much more ſad; not to know becauſe we have no means of knowledg, will make us miſerable enough, but not to know becauſe unwilling to receive, or becauſe wilfully ſet againſt the means of knowledg, renders any mans condition moſt miſerable. Such were theſe in the Text, They would not conſider any of his ways.

Secondly, Elihu ſaith not, they did not know any of his ways, or they knew not which way to go; but they would not conſider them. There is no man but knows ſome, yea many of the ways of God, that is, of thoſe ways wherein God would have him to walk; theſe ways of God are written in the heart by nature, there is an impreſſion of the Will of God upon every ſoul, though not ſuch an impreſſion or writing as grace maketh there (that's another kind or manner of work) for, when once through grace the Law of God is written in and impreſſed upon the heart, then the heart is ſuited to the Law, yea, the heart is not only conformed unto, but transformed into the Law of God, whereas by nature the Law is written only ſo far as to give us the knowledg of the Law, and a conviction of that duty or conformity which we owe to it. The men here intended by Elihu, knew the Law or ways of God, by the light of a natural conſcience, but not by the light of a renewed conſcience, and therefore they would not conſider any of his ways, which is a farther deſcription of the heart of man in a ſtate of Nature.

Hence Note, That which a natural man knoweth of the will of God, he will not conſider, unleſs it be to reject and turn from it.

I (ſaith Wiſdom, Prov. 1. 24, 25.) have ſtretched out my hand, (as a Teacher doth to his hearers or diſciples) and no man, (that is, no meer natural man) regarded, they ſet at nought my counſel, and would none of my reproof. Let me ſay what I would, they would at moſt but give me the hearing, they would not conſider it; though the light ſhined in upon them and they could not chuſe but ſee ſomething, yet they would not ſit down and rowl it in their thoughts, and work it upon their hearts, to find out the excellency of what they ſaw. It is a very great meaſure of ſinfulneſs not to know the ways of God, but not to conſider what we know, but lightly to paſs it by, that is a greater meaſure of ſinfulneſs.

Thirdly, comparing this aſſertion concerning wicked men, they would not conſider any of his ways, with their practice in the former part of the verſe, they turned back from God, and with the effect of it in the verſe following, they made the cry of the poor to come up to him, &c.

Obſerve, The reaſon why men are ſo wicked, and act ſo wickedly, is, becauſe they mind not the Word of God.

They who conſider not the rule of the Word, are far both from righteouſneſs towards man, and holineſs towards God. If once a man through aſide the Word of God, where will he ſtay? He will neither abide in any ways of holineſs, nor will he abide in any ways of righteouſneſs; they cannot make conſcience of the ways of God, who will not conſider the ways of God. We have this clear character of a wicked man, (Pſal. 50.) he is one that will poſſibly take the covenant of God in his mouth, he will be talking of it, his tongue may be tipt with it, but (verſ. 17.) he hateth inſtruction, and caſteth the words of God behind his back. He that would conſider a thing, holds it before his eye, and keeps it, as much as he can in ſight; therefore the Lord, when he would aſſure Zion how much he did conſider her caſe, though ſhe had ſaid a little before, God hath forſaken me, and my God hath forgotten me, yet preſently the Lord ſaith, (Iſa. 49. 15, 16.) Can a woman forget her ſucking child, that ſhe ſhould not have compaſſion on the ſon of her womb? Yea, they may, yet will not I forget thee; (what follows?) Behold I have graven thee upon the Palms of my hands, thy walls are continually before me. As if the Lord had ſaid, you may be ſure I will conſider your caſe, for I have you here pourtrayed upon the palms of my hands, and am always viewing your walls, either as ruin'd and demoliſhed, to move me to pity, or in that ſtrong and beautiful model according to which I purpoſe to raiſe them up again, or rebuild them. Thus I ſay, both God and man intending to conſider any thing, have it always before them, but what a man hath no mind to conſider, he caſts it behind his back; thou caſteſt my words behind thy back, ſaith God to the hypocrite, and when once the hypocrite hath got the word behind him, then he is ready for any wickedneſs (verſ. 18, 19, 20.) When thou ſaweſt a thief, thou conſentedſt with him, and haſt been partaker with the adulterer, &c. Whence was all this? he had caſt the word behind his back. It is David's queſtion, (Pſal. 119. 6.) Wherewithal ſhall a young man cleanſe his way? The anſwer is, By taking heed thereto according to thy word; that is, by continual eying of the word, and of his way, and by comparing them together. They that will make right work, muſt be always eying the rule; if once you lay by the rule, you will make but crooked, or bungling work: When the rule of righteouſneſs is laid by, righteouſneſs is laid by too. Theſe mighty men of whom Elihu ſpeaketh would not conſider any the holy ways of God, and you ſee what ill-favour'd work they made, what foul ways they walked in.

Fourthly, The Text doth not ſay they would not conſider ſome, or ſuch and ſuch of his ways, but any of his ways.

Hence Note, A wicked man liketh, delighteth in, or loveth no one way of God better or more than another.

He is as much out with all as with any, they are all alike to him, that is, he likes none of them; they would not conſider any of his ways. He that hateth one truth of God, hateth all truth, though poſſibly his hatred is not called out or acted againſt ſome truths; and he that hateth one law of God, hateth all his laws, though poſſibly his luſts are not drawn out againſt ſome of them. The reaſon why the Apoſtle James ſaith, (Chap. 2. 10.) Whoſoever ſhall keep the whole Law, and yet offend in one point, is guilty of all, is, becauſe if a man hath a mind to ſin againſt one branch of the law, that evil principle will carry him to ſin againſt any branch of it: If he be not ſtopt from without, he finds no ſtop within againſt the worſt of ſins, as it is a ſin.

Fifthly, We tranſlate any, the Original word is [all] his ways, which imports a refuſing of every one of his ways; there are ſeveral Scriptures of a like ſenſe (Pſal. 103. 1, 2.) O praiſe the Lord, and forget not all his benefits; that is, forget not any one of his benefits; not that a man ſhall be excuſed, though he forget many of the benefits of God, or half his benefits, if ſo be he forget not all, or remember ſome: but when that Scripture ſaith, forget not all his benefits, the meaning is, forget not any one at all. Thus here, they conſidered not all his ways, (that's the letter of the Text, and ſo Mr. Broughton tranſlates,) that is, none of them. Taking that reading, and the Scripture ſenſe given of it, it gives us this uſeful Obſervation.

That unleſs all the ways of God be conſidered and obeyed, there is not any one of them conſidered or obeyed.

God will not be obeyed by halves; he muſt have entire obedience, univerſal obedience, or he owneth none; there is a band or tye between all the commandments of God, and unleſs you keep them all, you break them all; they that ſubmit not to all, ſubmit to none of his laws. It is not enough for a man to ſay he is no adulterer, if he be a thief, or to ſay he is not a murderer, if he bears falſe witneſs. He that doth the one in act, doth the other in his heart; nothing hinders him but the abſence of a temptation, or of an opportunity, the Law doth not.

Further, [they] would not conſider any of his ways. Who were they? No fools I dare ſay, either in their own opinion, or in the opinion of men. Doubtleſs thoſe mighty men ſpoken of by Elihu, were worldly wiſe men; they were the mighty, the great men of the world, and they are commonly very conſidering men, as well as very conſiderable men; they are knowing men, as well as men much known; they are men of counſel, and ſit in council to debate difficult matters, and of greateſt outward concernment; theſe things they could conſider exactly, and weigh them to a grain; but they would not conſider any of God's ways.

Hence Note, There is nothing ſo little regarded by ungodly men, as the ways of God are.

Though they have wiſdom and ability to underſtand and conſider earthly things, yet they will beſtow none of it upon the things of heaven. Chriſt rebuked Martha when he ſaw her ſo buſie about worldly buſineſs, (Luke 10. 41.) Martha, Martha, thou art careful and troubled about many things, one thing is needful; Martha had ſome care about the one thing needful, but becauſe not ſo much as ſhe ſhould, Chriſt gave her a gracious check and reproof for it: How much more may Chriſt come and rebuke the men of the world, ye are careful about many things, ye are wiſe conſidering men about your profits and preferments, thoſe ye can think of all night long; but there is one thing needful, my ways, my word, my commandments are to be conſidered, what account can ye give of or concerning them?

Farther, this non-conſideration of the ways of God is brought as a charge, as a high charge againſt thoſe mighty men; not only were they bad men who did not conſider the ways of God, but this was a part, yea I may ſay the whole of their badneſs, that they did not conſider the ways of God.

Hence Note, Not to conſider the ways of God, is in it ſelf a very great ſin.

The omiſſion, or non-performance of what is good, is as ſinful as the commiſſion or doing of that which is evil. Not to do good is to do evil; eſpecially when it is the not doing of ſuch a good duty as opens a way to the doing of all evil. Should we ſuppoſe a man not chargeable with the breaking of any commandment of God, yet if we could charge him that he did not conſider the commandments of God, this were the breaking of all the commandments. For as they are all to be conſidered that we may keep them, ſo if we conſider them not, we cannot keep them. 'Tis the deſcription of a godly man, (Pſal. 1. 2.) His delight is in the Law of the Lord, and in his Law doth he meditate day and night. Meditation is nothing elſe but conſideration. A godly man meditates or conſiders day and night what the Law or Word of God is; not that he thinks of nothing elſe but the Law of God day and night, for then he muſt throw off his Calling; but the meaning is this, he is very ſedulous and watchful of all opportunities both night and day, to get and keep his heart up in holy meditation; and why is he ſo much in holy meditation? 'Tis ſurely, that he may be much, yea always in holy action; and when it may be ſaid of a man, that his meditation is not in the Law of God, neither day nor night, or that he never conſiders the ways of God, this is an undeniable evidence that he neither keeps in the way, or obſerves any one line or letter of the Law at any time. It is our ſin, and that no ſmall one, not to conſider our own ways, how much more is it ſinful not to conſider the ways of God! To conſider our own ways, is a great part of our work: If we conſider not our own ways, they will ſoon be crooked ways. The Prophet adviſeth the Jews, (Hag. 1. 5.) Conſider your ways; the Text is, Set your heart upon your ways; that is, ponder your ways; as if he had ſaid, the reaſon why your feet are ſo often in bad ways, is, becauſe your hearts are ſo ſeldom upon your ways. Now, if not to conſider our own ways be ſo ſinful, and ſubjects us to every ſin, then much more is it ſinful not to conſider the ways, the word and truths of God, and much more doth the neglect of this lead or lay us open and obnoxious to every ſin. This neglect is not only a ſpecial ſin in it ſelf, and an effect of ſin, but the general cauſe of all other ſins: What ſin is not, or may not be found in the ways of thoſe men, who conſider not the ways of God?

Laſtly Obſerve, Sin makes men ſtupid, and transforms them into fools.

He that is not a conſidering man, is a weak and a fooliſh man; every wiſe man is a conſidering man; and the more a man is verſed in conſideration, the more wiſe he is, and the wiſer he grows. The wicked man is often called a fool in Scripture, and he deſerves no better a title; when he is called ſo, he is both ſerved and called in his kind (Pſal. 14. 1.) The fool hath ſaid in his heart, there is no God. The thoughts of the heart are the ſayings of the heart; and ſin hath made a wicked man ſo much a fool, that as he knows not how to ſay any thing of God, which is honourable, with his tongue, ſo all that his heart can ſay, that is, think of God, is, that God is not; which as it is the higheſt blaſphemy, ſo the deepeſt piece of folly and irrationality that ever was hatcht in the heart of man. Sin makes dull heads, it ſtupifies the ſoul; ſinners conſider not that, at any time, which is their intereſt as much as their duty to conſider of at all times, the ways of God, as taken for the ways wherein man ought to walk towards God.

Again, If we take the ways of God in the ſecond notion, for the ways wherein himſelf walks towards man, uſually called his works, or the ways of his providence.

Note, It is the mark of an ungodly man, not to conſider the works and providences of God, how God walketh towards him, or what he doth in the world.

(Iſa. 1. 3.) I have nouriſhed and brought up children, that is, I have done for my people as a father for his children; but what follows? My people doth not know, Iſrael doth not conſider: They conſider not what I have done for them, as well as not what I have ſpoken to them; they conſider not how I have nouriſhed and brought them up, as well as not how I have inſtructed and given them counſel; and from this neglect God infers, (verſ. 4.) Ah ſinful Nation, a people laden with iniquity, a ſeed of evil doers, &c. they quickly proceed to the doing of all evil againſt God, who conſider not of the good which God doth or hath done to them. Read this ſin, the not conſidering of the works of God, with the ſinfulneſs of all the works of thoſe unconſidering men, (Pſal. 28. 4, 5. Iſa. 5. 11, 12.) The Scripture makes frequent mention how extreamly ill the Lord takes it at the hands of men, when his works are not conſidered by them, when they regard not the operation of his hands. Indeed God doth much in the world, he walketh in many dark and hidden ways, which though we conſider, we cannot fully underſtand; Thy way (ſaith Aſaph, Pſal 77. 19.) is in the ſea, and thy path in the great waters, and thy footſteps are not known. God hath many inviſible works both of mercy and of judgment; yet we ſhould be, though not curiouſly, yet ſeriouſly ſearching, as much as poſſibly we can, even into thoſe ways of God which are unſearchable; we ſhould conſider, though we cannot ſearch them out. But as for thoſe works of God that are viſible and plain, which are written as it were with the beams of the Sun, which are ſo plain and obvious, that he who runs may read them, to neglect the conſideration of theſe, or lightly to paſs them by, how ſinful is it! Thoſe works of God which are moſt plain, have wonders in them, if we could find them out. As in the plaineſt Text of Scripture there is a world of holineſs and ſpiritualneſs; and if we in prayer and dependance upon God did ſit down and conſider it, we might behold much more of thoſe wonders than yet appear to us: It may be at once reading or looking we ſee little or nothing, as Elijah's ſervant, when he went once, he ſaw nothing, therefore he was commanded to look ſeven times; What now, ſaith the Prophet? O now I ſee a cloud riſing like a mans hand; and by and by the whole ſurface of the heavens was covered with clouds. So you may look lightly upon a Scripture, and ſee nothing, and look again, and ſee little, but look ſeven times upon it, meditate often upon it, and then you ſhall ſee a light like the light of the Sun. 'Tis thus alſo with the works of God, we paſs many of them by as ſmall matters, but when throughly conſidered, there is a wonderful depth in them; now not to conſider thoſe ways of God wherein he is ſo viſible, and which are the actings and exerciſing of his power, goodneſs, wiſdom and faithfulneſs, this muſt needs be a very great ſin, (Iſa. 26. 11) Lord, when thy hand is lifted up, they will not ſee, (they take no notice of it, much leſs lay it to heart) but they ſhall ſee, (they ſhall be made to ſee one way or other,) and be aſhamed for their envy at the people, or (as the margin hath it,) towards thy people. As godly men ſee the hand of God, and are both confirmed and comforted for his mercy to his people, ſo wicked men ſhall ſee, and be both aſhamed and confounded, becauſe they both envyed the people of God that mercy, and oppoſed it. They who will not ſee the works of God to give him glory, ſhall ſee them to their own ſhame. God hath given us his works of Creation, that we ſhould conſider them daily, as David did (Pſal. 8. 3.) When I conſider thy heavens, the work of thy fingers, the Moon, and the Stars which thou haſt ordained; What is man! &c. How was the Pſalmiſt raviſht with that contemplation? And ſo may we, while we conſider the works of Providence, whether works of judgment, or works of mercy; whether vengeance upon the wicked, or deliverance for the godly.

Let us therefore ſet our ſelves to this ſoul-raviſhing, and God exalting work, the conſideration of the works of God: And we are the more engaged to do it, becauſe God hath fitted man, among all creatures in this lower world, (and he hath only fitted man) to give him glory by conſidering his works. The beaſts of the earth cannot glorifie God by conſidering his works: 'tis true, both they and the fowls of the air, with the fiſh of the ſea, according to their kind, praiſe God; but man only is fitted and furniſhed with an intellect or underſtanding faculty to conſider, and ſo to draw out from all the works of God, thoſe peculiar excellencies which make his Name glorious: Now, for man to leave ſuch a faculty unexerciſed and unacted, (as they who conſider not the works of God do) is not only a diſhonour to God, but a degradation of himſelf. As it is the priviledg and happineſs of a man to enjoy the benefit of the works of God, ſo it is his holineſs and his duty to conſider the beauty of them. And to all who brutiſhly lay by the works of God without conſideration, let me add this conſideration; God conſiders all your works or ways, and will not you conſider the works, the ways of God! Of this be ſure, whether you conſider the ways of God, his Word-ways, or Work ways (of this be ſure) God will conſider your ways, certainly he will; thoſe ways of yours which in themſelves are not worth the conſidering or looking upon, your ſinful ways, though they are ſo vile, ſo abominable, that if your ſelves did but look upon them and conſider them, you would be utterly aſhamed of them, yea though they are an abomination to God while he beholds them, yet he will behold and conſider them. The Lord who is of purer eyes than to behold any the leaſt iniquity, to approve it, will yet behold the greateſt of your iniquities, and your impureſt ways to conſider them. Thou (ſaith David, Pſal. 10. 14.) beholdeſt miſchief and ſpite, to requite it: God beholdeth the fouleſt dirtieſt ways of men, their ways of oppreſſion and unrighteouſneſs, their ways of intemperance and laſciviouſneſs, their ways of wrath and maliciouſneſs, at once to deteſt, detect and requite them. If the Lord thus conſidereth the ways of men, even theſe filthy and crooked ways of men; ſhould not men conſider the holy, the juſt and righteous ways of God? And that God conſiders all the ways, the worſt of ways of the ſons of men appears further in the next verſe.

Verſ. 28. So that they cauſe the cry of the poor to come up to him, and he heareth the cry of the afflicted.

If the ways of men come up to God, then ſurely God conſiders the ways of men, even their vile and baſe ways, their wicked and unworthy ways; how can he but conſider thoſe ways, the cry of which cometh up to him?

So that they cauſe the cry of the poor to come up to him.

Here Elihu expounds to us or gives us more particularly what thoſe ways of God were which thoſe men would not conſider, as alſo what the ſin of thoſe mighty ones was, which provoked God, to ſtrike them as wicked men in the open ſight of others. The ways of God which they would not conſider, were the ways of his righteouſneſs and juſtice, of his compaſſion to and care for the poor, they went quite croſs to thoſe ways of God. For they cauſed the cry of the poor to come up to him. But do ungodly men bring the cry of the poor up to God? Certainly they have no ſuch purpoſe, and therefore thoſe words, So that they cauſe the cry of the poor to come up unto him; note only a conſequent, of what thoſe men did, not the intent of thoſe men; they aimed at no ſuch thing by their oppreſſing the poor, as that God ſhould hear the cry of the poor, yea, they hoped the cry of the poor ſhould never come up to God. They would willingly have ſtopt the mouths of the poor, that they ſhould not have cryed to God, and preſumed the ears of God would be ſtopt againſt their cry, let them cry as long as they would: they do not ſay to the poor, go and appeal to God, go make your moan to God, (yet ſome have been thus impudently blaſphemous, when they have oppreſt the poor, to bid them, go cry to their God) but here we are to underſtand it as the iſſue of the oppreſſion, not as the deſire of the oppreſſors. Their cruel and unrighteous dealing with the poor (like that of Pharaoh with the Iſraelites) cauſed the cry of the poor to come up unto him.

Effectum hujus malitiæ affectatæ oſtendit. Aquin.

Further, Some render the Text, not as expreſſing (though ſuppoſing) the cry of the poor coming up to God, but as reflecting or turning back in ſad effects upon their oppreſſors; So that they cauſe the cry of the poor to come upon him; that is, upon every one of them, meaning the wicked themſelves; they cauſe the cry of the poor to come upon them, or pull down vengeance upon their own heads. Several learned Interpreters give that reading, taking the relative Him as a ſingular put for a plural diſtributively, upon him, that is, upon every one of them; taking alſo the cry of the poor by a metonymie of the effect, for that puniſhment which they deſerved by their oppreſſion, who cauſed the poor to cry. As if he had ſaid; By this their wickedneſs they draw down the wrath of God upon themſelves.

Inducendo ſuper eorum quemq; clamorem, tenuis, quum clamorem pauperis exaudit. Jun.

But I ſhall only purſue our reading, and give the ſenſe accordingly. They cauſe the cry of the poor to come unto [him] that is, unto God. The cry of the poor is their mournful cry, their pitiful lamenting cry; yet this cry may poſſibly be, not ſo much vocal as real, not ſo much what the poor did make formally or directly to God about their wrongs, but the very wrongs and evils which they ſuffered cryed to the righteous Judg of all the earth. Their affliction had a cry, a voice, a tongue, a thouſand tongues in it. They cauſe the cry

Of the poor.] The word properly ſignifieth thoſe who are exhauſted, and drawn dry; oppreſſors will ſqueeze and ſuck ſuch as they get into their power, till they have drawn out every drop; they will empty them from veſſel to veſſel, till they become empty veſſels, and then like empty veſſels the poor ſound moſt and make the greateſt cry. When oppreſſors have got all the money out of the purſes of the poor, when they have pull'd the bread out of their mouths, and even drawn the blood out of their veins, then they (poor ſouls!) ſound out and ſend up their cryes to purpoſe. So that they cauſe the cry of the poor to come up unto him.

Hence note, Firſt, One ſin makes way for another.

Turning back from God, brings in the non-conſideration of the word and works of God; the word and works of God, not being conſidered, brings in the works of unrighteouſneſs towards men, or oppreſſion of the poor. One ſin given way to, makes way for many more. No man knows where he ſhall end in doing evil, when once he begins to do evil. David having defiled the wife is led to murder of her husband. Peter having firſt diſowned or denied his Maſter, proceeded to forſwear him. If good men are thus hurried from ſin to ſin before they come to repentance, whither will ſin carry wicked men, who go on and on impenitently?

Secondly, Note, They are the worſt ſort of wicked who make poor men cry.

Oppreſſion is a ſin againſt the light and law of nature, as well as againſt the light and law of God; every ſin is the more ſinful, by how much it is committed againſt more light of any kind, or againſt more kinds of light; And thoſe ſins are extreamly high, which are committed againſt the loweſt and moſt common light, that of Nature. They who ſin againſt the light of grace, againſt the light of the Spirit, ſin (as the Prophet ſpeaks, Hoſ. 6.7.) like men, but they who ſin againſt the light of nature, ſin as if they were not ſo much as men but very beaſts, yea worſe than many beaſts, there being ſcarce any of them who (as oppreſſors do) devour thoſe of their own kind, though of ſome of them it be ſaid and experienced (eſpecially of the fiſhes in the Sea) that the greater devour the leſs, as the mighty men of whom Elihu ſpake, did the poor, cauſing their cry to come up unto God.

Thirdly, Note, Oppreſſion will quickly cauſe a Cry.

(Iſa. 5.7.) I looked for Judgment, but behold oppreſſion, and for righteouſneſs, and behold a cry; that is, the cry of the oppreſſed. As the act of oppreſſion is a crying ſin, ſo the effect of it is crying; Oppreſſion cryeth loud, though the oppreſſed ſhut their mouths in ſilence and ſay nothing, yet uſually the oppreſſed cannot forbear crying. The Apoſtle James (Chap. 5. 3.) ſchools the wicked rich men of the world with, a Go to now, weep and howl, &c. Your riches are corrupt, and your garments moth-eaten; Behold the hire of the labourers which have reaped down your fields, which is of you kept back by fraud, cryeth; and the crys of them which have reaped are entred into the ears of the Lord of Sabaoth. As the poor labourers cryed, ſo their hire that was detained cryed alſo. The loud cry both of the oppreſſed and of oppreſſion is often reported and recorded in Scripture, read (Exod. 2.23. Lam. 1. 17. Chap. 2. 18. Pſal. 86.14.) The oppreſſed who cry are in a ſad condition, but the condition of oppreſſors who make the poor cry is much more ſad; For, as the Text hath it,

The cry of the poor cometh up to God.

Though God ſhould not come down to that, yet that cometh up to God. And when it is ſaid the cry cometh up to him, and not he at the cry; This intimates the cry of oppreſſion, a very loud cry, that's a loud cry that aſcends up to heaven; Cities walled up to heaven, are high-walled Cities, and crys reaching up to heaven, are high-ſtrained crys. The breach of a commandment makes a great crack, eſpecially when it is ſuch a breach as makes the poor cry too. If a great houſe, or a Tower fall ſuddenly, what a noiſe doth it make? Certainly the unjuſt pulling down of any poor man, is like the fall of a great houſe, or of a tower, it makes a noiſe that reacheth up to heaven; he doth not ſpeak of God's coming down. When Cain had ſlain his brother Abel, the Lord ſaid (Gen. 4.10.) The voice of thy brothers blood cryeth unto me from the ground; and ſo the cry of Sodom came up to God, (Gen. 18.21.) The fall of a poor man makes a report as far as heaven. Among men the fall of Princes and mighty men, makes a huge noiſe, all the world is filled with the fall of a Prince, 'tis told every where, A great Prince is fallen. But I tell you the fall of a poor godly man, of the meaneſt of the ſervants of God, makes a greater cry than the fall of the greateſt Prince in the world who is not ſo. The fall of a poor man by the oppreſſion of the wicked, poſſibly is not heard a mile from the place where it was done on earth, yet it reacheth up to heaven; oppreſſion hath not only a voice, but a very loud voice. To wrong a rich man, who can bear the wrong and be a rich man ſtill, is a ſin which hath a voice in it; but the ſin which the Scripture ſaith hath a cry in it, is the oppreſſing of a poor man. There is no liberty given to wrong a rich man, and that would be conſidered; Some take a kind of liberty, if he be a rich man that they are to put a reckoning upon, they think they may do it ſomewhat largely, and ſay, he is able to bear it. But be the man never ſo rich and able to bear it, yet to wrong him is a ſin, and a ſin that God will take notice of to puniſh. And though he can bear the wrong done, yet the wrong-doer will hardly be able to bear it when he comes to reckon with God for it. Thus (I ſay) to wrong the rich offends God; but to wrong the poor cryeth to God; and as it followeth in the Text.

He heareth the cry of the afflicted.

Many cryes come up to God which he doth not hear, he doth not regard them, and 'tis poſſible for a poor man to cry to God and God not hear him, in the ſenſe here ſpoken of; Some poor men cry (as we ſay) before they are hurt; they cry rather out of diſcontent than want, they cry becauſe they have not what they deſire, not becauſe they have not what they need. God will not hear the cry of ſuch, though poor: but when a poor man is afflicted, when a poor man that is humbled (as the word here ſignifies) and laid low in his ſtate, is low alſo in ſpirit, and lowly in mind, God heareth the cry of ſuch a poor man. If a poor man have a proud ſpirit, or is humorous, God will not hear him, though he cry. The word here rendred, afflicted, ſignifies not only a man deſtitute of help, of ſtrength, of friends, of aſſiſtance, (ſuch is the reach and ſtrength of that word) but he is one of a ſubmitting patient ſpirit, or it noteth a man not only firſt, unable to reſiſt his oppreſſor, but, ſecondly, unwilling at leaſt not forward to make reſiſtance, but ſitting down by the loſs quietly, or poſſeſſing his ſoul in patience when he hath loſt all that he poſſeſſed by oppreſſion. The Lord hears the cry of this afflicted man; he will not reject his cry, nor ſtop his ears againſt it. And when Elihu ſaith, He heareth the cry of the afflicted, his meaning is, he yields or grants him the thing he cryes for.

Hence note, Firſt, God graciouſly hears the cry of humble oppreſſed ones.

Whoſoever cry to him upon juſt cauſe, being indeed oppreſt, though they are not godly, yet God will take notice of their cry; for he will right the oppreſſed as oppreſſed, and therefore the Jews had thoſe cautions (Exod. 22. 23. Deut. 24. 15.) not to wrong any ſervant or ſtranger, let him be who or whence he would, leſt he cry to me (ſaith God) and it be ſin to thee. But when any are not only oppreſt and ſuffer wrong, but are alſo godly, of humble and lowly ſpirits, they are heard much more; when it is not only a cry of nature, but a cry of grace; not only a complaining cry, but a praying cry, God will certainly hear, (Luke 18. 12.) Shall not God avenge his own elect that cry to him day and night? when it is not only a complaining cry that they are under oppreſſion, but a believing cry to be, or that they ſhall be delivered from oppreſſion, when it is a holy cry, the cry of the elect, God cannot but hear their cry. He heareth other cryes, he heareth the cry of the Ravens when they call upon him, and provides for them, much more will he hear the cry of Saints, the cry of believers, the cry of the humbled and humble.

Secondly, as hearing notes granting,

Obſerve, The cry of the oppreſſed brings vengeance upon oppreſſors.

Read Pſal. 12.6. Eccleſ. 10.26. Iſa. 33.1. Jer. 22.16. All theſe Scriptures teach this truth, that the cry of the oppreſſed brings vengeance on oppreſſors: Let the mighty remember, 'Tis dangerous medling with Gods poor; 'tis dangerous medling with any poor, but moſt dangerous medling with God's poor. Some will ſay, there is ſuch a great man, it is dangerous medling with him, and they are afraid to wrong him, they dare not do it; if ever (ſay they) he ſhould come to know it, he may break our backs, ſit on our skirts, and cruſh us with his power; but if they can get an underling, a man below them, they preſume there is no great danger in oppreſſing him; what can he do? if he bark, he cannot bite; if he hath a tongue, he hath no teeth; we can deal with him well enough. Thus, I ſay, men think it dangerous to wrong great men, but conclude they may do what they pleaſe with the poor, and thoſe that are underlings; but we ſhould more fear to wrong a poor man, than to wrong a rich man, though we ought not to do either; yet, I ſay, we ſhould more fear to wrong the poor than the rich, becauſe the poor are under the ſpecial protection of the great God; they are under more promiſes of protection than the great men of the world are. Therefore Solomon gives that ſerious caution, (Prov. 23. 10,11.) Enter not into the Vineyard of the fatherleſs; (do not oppreſs the poor fatherleſs,) for his avenger is mighty, and God will plead his cauſe for him. You think you may do any thing with the poor and fatherleſs; O ſaith wiſe Solomon, take heed, do not invade the heritage of the fatherleſs, (we are not to take the fatherleſs there in a ſtrict ſenſe, for thoſe whoſe parents are dead, but any that are poor and low, are fatherleſs, as the Prophet calls them, Hoſ. 14. 3.) In thee the fatherleſs findeth mercy; beware ſaith he how you deal with the fatherleſs, for his Redeemer is mighty: though he hath no might, yet he hath a mighty Redeemer, and he will plead his cauſe for him. Poſſibly the poor man cannot plead with thee, he cannot try it out with thee in Law, he cannot fee an Advocate, but God can and will be his Advocate. Therefore you that dare not wrong the mighty for fear they ſhould cruſh you, be much more afraid to wrong the poor, for God is their avenger, and how eaſily can he cruſh you?

Laſtly, This is matter of comfort to the godly poor, to the humble and meek; they may look for help from God in all their afflictions and hard uſages they meet with in this world from the hands of men; when men even eat them up as bread, and ride over their heads as if they were but dirt, they may appeal to heaven and there have audience, they may refer their cauſe to God and be righted, He that is their Redeemer is mighty, and he will plead their cauſe; The expectations of the poor ſhall not periſh for ever, (Pſal. 9. 18.) that is, it ſhall never periſh.

VERS. 29.

When he giveth quietneſs, who can make trouble? and when he hideth his face, who then can behold him? whether it be done againſt a Nation, or againſt a man only.

THis verſe is an argument or proof of what Elihu affirmed in the former, that, God heareth the cry of the poor: He doubtleſs heareth the cry of the poor, when he ſtops or takes away the cry of the poor, when he ſets the poor in a quiet ſtate, or ſettles them in peace, in ſuch a peace, as their proud and wrathful oppreſſors ſhall not be able to diſturb. Thus the Lord dealeth graciouſly in reference both to perſons, and Nations, that cry unto him; and that's an undeniable argument, that he heareth their cry, the cry of diſtreſſed perſons, the cry of diſtreſſed Nations.

Verſ. 29. When he giveth quietneſs, who then can make trouble? and when he hideth his face, who then can behold him? whether it be done againſt a Nation, or againſt a man only.

The firſt part of the ſentence, rendred, When he giveth quietneſs, is but one word in the Hebrew, we had it before (Chap. 3.13.) where Job ſuppoſeth if he had died in his infancy, then ſhould he have been ſtill, and been quiet, he ſhould have ſlept, and been at reſt. The grave is a ſilent and quiet abiding place, the dead are quitted of all worldly unquietneſs. And at the 26. verſe of the ſame Chapter, Job ſaith, I was not in ſafety, neither was I quiet: (that is, ſecure) yet trouble came. So then, as this word notes, the quietneſs of the dead who have no ſenſe of trouble, ſo it notes ſuch a quietneſs of the living as hath no fear of trouble. When he giveth quietneſs, or as Maſter Broughton tranſlates, when he maketh reſt, who, &c. The Italian verſion is, if he ſendeth home in peace, &c. As if it had been ſaid, If he by his ſoveraign ſentence freeth out of ſlavery and oppreſſion, as he did the children of Iſrael out of the bondage of Egypt, &c. If he commandeth reſt and quiet, then, as it followeth,

Quievit in Hiphil, quieſcere fecit.

Who can make trouble?] Or, as Maſter Broughton renders, who can diſturb? Who can diſeaſe thoſe to whom God gives eaſe, or oppreſs thoſe to whom God gives protection? The words bear the ſignification of a divine challenge, like that, (Rom 8.31.) If God be for us, who can be againſt us? or like that (verſ. 34.) Who ſhall lay any thing to the charge of Gods elect? Let us ſee the man, or the devil, that can charge the elect and prevail. Such is the Emphaſis of the preſent Text, When he giveth quietneſs, who then can make trouble? Where is the man, high or low, great or ſmall that can do it?

Further, the word which we tranſlate make trouble, hath a threefold eminent ſignification in Scripture.

Firſt, It ſignifieth to be wicked, or to do wickedly; thus we read it at the 12. verſe of this Chapter, Surely God will not do wickedly. He that is altogether holy and righteous, doth all things holily and righteouſly. The ſame word ſignifieth to do wickedly, and to make trouble, becauſe to do wickedly bringeth trouble often upon others, always upon the doers.

Secondly, it ſignifieth to condemn; thus we tranſlate, at the 17. verſe of this Chapter, Wilt thou condemn him (as one that hath done wickedly) who is moſt juſt? The ſame word may well ſignifie to do wickedly, and to condemn, becauſe they who do ſo, are worthy to be condemned. In this ſenſe alſo we tranſlate it, in that famous Propheſie of Chriſt, (Iſa. 50. 9.) He is near that juſtifieth me, who ſhall condemn me? or make me wicked and unrighteous. Thus ſome render the mind of Elihu in this place, if he giveth peace or quietneſs, who can condemn?

Ipſo enim concedente pacem, quis eſt qui condemnat. Vulg.

Thirdly, The word ſignifieth, as we render, to trouble, moleſt, or vex; ſo we tranſlate (1 *Sam.*14.47.) where 'tis ſaid of Saul, that he fought againſt all his enemies on every ſide, againſt Moab, and againſt the children of Ammon, and againſt Edom, and againſt the Kings of Zobah, and againſt the Philiſtines; and whither ſoever he turned himſelf, he vexed, or troubled them. The word may be taken in theſe three ſignifications with a ſubſerviency one to another; for he that is wicked, or doth wickedly, deſerveth to be condemned, or men are condemned becauſe they do wickedly: and he that is condemned by a righteous ſentence is puniſhed, and cannot but be troubled; a legal ſentence of condemnation, brings a legal penalty upon the perſon condemned; we tranſlate clearly to the ſenſe of the Text, who can make trouble, when God giveth quietneſs? for here the word is not oppoſed to well doing, or acquitting, but to quieting and pacifying; when he giveth quietneſs, who can make trouble?

And when he hideth his face, who then can behold him?

The face of God, by a well known Hebraiſm (very frequent in Scripture) ſignifieth the favour of God; Maſter Broughton reads, when he hideth favour. The favour which we bear to others is moſt viſible in the face, and therefore the face may well ſignifie favour. David over looking all the good things of this world, prayed for a good look from God in this expreſſion, (Pſal. 4. 6.) There be many that ſay, who will ſhew us any good? Lord, lift thou up the light of thy countenance (or of thy face) upon us: that is, ſhew us favour, or be favourable to us. And as the greateſt good of Saints in this world, ſo all the good of the next world is comprehended in this one word (Pſal. 16. 11.) In thy preſence (the Text is, in thy face, that is, in the full enjoyment of thy benign and gracious preſence) is fulneſs of joy. In like ſenſe the word is uſed Pſal. 21. 6. Pſal. 67. 1. So then, to hide the face, is to withdraw favour, and kindneſs, love, and reſpect; more diſtinctly, this phraſe of hiding the face, hath a threefold importance, or may hold out theſe three things.

Firſt, a diſtaſte either againſt perſons or things; we turn away our face from him, or that which we do not like, or is diſpleaſing to us. The hiding of God's face is a manifeſtation of his diſpleaſure; In a little wrath I hid my face from thee for a moment, ſaith God to the Church, (Iſa. 54. 8.) This form of ſpeaking is borrowed from their uſage or practice, who refuſe to admit into their preſence, or ſo much as look upon ſuch, whom they either really hate, or would ſeem at leaſt to be much diſpleaſed with; As David gave command concerning Abſalom (2 Sam. 14. 24.) Let him turn to his own houſe, and let him not ſee my face. When God withdraweth the wonted expreſſions of his love and kindneſs from a perſon or a people; then (according to Scripture ſenſe and language, he is ſaid to hide his face from them, Deut. 30. 20. Pſal. 30. 7.)

Secondly, The hiding of God's face, notes a refuſal to help thoſe who in ſtraits cry to him for relief and deliverance: For if we will not give a man our eye, we will hardly give him our hand; if we will not ſo much as look upon him, we will hardly aſſiſt him. When God hides his face, 'tis as much as his denial of ſuccour; Thus David bemoaned himſelf, (*Pſal.*13.1.) Why hideſt thou thy face? that is, Lord, why withdraweſt thou thy help from me? That he was ſenſible of ſuch withdraws, is plain by the prayer which he made, (verſ. 3.) Conſider, and hear me, O Lord my God; and by the reaſon of it given (verſ. 4.) Leſt mine enemies ſay, I have prevailed againſt him. We find David deprecating the hiding of God's face upon the ſame ground, (Pſal. 44. 24. Pſal. 69. 17.) The Prophet is very expreſs in this point, (Iſa. 59. 1, 2.) The Lords hand is not ſhortned that it cannot ſave, neither his ear heavy that it cannot hear; but your iniquities have ſeparated between you and your God, and your ſins have hid his face from you, that he will not hear: that is, as he diſtaſteth, and is diſpleaſed with you, ſo he denyeth you his uſual help and aſſiſtance, becauſe ye have greatly ſinned againſt him.

Thirdly, The hiding of God's face, notes not only ſome diſtaſte, and a denyal of help; but a total ſlight, or refuſal of any care concerning us, (Iſa. 40. 27.) Why ſayeſt thou, O Jacob, and ſpeakeſt, O Iſrael, my way is hid from the Lord, and my judgment is paſſed over from my God; that is, Why ſayeſt thou, the Lord takes no care at all of me, and in that ſenſe Job ſpake, (Chap. 24. 1.) Why ſeeing times are not hidden from the Almighty, do they that know him not, ſee his days? that is, why ſeeing God doth not neglect times, and ſeaſons, and how things go in the world, (there time is put for things done in time, why (I ſay) ſeeing God hath not caſt off the care of the things of this world) is it thus with me? Why am I as a man forlorn, and utterly caſt off? We may expound Elihu in all or any of theſe ſenſes; when he hideth his face, or withdraweth his favour, that is, when God is diſpleaſed and refuſeth to help, when God throweth up the care of a mans perſon, or condition, it cannot but go and be ill enough with him; for as it followeth,

Who then can behold him?] The face of God as taken for his eſſential being, cannot at all be ſeen, nor can we at all behold him; There ſhall no man (ſaith the Lord, Exod. 33. 20.) ſee my face, and live; But, as the face of God is taken for any manifeſtation of his being, whether in wrath or in love, in judgment or in mercy, ſo it may be ſeen: Now when God hideth his face, that is, his favour, and will not give out any pleaſing manifeſtations of himſelf, who can behold him? that is, who can behold him with comfort? who can ſtand before an angry God? or abide his preſence? As the gracious preſence of God is the ſweeteſt, ſo the wrathful preſence of God is the moſt bitter thing in the world. When he hideth his face, who can behold him?

Some expound thus; if God will not ſhew his face, if he is not pleaſed to reveal himſelf, no man can know, or ſee any thing of him; that's a truth. We can know no more of God, than himſelf will reveal of himſelf to us; 'tis in his light (Pſal. 36. 9.) that is, in the light which he cauſeth to ſhine from himſelf, that we ſee light, or what and who himſelf is, who is light, and in whom there is no darkneſs at all. If God will hide his power, or his wiſdom, or his truth, or his mercy from us, who can ſee any thing of them? though all theſe perfections be always more glorious in him than the beams of the Sun, yet unleſs God ſhew them us, we cannot perceive them. We ſee the light of God in God's light; if God hath a mind to conceal himſelf, or draweth (as it were) a curtain between the creature and himſelf, who can behold him? we cannot by any ſtudy, or skill, or art, or endeavour of ours come to any ſight or knowledg of God, further than himſelf makes himſelf known. This expoſition is both true and uſeful; yet I conceive, when Elihu ſaith, Who then can behold him? his meaning rather points at theſe two things.

Firſt, Who can have any comfortable enjoyment of him; to behold a man whoſe diſpleaſure we ſuſpected, and find acceptance and freedom with him, is compared to our beholding the face of God. I have ſeen thy face as though I had ſeen the face of God, and thou waſt pleaſed with me, ſaid Jacob to Eſau (Gen. 33. 10.) when his brother treated him ſo lovingly contrary to his expectation, he looked upon it as an evidence of the favour of God to him. Or Jacob being much affected with the countenance and kindneſs of Eſau, compared his face to the face of God, becauſe in his reconciled face he ſaw (as it were) the face of God ſmiling upon him. This was David's argument, that God favoured him (Pſal. 41. 11.) becauſe his enemies did not triumph over him; much more is it an argument of God's favour, when they ſpeak and act friendly towards us, or when we behold their face and are accepted. Joſeph threatned his brethren, ye ſhall not ſee my face (or behold me) except your brother be with you (Gen. 43. 3.) if you come without him, either I will not admit you at all into my preſence, or I will look ſowrly upon you. Thus to behold God, is to ſee his face (as 'tis ſaid (Chap. 33. 26.) the repenting ſick man ſhould) with joy.

Secondly, Who can have any confidence in him, or boldneſs with him; David ſpeaking of godly and upright men, ſaith (Pſal. 34. 5.) They looked (or, ſhall look) unto him, and were lightned, and their faces were not aſhamed; that is, they beheld God or came to him, with much aſſurance of his favour. Some dare not ſo much as look another in the face, for ſhame or fear; but when we look a man in the face, it ſheweth we have either confidence in him, and freedom with him, or courage enough againſt him. Now, if God hide his pleaſed face, or withdraw his favour, who can behold him confidently, or come to him with hopes to ſpeed. Fierce Abner ſaid to Aſahel (2 Sam. 2. 22.) Turn thee aſide from following me, wherefore ſhould I ſmite thee to the ground (I could eaſily do it, and he did it preſently) how then ſhould I hold up my face to Joab thy brother? As if he had ſaid, I can have no confidence to come to Joab, thy General, if I ſhould kill thee. Guilt of evil done to others, draws a jealouſie that others will do evil to us, eſpecially they who are nearly concern'd in the evil which we have done; we cannot hold up our face to or behold them with expectation of acceptance and favour, to whoſe near relations we have been unkind or injurious. Thus, If God hide his face, who can behold him? either with confidence or with comfort.

Some refer the relative him (who can behold him?) to man, not to God; as if the meaning of Elihu were this; if God hide his face from any man, all men will hide their faces from him too; no man will look kindly upon ſuch a deſerted perſon, or give him a good look; he ſhall have but frowns from men, from whom God withdraweth his favour; that's a truth; He that is out with God cannot keep in long with men. Uſually all ſorts diſown him that is forlorn and forſaken of God, As when a mans ways pleaſe God (becauſe then God is pleaſed with him) his enemies ſhall be at peace with him (Prov. 16. 7.) ſo when God is diſpleaſed with a man, his very beſt friends ſhall turn enemies to him. Yet I conceive the Text carrieth it rather the other way, referring to God himſelf; If God hide his face, who can behold him? that is, who can confidently behold God, or draw near to him with comfort? And ſo it generally comes to paſs, or thus it is,

Quis faciem ei exhibebit, à quo deus vultum averterit. Druſ.

Whether it be done againſt a nation, or againſt a man only.

As if Elihu had ſaid; What I have affirmed, that, when God giveth quietneſs, no man can make trouble, or when he hideth his face no man can behold him, is appliable to whole nations, as well as to particular perſons. This is an extenſive truth, a truth of large concernment, and therefore a truth of neceſſary and important conſideration. That which may be any mans or all mens caſe, ſhould be ſtudied by every man.

Whether it be done againſt a nation, &c.] The particle which we render againſt, ſignifieth alſo for. We find it ſo tranſlated Pſal. 32. 6. and at the 36. verſe of this Chapter. Now, to do a thing for a nation or for a perſon, notes the doing of it with reſpect to or in favour of either. Thus we commonly ſpeak in our language, pray do ſuch or ſuch a thing for me. To this ſenſe ſome render here, whether it be done for a nation, or for a man only. So Mr. Broughton, whether it be done for a nation, or for an earthly man alone. But, whether we read for, or againſt, the general truth is the ſame. The word and power of God in ſending good or evil upon nations or perſons, in acting for or againſt them, is uncontroulable and irreſiſtible.

Further, to clear the Text, that word in the cloſe of the verſe, rendred only, ſignifieth, ſometimes together (Ezra 4. 3.) ſometimes alike (Pſal. 34. 15.) and ſometimes as we underſtand it alone, or only, whether it be done againſt a nation or a man together, or againſt a man only or alone, the matter is alike or the ſame to God. Many or one make a great difference among men in any matter, but they make no difference with God, he can deal with whole nations (in ways of Judgment or mercy) as well as with ſingle perſons; yet becauſe of the oppoſition which the Text makes between one man and a nation, it is moſt ſutable to tranſlate it either only or alike not together.

Thus we ſee, how the Spirit of God by Elihu hath made a double application of the former part of the Text (when he giveth quietneſs, who can make trouble, &c.) in this latter, firſt, to a nation; ſecondly, to a perſon. If the Text were not thus expreſt, it might be thus expounded and improved without any ſtrein at all to it. But foraſmuch as the Spirit of God hath told us diſtinctly, that this great truth concerns nations as well as perſons, therefore we have a clear ground (beſides the great uſefulneſs of it) to ſpeak to the words in both their references. And this preſent memorable day (as alſo their native order) leads me ſpecially to ſpeak of them, firſt, under a National conſideration.

This Lecture was Preached upon the Fifth of November, 1658.

When he giveth quietneſs to a nation, who can make trouble or diſturb the peace of it? And the Text may well reſpect that national bleſſing, peace, becauſe the word tranſlated giveth quietneſs, ſignifies ſuch quietneſs primarily, as is oppoſite unto war, ſedition and tumult in a nation (Joſh. 11. 23.) And the land reſted from war, it is this word, ſo. (Judg. 3. 11.) The land had reſt forty years. (Judg. 3. 30.) And the land had reſt fourſcore years. (2 Chron. 14. 1.) In his days the land was quiet ten years. (Zech. 1. 11.) And behold all the earth ſitteth ſtill, and is at reſt; in all theſe places we have the word here rendred quietneſs, in oppoſition to war; who knows not how great an unquietneſs war makes whereſoever it comes? and by a like analogy, the word is ſometimes rendred to be ſilent. War is full of clamour (Iſa. 9. 5.) Every battel of the warrier is with confuſed noiſe. Not only is it ſo in ſome battels, but (ſaith that Scripture) 'tis ſo in all battels, Every battel of the warrier is with confuſed noiſe. What a noiſe is there in an Army, eſpecially when joyning battel with another Army? what beating of drums? what ſounding of trumpets? what neighing of horſes? what claſhing of armour? what groanings of the wounded? When God gives quietneſs or peace, there is none of this noiſe, none of this confuſed noiſe of the warrier. Hannah ſaith in her ſong (1 Sam. 2. 9.) The wicked ſhall be ſilent in darkneſs; that is, either they ſhall be deſtroyed and thruſt into their graves, where there's nothing but rottenneſs and ſtench, darkneſs and ſilence; or they ſhall be ſo affrighted and confounded with the horror and darkneſs of thoſe miſeries which ſhall come upon them while they live, that they ſhall not have a word to ſay, the mouth of iniquity ſhall be ſtopt. In this manner the wicked are ſilent in darkneſs; but the Lord can make his people ſilent in light, that is, he can give ſuch quietneſs as ſhall at once ſilence the noiſe of war and all their own complaints. When he giveth quietneſs (this bleſſed ſilence to nations) who then can make trouble?

Hence obſerve, Firſt, The quietneſs or peace of nations is the peculiar gift of God.

Whoſoever hath or enjoyeth quietneſs, 'tis God's work, but moſt eminently when nations enjoy it. Of national quietneſs the Lord ſpake by his Prophet (Iſa. 45. 7.) I form the light, &c. I make peace, I the Lord do all theſe things. As natural ſo civil light is of God's forming; as ſpiritual, ſo temporal peace is of God's making. And the Church was confident he would be their peace-maker (Iſa. 26. 12.) Lord thou wilt ordain peace for us. Some read it as a prayer, Lord do thou ordain (or command) peace for us; we as a profeſſion of their faith, and hopeful, if not full aſſurance that the Lord would ordain peace for them. The Lord gives out an order, or makes an ordinance in heaven, when he pleaſeth for the peace both of Churches and Nations here on earth. And the Church there had this good ground of their aſſurance, that he would do it, even their former experiences of his great power and goodneſs in doing much for them, as it followeth, for thou haſt wrought all our works for us; As if they had ſaid, Lord thoſe gracious preſervations which thou haſt heretofore given us in trouble, and deliverances out of trouble, ſtrengthen our faith both in praying that thou wouldſt, and in believing that thou wilt, now at this pinch ordain peace for us. To do ſo is a mighty and a merciful work of God, and we may conſider it two ways.

Firſt, As the giving of quietneſs to a nation is the reſtoring of peace, o- the ſetling of them in a quiet ſtate, after they have been torn and troubled with wars, and toſſed with continual tempeſts of trouble (poſſibly) for many years together. To bring peace out of war, and quietneſs out of unſetledneſs, is a work worthy of God. (Pſal. 46. 9.) He maketh wars to ceaſe to the ends of the earth; that is, all the world over. The end or ceaſing of war is quietneſs. And to aſſure us that the Lord can make an end of wars, the Pſalmiſt in that place ſheweth us the Lord ſpoiling all the implements, or inſtruments of war, He breaketh the bow, and cuts the ſpear aſunder, he burneth the chariots in the fire; Here are three great inſtruments of war, the bow, the ſpear, the chariot, all which are ſometimes comprehended under that one word the ſword, which is the moſt known and univerſal inſtrument of war. Now, when neither ſword, nor bow, nor ſpear, nor chariot, are to be had, we need not fear war. And therefore that great promiſe of peace runs in this tenour (Mic. 4. 2.) They ſhall beat their ſwords into plough-ſhares, and their ſpears into pruning hooks (then preſently followeth) nation ſhall not lift up a ſword, againſt nation, neither ſhall they learn war any more; There muſt needs be peace when the art of war is laid by as uſeleſs, and ſhall be learned no more. That will be a bleſſed time indeed when the art military ſhall be out of date, and (being it ſelf the greateſt interrupter of learning) ſhall be learned no more. When Souldiers ſhall turn Husbandmen and Vine-dreſſers, beating their ſwords into plough-ſhares, and their ſpears into pruning hooks, then we ſhall have peace, and put away the remoteſt fears of war. When a man caſteth away his ſword, we may very well conclude he intends to be quiet. Thus the Lord gives quietneſs, to nations, which have been engaged in war, by cauſing wars to ceaſe.

Secondly, He gives quietneſs to nations by continuing their peace, when wars are ceaſed; for unleſs the Lord give a check to the luſts and paſſions, to the wrath and rage of men, plough-ſhares are quickly turned into ſwords, and pruning hooks into ſpears. To preſerve peace is the Lords work, as much as to give peace. It requires the ſame or as great a power to keep our peace as to make it; to keep it out of the hand of the ſword, as to get it out of the hand of the ſword. When the King of Aſſyria threatned Jeruſalem with a ſiege, the Lord preſerved their peace, and ſent Hezekiah word (Iſa. 37. 33.) He ſhall not come into this City, nor ſhoot an arrow there, nor come before it with ſhields, nor caſt a bank againſt it, for I will defend this City to ſave it. The continuance of peace, and quietneſs, is a continual giving of it. Wars return after peace, as clouds return after rain, unleſs the Lord prevent and forbid them.

Non minor eſt virtus quam quærere, parta tueri.

And have not we of this nation reaſon to acknowledg this double mercy?

Firſt, Was not the end of our late unnatural wars, the gift of God? was it not he that made our troubles to ceaſe from one end of the nation to the other, yea throughout the three nations? If the Lord had not given the ſword a check, or counter-mand, if the Lord had not called in the commiſſion which he once gave the ſword, it had been devouring fleſh, and drinking blood to this very day. We read (as it were) a dialogue between the Prophet and himſelf concerning the ſword (Jer. 47. 6, 7.) O thou ſword of the Lord, (ſaid the Prophet being grieved for the ſlaughter and deſolation which the ſword had made even in a ſtrange land) how long will it be ere thou be quiet? put up thy ſelf into thy ſcabbard; reſt and be ſtill; Himſelf anſwers himſelf, how can it be quiet ſeeing the Lord hath given it a charge againſt Aſhkelon, and againſt the Sea-ſhore? there hath he appointed it. I ſpake to the ſword of quietneſs (ſaith the Prophet) But alas! how can it be quiet, how can that ſheath it ſelf in its ſcabbard, and not in the bowels of men, ſeeing the Lord hath given it a charge againſt Aſhkelon? As if he had ſaid, I ſee no intreaties can perſwade the ſword to reſt and quietneſs, till it hath fully executed the command of God, and done his work, though it be very bloody work, even the making of it ſelf drunk with blood. The Lord can make the ſword quiet; and it will hearken to no voice but his; if the Lord give a charge for the ſword to return into the ſheath, then it will, and if not, it will not. The ſword raged in theſe nations till the Lords work and will was done, and then that had done. And as we have reaſon to acknowledge, that the Lord hath commanded the Sword back into its ſheath, and given us peace out of war, ſo

Secondly, That he hath continued our peace ſince the war, When he giveth quietneſs, who then can make trouble?

Note, If God will give thoſe Nations quietneſs, where it was not, or continue it where it is, there is no power on Earth can ſtop, or interrupt it.

Who can make trouble, where he ordaineth peace? Balaam was forced to this confeſſion (when he would have troubled the people of Iſrael, and went from mountain to mountain to ſeek divination) I cannot curſe whom the Lord hath bleſſed, why not, ſaid Balak? I will give thee a good fee if thou wilt, no, ſaith Balaam (Numb.23.20.) The Lord hath bleſſed and I cannot reverſe it. We may put this query, When he giveth quietneſs, who can make trouble? Eſpecially to three ſorts of perſons.

Firſt, To politick men; ſome preſume they can trouble Nations and ſhake the ſureſt foundations of peace, with the engine of their brain, with their wit and ſubtlety. Yet this engine proves uſeleſs and unſerviceable to that end, where the Lord gives quietneſs. Ahitophel was as an Oracle of God for wiſdom in his time, and he ſtretcht his brains upon the tenters to make trouble, but God ſaid there ſhould be peace, and therefore (as David prayed) his wiſdom was turned into fooliſhneſs: There is no wiſdom (ſaith Solomon the wiſe, Prov. 21. 30.) nor underſtanding nor counſel againſt the Lord.

Secondly, We may put the queſtion (who can make trouble?) to mighty men; their power (the ſtrength of their Armies, and arm) cannot do it? Senacharib came with a mighty Hoſt to diſturb Iſrael, but he could not make trouble, he could not ſo much as ſhoot an Arrow againſt Jeruſalem, when the Lord forbad it.

Thirdly, We may put the queſtion (who can make trouble?) to magical men or ſorcerers; they cannot do it by their witcheries and enchantments, by their cloſeſt correſpondencies with the Devil himſelf. This was Balaam's concluſion, who (it ſeems) traded that way to do miſchief (*Numb.*23.23.) Surely there is no inchantment againſt Jacob, neither is there any divination againſt Iſrael: according to this time it ſhall be ſaid of Jacob, and of Iſrael, what hath God wrought? When God is reſolved to give a people quietneſs, though the Devil would, he cannot diſturb them. We need not fear witches or magicians (who correſpond with Hell to trouble the Earth) if God ſay there ſhall be peace; neither policy, nor power, nor witchery, can prevail againſt the purpoſe of God.

Then happy are that people, who have the Lord for their God (*Pſal.*144.15.) what can a people deſire more to make them happy, then to have the Lord for their God, if we conſider theſe two things?

Firſt, God hath a negative voice upon all the counſels of the wiſeſt men in the World; if he ſaith it ſhall not be, it cannot be, whoſoever ſaith this or that ſhall be (*Lam.*3.37.) Who is he that ſaith and it cometh to paſs, when the Lord commandeth it not? If he gives not his aſſent, nothing can paſs into a Law. The Lords ſingle negative ſtops the affirmative votes of all men joined in one.

Secondly, The Lords power is paramount; he can effect what he willeth, whether men will or no. That's plain in the Text. If he give quietneſs, who can make trouble?

To come a little nearer; this day, this fifth of November, which we ſolemnize in a thankful remembrance of our deliverance from the Gun-powder Treaſon, is a very great confirmation of this truth.

Who is there that was alive at that day (as ſeveral here I know were) yea who is there that hath heard of that day, of the ſubſtance and circumſtances, of the matter and manner of the Gun-powder Treaſon, but can tell us, that a Popiſh party at home with their correſpondents abroad, intended to make trouble in this Nation; ſurely there was a purpoſe to make trouble in the Nation that day, if ever there were a purpoſe to make trouble in any Nation. What did they leave unattempted, to promote the trouble of this Nation? Counſels were joined for a conjunction of Forces to trouble this Nation. The men ingaged in that plot, may properly be called Trouble-makers; it was their buſineſs or their deſign to trouble the waters, that themſelves might fiſh in thoſe waters of trouble. We may with reſpect to their purpoſe, (though God prevented it graciouſly) truly ſay to them what Ahab ſaid falſely to Elijah, Theſe were the men that would have troubled our Iſrael; they would have made trouble in every way, and in every thing, wherein trouble could be made by men.

Would it not have made trouble, to deſtroy the King, the chief Governour of theſe three Nations, with his Royal iſſue in one day?

Would it not have made trouble, to blow up the repreſentative of the Nation, the Parliament, in one day?

Would it not have made trouble, to put the whole body of the people into a confuſed heap, without a head, in one day?

Would it not have made trouble in the Nation, to have ſeen Papal power, with Popiſh Doctrine and Worſhip brought in again upon us within a few days?

Would it not have made troule, to have ſeen poor Souls impriſon'd, perſecuted, and conſumed to aſhes for their conſcientious witneſs-bearing to the truths of the Goſpel?

Would it not have made trouble, to have loſt our Civil liberties, and to have had a yoke of ſpiritual Bondage laid upon our necks by worſe then Egyptian task-makers?

Would it not have made trouble, to ſpil the blood of Thouſands? Was it not an attempt to make trouble, to attempt all theſe things which would probably, that I ſay not certainly, have been the iſſue of that plot, if it had ſucceeded? Let us therefore praiſe the Lord, who was pleaſed to prevent it, and ſaid it ſhall not be. They did every thing to make trouble, but make trouble; they did every thing, but proſper in their deſign: They took ſecret counſel, they took oaths, yea they took the Sacrament to aſſure the ſecrecy of thoſe counſels and oaths. All this they did towards the making of trouble, yet they could not; God ſaid at that time, let England be in quietneſs, and therefore, only, thoſe Romiſh Emiſſaries and Incendiaries could not make trouble.

Again, If we conſider the preſent ſeaſon wherein we live, 'tis a confirmation of this truth, God hath given us quietneſs for ſome years; and hath he not preſerved this quietneſs hitherto, againſt all thoſe both perſons and things that would have made trouble? If God had not confirmed our peace, we had been in trouble long before this time, but yet our peace continueth, yet it continueth; and is it not wonderful that it ſhould continue, if we conſider.

Firſt, The ſins of the Nation which are the ſeed of trouble, eſpecially thoſe two general ſins, firſt, unthankfulneſs for our peace; ſecondly, our ill improvement of it. How have many abuſed their peace to nurſe up their pride, wantonneſs and vanity! and being delivered from the fear of men, have even caſt off the fear of God! what juſt cauſe is there, that we ſhould loſe that peace which we have uſed ſo ill, and have almoſt turned into a war with God himſelf! yet hitherto the Lord hath given England quietneſs, and none could make trouble.

Secondly, If we look upon the diviſions, both in opinion, and affection, that are found among us, is it not a wonder that yet we have peace! if God had not given quietneſs, doubtleſs theſe differences, of which we are ſo ſadly full, had filled us with trouble long before this time.

Thirdly, While we conſider the different intereſts which have been abetted and hotly purſued by too many in this Nation, is it not marvellous in our eyes, that our peace is continued! divided intereſts make greateſt diſtances, and open thoſe breaches through which trouble uſually enters upon a Nation. When a people are of one mind, of one heart and way, trouble can ſcarce find any way to come in among them. But only God (who peremptorily gives quietneſs) can give quietneſs to and prevent the trouble of a people who are divided in opinions, affections, and intereſts. As therefore it is the moſt deſireable mercy that a people may be all united as one man, in one mind, heart, and way, according to the mind, heart, and way of God; ſo it is a moſt admirable mercy, to ſee their peace continued while any conſiderable part among them are diſunited in any of, eſpecially if in all theſe.

Fourthly, Conſider, that ſince the time of our peace, we have had many changes, we have been emptied from veſſel to veſſel, from hand to hand, from government to government, and from governour to governour; and is it not matter of aſtoniſhment as well as of thanks giving, that yet we have quietneſs! How many have waited and hoped, yea deſired and longed for our day of trouble, by theſe changes, revolutions and viciſſitudes, but yet we have peace. Muſt we not then conclude, If God giveth quietneſs, none can make trouble; neither our ſins, nor our diviſions, nor our animoſities, nor our changes ſhall put it into any mans power (though they put an advantage into many mens hands) to make trouble where the Lord our God is graciouſly and freely pleaſed to give us quietneſs. Yet let us be in a holy fear, leſt we at laſt provoke God, and ſin away our quietneſs, and make trouble for our ſelves. The condition of a people who do ſo is very woful; for ſurely (as it followeth in the Text)

If he hideth his face, who then can behold him?

This latter part of the verſe is applicable to a Nation as well as the former, and therefore before I begin to ſpeak of either with reſpect to a ſingle perſon, or a man only,

> Obſerve, God ſometimes hideth his face from whole Nations, even from thoſe Nations that have the outward profeſſion of his name.

As there are National mercies, ſo National calamities, as his people in common may have the ſhinings of Gods face upon them, ſo the hidings of his face from them. Did not God hide his face from the people of Iſrael, his peculiar people, when they were though a profeſſing people, yet a very ſinful and provoking people? (Iſa. 59.2.) Is it not ſaid (Jer. 7.12, 14, 15.) Go ye now unto my place which was in Shiloh, where I ſet my name at the firſt, and ſee what I did to it, for the wickedneſs of my people Iſrael; God would not always own that place which he ſignally called his own, and had ſet his name there, and that, at firſt (which was a great endearment of it to him) but when they ſinned much againſt him, he would not ſo much as give them a look of favour, no nor of pity, till they turned from their wickedneſs; yea he made his ſevere proceeding with them a preſident to his people in another Generation, as it followeth in the ſame place. Therefore will I do unto this Houſe which is called by my name, wherein ye truſt, and unto the place which I gave to you, and to your fathers, as I have done to Shiloh. And I will caſt you out of my ſight, as I have caſt out all your Brethren, even the whole ſeed of Ephraim. There's a Nation caſt out of the ſight of God. To be caſt out of Gods ſight is more, if more can be, then Gods hiding his face from a people. The Church complained bitterly of this latter (Pſal. 44.24.) Wherefore hideth thou thy face, and forgetteſt our affliction, and our oppreſſion? We uſe to ſay, Out of ſight, out of mind; and when God leaves a Nation under affliction, as if he did not mind them nor cared what became of them, then the Scripture ſaith, he hideth his face from them, or, caſteth them out of his ſight. I ſhall only add three things about this hiding of the face of God from a Nation.

Firſt, This hiding of his face, is not a ſudden act of God, he doth not preſently nor eaſily hide his face from a people. He tells them often he will do it, before he doth it once. The Lord warned the old World long, before he brought the flood (Gen. 6.3.) And the Lord ſaid, my Spirit ſhall not always ſtrive with man, for that he alſo is fleſh: Yet his days (wherein I will ſpare him and wait for his repentance) ſhall be an Hundred and Twenty Years. Of this patience the Apoſtle ſpake, telling us (1 Pet. 3. 19, 20.) That Chriſt by the Spirit which quickned him, went and Preached to the Spirits in Priſon (not in Priſon when he Preached to them, but in Priſon ever ſince for not obeying what he Preached, as the Text ſaith) which ſometime were diſobedient, when once the long ſuffering of God waited in the days of Noah, while the Ark was a preparing: Wherein few, that is, eight Souls were ſaved by water; God did not preſently hide his face from that debauched Generation, who had corrupted all their ways, but gave them long warning, even an Hundred and Twenty Years. And how often did God give warning before he withdrew or hid his face from the people of Iſrael, his ſpecial people? He ſent his Prophets riſing early, and ſending them, ſaying, Oh do not this abominable thing that I hate, (Jer. 44.4.) And in another place, O Jeruſalem, be inſtructed, leſt my Soul depart (or be diſjointed) from thee; (Jer. 6. 8.) as if he had ſaid, I am loth to depart, yea I will not depart, if thou wilt but now at length hearken to my voice, and receive inſtruction.

Secondly, As God is long before he begins to hide his face from a Nation, ſo he doth it not at all at once, but gradually or by ſeveral ſteps: We read (Ezek 9.3.) how the glory of the God of Iſrael was gone up from the Cherub whereupon he was, to the threſhold of the Houſe: Then (Chap. 10. 18.) The glory of the Lord departed from off the threſhold of the Houſe, and ſtood over the Cherubims: And then (Chap. 11.23.) The glory of the Lord went up from the midſt of the City, and ſtood upon the Mountain, which is on the Eaſt ſide of the City. When the Lord was departing from them, he did it by degrees, he withdrew and hid himſelf by little and little, as in the Eclipſe of the Sun, whether partial or total, we obſerve the light gradually ſhut in and hidden from us,

Thirdly, As God is long before he hideth his face, and long in hiding it from a Nation, ſo (which makes it dreadful) his face being once hid, continueth long hid from Nations. He doth not return preſently to them, as he often doth to particular perſons. The Eclipſes of Divine favour abide long upon Nations and Churches. We commonly ſay, Great Bodies move ſlowly; and God is uſually ſlow in his motions both from and towards great Bodies; as he doth not quickly remove from them, ſo he doth not quickly return to them. He ſtayeth long before he hideth his face, and he makes them ſtay long before he cauſeth his face to ſhine upon them again. When for the ſin of Iſrael God gave up both them and the Ark into the hands of the Philiſtines (though the Philiſtines vexed with the hand of God upon them, ſent it back ſhortly after, yet) it was long before it was fully ſetled among them, (1 Sam. 7. 2.) And it came to paſs while the Ark abode in Kirjath jerim, that the time was long, for it was twenty years, and all the Houſe of Iſrael lamented after the Lord. The Ark (which was a ſign of God's preſence with them) being removed, was not ſoon reſtor'd to its proper place; yea it was twenty years more after that, before it was ſet in its place by David, (2 Sam. 6.17.) And whereas it is ſaid, that in thoſe firſt twenty years, they lamented after the Lord, this ſignifieth, that all thoſe years God was (comparatively to what he had ſometimes been) but as a ſtranger in the Land, leaving them under the cruel oppreſſions of the Philiſtines: Nor did they recover his favourable preſence, till they ſolemny repented and reformed, putting away their ſtrange gods, and Aſhteroth, preparing their hearts unto the Lord to ſerve him only, as Samuel exhorted them to do at the third verſe of that Chapter. The Jewiſh Nation in after ages had ſad experience of this in the Babyloniſh captivity; when God hid his face from them, it was ſeventy years before he lookt upon them again: And ſince that Nation provoked him (by their rejection of the Goſpel) to lay them aſide, God hath hid his face from them above theſe ſixteenhundred years, and they are to this day a ſcattered unſettled people, and wanderers among the Nations, having their hearts hardned, and their eyes ſhut againſt the light of the glorious Goſpel. And as the Jews, ſo many Chriſtian Churches have for a long time felt the ſad effects of theſe Divine hidings and withdrawings. Thoſe ſeven famous Churches in Aſia, mentioned in the ſecond and third Chapters of the Revelation, Epheſus, Smyrna, &c. have been under this woful Eclipſe many Hundred Years; nor have thoſe ancient Churches in Africa, where Tertullian and Auguſtine once flouriſhed, recovered the preſence of the Lord to this day. Let the Nations and Churches abroad remember this, and tremble to provoke the Lord to ſuch departures and deſertions. God hath long hid his face from the Bohemian Churches, and ſubjected them again to the Papal yoke; ſeveral parts of Germany are under the ſame hidings: the light is departed from them, and they are left in much darkneſs, their ſtate is very deplorable, and their former purity, both as to doctrines of faith and practice of worſhip (as to humane help) irrecoverable. And ſhould not the dealings of God with them, awaken us in theſe Nations and Churches, to remember and conſider the wonderful patience of God in continuing our peace, notwithſtanding all our provocations, leſt at laſt he hide his face from us alſo, and then who can behold him? A throng of evils and miſchiefs will ſoon appear to us with open face, if once God hide his face. And it will not be unuſeful to inſtance a little in this place, what thoſe evils and miſchiefs are which throng and croud in upon Nations and Churches, when God hideth his face from them.

Firſt, When God hideth his face from a Nation, he layeth down his former care of them, and watchfulneſs over them, he takes little or no notice of their caſe and condition, of their troubles and ſtreights, (as was toucht in opening the Text) he regards not how it is with them, nor what becomes of them. Such apprehenſions the Prophet had in reference unto the people of Iſrael, (Jer. 14. 8.) where he humbly expoſtulated with the Lord, Why art thou as a ſtranger in the Land, and as a wayfaring man that turneth aſide to tarry for a night; a ſtranger or a wayfaring man, intending to ſtay but a night in a place, thinks not himſelf concerned with the ſtate of that place; if he can but get a ſupper and a lodging for his money that night, he troubles himſelf no further: Whether it be well or ill with the place, whether it be ſickneſs or health, if he can make ſhift for a night, he is ſatisfied. Thus the Prophet conceived the Lord even as a ſtranger among his people, little minding what became of them, whether they did ſink or ſwim, whether it were peace or trouble, joy or ſorrow with them. And, further, he repreſents the Lord not only as a ſtranger, but as a man aſtoniſhed, not only as a man who cares not to help, but as a man who cannot. An aſtoniſhed man, how mighty ſoever he is, hath no uſe of his might. He that can do little with his reaſon (that's the caſe of an aſtoniſh'd affrighted man) can do leſs with his hands. Now ſuch a one is God to his people (that is, he will do no more for them then ſuch a one) when once he hideth his face from them.

Secondly, When the Lord hideth his face from a Nation, he hath no regard to their prayers and ſupplications, no not to their faſts and humiliations; that ſpeaks ſadly. Prayer is our beſt ſtrength, it engageth the ſtrength of God; by prayer we have our reſort to God, and fetch all our help and ſuccour in a day of trouble from his all-ſufficiency. If once God ſay to a people, I will not hear nor anſwer your prayers, they are in a moſt forlorn condition. Thus God reſolved againſt the people of Iſrael, (Jer. 14. 12.) When they faſt I will not hear their cry: And as he would not regard their own prayers, ſo he forbad the Prophet to pray for them, (verſ. 12.) The Lord ſaid unto me, pray not for this people for their good; yea, he tells them, he would not regard the prayers and interceſſions of any others for them, (Jer. 15. 1.) Though Moſes and Samuel ſtood before me, (that is, ſhould become Advocates in their behalf) yet my heart could not be towards this people, (that's a ſure and a dreadful prognoſtick of ruine, as it followeth) caſt them out of my ſight, and let them go forth.

Thirdly, When the Lord hides his face from a Nation, he refuſeth to give them counſel, or to direct their way. We need the counſel of God as much as his ſtrength; as we cannot do what we know unleſs he ſtrengthen us, ſo we know not what to do unleſs he counſel us. And when ever God hideth his face from a people, he hideth counſel from a people. When God hid his face from Saul, who was in a publick capacity, and in a publick caſe, his War with the Philiſtines, O how he complained that he could get no counſel, (1 Sam. 28. 6, 15.) The Lord anſwers me no more, neither by Urim, nor by Thummim, nor by Prophet, nor by Dreams; at if he had ſaid, I cannot get a word of direction from God, what to do in this calamitous and intricate condition, wherein my ſelf and my Kingdom are plung'd, by reaſon of this Invaſion; I know not what to do, and God will not at all give me any intimation what to do, nor how to do, what is ſafeſt, or moſt conducing to my own ſafety and preſervation. The Prophet brings in the Church lamenting this effect of Gods hiding his face (Pſ. 74. 9.) We ſee not our tokens, there is not any Prophet, nor any that can tell how long; as if they had ſaid, heretofore God was wont to give us ſigns and tokens, he would even work miracles for us, or he would ſend a Prophet to inſtruct and adviſe us what to do, we had thoſe who could tell us how long, that is, how long our troubles ſhould laſt, and when we ſhould have our expected end of them; but now we are in trouble, and no man can tell us how long, now we are left to the wide World, to ſhift for our ſelves as well as we can; the Lord will not adviſe us what to do, nor give us his mind what's beſt to be done, or how to proceed; thus deplorable was their condition upon the hiding of Gods face from them.

Fourthly, (which is yet worſe) when the Lord hides his face from a people, he doth not only with-hold his counſels, but gives them up to their own counſels, and that is, to their own hearts luſts, (Pſ. 81. 12.) Iſrael would none of me (ſaith God) they would not hearken to my voice: What then? So I gave them up to their own hearts luſts, and they walked in their own counſels: And that was to give them up to a Spirit of diviſion, to a Spirit of diſcontent, to a Spirit of envy and jealouſie, to a Spirit of ambition, of ſelf-ſeeking and emulation, and ſo to a Spirit of diſtraction and confuſion, and ſo to ruine and deſtruction: Such and no better is the iſſue, when God gives a people up to their own counſels; then they ſoon become a very Chaos, and run themſelves into a ruinous heap. As good have no counſel from man, as none but man's.

Fifthly, When God hides his face from a Nation, he is ready to declare his diſpleaſure, and the soreſt teſtimonies of his fierce anger, formally, againſt them; God looks upon a ſinfully ſinning people as a burthen upon his heart; he is preſt, and even oppreſt with them, he loaths them, his ſtomach turns at the thought of them, (Iſa. 1. 24.) Ah! I will eaſe me (the Hebrew is, I will be comforted, or I will comfort my ſelf, that is, I will unburden my Soul, and ſatisfie my ſelf by taking vengeance) of my adverſaries, that is, of my people who have rebelled againſt my command, and have been diſobedient to my word. Theſe the Lord counts no more as his children and friends, but as his enemies, and numbers them among his adverſaries; Ah, ſaith he, I will eaſe me of my adverſaries, and avenge me of mine enemies: I am grieved to do it, yet I muſt do it, I am reſolved to do it. As ſoon as the Lord had declared that he would receive no interceſſion for Iſrael, he adds, (Jer. 15. 1, 2.) Caſt them out of my ſight, let them go forth, and it ſhall come to paſs, if they ſay unto thee, whither ſhall we go forth? Then thou ſhalt ſay unto them, thus ſaith the Lord, ſuch as are for death, to death, and ſuch as are for the ſword, to the ſword; and ſuch as are for the famine, to the famine; ſuch as are for captivity, to captivity; I will cauſe them to be removed into all Kingdoms of the Earth, (verſ. 4.) and as I will not pity them, ſo none ſhall, (verſ. 5.) All theſe tokens of diſpleaſure fall upon a people when once the Lord hides his face from them. Yea then the Lord himſelf will go forth againſt them as a fierce Lion, (Hoſ. 5. 14, 15.) He was to Iſrael as a moth, and as rottenneſs, (verſ. 12.) that is, a ſecret conſumption, he would alſo be an open deſtruction to them as a Lion, yea as a Leopard by the way would he obſerve them, or lie in wait for them, and meet them as a Bear that is bereaved of her whelps, and rent the very caul of their heart. (Hoſ. 13. 7, 8.) The Lord God takes upon him the actings of the moſt ſavage Beaſts, in righteouſneſs to ſhew how much he is provoked, when he ſeeth his people act like Beaſts in unrighteouſneſs, filthineſs, cruelties, ſenſual pleaſures; when men behave themſelves unlike men, God will not meet them (as he told Babylon he would not, Iſa. 47. 3.) as a man, that is, either in the weakneſs of a man, or in the compaſſions of a man; but he will meet them either as a Beaſt of prey, who hath no compaſſion, or as God in the fulneſs of his power, not drawing forth, but quite reſtraining his compaſſions. Yea, the Spirit of God will ſtrive no more in ways of mercy with ſuch a people, but turning their enemy (Iſa. 63. 10.) will fight againſt them. He not only forbeareth to aſſiſt them againſt, and deliver them from their enemies, but even aſſiſteth their enemies againſt them, or delivereth them up into their enemies hand.

Sixthly, When God hideth himſelf from a people, he removes their ſpiritual enjoyments; he takes away his holy Ordinances, his Worſhip, the light and power of his Goſpel, or leaves them nothing but the ſhells and out-ſide forms of them; they ſhall be fed with husks, becauſe they have not improved ſweet kernels and wholſome food; they ſhall have long ſhadows, but little true light or Sun-ſhine. Viſion ſhall ceaſe; God will take away his Miniſters and be gone, and then they are preſently over-run with errour and ſuperſtition upon one hand, or with ignorance and prophaneneſs on the other.

Seventhly, He will ſpoil them alſo in their Civil enjoyments, he will take away good Magiſtrates, who are as a ſtaff and a ſtay, as a ſhield and a ſhelter to a Nation; he will break the ſtay and ſtaff of Government, as he threatned (Iſa. 3. 1, 2.) and then (as it followeth verſe 5.) The Child ſhall behave himſelf proudly againſt the ancient, and the baſe againſt the honourable; he will leave them to the corruption of Juſtice, Judgment ſhall be turned away backward, and juſtice ſhall ſtand afar off, and then truth falleth in the ſtreets, and equity cannot enter (Iſa. 59.14.) And after all this what will he do with them? He will either leave them to the worſt of National evils, total Anarchy, or, He will give children to be their Princes, and babes ſhall rule over them. When God hid his face from the Jewiſh Nation, he broke their Government by taking away ten Tribes out of Rehoboam's hand, and putting them under Jeroboam; and out of his hand they fell into the hand of ſeveral other wicked Princes, till at laſt they were carried into captivity by the common enemy. Theſe and the like are the woful effects of Gods hiding his face from a Nation; from all which we may well conclude with Elihu in the Text, who then can behold him? Who can bear his wrathful preſence, when his face or favourable preſence is hidden from us? To ſhut up this point, I ſhall only add, that becauſe theſe hidings of Gods face are gradual (as was ſhewed before) therefore they are little taken notice of; as the Prophet complained (Hoſ. 7.9.) Gray hairs are here and there upon them, and they know it not; that is, they are in a declining condition (gray hairs are the ſigns of old age, which is the declenſion of mans life, he alludes from the body Natural, to the body Civil or Politick, they are, I ſay, in a declining, weakning, ſpending condition) yet they lay it not to heart. And that's a ſore, if not the chiefeſt judgment of God upon a Nation, when hiding his face, he hides his judgments from them, and gives them up to hardneſs of heart, to blindneſs of mind, and a ſpirit of ſtupidity, that they ſee not nor take notice of their own danger, nor the departure of God from them, which is the cauſe of it. And ſtill the more God hideth his face from a Nation, the more miſerable they are, and withal, the more inſenſible of their miſery. So much from that conſideration of the Text, as to a Nation, When he giveth quietneſs, who can make trouble? And when he hideth his face, who then can behold him? Whether it be againſt a Nation,

Eorum mihi videtur idoneus ſenſus & omnino germanus qui hanc libertatem Dei, ſive pacem concedendi ſive condemnandi (vel turbandi) ad tyrannos tantum coarctat & eos qui impiè vivunt. Sanct.

Or againſt a man only.] As this verſe reſpects a man only, or a ſingle perſon, it is expounded two or three wayes.

Firſt, Of Oppreſſors and wicked men: As if he had ſaid, When God will give a wicked man quietneſs or proſperity in his ſinful way, who can make his eſtate troublous, or trouble him in his eſtate? He ſhall be quiet while the will of God is to ſuffer him to be ſo; and if God once hide his face from him, that is, declareth diſpleaſure againſt him, who can behold him? That is, Who among the mightieſt of wicked Oppreſſors can lift himſelf up againſt, or ſtand before God?

Secondly, The words are expounded of the oppreſſed, or of godly men: As if he had ſaid, When God is minded or reſolved to give peace and quietneſs to any of his faithful Servants, who can hinder him, or trouble them? And when he is pleaſed for reaſons beſt known to himſelf, to leave any of his faithful Servants in darkneſs, and withdraw the light of his countenance from them, who among them can behold him? That is, bear or endure his angry appearances.

Si Deus pacem tribuat impiis, quis illius providentiam & arcana judicia condemnare audebit? Greg Philip.

A third expounds the former part of the verſe according to the ſecond Expoſition of the whole verſe concerning the oppreſſed or afflicted godly, If God will give them quietneſs, who can give them trouble? And the latter part of the verſe, of Oppreſſors, If he hideth his face from wicked and unjuſt men, who can behold him?

Further, Some who take this ſenſe, do not underſtand it as an act of God hiding his own face, but as an act of God hiding the face of the wicked Oppreſſor: As if it had been ſaid, When God hideth a wicked mans face, and wraps him up as a condemned man; or when, by the command of the Magiſtrate, after his legal tryal his face is covered, being ready to ſeal the warrant for his execution; (Haman's face was covered as ſoon as the Kings word went out againſt him) then Who can behold him? Some inſiſt much upon this interpretation, in alluſion to the cuſtom of thoſe times, when condemned Malefactors had their faces covered; and indeed, when God wraps up the Oppreſſors face as a condemned man, Who can behold him? That is, Who can hold up his face againſt God, or reſiſt him in this work of juſtice. But I intend not to proſecute the perſonal conſideration of the Text under theſe diſtinct notions, but ſhall only take up the general ſenſe; When he giveth quietneſs to a man, who can make trouble? And when he hideth his face from a man, who can behold him? I ſhall only add Maſter Broughton's gloſs upon the whole verſe, When for the poor he kills the mighty, none can ſtay him; and when he hideth his favour, none can find it.

Quum ipſe tranquillat (ſc. miſeros afflictos) quis inquietabit? Et cum abſcondit faciem (ſc. ab improbis) quis contemplabitur eum? i. e. quis improborum averſanti Deo auſit obſiſtere? Jun.

Hence Obſerve, Firſt, The quietneſs or peace of any man, of every man, is of the Lord.

If God will have a wicked man live in quietneſs, ſo it ſhall be, and God hath given, and doth often give them quietneſs. I have ſeen the wicked in great power, and ſpreading himſelf like a green Bay-tree (Pſal 37.35.) David ſpake this from a good witneſs, the ſight of his eye; I (ſaith he) have ſeen the wicked in much outward pomp and ſplendour; and as the outward peace and quietneſs, pomp and ſplendour of the wicked is from God, ſo alſo is both the outward and inward peace of any godly man.

Firſt, The outward peace, or the peace of a godly man in his outward eſtate, is of the Lord (Pſal. 4.8.) I will both lay me down in peace and ſleep, for thou only makeſt me to dwell in ſafety: That is, Thou, O Lord, wilt watch over me in the night, and not ſuffer me to be ſurprized by any ſudden danger, and therefore I will quietly repoſe my ſelf upon thy gracious Promiſes, and throw off thoſe cares and fears, which as thorns in the pillow, would not ſuffer me to reſt, when I lye down in my bed; the Lord is my ſafety, even the reſt of my body. In Chap. 5. of this Book (*v.*23, 24.) Eliphaz telleth us, how the Lord ſecures the outward condition of a good man, and gives him ſuch quietneſs, that even the very beaſts of the earth ſhall be in league, and the ſtones of the field at peace with him, and he ſhall know (or be aſſured) that his tabernacle ſhall be in peace.

Secondly, The inward peace, the ſoul peace, the ſpiritual peace of a godly man is much more from the Lord (John 14.27.) Peace I leave with you, my peace I give unto you, not as the world giveth, ſo give I unto you: As if Chriſt had ſaid, I will not deal with you after the rate of the world; that is, either deceitfully and falſly, or rigorouſly and unjuſtly; I will not give you ſuch meaſure as the world gives you, nor in ſuch a manner; I give you my peace, therefore let not your hearts be troubled, neither be you afraid: Whatever outward trouble the world can give you, be not afraid of it before it cometh, nor troubled at it when 'tis come, I will give you inward peace in the midſt of all your troubles. Chriſt invites the weary and the heavy laden to come to him, with this Promiſe, I will give you reſt (Mat.11.29.) ſoul-reſt he meaneth; that title or name of Chriſt, Shiloh (Gen. 49.10. The Scepter ſhall not depart from Judah, until Shiloh come) ſignifies tranquillity, peace and reſt: As Jeſus Chriſt hath bought our peace and reſt with his blood, ſo he bears it in his name. The fountain of our ſoul-peace is the heart of the Father, Grace and Peace from God the Father, &c. (Col. 1.1,2. 1 Theſſ. 1.1.) The purchaſe or price of this peace, is the blood of the Son (*Col.*1.22.) He hath made our peace through the blood of his Croſs: Our peace coſt dear, it coſt blood, and that the blood of the Son of God. The conveyance of this peace is made by the holy Spirit; he is ſent to bring the good tidings of peace unto Believers: The Spirit ſpeaks peace from God, and witneſſeth with our ſpirits, that we are at peace with God. And as this peace is at firſt from God the Father as the Fountain of it, and from God the Son as the Purchaſer of it, and from God the holy Ghoſt as the Speaker of it; ſo the continuing and renewing of this peace is from the ſame God. He eſtabliſheth and ſetleth the heart in that peace which he hath given, and he reſtoreth that peace when at any time we have loſt it, and the heart is unſetled. David's ſoul being unquiet, and his peace ravell'd after his ſin, he addreſſed to God for the renewing of it (Pſal. 51.12.) Reſtore to me the joy of thy ſalvation. David petitioned the reſtoring of his peace, while he petitioned the reſtoring of his joy: 'Tis poſſible to have peace without joy; but there can be no joy in that ſoul, which hath not firſt attained to peace. We muſt wait upon God both for the reſtoring of our peace when it is departed, and for the continuance of it when it is enjoyed. When he giveth quietneſs to a man, either as to ſoul, or body, or both, Who can make trouble?

Note, Secondly, The quietneſs or peace which God beſtows upon any perſon is an invincible, an inſuperable peace and quietneſs, as to all that this world can do, or he ſuffer in this world.

If God will give a quiet outward eſtate, no man can diſturb it; when God gave Job outward quietneſs, what a mighty man was he? How did he flouriſh? Nor could any break his outward peace: Satan confeſt it in the firſt Chapter, Thou haſt made a hedge about him, and about his houſe, and about all that he hath, on every ſide; there is not the leaſt gap open, no nor ſtake looſened in his hedge, who can touch him? Who can come at him? I cannot touch him; Sabeans and Chaldeans cannot touch him. While the Lord giveth and guardeth our outward peace, it is inviolable. And as to our ſpiritual peace, if the Lord ſpeak it, who or what can trouble the ſoul?

Firſt, The afflictions, tribulations, and vexations which we meet with in the world, cannot trouble this inward peace; while ſtorms are without, there will be a calm within; the ſoul may be at peace, and the conſcience quiet, in the greateſt viſible confuſions. Let the world turn about and overturn, let it ſhake and break into a thouſand pieces, this peace abides unſhaken, unbroken: Let the world rage in the heat either of war or perſecution, yet the heart is ſerene, fixt, and quiet, like Mount Zion, that cannot be removed. Chriſt tells his Diſciples (John 16. 33.) Theſe things have I ſpoken unto you, that in me ye might have peace; (and in the ſame verſe he foretels them) In the world you ſhall have tribulation: As if he had ſaid, You ſhall have a peace concurrent and contemporary with your tribulation; trouble from the world ſhall not hinder the peace you have from me; yea, my peace ſhall conquer the troubles you have in the world. Thus the Prophet triumphed in believing (Hab. 3. 17.) Though the labour of the Olive ſhould fail, and the Vine yield no fruit; though there be no Calves in the ſtall, nor Sheep in the fold, &c. yet I will joy in the Lord, and rejoyce in the God of my ſalvation. To rejoyce in the Lord, is more then to be quiet, or to have peace in the Lord. Joy is the exaltation of peace, it is the moſt delicious fruit of peace: The worſt of worldly evils cannot deſpoil us of the leaſt purely ſpiritual good, much leſs of the greateſt. Him wilt thou keep in perfect peace, whoſe mind is ſtayed on thee (Iſai. 26. 3.) That's perfectly perfect to which nothing can be added, and from which nothing can be taken away; yet that is truly perfect, to which though ſomething may be added, yet it cannot be either totally or finally taken away. Such is the ſoul-peace of true Believers in this life, and therefore a perfect peace.

Secondly, As outward tribulation cannot hinder the ſoul-peace of a godly man; ſo the policy, plots, and temptations of Satan our arch-enemy cannot, yea, his charges and moſt ſpiteful accuſations ſhall not. The great deſign of the Devil, is, to deſtroy and devour ſouls, his own condition being moſt miſerable, he at once envies all thoſe who are not in the ſame condition, and attempts to make them ſo; and when he fails in that attempt, the deſtruction of ſouls, yet he will not ceaſe to attempt their moleſtation, and to trouble thoſe whom he cannot utterly devour. Now, as Satan cannot at all prevail in the former attempt, the deſtroying of ſouls; ſo he cannot wholly prevail in the latter, the troubling of ſouls. Hence that gallant challenge of the Apoſtle (Rom. 8. 33, 34.) Who ſhall lay any thing to the charge of Gods elect? It is God that juſtifieth; who is he that condemneth? It is Chriſt that dyed, yea rather, that is riſen again, &c. As if he had ſaid, Let all the enemies of our ſpiritual peace riſe up and combine together, they ſhall not be able to condemn; that is, wholly to diſcourage or diſquiet the heart of a Believer, he having received (his quietus eſt) reſt and peace from God, in the juſtification of his perſon, and the pardon of his ſins. Satan can do much, and would do more (if his chain were lengthned, and he not reſtrained) to the trouble and moleſtation of our ſouls; there's not a godly man living ſhould reſt an hour in quiet for him, if he might have his wiſh or his will; but becauſe God gives quietneſs to ſome Believers, and will not have it ſo much as ſtirr'd, therefore Satan cannot make any trouble at all in their ſouls, but they live in the conſtant light of Gods countenance, and in the joy of the holy Ghoſt. And becauſe the quietneſs which every Believer hath is the gift of God through Jeſus Chriſt, who hath made their atonement, and eſtabliſhed their peace, through the blood of his Croſs, therefore Satan cannot make any ſuch trouble in any of their ſouls, as ſhall for ever deſtroy their peace, or diſſolve their quietneſs, though for many reaſons, all ſerving his glory, and their good, God ſuffereth Satan many times, poſſibly for a long time, to entangle and interrupt it. Temptations to the committing of ſin, and accuſations or charges about ſin committed, may exceedingly hinder and ſhake the peace of a Believer; but, as the ſins to which he is tempted cannot hurt his peace, when he reſiſts and overcomes them; ſo the ſins into which he falleth through temptation, cannot deſtroy his peace, becauſe thoſe ſins ſhall certainly be deſtroyed both by repentance and pardon.

Thirdly, The thunders of the Law cannot take away the peace of that ſoul, to whom God giveth quietneſs. Chriſt having in his own perſon fulfilled the Law for Believers, both doing the duty, and induring the penalty of it, he hath delivered them from the terror and curſe of the Law, himſelf having been made a curſe for them (Gal. 3. 13.) So then if neither tribulations, nor temptations, nor the terrors of the Law can make trouble, where God giveth quietneſs, we may conclude, nothing can.

There is a double Conſideration upon both, which we may demonſtrate, that if God giveth quietneſs, either outward or inward, none can make trouble.

Firſt, Becauſe as God is Soveraign and ſo may diſpoſe peace and quietneſs, to whom he pleaſeth, or at his pleaſure, when he will, or to whom he will; ſo he hath an all-ſufficiency to maintain and confirm, to preſerve and protect the outward peace of any man againſt all the powers of this world; and the inward peace of a godly man againſt all the powers of Hell, againſt the terrors of the Law, and the accuſations whether of Satan or of his own Conſcience.

Secondly, None can deſtroy the peace of a godly man, becauſe it is a perfect peace, as was ſhewed before from that Promiſe in the Prophet (Iſa. 26. 3.) Him wilt thou keep in perfect peace whoſe mind is ſtayed on thee. For being a perfect peace it will not decay of it ſelf; and becauſe tis perfect God will neither deſtroy it himſelf, nor ſuffer any elſe to deſtroy it. Mark the perfect man (ſaith David, Pſal. 37. 37.) and behold the upright, for the end of that man is peace. He is a perfect man whoſe end is peace; and that is perfect peace which holds to the end, or which ſhall never end. The peace which God giveth is perfect; Firſt, Becauſe 'tis eſtabliſhed upon perfect righteouſneſs, The righteouſneſs of God. That righteouſneſs which is the root of our peace is called the righteouſneſs of God, both becauſe God hath appointed it, and becauſe God hath wrought it. Jeſus Chriſt, God-man, is the Lord our righteouſneſs, and the Prince of our peace; or as the Apoſtle expreſſeth it (Heb. 7. 1, 2.) He is Melchiſedec, being by interpretation King of Righteouſneſs, and after that alſo King of Salem, which is King of peace. (Iſa. 32. 17.) The work of righteouſneſs is peace, and the fruit of it is quietneſs and aſſurance for ever. Righteouſneſs is ſuch a foundation of peace, as cannot be ſhaken, and therefore that peace which is built upon it cannot be utterly overthrown, how much ſoever it may be ſhaken.

Secondly, 'Tis a perfect peace, becauſe it was obtained by an abſolute victory over all the enemies of it. That people muſt needs be in perfect peace who have got a perfect conqueſt over all their enemies, and have got their oppoſers under their feet. Now the ſpiritual peace which God giveth his people, ariſeth from a perfect conqueſt over all their enemies. Firſt, The world is perfectly conquered by Chriſt (John 16. 33.) Be of good chear, I have overcome the world. Secondly, The Devil is perfectly conquered by Chriſt (Heb. 2. 14.) He hath deſtroyed him that had the power of death, that is, the Devil. He is more then conquered who is deſtroyed; Chriſt hath deſtroyed the Devil, who is the deſtroyer, though not as to his being, though not as to his will to deſtroy, yet as to his power to deſtroy thoſe whom he hath redeemed, and will eternally ſave. Thirdly, Chriſt hath alſo perfectly conquered the Law (not by deſtroying, but) by fulfilling it. Chriſt was above all that the Law required or commanded, and ſo he did at once freely ſubmit to it, and fully (as to any hindrance of a Believers peace) ſubdue it, he holdeth it under him as well as he was made under it. And he was contented for that very reaſon to be made under the Law, that he might hold it under him, and that we might not be under (the dread of) the Law (though we muſt walk and work by the rule of it) but under grace.

'Tis matter of ſtrong conſolation to poor ſouls, that when the Lord giveth quietneſs none can make trouble. And hence we alſo learn, that all the breaches which are made upon the peace of the people of God, are from God himſelf. As thoſe breaches are meritoriouſly from themſelves, ſo efficiently from God himſelf; till he breaks their peace none can.

Thirdly, From the ſecond branch, When he hideth his face, who then can behold him? This being applicable to a ſingle perſon as well as the former.

Obſerve, God ſometimes clouds his face from his own Servants, and Children.

Theſe words, When he hideth his face, ſuppoſe that God ſometimes doth ſo, and the Scripture elſewhere teſtifies that God hath often done ſo; God hath love alwayes in his heart towards his Children, but he hath not alwayes favour in his face towards them; his appearances are not alwayes the appearances of a friend, he may appear angry, and turn away his face as if he would not be ſpoken with. Of this we find frequent complaints in Scripture; and I might ſpeak much to this point, but I have already met with it (Chap. 13. 24.) and therefore I paſs from it.

Only from the connexion of theſe words, When he hideth his face, who can behold him?

Note, The hiding of Gods face, or the vailing of his favour is exceeding grievous unto any perſon.

When he doth it, Who can behold him? This manner of ſpeaking doth not only hold out, that if God will hide his face no man can ſee him, or know him; for God is a ſecret to all men until he is pleaſed to reveal himſelf; yea, all the truths of the Goſpel are ſecrets, and myſteries, till God is pleaſed to reveal them and make them known (Matth. 11. 25.) Father, I thank thee (ſaith Chriſt) that thou haſt hid theſe things from the wiſe and prudent, and haſt revealed them unto babes; that is, thou haſt not opened them to the wiſeſt, &c. (there needs no other hiding of them from the wiſeſt of men, then a forbearance to open them) but to the babes, who are (though weak, yet) humble and teachable, thou haſt opened them, and opened their eyes and hearts to ſee and receive them. This ſpeech holds out not only this truth, that when God doth not reveal himſelf, no man can know him or any thing of his mind, or that neither his nature, or his will are known but by ſome way of revelation; but this form of ſpeaking (Who can behold him?) plainly tells us, that if God hideth his favour, he is ſo terrible, that none can have the boldneſs or courage to behold him. For the hiding of his face, implieth an appearance of anger and diſpleaſure; and when he is angry, who can behold him? If the Children of Iſrael could not ſtedfaſtly behold the face of Moſes for the glory of his countenance, as the Apoſtle ſpeaks (2 Cor. 3. 7.) ſurely then no man can ſtedfaſtly behold the face of God when his countenance is filled with wrath. Some ſaid to Chriſt (John 14. 8.) Shew us the Father and it ſufficeth; that is, reveal to us the love and good will of the Father, and that will ſatisfie us, that will fill up all the deſires and longings of our ſouls; we ſhall have nothing more to wiſh for, nothing more to look after, if thou wilt but ſhew us the Father. Now, on the other ſide, if the Father will not ſhew himſelf, if the Father will hide himſelf from the ſoul, what then can ſuffice? What can comfort? Where is our refuge or reſt? As when God is quiet and favourable to us, he can make all things favourable and quiet to us: So, if God be diſpleaſed, nothing can be pleaſing to a ſoul that is ſenſible of his diſpleaſure. A Believer loſes not only the joy and triumph of his faith, but his very peace, he is not only in a dark, but in a diſturbed condition, not knowing where to repoſe himſelf, or reſt his head, when God hideth his face.

Take this Inference from it, If the hiding of Gods face be ſo terrible, then take heed of provoking him to hide his face.

For though we are not tenants at will for our peace in reference unto the world, in reference to men, in reference to devils; yet we are only tenants at will for our peace in reference unto God. He can take away our peace; and he doth uſually continue our peace, only ſo long as we behave our ſelves well. As ſome have Letters Patents for great Offices which run in that tenour, They ſhall enjoy them (quamdiu ſe bene geſſerint) as long as they carry themſelves well; but upon default or maladminiſtration they may be turned out of all; ſo I ſay, though we are not at the will of the world, nor of any creature, for the holding of our peace, yet we are at the will of God for it. And as he ſometimes meerly out of prerogative hideth his face (as was ſhewed Job 13. 24.) that he may try what a ſoul will do in a dark condition, and that he may declare what the ſtrength of his inviſible Grace can do when nothing is viſible, no not any the leaſt ray or ſhine of favour from himſelf to ſupport and comfort the ſoul, I ſay, though God doth thus in a prerogative way ſometimes hide his face, yet uſually he doth it not, but upon ſome default in us, eſpecially our neglect of him; when we regard not the face of God, and grow ſlight as to our valuations of his preſence, then he withdraweth his preſence and vails his face towards us; and when we fall into any groſs ſin (ſuch was the caſe of David, Pſal. 51.) God takes us upon default, and leaves us in a ſad condition, as he did David, who complained that even his bones were broken, and that he had loſt the joy of his ſalvation, which upon the renewing of his faith and repentance, he begg'd earneſtly might be reſtored to him, and it was. Therefore if you would keep the light of Gods Countenance, keep cloſe to the light of Gods Commandment. No marvail if we be under the hidings of the face of God, when we are turning our backs upon God! Sin is a turning from God, a turning our backs upon God; and is it any wonder if God turn his face from ſinners? To turn our back upon God is the worſt of a ſinful condition; and to find God turning his back upon us, or hiding his face from us, is the worſt of a miſerable condition. What can comfort us, when the God of all conſolation will not look upon us, unleſs in diſpleaſure? What pleaſure (but the pleaſure of ſin for a ſeaſon, which ends, without repentance, in endleſs torment, what pleaſure, I ſay) can that ſoul take, in whom God taketh no pleaſure, or with whom he is not pleaſed? It is very ſad with the ſoul, when we loſe the ſight of our own graces (ſometimes a gracious heart cannot ſee any work of grace, nor perceive any workings of grace in him, but thinks he hath no faith in God, no love to God, no ſorrow for ſin, this is ſad) but it is much more ſad to loſe the ſight of the face of God, to have the favour of God withdrawn from us. This made Jonah complain (Chap. 2. 4.) I am caſt out of the ſight of thine eyes; he lookt upon himſelf as an outcaſt, and then Jonah thought himſelf as caſt into the belly of Hell (ver. 2.) When God hides his face from us, or will not vouchſafe us a ſight of his pleaſed face, we are as in the belly of Hell, as Jonah bemoaned himſelf. What is the glory and happineſs of Heaven? Is it not the ſight of the face of God? Is it not the clear viſion and manifeſtation of God? Glory is that eſtate wherein God will never once hide his face, nor look off from his glorified Saints, no not one moment to all eternity. Now the happineſs which we have here, the Heaven which we have upon Earth conſiſts in this alſo; when we live near God by believing, and behold his face by faith; when God lifts up the light of his countenance upon us, we are (as it were) lifted up from Earth to Heaven. As viſion in Heaven will make us happy for ever; ſo hidings on Earth make us miſerable for the time. And that which is the very Hell of a godly man upon Earth, the worſt Hell, he can or ſhall have, is this, when God hideth his face from him: Therefore take heed you do not put the Lord upon withdrawing from you through your default: This favour, the ſhine or light of Gods face is continued or denied to us, uſually upon theſe terms, as we behave our ſelves well or ill towards him.

VERS.

VERS. 30.

That the Hypocrite reign not, leſt the people be inſnared.

These words are the concluſion of Elihu's diſcourſe, about the executions of divine Juſtice, upon the ſons of men; and in them we have two things, Firſt, The Power; Secondly, The impartiality of divine Juſtice. God is ſo powerful, that he can pull down the Mighty, and he is ſo impartial that if there be cauſe, he will not ſpare to do it.

Or in the words we have to conſider theſe three things.

Firſt, The character of the perſon upon whom the Juſtice of God is executed, The Hypocrite.

Secondly, The judgment it ſelf, 'tis a ſtop to his greatneſs, that he reign not.

Thirdly, We have the grounds of this Judgment, which are two-fold.

Firſt, His wicked purpoſe, againſt the people; He, if ſuffered, would lay ſnares for the people.

Secondly, Gods gracious protection of the people; He will not have the people enſnared.

That the Hypocrite reign not, leſt the people be enſnared.

What a Hypocrite is, and what the importance of the original word is, here tranſlated Hypocrite, hath been opened from ſome other paſſages in this Book. I ſhall only ſay thus much further, that the word imports, Firſt, a filthy thing diſguiſed or covered; For a hypocrite is a filthy prophane perſon, under the cover or diſguiſe of holineſs. Our Engliſh word knave is neer in ſound to this Hebrew word chanaph, and ſome conceive 'tis derived or taken from it. And to be ſure, every hypocrite is a prophane perſon, though all prophane perſons are not hypocrites; Some wicked and prophane ones care not who knoweth they are ſo; yet very many who are indeed prophane and wicked cover it, what they can, and ſhew that only whereof they have only a ſhew, ſomewhat of godlineſs or of goodneſs.

Again, There are Hypocrites of two makes or ſtrains; Firſt, Religious, or Church-hypocrites. Secondly, State, or civil hypocrites, and ſometimes theſe two are combined in one. 'Tis poſſible for a man who pretends not to Religion, yet to be a hypocrite; a Magiſtrate, whether ſupream or ſubordinate, may offer very fair for the profit and liberty of the people whom he governeth, when he minds no ſuch thing; yea, he may not only offer fair for the good of a people, as to their outward profits and liberties, but as to the good of Religion, and the benefit of their Souls, and yet mind no ſuch thing; we may take the Hypocrite in this Text, as twiſted up, or compounded of both theſe; The State-hypocrite and the Religious are ſometimes bound up together. That the Hypocrite

In ממלוך ne regnat Mem Negationem includit juxta linguæ morem, & in ממקשי ab offendiculis ſimiliter ut dei magis extolletur juſtitia ſimul & potentia, qui regis de throno ſuo dejicit ut populum ejus laqueis irretitum liberet ab illius tyrannide. Merc.

Reign not.] To reign is the priviledge of Supream powers; By me Kings reign, ſaith Wiſdom, that is Chriſt (Prov. 8. 15.) and when Paul ſaw how high the Corinthians carryed it in ſpirituals, he by way of alluſion tells them (1 Cor. 4. 8.) ye have reigned like Kings without us; ye are got (as ye ſuppoſe) to the top, and into the very Throne of Religion, and you think your ſelves able to mannage all difficulties, and can do well enough there without our help; but to the Text.

This not reigning of the hypocrite may be taken two wayes.

Firſt, As a ſtop given him by the providence of God, from getting up into the Throne, or from getting the power of a Nation into his hands; Thus ſometimes God ſaith to the hypocrite, Thou ſhalt not reign, that is, thou ſhalt not exalt thy ſelf, though thou attempt it.

Secondly, This not reigning may be taken for a ſtop to the progreſs of his power, when he hath both attempted and attained it; and that two wayes, either firſt by taking him away from his power; or ſecondly, by taking away his power from him, as Daniel told Belſhazzar, while he minded him of the greatneſs of his Father Nebuchadnezzar (who had all the world (upon the matter) at his command) as alſo of his fall from that greatneſs (Dan. 5. 19, 20.) Whom he would, he ſet up; and whom he would, he put down; but when his heart was lifted up, and his mind hardned in pride, he was depoſed from his Kingly Throne, and they took his glory from him: He was depoſed, or as the Chaldee hath it (ſo we put in the Margin) He was made to come down from his Princely Throne; either of theſe wayes doth God (who is the King of Kings, and Lord of Lords) when he pleaſeth, put a ſtop to, or check the progreſs of falſe hearted Princes, that have either got their power by flatteries and pretenſions to that good which they intended not, or who exerciſe their power ſo. That the hypocrite reign not,

Leſt the people be enſnared.] The root of the word here rendred to enſnare, ſignifieth the ſpreading of a Net, or the ſetting of a Grin, ſuch as Fowlers and Hunters make uſe of, to take Beaſts or Birds with; and thus God himſelf ſpake concerning his dealing with Babylon (Jer. 50. 24.) I have laid a ſnare for thee, and thou art alſo taken, O Babylon, and thou waſt not aware; literal Babylon was a ſnare to the people of God of old, and ſo is myſtical Babylon at this day. The great Hypocrite, or Snare-ſetter, reigns in or over Babylon; therefore ſaith God, thou who haſt ſet ſnares for my people, ſhall be enſnared, thou ſhalt be taken unawares, I have ſet a ſnare to catch and hold thee faſt. When Elihu ſaith, leſt the people be enſnared, it ſeems to intimate, that God will prevent the enſnaring of a people by the Hypocrite; He ſhall not reign, leſt the people be enſnared, or leſt they ſhould come into ſnares. There is another reading, which gives the reaſon from the ſnares which the people have already been entangled with, becauſe of the ſnare, or becauſe the people have been enſnared (therefore ſaith the Lord) let not the Hypocrite reign; thus God revengeth the peoples wrong, and doth juſtice upon thoſe that had ſet ſnares for them. So much for the general ſenſe of theſe words, and the opening of them.

There is a ſecond reading of the whole verſe, which carryeth the ſenſe ſomewhat another way, and yet may be of uſe, and yield us ſome profitable conſiderations, but I ſhall not meddle with that, till I have proſecuted thoſe obſervations which ariſe clearly from our own reading.

The words in general hold forth the heart of God towards falſe hearted men, he cannot abide them, nor will he ſuffer them long to abide, eſpecially not to abide in power and greatneſs; That the hypocrite reign not, leſt the people be enſnared.

Hence Note, Firſt, A Hypocrite is a perſon hated of God, and hurtful to men.

He is therefore hated of God, becauſe hurtful to men. And therefore God is not pleaſed he ſhould reign, either as to reign is taken ſtrictly, for the exerciſing of Soveraign Power; or, as to reign may be taken largely, for the exerciſing of any power, and living in the height of proſperity. For the clearing of this truth, that a hypocrite is hated of God, I ſhall ſhew, firſt the nature of an hypocrite; ſecondly, give the diſtinctions of Hypocrites; thirdly, make ſome diſcoveries who is an hypocrite. To the Firſt, An hypocrite in his general ſtate or nature, is (as I may ſay) a wicked man in a godly mans Cloths; he hath an appearance of holineſs, when there's nothing but wickedneſs at the bottom. There are two great parts of the hypocrites work, firſt, to ſhew himſelf good, which he is not; this is properly the work of ſimulation or feigning: Secondly, To cover that real evil which he is or doth: This is properly the work of diſſimulation or cloaking. The hypocrite ſtrives as much to appear what he is not, as not to appear what he is; he makes a ſemblance of that purity which he loves not, and he diſſembleth that impurity which he loves and lives in.

Secondly, We may conſider hypocrites under this diſtinction. Firſt, There is a ſimple Hypocrite, who hath not the good which he thinks and believes he hath; thus every one that profeſſeth or nameth the name of Chriſt, and is not really converted, is an hypocrite; becauſe he hath not that which he ſeems to have, yea, which poſſibly he verily believes he hath, I may call ſuch a one (though it may ſeem a very ſtrange expreſſion) a ſincere hypocrite; he doth not intend to deceive others, but is deceived himſelf, becauſe he hath not the root of the matter in him, nor the power of godlineſs, though he brings forth ſome ſeeming fruits of godlineſs, and is much in the form of it. Such we may conceive ſhadowed out to us by the fooliſh Virgins; they made a profeſſion, they had their Lamps, yea, they had Oyl in their Lamps, they did ſomewhat which was conſiderable in the outward duties of Chriſtian Religion, and they hoped to be accepted with Chriſt, but they had no Oyl in their Veſſels with their Lamps, as the wiſe Virgins had (Matth. 25. 4.) that is, they had no grace in their hearts, nor did they mind the getting of that till it was too late (ver. 10.) but ſatisfied themſelves with that little Oyl in their Lamps to make the blaze of an external profeſſion. Such as theſe are ſimple hypocrites, being pleaſed with a ſhell inſtead of a kernel, and with a ſhadow, neglecting the ſubſtance. Theſe hypocrites are in a very deplorable condition; yet theſe are not the hypocrites which I intend in this point, or have here to do with.

There are a ſecond ſort of hypocrites, commonly called groſs hypocrites, ſuch as hold that out which they know they have not, ſuch as know they have nothing in or of Religion, but the ſhew of it; ſuch as work by art, or with a kind of force upon themſelves in all the good they do, and duties they perform towards God, and about the things of God. They do nothing as the Apoſtle ſaith Timothy did (Phil. 2. 20.) naturally, I have no man like-minded, who will naturally care for your ſtate. The word naturally is not there oppoſed to ſpiritually, but to artificially, or to forcedly. What a ſincere heart doth in the things of God, he doth it naturally, that is, it floweth from an inward principle, it is not forced from him, but the hypocrite doth all as it were by a kind of art or force upon himſelf. The Lord chargeth the Jews with this kind of hypocriſie (Iſa. 58. 2.) They ſeek me dayly, and delight to know my ways, as a Nation that did righteouſneſs; that is, they acted with an appearing forwardneſs, like thoſe who truely delight to know my wayes; yet all this was but as a piece of art, for as the Lord upbraided them (verſ. 3, 4.) they really kept their ſins, and walkt in their own wayes of oppreſſion, ſtriſe, and debate; yea they made all that noiſe about humbling themſelves, that they might the more undiſcernedly ſmite others with the fiſt of wickedneſs: And therefore ſaith the Lord (ver. 5.) Is it ſuch a faſt that I have choſen, a day for a man to afflict his ſoul, &c. And then for many dayes to afflict both the Souls and Bodies of his Brethren? Or to abſtain a day from meat, and glut himſelf with ſin? That's the ſtrain of the hypocrite, he (as I may ſay) maintains and drives two trades, he hath a trade for God, and the wayes of God, and he hath a trade for ſin, and the wayes of wickedneſs, this is his courſe (Jer. 12. 2.) Thou art neer in their mouth, but far from their reins; they ſpeak of thee, but they have no deſires to thee, no affections for thee, thou art far enough from their reins; they act a part in Religion, but they neither partake of Religion, nor with it.

Thirdly, There are others, who beſides that they are groſs Hypocrites, may alſo be called deſigning or plotting Hypocrites; for they that ſerve God with a reſerve, as to any ſin or by-way, uſually ſerve him with a deſign, or for an end of their own. Chriſt (Matth. 23. 14.) ſpeaking of groſs Hypocrites, ſuch as the Phariſees were, ſaith, they devour widows houſes, and in a pretence make long prayers; they pray long in a pretence, or under a pretence; that is, they have a plot or a deſign in prayer, they pray, not purely to enjoy communion with God, nor purely to honour God; but they make uſe of prayer, and under pretence of that, do others work. Chriſt doth not there ſpeak againſt, nor diſparage long prayers, as ſome do, to the great reproach of the Spirit and grace of God, but he chargeth them with praying long in a pretence; pray heartily, and then pray as long as you will; other due circumſtances being obſerved, the more you pray, the more is God pleaſed. But whether prayers are long or ſhort, if done in a pretence, or with a deſign to do miſchief to others, or only to get ſome worldly profit and advantage to our ſelves (as thoſe Phariſees prayed) they are an abomination to the Lord. 'Tis not the length of prayer, but the end of prayer which diſcovers Hypocriſie. The Prophet Iſaiah (Chap. 32. 6.) gives us a deſcription of this groſs deſigning hypocrite, The vile perſon will ſpeak villany, and his heart will work iniquity, to practiſe hypocriſie, and to utter error before the Lord: While the hypocrites heart worketh iniquity, his tongue ſpeaks villany; not that all his words are villanous words, for then he were not an hypocrite, but a profeſt prophane perſon; but he is ſaid to ſpeak villany, becauſe how pious, and ſpecious, and godly ſoever his diſcourſe is, yet he hath a villanous intent in ſpeaking, and his heart at the ſame time is working iniquity, to practiſe hypocriſie.

Now that I may a little more unmask this plotting hypocrite, I will ſhew you a fourfold plot or deſign, which ſuch Hypocrites have in their moſt zealous profeſſions of, and pretendings to Religion.

Firſt, They deſign their own praiſe or eſtimation among men; Chriſt makes this diſcovery in his Sermon upon the Mount (Matth. 6. 2. 5.) Do not as the Hypocrites, for all they do (whether they give Alms, or pray, or faſt,) is not for the glory of God, but that they may have glory of men, and be pointed at for charitable and holy perſons; Praiſe or glory with men is the food of hypocriſie, If the hypocrite have but an applauſe from, and acceptance with men, he doth not look after acceptance with God, which above all things a ſincere heart looketh after, and laboureth for, In this we labour (ſaith the Apoſtle, 2 Cor. 5. 9.) that whether preſent or abſent, we may be accepted of him; that's the higheſt ambition of a ſincere heart: But the Hypocrites ambition is to be accepted of, and to have praiſe among men; and therefore hypocrites are more troubled, if at any time they fail in expreſſing themſelves to men, then becauſe (which they do at all times) they fail and faulter in their affections to God; whereas he that is ſincere and honeſt with God, can bear it well enough though he hath not ſuch plauſible expreſſions towards men, becauſe he knoweth his affections ſtand right with God. That great Macedonian Alexander having run many hazards in War, turned himſelf to his Souldiers, and ſaid, What pains have I taken, what dangers have I undergone, only to be praiſed and cryed up by you? As many in their worldly actings aim only at their own praiſe, ſo do this ſort of Hypocrites in their ſpiritual and holy actings; they pray, and hear, and deal about their Alms for applauſe with men. What the Hiſtorian writes of the Camelion, is moſt true of them, they live by the air, and are fed with the Vapours of an earthly praiſe.

Secondly, Others (moſt of all the mighty, of whom Elihu is diſcourſing) act for God in the out-ſide of Religion, to get an opportunity of revenge upon men; they put on a fair ſhew of godlineſs, that they may have a fairer advantage to let out their malice, and vent their ſpleen. When either a real or ſuppoſed injury, falls upon an impotent and impatient ſpirit; malice will provoke to give that back which Charity teatheth to forgive. The tyranny of this paſſion gives no reſt to the diſcontented ſoul; all methods ſhall be ſtudied, and ſtratagems deviſed to content hatred by the compaſſing of revenge; and when common projects fail, the habit of zeal and Religion ſhall be put on, that the conceived malice may be let out: Such a man will cloath himſelf with the garments of piety, that he may cover the Inſtruments of cruelty, and do a miſchief unſuſpected. Saul was a hypocrite, and falſe with God, yet how did he encourage David to follow the War, and fight the Lord's Battels againſt the uncircumciſed Philiſtines; (1 Sam. 18. 17.) whereas Saul ſought not the honour of God at all, nor the overthrow of the Philiſtines, ſo much, as the overthrow of David; his intent was to take his own revenge upon David, rather then Gods revenge on them: For he hoped David would one time or other over-act his valour againſt the Philiſtines, and loſe his life, to win honour and reputation. How religiouſly did Abner (who was a great Prince as David called him) urge the promiſe of God to make David King (2 Sam. 3. 18.) and yet 'tis plain in the Text, that his deſign was to revenge himſelf upon Iſhboſheth, who had put (as he thought) an affront upon him, rather then to be inſtrumental for the fulfilling of the promiſe of God to David. Jezebel a great Queen proclamed a Faſt (which is one of the higheſt acts of Religion) while her purpoſe was only to get an opportunity to feaſt her ſelf upon the deſtruction of Naboth, and to drink his innocent blood. Herod a King (Matth. 2. 8.) deſired to have the young Child Chriſt, that he might come and worſhip him, but his deſign was to murder him; and becauſe he could not have his will to kill him alone, he reſolved to kill him in the multitude, commanding all the infants of ſuch an age to be ſlain, leſt he ſhould eſcape. We have a ſad inſtance of this in two of the Patriarchs, (Gen. 34.) I do not ſay they were hypocrites, but, I ſay, they acted a high ſtrain of hypocriſie, and put on a religious pretence for the compaſſing of revenge. Dinah, Jacob's Daughter being deflowred by Schechem, he ſued to have her for his wife, and would wipe off the ſtain of his luſt by a legal marriage; old Hamor pleaded for his Son, and Jacob was willing enough ('tis like) to ſalve the credit of his Daughter; but the Sons of Jacob anſwered Shechem and Hamor his Father deceitfully (verſ. 13.) and they ſaid we cannot match with you, except you be circumciſed, and ſo become Proſelytes to our Religion. If Shechem will be of their family, he muſt be of their faith; they ſtood not upon their Siſters joynture, the matter ſtuck only upon a ſcruple of Conſcience. What argument of greater zeal for God could they have given then this? Yet while theſe religious words were in their mouths, they had bloody Swords in their hearts: And all this pretence for circumciſion, was only that they might have an advantage, to come upon them in their ſoreneſs and deſtroy them; which (as the holy ſtory tells us) they ſoon after effected.

Thirdly, Hypocrites often deſign worldly gain, and aim at the purſe more then at God in all their holy ſervices. Many take up a profeſſion of Religion, as all men take up a Trade, that they may get a living by it; the Apoſtle ſpeaks of ſuch (1 Tim. 6. 5.) who ſuppoſe that gain is godlineſs; whereas he ſaith (verſe 6.) Godlineſs with contentment is great gain, they ſay, Gain is godlineſs; And all they look at by their profeſſion of godlineſs, is worldly gain. Religion is often made (as the Apoſtles word is, 1 Theſ. 2, 5.) a cloak of covetouſneſs; and he profeſſeth in the ſame place, that in the diſpenſation of the Goſpel, he had not uſed his Miniſtry as ſuch a cloak, God was his witneſs; but there are many againſt whom (though men cannot) yet their own Conſciences do, and God will witneſs, that their appearance in Religion is but the hiding of, or a cloak for their covetouſneſs. Hamor and Shechem uſed no other argument to perſwade their Citizens to take upon them the ſeal of the Covenant, but only this, Shall not their Cattel, and their Subſtance, and every Beaſt of theirs, be ours? (Gen. 34. 27.) And it ſeems the very mention of their own emolument overcame them; they thought it a bargain well made, to ſell a little of their blood at ſo high a rate, and to exchange their foreskins for ſo many head of Cattel. And hence it is, that among thoſe ſeven ſorts of Phariſees collected out of the Talmud, the firſt are called Phariſæi Shechemitæ, receiving (it ſeems) both their Order and Denomination from theſe Shechemites, becauſe as they turned Hebrews, ſo theſe became Phariſees upon the hopes of worldly benefit. And ſuch were thoſe Phariſees in truth, whatſoever their Title was, who (as was touched before) devoured widows houſes, and in a pretence made long prayers. As it is a very great point of ungodlineſs (prophaneneſs indeed) to ſay, What profit is there in ſerving the Lord? So it is groſs hypocriſie to take up Religion meerly for profit; there is profit, even worldly profit in Religion; Godlineſs is profitable for all things, (1 Tim. 4. 8.) and hath the promiſe of this life as well as of that to come; but wo to thoſe that take it up deſigning profit, and the filling either of their purſes, or their bellies. Our Saviours Divine Spirit quickly diſcovered this carnal Spirit in his followers, (John 6. 26.) Ye ſeek me not becauſe ye ſaw the miracles, but becauſe ye did eat of the loaves, and were filled; Judas followed Chriſt, but the motive of it, was in the bag, (John 12. 6.) The zeal of Demetrius to his Idol Diana, was kindled by as pure a fire as the zeal of theſe hypocrites to Jeſus Chriſt, (Acts 19. 24.) By this we get our living. They know nothing of the life of Religion, who are Religious only that they may live: If profit be the Loadſtone of our profeſſion, our profeſſion will never profit us; for what ſhall it profit a man to gain the whole world by a profeſſion of the name of Chriſt, if he loſe his own Soul? Satan charged Job with this groſs hypocriſie, (Chap. 1. 9.) Doth Job fear God for nought? As if he had ſaid, Job finds 'tis no lean buſineſs to be Religious, and therefore no wonder if he be found ſo Religious. Who would not do and be as much as he in Religion, to have his Fields full of Cattel, and his Folds full of Sheep, and his Houſe full of Riches? He knows well enough which ſide his bread is buttered on, what makes for his profit; all the account that he makes of Religion is, that he perceives by his Books, and the inventory of his goods, that it turns every Year to a good account: Job's ſlander is the juſt charge of many, they uſe Religion but as a ſtalking Horſe, to catch worldly riches.

Fourthly, The groſs hypocrite often deſigns, that which is higher in the eſteem, and more taking upon the Spirits of many then worldly riches, even then worldly power, or to get very high, if not uppermoſt in the World. 'Tis no new thing for men to make Religion a ſtair to aſcend the higheſt Rooms among men, or the ſtirrup to get into the ſaddle of honour, and when they have got high enough, then down with the ſtairs, or 'tis no matter for the ſtirrup by which they aſcended. Jehu was very zealous in the cauſe of God, and for reformation, but his deſign was for a Kingdom, or his own exaltation (2 Kings 10. 16.) he made a noiſe of much piety, Come ſee my zeal for the Lord, yet all was but a piece of State-hypocriſie. His care in deſtroying Ahab's Houſe and Baals Prieſts (according to the command of God) was but to pave the way to the Throne. The ſame way Abſolom was taken to his fathers Crown; he told the people he was troubled that they were no better governed, that they had no quicker diſpatch in their ſuits and buſineſſes; he told his father he had made a vow, and deſired the liberty of his abſence from Court, that he might go and perform it; all he pretended was righteouſneſs and Religion, yet he intended only to get an advantage to make his party ſtrong, that ſo he might thruſt his father out of the Throne, and get up himſelf. He ſeemed a Saint while he meant to be a Traytor. The Hiſtory of the Church reports of Julian the Apoſtate, that when his predeceſſor (being a Chriſtian) held the Empire, he highly pretended the profeſſion of Chriſt, and read a Goſpel-Lecture in the Church of Nicomedia, yet while he was in ſhew a Chriſtian, and in hope an Emperour, he was in heart a Pagan. He ſaw the times ſerved him not to act the Pagan openly, and therefore he ſubtlely betook himſelf to his diſguiſe, and perſonated the Chriſtian, even in the mortified way of a monaſtick life, that he might ſmooth his way to the Empire. To which having once attained, he preſently put off his diſguiſe, and, to his utmoſt, diſgraced and oppoſed the name and faith of Chriſt which he had formerly owned and profeſſed.

Socrates Hiſt. Eccleſiaſt. Lib. 3. C. 1.

Τότε δὴ καὶ τὴν ὑπόκρισιν τοῦ χριστιανίζειν φανερῶς ἀπεδύσατο. Tandem ſimulationem profeſſionis Chriſtianæ penitus depoſuit. Socrat. ubi ſupra.

Thus I have touch't upon the four grand deſigns of the groſs hypocrite: Firſt, praiſe among all men; Secondly, revenge upon ſome men; Thirdly, the gain of worldly riches; Fourthly, the attainment of power, dominion, and greatneſs in the World. Theſe are the four wheels of Satans Chariot, wherein he hurrieth Thouſands to the land of darkneſs, while they would be eſteemed Children of the light. Or ſome one of theſe is as the (primum mobile) firſt mover (of which Philoſophers ſpeak in their doctrine of the Heavens) carrying many with a rapt and violent motion in the ſphere of Religion, while they have in the interim a ſecret undiſcerned natural motion of their own directly oppoſite to this, by which they hope at laſt to ſteal on fair and ſoftly to their wiſhed periods.

Having thus far ſhewed the cloſe purpoſes of the deſigning hypocrite, who is ſo hateful to God and hurtful to man, I ſhall a little diſcover and unmask his hypocriſie, by ſhewing how we may know him, how we may look through theſe vails and ſee his ugly face.

Deſigning hypocrites are uſually diſcovered theſe four ways.

Firſt, By their affectation to be ſeen and taken notice of; they that will have praiſe and glory with men, muſt needs affect to be ſeen of men; for no glory comes to man, from men, but by what falls under the eye and obſervation of man. Job ſaith of murderers (Chap. 24. 13.) They are of thoſe that rebel againſt the light, they know not the ways thereof, nor abide in the paths thereof. The murderer cannot endure the light either natural or moral, becauſe that tells who he is, or what he hath been about. The contrary, in one ſence, is true of the hypocrite, he loveth the light, and will do nothing willingly, but as he may be taken notice of, and ſeen of men; as for thoſe acts or exerciſes of Religion, which are private retirements between God and his own Soul, he is a great ſtranger to them, he cannot delight in them, but any thing that may fall under publick obſervation, he can be forward enough in, Chriſt (Math. 6. 5.) gives us this plain diſcovery of the hypocritcial Phariſees ; They love to pray ſtanding in the Synagogues, and in the corners of the ſtreets, that they may be ſeen of men. This was ſo much in Jehu's heart, that he could not but blab it out with his tongue (2 Kings 10.) Come ſee my zeal ; a falſe fire kindled his zeal, elſe he had not made ſuch a blaze. It was, inſincere rotten-hearted Saul that ſaid (1*Sam.*15.13.) Come thou bleſſed of the Lord, I have performed the commandment of the Lord ; he was his own trumpeter, and would needs tell the ſtory of his doings himſelf, though he had done his buſineſs to halves ; Come thou bleſſed of the Lord, I have performed the commandment of the Lord ; as if it would not ſerve him to do his duty, unleſs Samuel had ſeen and taken notice of him. Abraham gave proof of the higheſt act of faith that ever was in the world, yet did Abraham ſay, Come ſee my faith ? Moſes led the people of Iſrael forty years in the wilderneſs through a ſeries of wonderful tryals and temptations, to the very borders of Canaan (which was one of the higheſt ſervices that ever man undertook) and was faithful in all his Houſe (Heb. 4. 2.) yet did he ſay, Come ſee my fidelity? Joſhua victoriouſly expelled the Canaanites, and divided their land by lot among the Tribes of Iſrael, yet did he ſay, Come ſee my fortitude ? We hear not a word of any of their doings from thoſe who were ſincere. When we ſee men forward to invite the approbation of others by making reports of their good deeds, it gives a ſtrong argument of ſuſpicion, that they have done what they have done with a bad heart, or, that (as is ſaid of Jehu) they have not ſought God with all their hearts.

But ſome may object, did not Samuel proclaim his own integrity before all the people (1*Sam.*12. 3.) Whoſe Oxe have I taken ? Or whoſe Aſs have I taken ? Or whom have I defrauded ? Whom have I oppreſſed ? Or of whoſe hand have I received any bribe, to blind mine eyes therewith ?

I anſwer ; Samuel ſpake this to upbraid their ingratitude and diſcontent, not to extol his own juſtice ; yea ſome conceive that he made this challenge, to give Saul a pattern how he ought to govern, rather then to commend his own government. I find the Apoſtle Paul making large reports of his own both doings and ſufferings (2 Cor. 11.) But if we peruſe that Chapter, we ſhall find him hovering in a ſuſpence of doubts and fears, whether or no it were convenient or comely for him to do ſo. How many Preambles and Apologies did he make before he fell directly upon that unpleaſing ſubject ? Would to God ye could bear with me in my folly (ſaith he) and indeed bear with me. And again, I ſpeak (as it were) fooliſhly in this confidence of boaſting. And yet all that he ſpake was not to make a boaſt of himſelf, but to vindicate his Apoſtleſhip from unjuſt and envious calumniations.

'Tis moſt certain, he that is ſincere deſires not to be open, but ſilently ſatisfieth his Soul with the Conſcience of doing his duty, and takes more content, in knowing his own integrity, then in knowing that others know it. Vertue loſeth nothing of her value, in his eſteem, no nor of her luſtre in his eye, becauſe ſhe is hidden from the eyes of men. Like the Earth (in this point) he keeps his richeſt minerals, and moſt precious gems of grace and goodneſs below in his bowels, or at the center of his heart, and will not let them be ſeen, till a kind of neceſſity digs them out. When Moſes after his forty days near acceſs to and communion with God in the Mount, perceived that his face did ſhine (Exod. 34 33.) he put a vail upon it ; every true Moſes whoſe acquaintance and fiducial familiarity with God, hath ſtampt upon him the impreſſions of divine light, is ſo far from affecting to dazzle the eyes of others with it, that he rather puts a vail of gracious modeſty upon it ; and will not let ſo much as the light of his good works be ſeen, but as thereby (in which caſe Chriſt commands it (Matth. 5. 16.) He may glorifie his father which is in Heaven. And herein a Chriſtian followeth the example of Chriſt, in whom though the Godhead dwelt bodily . yet he rarely ſhewed his divine power. And when once by a miracle, he had made the blind ſee, he alſo by command made them dumb concerning that miracle (Matth. 9. 30.) See that no man know it. It was our Saviours counſel to all his followers (Matth. 6. 5.) Let not thy left hand know what thy right hand doth, and it was his conſolation to them in the next words ; Tour father which ſeeth in ſecret, himſelf ſhall reward you openly ; yea (which is a higher conſolation then that) Himſelf will be your reward.

Secondly, As the deſigning hypocrite deſires to be ſeen in doing good, or to have the good which he hath done ſeen ; ſo he is exceeding cenſorious and rigid towards thoſe whom he ſees falling into evil. Chriſt gives this diſcovery alſo (Matth. 7. 3.) Why beholdeſt thou the mote that is in thy brothers eye, but conſidereſt not the beam that is in thine own eye ; concluding at verſe 5. Thou hypocrite ; why doth Chriſt call him hypocrite ? Surely becauſe he was ſo quick-ſighted to ſee a mote, that is, a ſmaller fault in his brothers eye, but took no notice of the beam that was in his own eye ; a ſpot upon his brothers Coat, was cenſured more by him, then his own wallowing in the mire. I do not ſay that the Patriarch Judah was an hypocrite, but, as thoſe two other Patriarchs, ſo he acted one very groſs part of hypocriſie (Gen. 38. 24.) For he no ſooner heard that Tamar was with Child, but he cenſured, yea condemn'd her preſently to death ; Bring her forth (ſaid he) and let her be burnt ; and yet himſelf was more faulty then ſhe. How hard a Judg was he of that crime in another, which was principally his own? Saul had ſinned greatly (1 Sam. 13. 9.) in offering ſacrifice before Samuel came, which was an uſurpation of the Prieſts office, and ſo great a ſin that Samuel told him preſently, God would therefore rend the Kingdome from him ; yet he thought to put it off with a ſlight excuſe. But in Chapter 14. when Jonathan only offended againſt a raſh command of his (putting a Curſe upon that people if any did eat before the going down of the Sun) he ſentenced him to death for it. In the 8. of John, how ſevere were the Phariſees to the woman taken in Adultery, they haled her before Chriſt, and preſſed the Law that ſhe ſhould be ſtoned to death ; yet, when Chriſt ſaid (*verſ.*7.) He that is without ſin among you, let him firſt caſt a ſtone at her, they being convicted by their own Conſcience, went out one by one. We ought to reprove and not flatter ſin in others; yet they who are extreamly ſevere againſt a ſin in others, uſually favour either the ſame or a worſe in themſelves. He that is ſincere, pittieth others, as much as reproves them, and he reproves them, though with ſharpneſs, yet with meekneſs, at once conſidering himſelf, leſt he alſo be tempted (Gal. 6. 1.) and bleſſing God who hath kept him in or from theſe temptations.

Thirdly, The deſigning hypocrite diſcovers himſelf by laying down or departing from the profeſſion of Religion, when his worldly ends are attained. Feined zeal cools or abates, is leſs and leſs towards the things of God, as ſuch zelots grow warmer and warmer in their neſts, and find their carnal intereſts more and more ſerved or ſecured. 'Tis reported by a Popiſh Author, that a Fryar or Monk was obſerved very preciſe, and circumſpect in all his ways , hanging down his head to the Earth, very humbly and devoutly, as if he meditated continually upon his mortality, or return to the Earth ; who afterwards being choſen Abbot or Governour of the Covent, grew very proud, high and inſolent. Some, wondring at this change of behaviour, took the boldneſs to ask him the reaſon of it ; O, ſaid he, I was but ſeeking the Keys of the Abby, and now I have found them. Having gotten what he ſought for, he laid aſide his ſtrictneſs in Religion, and threw off his vail, When Jehu that hypocrite was in his way to the Kingdom, how zealous was he ? Yet no ſooner ſetled in it, but he was unſetled in Religion, and turned Idolater, worſhipping the Calves that were in Dan and Bethel. When Julian had obtained the Empire, he had done with Chriſt, and gave all the world a full argument againſt himſelf, that he was but a hypocrite in his former profeſſion of Chriſtianity. David was as zealous for God and as holy when he was upon the Throne, as when he kept Sheep upon the Mountains, as good when a princely train followed him, as when he followed the Ews great with young. Moſes was as faithful when he was the Ruler of Iſrael, as when he was an exile in Midian. Joſeph was as gracious when he wore a chain of Gold, and had the power of all Egypt put into his hand, as when himſelf was a priſoner in Potiphers Houſe, and the iron (chains) entred into his Soul. I fear God (ſaid he, Gen. 42. 18.) when he had no man to fear. And when after his fathers death, his Brethren feared he would reckon with them for their old faults, or at leaſt be careleſs of and unkind to them, who had been ſo unkind and cruel to him, yet he would do them nothing but kindneſſes and courteſies, and thereof bid them be confident, (*Gen.*50.21.)

Fourthly, As ſucceſs diſcovereth ſome hypocrites, ſo the croſs diſcovereth many more. The hypocrite will run from his colours when he comes to the Battel, or ſeeth he muſt either quit the truths of God. or his own peace. If once he findeth that he cannot thrive by Religion, he will meddle no more with it. There is a generation who will appear no further for truth, then ſerves their own turn; and when they ſee they cannot ſerve that, by holding the truth, they will neither hold nor profeſs it any longer. They will venter no further in ſuch matters, then they may make a fair retreat, if they ſee themſelves in danger, or cannot carry on their own intereſts. Thus the ſecond ground is deſcribed (*Matth.*13.20,21.) He that heareth the word, and anon with joy receiveth it; yet hath he not root in himſelf, but dureth for a while, for when tribulation or perſecution ariſeth becauſe of the word, by and by he is offended. He hath enough of the word, when he ſeeth he cannot have that, and enough of the World too. Many will get abroad the Ship of the true Church in a calm, who if they ſee the Clouds gather, the Air darken, the Winds riſing, the Storm coming, they dare not ride it out in an angry Sea, but will be calling for the Boat, and row to the next ſhoar. Theſe never purpoſed to endure all winds and weather, with the Church of God, but hoped to be tranſported to the cape of their worldly good hope, and wiſhed for Earthly Haven. Their flight interprets their intents, and liſts them among deſigning hypocrites. The Houſe founded on the Sand, ſheweth as fair in a fair day, as that founded on a Rock; but when the rain deſcends, and the floods come, and the winds blow, you may diſtinguiſh it, by the down-fall. He was never more nor better then a meer out-ſide profeſſor, who doth not hold faſt his profeſſion in a day of trouble as well as in a day of peace; in the greateſt diſtreſs, as well as in the higheſt ſucceſs and triumph of the people of God in this World.

To ſhut up this point and obſervation, I ſhall only give three or four conſiderations, which may move all to take heed of hypocriſie. Chriſt ſaith (Luke 12. 1.) Beware of the Leven of the Phariſees which is hypocriſie. As Leven ſowres the whole Lump of Bread, ſo doth hypocriſie both the perſons and converſations of thoſe who are infected with it.

Firſt, Beware of hypocriſie, or of hiding what you are, for what you are, doth always appear to God, though not to men; All things are naked and manifeſt unto the eyes of him with whom we have to do (Heb. 4. 13.) though we are painted over, though we are cloaked, and hooded, and vizarded with pretences, yet we are naked before the eye of God. And that was the argument with which God preſſed Abraham to beware of hypocriſie (Gen. 17. 1.) Walk before me and be thou perfect; that is, remember thou art always in my eye and ſight, therefore take heed of falſeneſs and inſincerity. We uſe to ſay, There is no halting before a Cripple; Cripples know whether yours be a fained or real lameneſs. O take heed of halting before God, he knoweth how it is with you, he knoweth the temper of your Souls, as well as the Body of your converſations; he doth not only know what you do, but with what aims, with what heart and purpoſe you do it, Paul ſaid (1 Theſ. 2. 5.) We have not uſed a Cloak of covetouſneſs, God is witneſs. As if he had ſaid, God will quickly ſee through us, and find out our covetouſneſs, though we cover it with never ſo thick or fair a cloak of devotional profeſſions.

Secondly, Conſider, as the Lord ſeeth through you, ſo he will make you throughly ſeen, he will make you known or unmask you before men one time or other. As he will bring forth the righteouſneſs of a godly man as the light (after it hath been long hid under the darkneſs of uncharitable ſuſpitions or falſe accuſations) and his juſt dealing as the noon day, (Pſal. 37.6.) ſo he will bring forth the unrighteouſneſs of a hypocrite as the light, and his falſe dealing as the noon-day, though it have lain hid a while under the cloak and fair colours of the moſt pious ſemblances and proteſtations. God loves to uncaſe hypocrites, becauſe he is a God of truth; and becauſe it magnifieth his truth, juſtice, and omniſcience to do ſo. And he doth it many times, by letting them fall into foul ſins; they make fair ſhews in Religion, through reſtraining grace, and as ſoon as that bridle of reſtraining grace is let looſe. that very ſhew is gone, and they ſhew plainly what they are. The cloſeſt deſigning hypocrites, often prove open Apoſtates; and though ſome may abide long, (poſſibly as long as they live) in this vain ſhew or form of Godlineſs, without diſcovering their rottenneſs, yet at laſt their rottenneſs ſhall be diſcovered: For as Solomon aſſureth us (Eccleſ. 12. 14.) God will bring every work to Judgment, and every ſecret thing, whether it be good or whether it be evil. Or as the Apoſtle hath it (1 Cor. 4. 5.) He will diſcover the ſecrets of the heart, and bring to light the hidden things of darkneſs; which, what are they, but the hypocritical deſignings of men? We ſay, murder will out, and 'tis as true, Hypocriſie will out. The Lord many times brings it out to the ſhame of hypocrites in this life, and he will bring it out to the confuſion of all their faces, in that great day, when the ſecrets of all hearts ſhall be revealed.

Thirdly, Take heed of this deſigning hypocriſie; for as all who continue in it ſhall be diſcovered, ſo uſually they continue in it; your plotting cunning hypocrites, are very rarely converted. Simple hypocrites (in the notion toucht before) are often converted; all unconverted perſons that make any profeſſion in Religion are hypocrites, and many of them are ſimple ones they hope all is well with them, and that they have grace, though they have it not, theſe are often converted, but groſs deſigning hypocrites, of what rank or degree ſoever, are rarely converted. This is it which Chriſt ſaid to the Phariſees, (*Matth.*21.31.) Publicans and Harlots enter the Kingdom of Heaven before you; Publicans were the worſt ſort of men, and Harlots were the worſt ſort of women, yet theſe repented and received the Goſpel ſooner then the hypocritical Phariſees. The Evangeliſt made a like report of them (Luke 7.29,30.) All the people (that is, the common ſort of people) that heard him, and the Publicans, juſtified God, being baptized with the baptiſm of John, but the Phariſees and Lawyers rejected the counſel of God againſt themſelves, being not baptized of him; yea, as Chriſt ſpeaks in the next words, they were piped to, but they would not dance; they were wept to, but they would not mourn. All thoſe various diſpenſations of the Goſpel were fruitleſs to them; neither a more pleaſing nor a more ſevere Miniſtery won any thing upon that generation of deſigning hypocrites.

Fourthly, Conſider, as hypocrites are hateful to God, ſo God will deal with them accordingly; he will for ever ſeparate them from his preſence, and caſt them out of his ſight. A hypocrite hath a double mind, a divided heart; he is not half enough for God, (indeed he is nothing at all for God) and he is too much, yea altogether for himſelf, and therefore he ſhall have nothing at all of God, not ſo much as a ſight of him. It is ſaid in the 13 of Job, The hypocrite ſhall not come before him: Such as we hate, we cannot endure they ſhould come in our ſight: 'Tis a ſutable judgment, that they who have ſo often come before God with falſe hearts, and mocked him with a ſeeming deſire of being in his preſence, ſhould at laſt be thruſt for ever out of his preſence. 'Tis the portion of an hypocrite to have no portion in God, of whom he hath made ſuch a boaſting profeſſion. When the worſt of puniſhments is ſpoken of, it is called the hypocrites portion (Matth. 24. 51.) Give them their portion with hypocrites in the Lake that burns with fire and brimſtone. Hypocrites are ſpoken of as if they were the free-holders of Hell, or as if all other ſinners that ſhall go to Hell were but as inmates, and they the grand tenants of Hell. Conſider how miſerable a thing it is to be an hypocrite, if this be the portion of hypocrites, to have no portion in God. And as they ſhall not reign at all in the glory of the next World, ſo they are ſometimes checkt (ſaith the Text) from reigning in the glory of this World.

That the hypocrite reign not.] Reigning, as was ſhewed before, being ſtrictly taken, is the exerciſe of ſupream power, and in a large ſenſe may ſignifie the exerciſe of any power, or a ſtate of great proſperity.

Hence Note. Secondly, Hypocrites are high minded, and look after great things.

David was a King, he reigned over Iſrael, but it was not his own ambition, but the election of God, and his anointing, which brought him to the Throne. He could ſay of himſelf (Pſal. 131.1.) Lord my heart is not haughty, nor mine eyes lofty: Neither do I exerciſe my ſelf in great matters, or in things too high for me. Though David was high in his perſon and ſtate, yet his Spirit was not high; nor was his Spirit for high things, only God placed him on high. But here we ſee the hypocrite is climbing and getting to the top of the ſtairs, he is aſcending even to the Throne. Hypocrites are proud of that nothing which they have and are in ſpirituals, and they would have all, they would get high, they would be higheſt in temporals. There are two luſts which uſually reign in hypocrites, and both of them reſpect the World.

Firſt, The luſt of covetouſneſs, which is an inordinate deſire of getting and keeping the riches of this World. The Phariſees all the Goſpel over are taxed for hypocrites; and when Chriſt had preached that parable of the unjuſt Steward, concluding with this ſentence, Ye cannot ſerve God and Mammon; the Evangeliſt telleth us (Luke 16.14.) The Phariſees alſo who were covetous, heard all theſe things, and they derided him. Covetouſneſs and hypocriſie go together; they who have no true hungrings and thirſtings after the things of Heaven, are moſt hungry and thirſty after earthly things. We find Job in the 27. Chapter of this Book (verſ. 8.) ſpeaking of the hypocrites gain; What is the hope of the hypocrite, though he hath gained, when God taketh away his Soul? which implyeth that the hypocrite is a great aimer at worldly gain,

The ſecond predominant luſt of the hypocrite is, ambition, or deſire of getting to the upper end of the World. Chriſt chargeth the hypocritical Phariſees with this luſt alſo (Matth. 23. 6. Mark 12. 39.) They love the uppermoſt rooms at feaſts, and the higheſt ſeats in Synagogues. They are all to be uppermoſt, they muſt have the uppermoſt rooms at feaſts, and the higheſt ſeats in the Synagogue, both in Civil and Church meetings, hypocrites affected ſuperiority, or, Diotrephes-like, to have the preheminence, and (which was another ſymptome of ambition) they (ſaith Chriſt) love greetings in the market-place, and to be called Rabbi, Rabbi, which is a title of greatneſs and maſterſhip. Yea many hypocrites would not only have the uppermoſt ſeats at feaſts, and in the Synagogues, but the very uppermoſt ſeats in Nations and Common-wealths; They ſometimes affect to the head, who are worſe then the tail of all the people. There are hypocrites of all ranks, and among all degrees of men, ſome of low degree are in a very high degree of hypocriſie; there are hypocrites in rags and in ruſſet; there are hypocrites alſo in ſcarlet and in purple; hypocriſie may reign in and among thoſe that reign. It is a maxime which ſome Princes have held out to all the World, as the rule of their reigning; He that knoweth not how to diſſemble, knows not how to reign. Diſſimulation is a great part of hypocriſie, there is diſſimulation both as to the things of God, and the things of men; ſome if they know not how to diſſemble in both (at leaſt) with men, would not believe that they know how to rule over, or govern men. Now as many who are great, and in power, make little conſcience to diſſemble, or make uſe of hypocriſie, to carry on their government, and ſecure themſelves; ſo moſt hypocrites have a mind, and will uſe all means (not forbearing thoſe which are bad enough) to get into power, and make themſelves great. The ſpirit of hypocriſie is an aſpiring ſpirit.

Qui neſcit diſſimulare neſcit regnare.

Again, Elihu ſaith, That the hypocrite reign not, leſt the people be enſnared; here's not one word of the good government or protection of the people, which ſhould be the main buſineſs of thoſe that reign; the Text ſpeaks only of ſnares; That the hypocrite reign not, leſt the people be enſnared.

Hence Obſerve, Thirdly, Hypocrites getting into power, do either ſecretly or openly wrong and oppreſs the people.

They lay ſnares for them in ſtead of being ſhields to them. Hypocrites in power, enſnare chiefly two ways.

First, By their ill example, there is a great ſnare in that; Inferiors are very apt to be formed up according to their mould and manners who are above them; the example of Kings and Princes are ſeldome unconformed to by their Subjects. There is a great power in example, what is done perſwades, as well as what is ſpoken. And the errors of thoſe that rule, become rules of error; men ſin with a kind of authority. through the ſins of thoſe who are in authority. Jeroboam made Iſrael to ſin, not only by commanding them to worſhip the Calves at Dan and Bethel, but by commending that Idolatrous worſhip to them in his own practice and example.

Regis ad exemplum totus componitur orbis.

Secondly, They enſnare the people by ſinful and bad Laws; the Prophet denounceth a woe diſtinctly unto men of ſeveral ranks and places (Hoſ. 5.1.) Hear ye this, O Prieſts, and hearken ye houſe of Iſrael, and give ye ear, O houſe of the King; he directs his ſpeech, in that three-fold diviſion; firſt, to the Prieſts; ſecondly, to the body of the people; thirdly, and chiefly to the houſe of the King, why to the houſe of the King? Becauſe ye have been a ſnare on Mizpah, and a net ſpread upon Tabor. That Scripture may be interpreted; firſt, as an alluſion to ſuch as were wont to hunt upon thoſe mountains; Mizpah and Tabor were famous places for hunting, there they were wont to ſet nets, and lay ſnares to catch their game; now, ſaith the Prophet, ye have been even like hunters ſpreading nets and laying ſnares. Nimrod is called a mighty hunter before God; he was a hunter of men more then of wild beaſts. Now, look what nets and ſnares are to wild beaſts, the ſame are ſinful Laws to the conſciences of honeſt and upright-hearted men. And it is well conceived that the Prophet there refers to thoſe enſnaring Laws made by Jeroboam and the ſucceeding Princes in Kingdom of Iſrael, whereby they endeavoured to draw off the people of God from his true worſhip, and vexed thoſe who kept cloſe to it. Secondly, ſome expound thoſe words, Ye have been a ſnare on Mizpah, and a net ſpread upon Tabor, to ſignifie their ſetting ſpies upon thoſe mountains to watch and ſo to give information, who went to the ſolemn feaſts, that ſo they might be proceeded againſt according to thoſe enſnaring Laws. Which way ſoever we take it, 'tis clear, that Scripture reproves and threatens Judgment againſt the Prieſts and Apoſtatizing people of Iſrael, complying with, if not provoking the ruling powers to trouble thoſe who could not digeſt the Idolatrous worſhip ſet up by Jeroboam at Dan and Bethel, upon a politique conſideration, leſt the people going to Jeruſalem, ſhould fall off from him, and weaken the Kingdom of Iſrael in his hand. Another Prophet complained (Mic 6.16.) The Statutes of Omri are kept. Omri was a King of Iſrael, a ſucceſſor of Jeroboam both in his power and hypocriſie, he alſo pretended a zeal for the worſhip of God after his own deviſing, and therefore made enſnaring Statutes to entangle thoſe that were ſincere, and perſevered in the true worſhip which the Statutes of God appointed. The Prophet ſpeaks of a ſtrange kind of bridle, or of a bridle uſed for an unuſual purpoſe (Iſa. 30. 28.) There ſhall be a bridle in the jaws of the people cauſing them to err. A bridle is put upon the head of a Horſe or Mule, as David ſpeaks (Pſal. 32. 9.) not to bither them to err or go out of the way, but to keep them in the way. 'Tis evident by the context of this Chapter, as alſo by the expreſs Text of the 37. Chapter (verſ. 29.) that this bridle was the Lords power againſt Senacharib and his Hoſt, whereby as with a bridle in their jaws he diverted them from their purpoſe of beſieging Jeruſalem. 'Tis a truth alſo (to which we may warrantably enough apply thoſe words of the Prophet in a way of alluſion) that good Laws are like a bridle in the jaws of a people, the multitude or the moſt would elſe be like head ſtrong Horſes, if authority did not keep them in. 'Tis a great mercy when Laws are as a bridle to keep us from erring, but 'tis ſad when any Laws are a bridle in the jaws of the people cauſing them to err, or go out of the way of the Laws of God; ſuch Laws are not (which all Laws ſhould be) rules, but ſnares. Such were the Laws of Jeroboam, and the Statutes of Omri in Iſrael of old; and what Nation is there that hath not had experience in one age, or other, of ſuch Laws as have been a bridle in their jaws cauſing them to err, or a ſnare to their Souls and Conſciences?

Fourthly, When Elihu ſaith, That the hypocrite reign not, leſt the people be enſnared, he intends an act of divine wrath, upon hypocrites, abuſing their power to the hurt of the people.

Hence Note, God is highly diſpleaſed with Princes and Magiſtrates when they enſnare the people.

We read (Iſa. 3.12.) how the people of Iſrael were enſnared, and how the Lord was highly diſpleaſed with thoſe who did enſnare them. O my people, they which lead thee, cauſe thee to erre, and deſtroy the way of thy paths. Thy Leaders miſlead thee. There are two ſorts of Leaders, Firſt, Spiritual Leaders; the Miniſters and Preachers of the Word now, as of old the Prieſts, Levites, and Prophets, were Leaders of the people (and ſometimes proved their miſleaders, Jer. 23.13.) in Spirituals. Secondly, There are Leaders of the people in Civil things; ſuch are all Princes and Magiſtrates. We may underſtand that Text in the Prophet Iſaiah, of both theſe Leaders; as if he had ſaid, Thy Prophets and thy Princes miſlead thee, and cauſe thee to erre; And therefore at Ver. 14. of the ſame Chapter, God declareth his diſpleaſure againſt them, profeſſing that he would enter into judgment with the Ancients of his people, and the Princes thereof. The ſame Prophet Iſaiah (Chap. 9. 16.) complains of the ſame thing again; The Leaders of this people cauſe them to erre, and they that are led of them are deſtroyed. The Hebrew is, they that bleſs this people, (ſo we put it in the margin,) The Leaders of the people were ſo called, either becauſe it was a part of their office, to pronounce the bleſſing upon the people; or becauſe the falſe Prophets uſed to ſooth up the people in their ſins; and (as another Prophet hath it) to ſow pillows under their elbows, as if they were in a very bleſſed condition, and ſhould do well enough, notwithſtanding all the clamours of the true Prophets againſt them. And ſo the latter words, they that are led of them, are ſutable to the former in the Hebrew, being thus read in the margin, they that are called bleſſed of them; That is, declared or aſſured by them to be in the right way, and ſo ſuch as ſhould come to a bleſſed end, though indeed their end proved deſtruction. And if they who are miſled (or called bleſſed) fall into deſtruction, ſurely their miſleaders (who call them bleſſed) ſhall not eſcape. If the blind lead the blind, both fall into the ditch, (Matth. 15. 14.) only the blind leader, or miſleader, ſhall fall deepeſt into it.

Fifthly, Obſerve, As God is diſpleaſed with the hypocrite when he uſeth his power to enſnare the people, ſo the Lord ſometimes puts him beſides his power, or takes his power from him, that he may no longer enſnare the people.

The ultimate ſcope of the place, is not only to ſhew the Lord diſpleaſed with the hypocrite, but diſplacing him. When the Prophet had ſummon'd all ſorts, Prieſts, and People, and the houſe of the King, he adds, Judgment is towards you, becauſe ye have been a ſnare upon Mizpah, (Hoſ. 5.1.) Thus as God pulls down hypocrites, becauſe they are hateful to himſelf, ſo becauſe they are hurtful to others; hurtful to their Civil Liberties, and worldly Intereſts, over which God is tender; hurtful alſo to their ſpiritual Liberties, and ſoul Intereſts, over which God is more tender. The Kings of Iſrael (who were very wicked, and did much enſnare the people) went off their Governments, moſt of them, very ſpeedily, God did not let them reign long; yea, the whole Kingdom of Iſrael (which had not one good King, was diſſolved long before the Kingdom of Judah, which had many good Kings. God did not ſuffer the hypocritical Kings of Iſrael to hold their power, but gave them into the hand of the King of Aſſyria, (2 Kings 17.6.) becauſe (Verſ. 8.) they walked in the ſtatutes of the heathen, and of the Kings of Iſrael, which they had made.

From the whole verſe I would give one Note by way of Corollary.

A hypocrite is of all perſons moſt unfit for publick ſervice.

How unfit is he to have power in his hand, who can uſe it no better, then for the enſnaring of the people? A hypocrite is of a private ſpirit, he is all for himſelf, and therefore moſt unfit for publick truſt. We may ſay of the hypocrite, as the Prophet (Ezek. 15. 3.) of the Vine, Shall wood be taken thereof to do any work? Or, will men take a pin of it, to hang a veſſel thereon? No, it is not fit for that mean purpoſe or ſervice, much leſs would a man take a Vine to hew a beam or a pillar for a houſe out of it. Magiſtrates are as pillars of the houſe, or like great beams, to hold up and faſten all the hypocrite is ſo far from being fit Timber to make a pillar of the houſe, that he is not fit to make a pin to hang a veſſel on upon the wall. Power is never ſo improperly employed as in making ſnares, and yet that's the uſual imployment or improvement which hypocrites, high or low, put it to.

I have thus far opened the Text, and given theſe Notes from it, according to our reading; yet before I paſs from it, I ſhall mind you of another reading or verſion of this whole verſe, which carryeth the ſenſe quite into another channel. Thus

Who meaning God maketh (or ſuffereth at leaſt) the hypocrite to reign, becauſe of the offences or ſins of the people. The Chaldee Paraphraſe, the Septuagint, and Vulgar Latine agree in this, and the dependance (for clearing of it) may be made out thus.

Elihu having ſhewed in the 29. verſe, that if God giveth quietneſs, none can make trouble; and that if he hideth his face, none can behold him, whether it be done againſt a Nation, or againſt a man only, proceeds in this verſe to ſhew the juſtice of God in puniſhing the people, by putting power into the hypocrites hand.

The learned Mercer, I grant, is not ſatisfied with this rendring, as not being ſo ſutable to the Grammatical conſtruction of the Hebrew Text; yet, holding the firſt, he makes this as a conſequent of it; confeſſing that it may be taken in this ſenſe; That the hypocrite reign not who did once reign, becauſe of the ſins of the people; and ſo it intimates the ſins both of the Prince and People. Thus both readings correſpond, and are not repugnant but ſubſervient to each other. For if God ſuffer not the hypocrite to reign any longer, 'tis an argument that for a time he ſuffered him to reign for the ſins of the people, that is, to be an inſtrument of his wrath and vengeance upon them for their ſins. The ſame word ſignifies both a ſnare, and ſin; a ſnare ſet by others, and an offence or ſin committed by our ſelves; and well it may, ſeeing nothing doth more enſnare us then our own ſins. And as ſome are led into ſin by the ſnares which others lay for them; ſo very many by ſinning bring themſelves into ſnares: and uſually when a people have entangled themſelves in the ſnares of ſin, God ſets evil men at once to rule over them and entangle them with the ſnares of thoſe ſufferings which are moſt proper to their ſins.

And thus 'tis conceived Elihu anſwers thoſe expoſtulating demands which Job puts (Chap. 21.7.) Wherefore do the wicked live? Become old? Yea, are mighty in power? Here are three queſtions, Firſt, Why do they live? They are not worthy to breath. Secondly, Why become they old? They deſerve to be cut off in their youth, and not to live out half their days. Thirdly, Why are they mighty? Why do they command all, who uſe their might only to do miſchief? Elihu anſwers theſe queſtions in a word, God giveth power into the hands of evil men, becauſe of the ſins of the people. As if he had ſaid, if at any time you ſee the wicked in great power and proſperity, 'tis a ſign the people are very wicked, and God will puniſh and ſcourge them by the hands of ſuch for their wickedneſs.

This is a truth, and much is ſaid by ſome Interpreters for the making of it out from the Text; but taking it as 'tis given, I ſhall only give you two Notes from it.

Firſt, Bad Princes are ſet up by the permiſſion, yea diſpoſition of God.

He makes evil men to reign. The ſame power which brings wicked men into the world, ſets wicked men high in the world. It is of God that any wicked man hath a place in the world, and it is of God that any wicked man gets into the high places of the world. All the Kings of Iſrael from firſt to laſt were ſtark naught, and very wicked, yet they were all of God's ſetting up, though their own ambition or the ſatisfying of ſome luſt, put moſt of them upon aſpiring to get up. In the firſt Book of the Kings (Chap. 11. 29, 30, 31.) Abijah the Prophet finding Jeroboam (the firſt and worſt of them) in the way, caught the new Garment that was on him, and rent it into twelve pieces, and he ſaid unto Jeroboam, take thee ten pieces; for thus ſaith the Lord, the God of Iſrael, behold, I will rend the Kingdom out of the hand of Solomon, and will give ten Tribes to thee. This Jeroboam was ſo bad a man, that he was not content to ſin alone, but made Iſrael to ſin; yet even him did God ſet up,

Qui regnare facit hominem hypocritam propter offendicula populi. Vulg.

Conſtituens regem hominem delatorem propter ſcandala quæ in populo. Chald.

Non ſunt ita repugnantes hæ interpretationes, quin una ex altero conſequatur. Nam ſi non ſinit Deus diutius regnare hypocritam; certe aliquandiu ſinit; dat enim reges in iram. Merl.

Βασιλεύων ἄνθρωπον ὑποκριτὴν ἀπὸ δυσκολίας λαοῦ. Forte interpretes pro ממלך cum puncta olim vocalia deeſſent legerunt ממלך regnare faciens. Druſ. ממוקשי Ne ſint offendicula, quidam, propter offendicula populi. Nam מן etiam propter ſignificat. Druſ. Poſſit & ita accipi, ne regnet homo hypocrita; qui quidem regnabat ob offendicula populi, ut utriuſque & Regis & populi delictum noetur. Merc.

Cujus juſſu homines naſcuntur hujus juſſu ſa reges conſtituuntur, apti his qui in illo tempore ab ipſis regnantur. Iren. l. 5. c. 24.

and ſent a Prophet to him to tell him ſo. How unholy ſoever men are in their place, and how unjuſt ſoever in the exerciſe of their power, yet the holy and juſt God (for reaſons known to himſelf) placeth them in power.

Secondly, Obſerve, God permits wicked Princes to reign, as a puniſhment of the reigning ſins and wickedneſſes of the people.

Quidam reges ad utilitatem ſubjectorum dantur & conſervationem juſtitiæ quidam autem ad pœnam Dei juſto judicio in omnibus æqualiter ſuperveniente. Iren. l. 5. c. 25.

The power of wicked Princes is the puniſhment of a wicked people. Some Princes and Magiſtrates are given as a bleſſing, for the protection, peace, and profit of a Nation, and for the exaltation of righteouſneſs in it. Others are given as a curſe, for the vexation, trouble, and impoveriſhing of a Nation. The Lord takes this fully upon himſelf, (Hoſ. 13.11.) I gave them a King in mine anger, &c. Angry providences are the fruit of ſin. God gave Saul in anger, he gave Jeroboam and the reſt of the Iſraelitiſh Kings in anger; and as he gave them in anger, ſo he took them away in wrath. The ſins both of Princes and people, produce mutual ill effects towards one another.

Firſt, The ſins of the people are the cauſe ſomtimes why good Princes are immaturely or ſuddenly taken away from them. Joſiah that good King was removed very early for the ſin of Judah; Pharaoh Necho had never ſlain him, had not the people been unworthy of him. Hence that of Solomon, (Prov. 28.2.) for the tranſgreſſion of a land, many are the Princes thereof: He means not (as I conceive) many together, but many ſucceſſively, that is, good Princes go quickly off the ſtage one after another for the tranſgreſſion of the people of the land; But (as it followeth in the ſame verſe) by a man of underſtanding and knowledg the ſtate thereof ſhall be prolonged. Our Tranſlaters render theſe latter words in the plural number (as the margin hath it) by men of underſtanding and wiſdom ſhall they likewiſe be prolonged; that is, when there are many godly, wiſe, and underſtanding men in a Nation, God bleſſeth them with long-lived and aged good Kings or Governours.

Regum lapſus pœna populorum eſt; ſicut enim eorum virtute ſervamur; ita eorum errore periclitamur. Quid enim poſſit habere corpus reipublicæ capite languido.

Secondly, Whole Nations or a people are ſometimes puniſhed for the ſins of their Princes, (Jer. 15.4.) the Lord tells the Jewiſh-ſtate, he would bring all that evil upon them for the ſin of Manaſſeh. The ſins of Princes prove oftentimes the ſufferings of the people. As both by and for their goodneſs and vertues a people are bleſſed, ſo by and for their evils, errors, and vices, a people are endangered, yea ſometimes ruined: When the Head of a Kingdom or Common-wealth is ſick, the Body is ſeldom well.

Thirdly, The ſins of a people bring deſtruction both upon their Princes and themſelves together, and wrap all up in one ruinous heap, as Samuel threatned the people of Iſrael (1 Sam. 12.25.) If ye ſtill do wickedly, ye ſhall be deſtroyed both you and your King. He ſpeaks not a word of any ſin in their King, but tells them that their wickedneſs may bring deſtruction not only upon themſelves, but upon him alſo.

Uterum fert civitas hæc, timeo autem ne pariat, virum Correctorem malæ inſolentiæ veſtræ. Theog. Cur Domine Phocam imperatorem conſtituiſti? reſponſum datum, quia non inveni pejorem. Cur ſuperbis? non es creatus Epiſcopus, quod dignus ſacerdotio ſis, ſed quod civitas tali digna erat Epiſcopo. Anaſt.

Fourthly, (which is the point in hand) the ſins of a people cauſe the Lord to ſet evil Princes over them. When once a people refuſe the ſweet and eaſie yoke of Chriſt, or ſay, we will not have this man to rule over us, he in Judgment ſends ſuch to rule over them, as ſhall lay heavy yokes upon them indeed. God uſeth ſome Princes as his ſtaff to ſupport a people, and as his ſhield to defend a people, yea as his Sun to cheriſh and influence them with abundance of mercies. He uſeth others only as his ſword to wound them, or as his ſcourge to correct them for their ſin. Some are a bleſſing, others are an affliction to the people. An ancient Poet obſerving the City wherein he lived, ſwoln with vanity, and bringing forth dayly many monſtrous births of pride, luxury, and oppreſſion, he could not forbear to give his apprehenſion of the iſſue in this elegant fancy; This City (ſaid he) is with child, and I am afraid it will bring forth ſhortly (and what will it bring forth?) Some ſevere corrector of your evil inſolencies. When Phocas (a cruel tyrant) had got the Empire, and reigned, there was a good man, who prayed much, about him, and did even expoſtulate with God, why he would ſet ſuch a wretch as he was over the Empire; the ſtory ſaith, he received this anſwer from God; I therefore ſet him to govern, becauſe I could not find a worſe. And I find a like report of another, though in a lower degree of power, yet in great power, wherein carrying himſelf very inſolently, one ſaid to him; Why are you thus haughty and high-minded, why ſo proud of your power, God did not put you into the goverment of this place, becauſe you were worthy of it, but becauſe we were worthy to have a man of your worthleſneſs ſet over us. The learned Moraliſt treating of the righteous, though late vengeance of God upon men, hath this paſſage; God (ſaith he) uſeth ſome men as tormentors to afflict and puniſh others. Which is verified in moſt tyrants. Such a bitter medicine was Phalaris in his time to the Argentines, and Marius to the Romans. St. Auguſtine ſpeaking of Nero, maketh this concluſion; The power of Government is not given, no not to ſuch, but by the providence of the moſt high God, when he judgeth the affairs or manners of mankind juſtly deſerve and call for ſuch Lords and Maſters.

Deus quibuſdam malis tanquam carnificibus uſus eſt, ad ſumendum de aliis pænas; quod verum eſſe de pleriſq; tyrannis arbitror; Tale medicamentum fuit Argentinis Phalaris, Marius Romanis. Plutarch. de ſera Num. Vindicta. Etiam talibus (Neroni ſcilicet) dominandi poteſtas non datur niſi ſummi Dei providētia, quando res humanas judicat talibus Dominis dignas. Aug. lib. 5. de Civ. Dei. Cap. 19.

O let nations take heed; The ſins of a people, are the worſt ſnares of a people; ſin provokes God to ſet up Princes for a ſnare. As therefore the Pſalmiſt admoniſheth Princes, Be wiſe now therefore, O ye Kings, and learned, ye Judges of the earth; ſo I may ſay, Be wiſe, O ye people, and obedient, all you that are inhabitants of the earth, ſerve the Lord with fear, and rejoyce before him with trembling, kiſs the Son (ſubmit to Jeſus Chriſt) leſt he be angry, and give you ſuch Princes and Powers, or put you into ſuch hands as ſhall break and vex you to purpoſe, and make you know what it is to ſerve men in rigour, having refuſed to ſerve God in love. Many in all nations are apt to complain much, when they have any burdens upon them by Governours, but few complain of their own ſins, which cauſe God to burden nations with ſuch Governours; let all leave off complaining of evil Governours, and complain more of their own evil government, both of their hearts and lives.

Thus we ſee how this Text according to theſe diſtinct tranſlations, Firſt, gives warning to Princes, That the hypocrite reign not, leſt the people be enſnared; and, Secondly, gives warning to people, that they provoke not God by their ſcandalous offences, to ſet wicked Princes and powers over them.

VERS. 31, 32.

Surely it is meet to be ſaid unto God, I have born chaſtiſement, I will not offend any more.

That which I ſee not, teach thou me: If I have done iniquity, I will do no more.

Elihu having convinced Job, both of the power of God, to do what he pleaſeth, and alſo of his righteouſneſs, that he is juſt in whatſoever he pleaſeth to do, proceedeth to give him counſel, how to carry himſelf better towards God, then by his former ſpeeches and expoſtulations (hinted at the 5. verſe of this Chapter) he ſeemed to have done. In theſe two verſes he gives him (according to our tranſlation) counſel conſiſting of three branches.

Firſt, He counſels him to a due ſubmiſſion, to the hand of God. In the former part of the 31. verſe; Surely it is meet to be ſaid unto God, I have born chaſtiſement.

Secondly, He counſels him to reformation, or to a gracious reſolution of laying down every ſinful thing, or what ever was a provocation to God. This he doth once and again, twice in theſe two verſes; Firſt, in the cloſe of the 31. verſe; It is meet to be ſaid unto God, I will not offend any more; Secondly, in the cloſe of the 32. verſe; If I have done iniquity, I will do no more.

Thirdly, Elihu counſels Job, to pray for further diſcoveries, both of his ſins, and ſinfulneſs, as alſo of his duty, at the beginning of the 32. verſe; That which I ſee not teach thou me. Thus you have the diſtinct points of that counſel which Elihu gives Job, according to our reading of theſe words. There is another reading, which I ſhall touch, when I have firſt opened and proſecuted the words as they ſtand in ours.

Verſ. 31. Surely it is meet to be ſaid unto God, I have born chaſtiſement; I will not offend any more.

Theſe are child-like words, ſuch words as a faulty, but ſubmitting repenting child, ſpeaks to a diſpleaſed Father, when he is under his rod, (yet ſuch as become the moſt aged and grown men in grace) I have born chaſtiſement, I have been under thy correcting hand, forgive me O my Father, I will do ſo no more. Thus Elihu adviſeth Job, to beſpeak God his Father while he was afflicting him.

Some render the former part of this verſe, by way of interrogation, or queſtion, Hath he ſaid unto God, I have born born chaſtiſement, I will offend no more? Hath Job ſpoken thus to God? As if Elihu (making his appeal to the by-ſtanders) had ſaid, Ye all are witneſſes that Job hath not yet humbled himſelf under the correcting hand of God, but rather charged God with ſeverity, in dealing with him, and over-boldly enquired into the reaſon of his dealings. Our affirmative Tranſlation carrieth the ſame ſenſe with this interrogative, and queſtioning Tranſlation; for when Elihu ſaith to Job, It is meet to be ſaid unto God, I have born chaſtiſement; he ſuppoſeth, that Job had not ſaid ſo.

Surely it is meet to be ſaid unto God.] The Hebrew particle which we render ſurely, commonly ſignifieth, for, as giving an account or reaſon, of ſomewhat that went before; yet we render it well both here, and elſewhere, ſurely, according to the ſcope of the place; eſpecially ſeeing Elihu ſpeaking thus, is not giving a reaſon of what was ſaid before, but inferring a duty from it.

Again, The word meet, is not expreſly in the Hebrew Text, yet it is clearly implyed in it, and therefore added by our tranſlators to fill up, and clear the ſence; the Original is, It is to be ſaid unto God, we ſay, It is meet to be ſaid unto God,

I have born chaſtiſement.] The word chaſtiſement alſo is not expreſly in the Original, there it is only, I have born, but becauſe bearing muſt needs import, that ſomewhat is born as a burthen, and ſeeing according unto the ſubject matter that Elihu is upon with Job, it muſt refer to ſome affliction or chaſtiſement laid upon him, therefore we fitly ſupply this word chaſtiſement, It is to be ſaid unto God, I have born; what? (It cannot be meant of any outward corporal burthen, or viſible load laid upon his back; but, I have born) chaſtiſement, affliction, or correction; It is meet to be ſaid unto God, I have born chaſtiſement; That is, I both have and will bear, whatſoever thou haſt, or ſhalt be pleaſed to lay upon me; I will not diſpute thy burthens, but take them up. So then, this firſt part of the verſe is a direction miniſtred to Job, ſhewing him how to behave himſelf in the bearing of affliction; He muſt not ſtrive or ſtruggle with them, nor with God about them, but ſuſtain them. And this direction is not peculiar to Job's perſon, or to his caſe alone, but it belongs to all that are in affliction, let their caſe be what it will; all ſuch ought to bear quietly or patiently to abide under the burden which God layeth upon them. I ſhall not ſtay upon the opening of the ſpecial ſignification of that word chaſtiſement, becauſe it is not in the Hebrew Text, only thus, chaſtiſements are uſually taken for thoſe afflictions, or afflicting providences, which God layeth upon his own children; he layeth judgments upon the wicked, and puniſhments upon the ungodly, but properly, and ſtrictly, that which falls upon his own people is called chaſtiſement. For though in Scripture, there are diſpenſations of God towards his own people, ſpoken of under the notion of judgment, yet they have not a proper ſenſe of judgment, as proceeding from wrath, and intended for revenge. Wrath is the ſpring from whence judgments flow, and as to their iſſue, they tend to the ſatisfaction of Juſtice. This God doth not expect, at the hands of his own children, and therefore their afflictions are moſt properly called chaſtiſements, Surely it is meet to be ſaid unto God, I have born chaſtiſement.

Hence Note, It is our duty when the hand of God is upon us, or when we are under chaſtiſements to ſpeak humbly, meekly, and ſubmiſſively to God.

We ought always to be humble, and carry it humbly towards God, but then eſpecially when God by any afflicting providence is humbling us. The Prophet (Hoſ. 14. 2.) calling that people to return unto the Lord, adviſeth thus; Take with you words, and turn to the Lord, ſay unto him, take away all iniquity, and receive us graciouſly, ſo will we render the calves of our lips. As Elihu here makes a kind of directory, what a perſon in affliction ſhould ſay unto God, It is meet to ſay unto God, that is, for a man in thy caſe, to ſay thus unto God; ſo that Prophet, by the Spirit, ſaith, Take unto you words, and turn to the Lord, and ſay or ſpeak thus unto him; though not ſtrictly, ſyllabically, in ſo many words, yet to this ſenſe, and purpoſe, or according to this tenour, ſpeak thus, Take away iniquity, and receive us graciouſly. And when the Prophet ſaith, Take unto you words, his meaning is not that they ſhould affectedly ſtudy a form of words for God, much leſs that they ſhould artificially counterfeit words which their hearts had not conceived, or were not correſpondent to their hearts, (many ſpeak words, even to God, which never come near but are meer ſtrangers to the intents of their hearts) but ſincere words, humble words, words of ſupplication, not expoſtulating words, not quarrelling words, not murmuring words, not meer complaining words, but take to you words of confeſſion, and ſubmiſſion, and ſo preſent your ſelves and your condition before the Lord. The Preacher (Eccleſ. 12. 10.) Sought to find out acceptable words, and ſo ſhould we when we ſpeak unto men; Preachers of the word ſhould ſeek to find out acceptable words; not fine words, not ſwelling words of vanity, not flattering ſoothing words, but acceptable words, that is, ſuch as may find eaſie paſſage into the heart; or ſuch words as may make their paſſage into the heart, through the power of the Spirit of God. Now if the Preacher ſought to find out acceptable words, when he ſpake to the people, much more ſhould we when we ſpeak to God. O how ſhould we labour then to find out acceptable words! All words are not fit to be ſpoken unto God; the words that are (in ſuch caſes as the Text ſpeaks of) may be reduced to theſe two heads.

Firſt, They muſt be God juſtifying words, that is, words by which we acquit the Juſtice of God, how ſore, and how heavy ſoever his hand is upon us. When Daniel (Chap. 9. 7, 14.) was laying before the Lord the calamitous ſtate of that people (they were under as ſore judgments as ever nation was, For under the whole Heavens (ſaith he there) hath not been done, as God hath done unto Jeruſalem) yet all the words he ſpake unto God, tended unto the juſtification of God; O Lord (ſaid he) righteouſneſs belongeth unto thee, but unto us confuſion of faces, as at this day, to the men of Judah, and to the inhabitants of Jeruſalem, &c. We have not had one ſtroak more, then we have deſerved, there hath not been a grain of weight more in our burthen, then we have brought upon our ſelves, there hath not been a drop in our cup more then we have given juſt cauſe for, Therefore hath the Lord watched upon the evil, and brought it upon us, for the Lord our God is righteous in all his works, which he doth, for we obeyed not his voice; theſe are words fit to be ſpoken unto God.

Secondly, We are to take to our ſelves ſelf-condemning, ſelf-abaſing, ſelf-emptying words. Such we find in that Chapter, (Verſ. 5. 6, 7.) To us belong ſhame, and confuſion of face, &c. Theſe are the words we ſhould take to our ſelves, and thus it is meet to be ſaid unto God, whenſoever his chaſtiſements are upon us.

Secondly, Obſerve, It is our duty to acknowledg it to God, that he hath chaſtened us, when he hath.

We muſt own his hand in afflicting us, as much as in proſpering us, in caſting us down, as much as in lifting us up, in wounding us, as much as in healing us; It is meet to be ſaid unto God, we have born chaſtiſement, thy hand hath been upon us. The neglect of, or rather obſtinacy againſt this, is charged as a great ſin (Iſa. 26. 17.) Lord, when thy hand is lifted up, they will not ſee; that is, they will not acknowledg thy moſt eminent appearances in anger againſt them. 'Tis ſo with many at this day, though there be a hand of God (as it were) viſibly afflicting their bodies, and eſtates, their children and families; yet they will not ſee, that it is a hand of God; but ſay as the Philiſtines, it is a chance, or, it is our ill fortune; it is from the negligence of this man, or from the malice of that other man. All this while there is no acknowledgment of the hand of God. They ſay not with Eli, (1 Sam. 3.18.) It is the Lord; nor with David, (Pſal. 39. 9, 10.) I was dumb, I opened not my mouth, becauſe thou didſt it; Remove thy ſtroke away from me, I am conſumed by the blow of thine hand. It is as much our duty, and for the glory of God, to confeſs that our afflictions are of God, as our mercies and favours.

Thirdly, Obſerve, The chaſtenings of God muſt be born, they muſt be endured.

Many are chaſtiſed who cannot ſay they have born chaſtiſements; It's an ordinary thing to be under chaſtiſement, but its a great thing and requires much holy skill and ſpiritualneſs to bear a chaſtiſement; the duty of a Chriſtian lies moſt in two points.

Firſt in doing, or in active obedience.

Secondly in ſuffering, or in paſſive obedience, and there is as much of God, as much of grace, as much of holineſs, yea I may ſay much more held out in bearing and in ſuffering, then there is in acting or in doing.

But you will ſay, what is it to bear, that you make it ſo difficult a matter to bear chaſtiſements? How muſt chaſtiſements be born? Or what is it to bear them?

I will anſwer the queſtion under two heads. Firſt, Negatively, To bear chaſtiſement is not,

Firſt, meerly to find or feel it upon our ſhoulders as a burthen which pincheth or preſſeth us; ſo a beaſt may bear.

Secondly, It is not a bearing meerly becauſe we cannot help it, or be rid of our burden, for ſo the worſt of men may bear; they bear the greateſt burthens that God layeth upon them, becauſe they cannot avoid them, nor eaſe themſelves of them.

Thirdly, It is not a bearing ſtoutly, or ſlightingly, to make nothing of it; ſo proud men bear, men of unſubdued ſpirits unto God, and his word, regard not what they bear, nor what God doth to them.

Fourthly, It is not a bearing them ſowrly or ſullenly; for ſo diſcontented perſons bear; yea, ſo the Devil beareth the burthen which the hand of God hath laid upon him.

Fifthly, Nor is it a bearing chaſtiſement faintly or diſpondingly; ſo weak believers bear. To bear and faint, is not the bearing of faith. Neither of theſe are the bearing of chaſtiſement which Elihu intends in this counſel, when he ſaith, It is meet to be ſaid unto God, I have born chaſtiſement. Thus ye ſee the Negative, what the bearing of it is not?

Secondly, I anſwer affirmatively, To bear a chaſtiſement as an act or work of grace, is Firſt to bear it ſenſibly; that is, feeling the weight of the hand of God, and taſting the bitterneſs of that cup of ſorrow which he giveth us to drink.

Secondly, 'Tis a bearing of it ſubmittingly, humbly, patiently, laying our ſelves down at the foot of God, and ſaying, as Eli did, Let him do what ſeemeth him good; or as David, (2 Sam. 15. 26.) Behold, here I am, let him do to me as ſeemeth good unto him. We never bear any evil of affliction well, till we can ſay (with a ſweet reſignation of our ſelves) to God, do with us what ſeemeth to thee good. And (for our encouragement I may ſay) nothing can hurt a godly man which ſeemeth good to God.

Thirdly, 'Tis a contentful bearing, or a bearing contentedly; Thus Chriſt ſpake (Pſal. 40. and 'tis cited by the Apoſtle Heb. 10.) Lo, I come to do thy will, I am content to do it; what was that? It was to bear or ſuffer; the greateſt part of what Chriſt was to do, was to bear or ſuffer the chaſtiſement of our peace, (Iſa. 53. 5.) and in ſuffering to be made a ſacrifice for us; his contentment to do the will of God, was a contentment to ſuffer. Of ſuch a ſpirit ſhould the people of God be; bearing chaſtiſement not only patiently, but contentedly; this is hard, but this cannot be left out in the full exerciſe of that grace.

Fourthly, 'Tis to bear it (more then contentedly) willingly; how free was Chriſt to bear, when he ſaid (John 18. 11.) The cup which my Father hath given me, ſhall I not drink it? Surely I will, I am willing to drink it, though it be a bitter cup. We are not to will our ſufferings, but to ſuffer them willingly; there is a vaſt difference between theſe two; I do not ſay we are to will our ſufferings, but we are to ſuffer them willingly; we muſt ſuffer what, and how, and when, and how long God will; and when God willeth our ſufferings, we muſt ſuffer with our wills, or be willing to ſuffer.

Fifthly, To bear chaſtiſement in the ſenſe here intended, is not only to bear it with our will, but with our affections, not only willingly, but acceptably, and embracingly; 'tis to ſay welcom croſs, becauſe it is the will of God. There is no chaſtiſement that we can rejoyce in, or have any affection to, conſidered in it ſelf, but to bear chaſtiſement in contemplation of the will of God, ſhould work our hearts to an accepting, to an embracing, to a welcoming of it; we ſhould ſay to all our ſufferings, welcom, by the will of God.

Sixthly, 'Tis to bear it prayerfully; we muſt bear ſilently in oppoſition to complaining; but we muſt not bear ſilently in oppoſition to praying. While chaſtiſement is upon our backs, ſupplications muſt be in our mouths; and we muſt pray, firſt, That we may ſee the reaſon why or for what cauſe God chaſteneth us: Secondly, We muſt pray, that we may anſwer the ends which God aimeth at in chaſtening us. Thirdly, That we may have freſh power to bear his chaſtenings. Fourthly, That God would be pleaſed to remove our chaſtenings. While we bear chaſtenings, we may pray, and pray hard that God would take them away. David had no ſooner ſaid, I opened not my mouth, (that is, complainingly) becauſe thou didſt it (Pſal. 39. 9.) but preſently he opened his mouth in prayer (Verſ. 10.) Remove thy ſtroke away from me. While we bear our croſs patiently and willingly, it would be our ſin not to pray for deliverance from it. To ſay I am under a chaſtiſement, and let the Lord keep it upon me as long as he will, I will never ask him to take it off, were a moſt unbecoming frame of ſpirit. They that bear affliction moſt cheerfully, ſhould pray moſt earneſtly to be eaſed of it; we muſt be willing to bear them always, yet we muſt pray that we may not bear them long. If a child under the rod of a parent, ſhould not ſay, pray Father ſtay your hand, it is enough, but let him go on ſtriking, and never intimate a deſire of his forbearance, this were a ſign of ſtubbornneſs, not of patience and ſubmiſſion. 'Tis as bad not to ask releaſe from our troubles, as to murmure at them, or to be unquiet under them. Remember then, you muſt be as much in the exerciſe of prayer as of patience under the croſs, and that in theſe four reſpects. Thus you have the anſwer to that queſtion; by which it appears, that 'tis no eaſie matter to ſay what Elihu ſaith, It is meet to be ſaid unto God, I have born chaſtiſement?

There is yet another queſtion, (for ſome may demand) why ſhould chaſtiſements be thus born? I anſwer, Firſt, We muſt bear them according to all the rules before given, becauſe they come from God. Our afflictions are Gods allotment, we muſt bear what he appoints: therefore old Eli, though he had failed, and ſinned greatly, and ſo brought a cloud of calamity upon himſelf and his family (the very report whereof, as Samuel told him, would make both ears of every one that heard it, to tingle) yet he compoſed his ſpirit to a ſubmiſſive hearing of it, upon this ſingle conſideration, It is the Lord, and there is enough in that conſideration to make all men ſubmit. For firſt, The Lord is ſupream, and therefore what he doth muſt be born. Secondly, He is a Father, a child muſt bear what a Father layeth upon him; and as the Lord is a Father, ſo he is not a haſty, imprudent, or paſſionate Father, but a moſt wiſe and judicious Father; therefore 'tis our intereſt as well as our duty to bear his chaſtiſements. Yea, he is a gracious, tender, and compaſſionate Father, and when we know he that layeth a hand of affliction upon us, hath alſo a heart full of compaſſion towards us, we ſhould willingly bear his hand.

Secondly, Chaſtiſements are to be born in the manner directed, becauſe they are for our good, and ſhall we not bear what is good for us? It is good for me (ſaid David, Pſal. 119. 71.) that I have been afflicted; and ſo the Apoſtle (Heb. 12. 10.) For they verily for a few days, chaſtened us after their own pleaſure, but he for our profit, that we might be partakers of his holineſs. Chaſtiſements are for our profit, and ſhall not we bear that which is for our profit? If God ſhould lay chaſtiſements on us for our hurt, meerly to vex us, and to put us to pain, or meerly becauſe he delights in our ſufferings, who could bear them? But it is meet to bear what God lays upon us, becauſe he doth it for our good and profit.

Thirdly, We muſt bear chaſtiſements in the manner ſhewed, becauſe unleſs we bear them ſo, they will do us no good, or we ſhall have no profit by them, and that's a miſery indeed. To bear ſmart, and find no advantage coming in by it; to drink gall, and to have no ſweetneſs come out of it; to endure loſs, and to have no kind of profit by it is very grievous. Now what ever chaſtiſement is laid upon any, it doth them no good, and they can have no profit by it, unleſs they bear it as was before deſcribed; it is not the bare being afflicted, that doth us good, but it is the wiſe management, or the ſkilful bearing of it that doth us good; and therefore we find, that the Apoſtle (Heb. 12.11.) when he had ſaid, There is no affliction joyous for the preſent, but grievous, adds, Nevertheleſs afterwards it yieldeth the peaceable fruit of righteouſneſs, (but to whom? What to every one that is afflicted, have they theſe ſweet fruits? No, but) to them that are exerciſed thereby. Afflictions bring no ſweet fruits to them that have them, unleſs they be exerciſed by them, How exerciſed? Afflictions exerciſe every one that hath them; they are to all a paſſive exerciſe, but to be exerciſed, notes here an active exerciſe; they who graciouſly exerciſe themſelves in affliction, ſhall without doubt find benefit and fruit by affliction.

But ſome may ſay, what is it to be thus exerciſed by affliction?

I anſwer (for the opening of that Scripture) to be exerciſed, is,

Firſt, To be much in ſearching our own hearts, and ways, or how 'tis with us, and what hath been done by us, (Eccl. 7.14.) In the day of adverſity conſider, that is, bethink your ſelves, Firſt, What God is doing. Secondly, What you have been doing. Thirdly, What becomes you to do in ſuch a day. The Prophet points us to the two latter Duties of ſuch a day in one verſe, (Lam. 3.40.) Let us ſearch and try our ways, and turn again to the Lord. To ſearch our ways, is to conſider what we have been doing; to turn to the Lord, is the great thing to be done, in a day of adverſity.

Secondly, As this exerciſe of the Soul conſiſts in ſearching our own hearts; ſo in ſearching the heart of God (if I may ſo ſpeak) that is, in an humble enquiry to the utmoſt, what God meaneth by any affliction, what hath moved him to afflict us, and we have as much cauſe to ſearch Gods heart, as our own in this caſe. Thus in that National affliction (2*Sam.* 21.1.) when the famine continued three years, year after year, it is ſaid, David enquired of the Lord, why is it thus? He ſearcht Gods heart by deſiring an anſwer from the Lord, what ſin it was which provoked him to that ſad diſpenſation. And thus we ſhould be enquiring of God by prayer what ſin he ſtriketh at, or what grace he ſpecially calleth us to act, by any affliction which he ſendeth either upon our families or perſons.

Thirdly, There is an exerciſing of our ſelves in ſearching the affliction it ſelf; firſt, into the nature of it. Secondly, into the circumſtances of it, how timed, and meaſured, by what hand, and in what way the Lord deals with us; this is a great exerciſe, and unleſs we are thus exerciſed under affliction, we get ſmart, and loſs, and bitterneſs, but no good at all by it. So much for the firſt counſel given Job by Elihu, It is meet to be ſaid unto God, I have born chaſtiſement.

His ſecond counſel as it lies here in the order of the Text, is about the reformation, or the amendment of what is amiſs.

I will not offend any more.] It is fit the afflicted ſhould ſay unto God, I will not offend. The root of the word here uſed, ſignifieth ſometimes the pains of travel in Child-bearing, (Cant. 8.5.) I raiſed thee up under the Apple-tree, there thy mother brought thee forth, there ſhe brought thee forth that bare thee. And again (Pſal. 7.14.) Behold he travelleth with iniquity, and hath conceived miſchief, and brought forth falſhood: It ſignifieth alſo in Scripture to corrupt, or to pollute, (Neh. 1.7.) We have dealt very corruptly againſt thee, and have not kept the Commandments, nor the Statutes, nor the Judgments which thou commandeſt thy ſervant Moſes. To deal corruptly, or to do corruptly, what is it but to ſin againſt or offend God? Every offence or ſin, ſprings from the corruption of our own hearts, and is a corruption of our ways and manners. Both theſe readings, I will not offend, or, I will not corrupt, meet in the ſame ſence; for to corrupt our ways is to offend, and to offend is to corrupt our ways; to do any evil is to corrupt our ſelves, or others. So then the meaning is plainly this, I will corrupt my way no more; the man in affliction muſt ſay to God in a deep ſenſe of, and ſorrow for his former ſins, offences, and corruptions, I will offend, I will corrupt no more. Now, comparing the former counſel with this;

Obſerve, Firſt, Chaſtiſement is for amendment.

The evil of affliction is brought upon us, that we may take heed of, and turn from the evil of ſin; (that's intimated by the connexion) therefore to go on offending, while God is chaſtening, is to add rebellion to our ſin. It was the brand of Ahaz (2Chron.28.22.) in the time of his diſtreſs, he treſpaſſed yet more againſt the Lord; whereas being in diſtreſs, he ſhould have ſaid to the Lord, I will treſpaſs no more.

Note, Secondly, When God chaſtens us, we ſhould promiſe amendment.

We ſhould tell God, we will offend him no more, we will grieve him no more, we will provoke him no more, we will diſhonour him no more; the leaſt ſin once committed is too much, therefore we ſhould engage to ſin no more.

But it may be queſtion'd, can any man make ſuch a promiſe, or take ſuch an engagement upon himſelf, when under chaſtiſement, that he will offend no more? Is that degree of perfection attainable in this life, to offend no more? How then is this meet to be ſaid unto God, I will offend no more? Muſt we promiſe things that we cannot perform? Is there any man chaſtened that offends not again? Saith not the Apoſtle James, In many things we offend all? Is it then meet to ſay this unto God, I will offend no more? Is it not ſinful to make a promiſe not to ſin? I anſwer, Firſt, By way of conceſſion. No man may promiſe, what ever his chaſtiſements are, that he never will ſin at all any more, no man can make any ſuch promiſe, neither is that the meaning here; but he that is under the chaſtening hand of God, may and muſt, promiſe that he will not commit ſuch, or ſuch a ſin any more; eſpecially not ſuch a ſin as he moſt ſuſpects to have brought the chaſtiſement upon his back; we may make promiſes againſt particular ſins; though we cannot promiſe we will never ſin.

Secondly, We may promiſe, when we are under the chaſtening hand of God, that we will offend no more, in ſuch a manner as we have offended formerly, ſo fooliſhly, ſo vainly, ſo negligently; we may and muſt promiſe to be more watchful, that we ſin not the ſame ſin again either for matter or manner.

Thirdly, When chaſtened, we may ſay unto God abſolutely, we will offend no more, with reſpect to the purpoſe of our Souls; that is, we muſt lay aſide all purpoſes of committing any ſin; yea we may, we muſt tell the Lord, 'tis the deſire and purpoſe of our Souls, 'tis our aim, and ſhall be our endeavour to offend no more. The aim of every true believer is not to ſin, though (in this world) it be not the attainment of any (1*Joh.* 2.1.) My little Children theſe things I write unto you, that ye ſin not: As if the Apoſtle had ſaid, I would fain wind up your hearts to ſuch a pitch, that you may not ſin at all; But if any man ſin, we have an Advocate with the Father; I know you cannot but ſin, yet let it be your care not to ſin, and your prayers to offend no more. And how ſhould we bleſs the Lord, if we could live without ſin, and be for ever rid of it! We ſhould wiſh a thouſand times more to be quit of ſin, then affliction; thus we muſt ſay unto God, we will offend no more.

Fourthly, Though we cannot promiſe, or take up ſuch a reſolution abſolutely, nor in our own ſtrength, yet we may and ought in the ſtrength of Chriſt, or to the utmoſt of that ſtrength and grace, which he gives out, and beſtoweth upon us.

I ſhall have occaſion to ſpeak further to this point, from thoſe words of the 32. or next verſe, (which are of neer alliance both as to matter and form with theſe here) If I have done iniquity, I will do no more.

Only before I paſs from this rendring of the Text in hand, take two Notes more; in that Elihu telleth the penitent perſon, he ought to ſay unto God, I will not offend any more.

Note, Firſt, A truly humbled and repenting Soul, is as careful to avoid the act of ſin for the time to come, as to be freed from the guilt of ſin paſt.

This holy care is a ſure argument of a good Conſcience. A wicked wretch may be deſirous to have former offences pardoned, but he hath not any unfeigned purpoſe not to offend any more; and uſually he hath no ſooner caſt up his ſin by a ſeeming penitent confeſſion, but he returns with the Dog to his Vomit by a freſh commiſſion of his ſin. Sorrow for ſin yields no comfort, if not accompanied with a care not to ſin. Chriſt was not ſo rigid to the woman taken in Adultery as her accuſers were, yet he ſaith to her, (John. 8. 11.) Go and ſin no more; as if he had ſaid, thy caſe will be ſad, though now thou haſt eſcaped or got rid of thy accuſers, if thou tradeſt on in this wicked way. And when David prayed for purging the ſin paſt, he alſo prayed for eſtabliſhed by the free Spirit of God, againſt ſuch-like temptations in time to come, (Pſal. 51.) as if he had ſaid, Lord, I do not ask pardon that I might take liberty to offend again, but I deſire thy confirming and preventing grace, that I may offend no more.

Secondly, From the extenſiveneſs of this engagement, to which Elihu directs the penitent perſon, I will not offend any more, neither in one kind nor other.

Note, He that is truly humbled for any one ſin, will to his utmoſt avoid every ſin.

He ſaith, I will not offend any more. He that loves God, cannot live in the doing of any one thing which God hates; but as he expects good out of all the promiſes, ſo he hath reſpect to all the commandments; whoſoever hath ſo, would not offend in any thing any more.

Further, as this latter clauſe is Tranſlated, I will corrupt no more.

Note, Firſt, Sin is a corruption.

We ſhall do well to look upon ſin in all its notions, to make it loathſom to us; this is one notion of it, ſin corrupts every thing and perſon it hath to do with.

Firſt, Sin is the corruption of our nature, the whole maſs of mankind, and the whole of every man is leavened by it.

Secondly, Sin is the corruption of our converſation, and of our way, (Gen. 6. 11, 12.) God looked upon the earth, and behold it was corrupt, for all fleſh had corrupted his way upon the earth. Moſes warns the people of Iſrael againſt ſin upon this ground, (Deut. 4. 16.) Leſt ye corrupt your ſelves, and make you a graven image, Read Pſal. 53. 1. Hoſ. 9. 9. Zeph. 3. 7. Zech. 3. 7.

Thirdly, Sinning is the corrupting of the Commandments of God, a ſinner as much as in him lieth makes void the Law.

Fourthly, Sinning is a corrupting of the Covenant of God; yea ſome kind of ſinning is a corrupting the blood of the Covenant, or a counting the blood of the Covenant as an unholy thing (Heb. 10. 29.) though the blood of the Covenant be in it ſelf infinitely above all corruption, yet ſin doth what it can to corrupt it.

Laſtly, Some render, it is meet to be ſaid unto God, I have born chaſtiſement, I will not break; which we may underſtand two ways. Firſt, I will not again break the Commandment; ſo it falls in with our Tranſlation, I will not offend. Secondly, I will not break; that is, thoſe rods, or bonds of chaſtiſement that thou haſt laid upon me; as if he ſhould ſay, Lord, thou haſt bound me in theſe fetters of affliction, and I will abide thy pleaſure under them, I will not ſtrive, but ſubmit, I will not break priſon, but wait thy time for my deliverance.

Ideo ad Deum dici debet perfero, non diſrumpam. Bez.

Hence Note, We muſt bear, not break the bonds of our affliction.

Some (like ſtubborn children under the chaſtening hand of a Parent) would even break away from God; or like malefactors, when under the hand of Juſtice, they would break priſon, knock off their irons, and get away. As the wicked do, and ſpeak concerning the bands and cords of Gods Commandments, (Pſal. 2. 3.) Let us break their bands aſunder, and caſt away their cords from us; ſo ſome ſpeak and do about the bands and cords of divine chaſtiſements, they will break from them, or break them, if poſſibly they can. Let ſuch remember, 'tis beſt when they are in Gods bands, to let him unty them, and when they are in his priſon, 'tis good to abide there, till he is pleaſed to diſcharge and let them out. The Apoſtles being in priſon, the Magiſtrates ſent the Sergeants, ſaying, Let theſe men go, but Paul ſaid unto them, they have beaten us openly uncondemned, being Romans, and have caſt us into priſon, and now do they thruſt us out privily, nay verily, but let them come themſelves and fetch us out. A godly man when under reſtraint by the illegal or rigorous dealings of the Magiſtrate, will not accept his liberty, upon unworthy terms; ſurely then he will not make an eſcape out of the hand of God unwarrantably, He is ready to accept his liberty with much thankfulneſs, but he will not force it with violence. A godly man would free himſelf from ſin, and get Heaven by a kind of force (as Chriſt ſpeaks in the Goſpel) but he would not free himſelf from ſuffering by force, nor get his eaſe by violence. When God binds him, he ſaith (according to this Reading) I will not break.

But you will ſay, who may be ſaid to break or get by force out of the chaſtning hand of God?

I anſwer; Firſt, they do it, by way of interpretation, who are impatient and unquiet in their afflictions. A child that ſtrives and ſtruggles under his fathers rod, breaks away from him as much as he can.

Secondly, They actually break from under the hand of God, who by any ſinful way help themſelves out of their afflictions. Such, when God hath bound them with the cords of affliction, go to the Devil to looſe and let them out. 'Tis ſad when God impriſons a man, But O how ſad is it to go to the Devil for a releaſe; yet ſo do all they who being under affliction, endeavour to free themſelves by any ſinful way; eſpecially when they who are perſecuted for the faith and truth of Chriſt, break their faith with Chriſt, and quit the truth before profeſſed, that they may quit themſelves from perſecution. O take heed of ſuch deliverances, rather die under the afflicting hand of God, or the perſecuting hand of man, then free your ſelves from either by putting your hand or ſuffering your mouth to ſin. Better be utterly broken by affliction, then ſo to break the bands of affliction; better die in affliction, then ſin your ſelves out of affliction. Let God who hath laid the burthen upon you, take it off, or elſe lie under it ſtill. Thus much for theſe two counſels given Job by Elihu; It is meet to be ſaid unto God, I have born chaſtiſement, and, it is meet to be ſaid unto God, I will offend no more; there is yet a third thing to be ſaid unto God, which Elihu gives alſo in Counſel, that which I ſee not teach thou me; But, before I proceed to that, I ſhall a while conſider another Tranſlation of the verſe already opened, very Conſiſtent with the Original Text, and much Inſiſted upon by ſome learned Interpreters, as being full of Goſpel ſenſe, and very ſpiritual matter. According to this ſecond reading the words run thus:

Sed ad Deum fortem, qui dicit condono, non deſtruam, dicendum eſt præterquam quod video tu doce me, ſi iniquitatem operatus ſum non pergam. Merl.

Verſ. 31. But to the Almighty God who ſaith, I forgive, I will not deſtroy; It ought to be ſaid, beſide what I ſee teach thou me, if I have done Iniquity, I will not proceed to do it.

The difference of the Tranſlation is very evident and eminent; we read thus; Surely it is meet to be ſaid to God, I have born chaſtiſement, I will not offend any more. This Tranſlation ſaith, But to God who ſaith I forgive, &c. It ought to be ſaid, &c. Mr. Broughton, is expreſs for this Tranſlation, rendring the Text in theſe words; Now unto the omnipotent which ſaith, I pardon, I will not deſtroy, this ſhall be ſaid, what I ſee not teach thou me, &c.

As the words according to our Tranſlation contain an humble and a very gracious acknowledgment of the Chaſtening hand of God, and mans promiſe of reformation; ſo according to this they contain a moſt precious deſcription of the moſt gracious diſpoſition of God, ſpeaking two things of himſelf to man.

Firſt, As pardoning.

Secondly, As not deſtroying. From this double diſcovery of God, a double duty is inferr'd, incumbent upon man. For God having thus declared himſelf ready to forgive ſin, and loth to deſtroy ſinners, every ſinner ſhould be induced to ſay thus to God; I ſee many of my ſins, and I believe I have many ſins more which I ſee not; therefore, firſt, I beg of thee, O God, that thou wouldeſt ſhew me what I ſee not, and, ſecondly, that thou wouldeſt keep me for ever from doing or committing again that evil which thou ſhalt ſhew me or cauſe me to ſee. Thus the 32. verſe is an Inference of a two-fold duty in man, upon that two fold manifeſtation of the goodneſs of God, as a God that willingly pardoneth ſin, and as a God that is unwilling to deſtroy ſinners.

Or we may give the ſum of theſe two verſes (according unto this ſecond Tranſlation) thus; We have firſt an Exhortation to repentance from the moſt merciful nature of God, both as ready to forgive, and as loth to deſtroy

1 Condono, in quo eſt remiſſio culpæ.
2 Non deſtruam in quo eſt remiſſio pœnæ.

his creatures. The former act importing the taking away of the guilt of ſin; the latter the remittal and removal of the puniſhment.

Secondly, We have here a direction about repentance, or to the penitent, ſhewing, how an humbled Soul ſhould behave himſelf towards God; He ought to ſay thus; What I ſee not teach thou me, and if I have done iniquity, I will do no more. Where we ſee the humbled Soul in the exerciſe of a fourfold duty; Firſt, He confeſſeth what ſins he knoweth; Secondly, He confeſſeth or ſuppoſeth, that he hath many ſins which he doth not know. Thirdly, He intreateth the Lord to ſhew him every ſin, whether of heart or life, which he knoweth not of. Fourthly, He engageth that he will not continue in any ſin which the Lord ſhall diſcover to him, or give him the knowledg of. You have thus the general ſcope of theſe two verſes according to the ſecond Reading.

I ſhall now a little open the words, and give Notes from them according to this Tranſlation.

But unto God who ſaith, I forgive.

It may here be juſtly queſtioned, how the Original can be render'd into ſuch variety; one Tranſlation ſaith, It is meet to be ſaid to God, I have born chaſtiſement; this other ſaith, To God who ſaith, I forgive, I will not deſtroy; It ought to be ſaid, &c. The firſt reading makes the words to be ſpoken by man; this ſecond reading gives the words as ſpoken both by God and man, or they are a direction given by the Spirit of God to man, what to ſay to God, Who ſaith, I forgive, I will not deſtroy?

Verbum נשא latiſſimè patet ſi quid aliud Hebraicum, inter alios tolerandi, parcendi, condonandi remittendi ſignificatum habet etiam ſolitariè poſitum ut hic.

I anſwer, for the clearing of that doubt, the difference of the readings ariſeth from the copious ſignification of one Hebrew word, which is rendred many ways in Scripture, eſpecially two.

Firſt, To bear, in which ſenſe we Tranſlate, I have born chaſtiſement. The word chaſtiſement, as was ſhewed before, is not expreſly in the Text, but ſupplyed, to make out the ſenſe, by our Tranſlaters: I have born, what? Thy hand, thy chaſtiſement.

Secondly, It ſignifies alſo to pardon, or to forgive; I ſhall refer you to one Scripture, in which that word is uſed in both theſe ſenſes (Gen. 4. 13.) And Cain ſaid unto the Lord, my puniſhment is greater then I can bear; that's the Text, but if you read the margin of our larger Bibles, that ſaith, My iniquity is greater then that it may be forgiven, or pardoned; the Text ſaith, my puniſhment; the margin ſaith, my iniquity; the ſame word ſignifieth both ſin the cauſe, and puniſhment the fruit. Again, there the Text ſaith, My puniſhment is greater then I can bear; and the margin ſaith, my iniquity is greater then that it can be forgiven: So that according to the Text, the words are Cains complaint againſt the juſtice of God; that he dealt over-rigorouſly with him, My puniſhment is greater then I can bear. And according to the margin, they are a deſcription of his deſpair of the mercy of God, my ſin is greater then that it may be forgiven. And as we find the word uſed in that place, both for bearing, and for pardoning; So in ſeveral other places it is Tranſlated by pardoning; take but one Inſtance in the Pſalms, where we find it Tranſlated twice in the ſpace of a few verſes to forgive or pardon (Pſal. 32. 1.) Bleſſed is the man whoſe iniquity is forgiven. And again, Verſ. 5. I ſaid I will confeſs my iniquity, and thou forgaveſt the iniquity of my ſin; So that, though there be a different verſion and Tranſlation of the word in this Text of Scripture, yet it is ſuch as is conſonant to the uſe of the word in other Scriptures, and alſo to the truth of the whole Scripture.

Yea, we know that in our Engliſh tongue, to bear with a man, ſignifies to forgive him his preſent fault, or not to puniſh him and uſe extremity againſt him for it. And therefore according to the exigence of any place, the word may be Tranſlated either way, and here it may be ſafely taken in both.

But to God who ſaith, I forgive, I will not deſtroy, it ought (or, it is meet) to be ſaid, what I ſee not teach thou me.

Elihu according to the reading now before us, brings in God thus ſpeaking, yea even boaſting thus of himſelf, I forgive, or I pardon.

Hence Note, Firſt, It is Gods own profeſſion of his own ſelf, that he is a ſinpardoning God.

And God doth ſay ſo much or profeſs this of himſelf, that when he was intreated by Moſes to ſhew him his glory, this was the chief thing which he ſaid of himſelf (Exod. 34. 6, 7.) And the Lord paſſed before him, and proclaimed the Lord, the Lord God merciful and gracious, long-ſuffering and abundant in goodneſs and truth, keeping mercy for thouſands, forgiving iniquity, tranſgreſſion and ſin. Here's my name (ſaith God) if you would know how I am called, or what I would call my ſelf, this is it, I am a God forgiving iniquity, &c.

And as God pardoneth ſin, ſo there is none in Heaven or in earth that pardoneth like him, that hath ſuch a name for pardon as God hath (Mic. 7. 18.) Who is a God like unto thee, pardoning iniquity, &c. The gods of the Earth, that is, Kings and Princes give pardons, and to do ſo is the ſweeteſt and choiceſt flower in the Crown of Princes, and they uſually ſhew their greatneſs by this act of grace when they come firſt to their Crown and exerciſe of their ſoveraign power. The Princes or gods of the Earth can pardon, but ('tis no diſparagement to put that queſtion) Can they pardon like God? No; their pardon is no pardon in compariſon of Gods pardon; yea their pardoning is a kind of condemning compared with the pardoning grace of God. The pardons which Kings give are but the ſhadow of his pardon, who is King of Kings (Iſa. 43. 25.) I, even I am he that blotteth out thy tranſgreſſion. As if he had ſaid, I am he, and there is none elſe; this glory is proper to me, and none can partake with me in it, nor will I give this glory to another. All ſins are committed againſt God, and (in a ſenſe) againſt him only, therefore only to be pardoned by him. Who can remit the debt but the Creditor? (Pſal. 51. 1.) Againſt thee, thee only have I ſinned. What debt ſoever we run into by any ſin committed againſt man, God only is the Creditor. All that men can do, is but to forgive the treſpaſs againſt themſelves; ſo far as man is wronged, he may, yea he ought to forgive, as Chriſt teacheth us to pray (Matth. 6. 12.) Forgive us our debts, as we forgive our debtors. All that we can forgive is only the treſpaſs done to our ſelves, and ſo forbear perſonal and private revenge. We cannot forgive the offence againſt God. For when Chriſt ſaith (John 21. 20.) Whoſoever ſins ye remit, they are remitted; that remiſſion is but the declaring of a pardon, it is not the beſtowing of a pardon, or it is only a miniſterial forgiveneſs, not an authoritative forgiveneſs; ſo to forgive is Gods Royalty; He ſaith, I forgive.

Secondly, To God who ſaith, I forgive, &c. Forgive! What? Forgive! Whom? Here's neither what nor whom, neither things nor perſons named, God barely ſaith, I forgive.

Hence Obſerve, The pardoning mercy of God is boundleſs and unlimited.

Here's no ſin named, therefore all are included, no ſinner ſpecified, therefore all are intended. I forgive, I pardon; the pardoning mercy of God knows no limits; it is not limited; Firſt, to any ſort of ſins or ſinners; Secondly, it is not limited to any degree of ſins or ſinners; let ſins or ſinners be of what ſort they will, let ſins or ſinners be of what degree they will, they are within the compaſs of Gods pardoning mercy. And as this Text intimates, that the pardoning mercy of God is boundleſs, becauſe it expreſſeth no bounds; So other Scriptures tell us expreſly that it is boundleſs, extending it ſelf to all ſorts and degrees of ſins and ſinners (Matth. 12. 31.) Every ſin and blaſphemy ſhall be forgiven. That a ſin is great, that it is extremely aggravated, is no bar at all to the pardoning mercy of God; he can as eaſily pardon great ſins as little ſins; even ſins that are as Crimſon and Scarlet, as well as thoſe of the lighteſt tincture. The die or colour of ſome cloaths or ſtuffs, is ſo fading, that (as we ſay) the next wind will blow it off, or cauſe it to die away, but Scarlet and Crimſon in grain never change their colour; yet the pardoning grace of God cauſeth Crimſon and Scarlet ſins to change colour, and makes them as white as the natural wool or ſnow, that is, takes them quite and clean away. Yea the greatneſs of ſin is ſo far from being a ſtop to pardon, that it is uſed as an argument to move God to pardon. David prayeth (Pſal. 25. 11.) For thy names ſake O Lord, pardon mine iniquity, why? Doth he ſay? Becauſe it is little, or only a ſmall ſin, a ſin committed raſhly, unadviſedly, or but once; no; he uſeth none of theſe excuſatory pleas for pardon, but ſaith, pardon my ſin for it is great. Moſes was not afraid to ſpeak for pardon upon this ground alſo (Exod. 32. 31.) Lord (ſaith he) this people have committed a great ſin, and have made them gods of Gold, yet now if thou wilt forgive their ſin, &c. There's a great deal of divine Rhetorick in that ſpeech; Moſes was not doubtful, whether God would forgive them their ſin, becauſe it was great, but he urged the Lord to forgive their ſin becauſe it was great. Where ſin aboundeth, Grace doth much more abound (Rom. 5.20.) and therefore God is ſaid to pardon abundantly, or to multiply to pardon (Iſa. 55. 7.) and whom doth he promiſe to pardon there? Even the man of iniquity, ſo that Scripture hath it; Let the wicked forſake his way, and the unrighteous man (or the man of iniquity) his thoughts, &c. If you who have ſinned abundantly, repent, I will pardon abundantly. The heart of God in pardoning ſin is infinitely larger then the heart of man can be in committing ſin: and as the leaſt ſin needs pardon, ſo the greateſt may have it; nothing hinders the pardon of ſin, but the ſinners not coming for it, or his not asking it. The ſin againſt the holy Ghoſt cannot be forgiven; but the reaſon is, becauſe ſuch as commit that ſin utterly reject the grace of God, and tread the blood of the Covenant under their feet, as an unholy thing.

Thirdly, The Text ſpeaks in the preſent tenſe; God ſaith not, I will pardon, or, poſſibly, I may pardon, but ſheweth what he both actually doth, and what he always doth, To God who ſaith I pardon.

Hence Note, God pardoneth preſently, he pardoneth continually.

I pardon, is a preſent, it is a continued act. To pardon is Gods work to day, and Gods work to morrow. As every Soul may ſay of himſelf, Lord, I ſin; not only I have ſinned, or I ſhall ſin hereafter, but I ſin: ſo ſaith God, I pardon; as men ſtand always in need of pardon, ſo God ſtands always prepared to pardon. He is (Pſal. 86.5.) plenteous in mercy, ready to forgive; The heart of God is never out of frame for that work, never indiſpoſed to it. David found him ſo (Pſal. 32.5.) I ſaid I will confeſs mine iniquity; he did not ſay, I have confeſſed mine iniquity; he was not come to a formal Confeſſion; only he had it upon his heart to humble himſelf before God, and confeſs his ſin; yet it follows; and thou forgaveſt the iniquity of my ſin. While there was but a holy reſolve upon his heart to confeſs his ſin, the pardon of it was given him. The holy Hiſtory of his ſin and of Gods mercy aſſureth us, that the word was no ſooner out of his mouth (2 Sam. 12.13.) I have ſinned, but inſtantly Nathan ſaid, The Lord hath put away thy ſin. Though God doth not pardon of courſe, yet he is in a continual courſe of pardon; therefore Moſes prayed (Num. 14. 19.) That God would pardon the people according to the greatneſs of his mercy, and as he had forgiven them from Egypt until then. As if he had ſaid, Lord, thou haſt been pardoning all along from the very firſt ſtep we took out of Egypt to this day, thou haſt exerciſed abundance of patience, long-ſuffering and mercy in pardoning this people, now Lord pardon us, as thou haſt done from Egypt to this day; do not ſtop thy acts of Grace. The very firſt act of pardon ſtands for ever, he that is once pardon'd, is always pardon'd: yet there are dayly renewings of pardon, and freſh acts of it every day.

Fourthly, The word render'd to pardon, ſignifies to take away; as to bear a burden upon our ſelves (according to the former tranſlation) ſo to bear, or lift it off from another.

Hence Note, Pardon is the taking away, or the bearing of ſin off from us.

An unpardoned Soul hath a burden of ſin upon him ready to break his back, yea enough to break his heart, were he ſenſible of it; the Lord by pardon takes this burden off from him. David ſpeaks of his ſins under this notion of a burden, (Pſal. 38 4.) My ſins are gone over my head, they are a burden too heavy for me to bear. Yea ſin is a burden too heavy for the ſtrongeſt Angel in Heaven to bear. But pardon eaſeth the Soul of that burden, or 'tis the unburdening of the Soul: Hence alſo pardon is called the removing of ſin, (Pſal. 103. 12.) Thou removeſt our ſins from us, as far as the Eaſt is from the Weſt. Pardon removes ſin even to the utmoſt diſtance, ſuch is that of the Eaſt from the Weſt. Pardon is called in another Scripture, the caſting of ſin behind Gods back (Iſa. 38.17.) Thou haſt caſt all my ſins behind thy back. Yea when God by pardon takes ſin from off our backs, he doth not only caſt it behind his own back, but he layeth it upon the back of his Son. Sin muſt lie ſomewhere till it is ſatisfied for; therefore pardon takes ſin off from us, and layeth it upon Chriſt, (Iſa. 53. 6.) He hath laid on him the iniquities of us all. While ſin is unpardoned, we bear it; and that it might be pardoned, Chriſt hath born it, (1 Pet. 2. 24.) He bare our ſins in his body on the tree. Pardoned ſin is taken off from the ſinner, and laid upon Chriſt; and he can do well enough with it, he can bear it, and diſcharge it fully, none elſe can: Indeed heaps of ſin lie on the Souls of ſome ſinners, and they feel them no more then a fly: what's the reaſon of it? Becauſe they are dead in their ſins, and nothing is a burden to a dead man, throw a thouſand Milſtones upon him, he feels none of them: but a Soul that is awakened, that hath but ſo much life put into it, as to feel a conviction of ſin, O how is that Soul preſt and burden'd with the weight of ſin! Yet till pardon take ſin off from the Soul, there it muſt lie, there it muſt abide; therefore Chriſt ſaith, (John 9. 41.) Becauſe ye ſay ye ſee, your ſin remains; What's that? You are unpardoned, your ſin is upon you ſtill; you think your ſelves very wiſe and underſtanding, you think you can do well enough without me, therefore your ſin remaineth; That is, it ſtands in full power and force againſt you.

Fifthly, Here are no conditions; God ſaith not, I pardon upon ſuch and ſuch terms, but I pardon.

Hence Note, God pardons freely, he doth not clog pardon with hard terms.

'Tis the glory of God that he pardons freely. The pardon of ſin may be conſidered, Firſt, In the Decree of God from everlaſting. Secondly, In the Execution of his Decree; which is, when any are effectually called and converted. Thirdly, As to the manifeſtation and Declaration of it to the perſon pardoned. A poor ſinner may be unpardoned in his own ſenſe, or in the Court of Conſcience, when he is pardoned in the Court of Heaven. Now as pardon is free in the Decree of it, ſo in the Execution of it, as alſo in the Declaration of it to the Soul; for though ſomething, yea much muſt be done in the Soul before pardon is declared, yet nothing is deſerved, all is of free grace. God doth not manifeſt pardon till man repents and believes; yet he doth not pardon him becauſe he repents and believes.

It may be objected, Surely there is ſomething in us which moves God to pardon, for ſaith not Chriſt of Mary (Luke 7.47.) Many ſins are forgiven her, for ſhe loved much. Hence Papiſts argue, that, pardon of ſin is from ſomething in us, ſhe repented much, believed much, loved much, therefore much was forgiven her?

I anſwer, That Scripture declares her great love to be the effect of great pardoning mercy, not the cauſe of it. Chriſt ſaith to Peter, much is forgiven her; this woman was a noted ſinner, and it appears plainly, that much hath been forgiven her, for ſhe loved much. That her many ſins are forgiven her, this is the teſtimony, ſhe loved much: The love of God to us, not our love to him, is the reaſon and original of pardon, (Iſa. 43. 25.) I am he that blotteth out thy tranſgreſſions for my own ſake. God pardoneth ſin for his own ſake, and for Chriſts ſake, not for ours. In one Scripture God ſaith (Exod. 34. 6, 7.) I will by no means clear the guilty. In another (John 6. 37.) Chriſt ſaith, He that comes to me, I will in no wiſe caſt out. Till the ſinner cometh to Chriſt, his ſins are upon his own account; that is, he ſtands guilty, and God ſaith, I will by no means clear the guilty; no man ſhall ever be clear'd of the puniſhment due to his ſin, while the guilt of his ſin is untaken off by the blood of Jeſus Chriſt: but beſides reſpect to the blood of Chriſt (which is the ranſom paid for us) God reſpects nothing out of himſelf as the reaſon why he pardoneth us. I forgive.

I will not deſtroy.] Our Tranſlation reads it, I will not offend. The word ſignifies firſt to offend or ſin; it ſignifies alſo to deſtroy; and becauſe deſtruction is a fruit or effect of ſin, one word may well ſerve for both; ſo we render it

(Micah 2.10.) This is not your reſt, becauſe it is polluted, it ſhall deſtroy you, even with a ſore deſtruction. Canaan was the reſting place of God himſelf, (Pſal. 132. 14.) and it was the reſting place of the Jews after their travel through the wilderneſs, (Jer. 31. 2.) but when once they had polluted the land by ſin, the land gave them no reſt, but deſtroyed them; that is, they were deſtroyed out of the land. Here God declaring himſelf gracious in pardoning penitent ſinners, promiſeth reſt to them, and freedom from deſtruction. I forgive, I will not deſtroy.

Hence Obſerve Firſt, God is able to deſtroy.

Thus God reported himſelf by Moſes, (Deut. 32. 39.) See now, that I, even I am he, and there is no God with me; I kill, and I make alive; I wound, and I heal; neither is there any that can deliver out of my hand. God doth not ſay I cannot, but I will not deſtroy; (James 4. 12.) There is one Law-giver who is able to ſave and to deſtroy: There is but one ſupream Law-giver, and that's God: and this one Law-giver is able to ſave and to deſtroy. There are many Law-givers that are neither able to ſave nor to deſtroy; or if they be able to deſtroy, they are not able to ſave. Men in authority, or worldly Powers, have not power always to act their authority, but there is one Law-giver that's able to ſave and to deſtroy; he can ſave thoſe that obey his Laws, and deſtroy all thoſe tranſgreſs them; he is too ſtrong for the ſtrongeſt ſinner, there is no making peace with him by oppoſing or overcoming his ſtrength, but by taking hold of his ſtrength, that is, by ſubmitting to it, (Iſa. 27. 5.)

Secondly Note, To forgive ſin, or to ſhew mercy to ſinners, is an act to which God declares himſelf more inclin'd, or better pleaſed with, then to deſtroy ſinners.

Every one that ſinneth deſerves to be deſtroyed; yet ſaith the Lord, I pardon, I will not deſtroy; I could deſtroy, and any one ſin committed by any man would juſtifie me againſt all the world in his deſtruction: Every mouth muſt be ſtopped, and all the world become guilty before God upon that account, (Rom. 3.19.) yet God doth not deſtroy. And that he hath no content in deſtroying, he binds it with an Oath (Ezek. 33. 11.) As I live ſaith the Lord, I have no pleaſure in the death of the wicked, &c. As if he had ſaid, I am not bent upon your deſtruction, I had rather be taken off, and ſave you, I pardon, I will not deſtroy.

If any ſhall ſay, Hath God no pleaſure in deſtruction? Hath he not a will to deſtroy as well as to ſave?

I anſwer, God hath pleaſure in deſtroying, but it is in the deſtruction of thoſe who obſtinately reſiſt his Will, who refuſe both his counſel and his Covenant; to ſuch indeed he ſaith (Prov. 1.26.) I will laugh at your calamity, and mock when your fear (that is, the thing you feared) cometh, as deſolation, &c. That, the men in whoſe calamity God laugheth are ſuch, is evident by the character given of them at the 25. verſe, Ye have ſet at nought all my counſel, and would none of my reproof. As if God had ſaid, you have laughed at my counſel, therefore I will laugh at your calamity. The Lord will declare himſelf delighted in their deſtruction who have deſpiſed inſtruction; and he will glorifie himſelf in the actings of his Juſtice upon them, who have ſlighted and put by the tenders and intreaties of his mercy. Yet ſtill God declareth himſelf more pleaſed in acting and putting forth his ſaving power, then his deſtroying power. The Prophet (Hoſ. 11.8,9.) moſt pathetically repreſents, as it were, a debate in the breſt of God himſelf between his Juſtice and his Mercy; How ſhall I give thee up, Ephraim? How ſhall I deliver thee, Iſrael? How ſhall I make thee as Admah? How ſhall I ſet thee as Zeboim? Mine heart is turned within me, my repentings are kindled together; (Ver. 9.) I will not execute the fierceneſs of mine anger, I will not return to deſtroy Ephraim. We ſee after the debate, the Lord determins for ſparing, not for deſtroying. So then, though he can, and will not only deſtroy, but laugh at the deſtruction of obſtinate ſinners, yet he loves to ſpare rather then to deſtroy.

Thirdly, From the connexion of theſe two, pardoning and ſparing mercy, God ſaith firſt, I pardon, and then ſecondly, I will not deſtroy; who are they whom God will not deſtroy? They are ſuch as he pardons.

Hence Note, Pardoned perſons ſhall never be deſtroyed.

As ſoon as Nathan had ſaid to David, the Lord hath put away thy ſin, the very next word is this, thou ſhalt not die, (2Sam. 12. 13.) if Davids ſin had not been pardoned, David muſt have dyed for it. 'Tis a Logical Maxim, When the Cauſe is taken away, the Effect is taken away; Sin is the cauſe of deſtruction, therefore when God takes away ſin, which is the cauſe, deſtruction the effect muſt needs be taken away too; pardon deſtroyeth ſin, therefore how can they that are pardoned be deſtroyed? Pardon ſwallows up ſin. As the Apoſtle ſpeaks of life, (2 Cor. 5.4.) That mortality might be ſwallowed up of life; Here, mortality ſwallows up our lives by degrees, but hereafter mortality ſhall be ſwallowed up at once of life; Now, as life ſhall then ſwallow up mortality, ſo pardon at preſent ſwalloweth up ſin; for as in our glorified ſtate there ſhall never any thing of mortality appear, ſo in a pardon'd eſtate, nothing of ſin ſhall appear as to hurt us. Sin pardoned cannot be found, (Jer. 50. 20) In thoſe days, and in that time ſaith the Lord, the iniquity of Jacob ſhall be ſought for, and there ſhall be none, and the ſins of Judah, and they ſhall not be found; why not? The Lord anſwers, for I will pardon them whom I reſerve: And if their ſins ſhall not be found, ſurely they ſhall not be found guilty, and therefore not deſtroyed: God may chaſten them whom he hath pardoned, but he will not deſtroy thoſe whom he hath pardoned; pardoned perſons may ſmart, and ſmart greatly for ſin, but they ſhall not die eternally for it, they ſhall not be deſtroyed for it. David was pardoned, yet God told him, the ſword ſhall never depart from thy houſe; and the Lord told him particularly of a ſore deſtruction upon a part of his houſe preſently; becauſe by this deed thou haſt given great occaſion to the enemies of God to blaſpheme, (thou being a Profeſſor, haſt opened the mouths of the wicked againſt profeſſion) therefore (though thou ſhalt not die, yet) the child alſo that is born unto thee ſhall ſurely die.

Sublata cauſa tollitur effectus.

There are two things which the pardon of ſin takes away. Firſt, the power or reign of ſin; where-ever ſin is pardoned, the ſtrength of it is ſubdued. God doth not pardon ſin as Princes do; they may pardon an evil doer, and yet he ſtill remain as evil and as ready to do evil as ever; they may pardon a thief, and yet he continue to be a thief ſtill; but if God pardons a drunkard, an adulterer, or a thief, he doth not remain a drunkard, or an adulterer, or a thief ſtill; God takes away the power of that ſin which he pardoneth. Secondly, The pardon of ſin takes away the puniſhment of ſin; it may leave ſome chaſtiſement, but it wholly takes away the puniſhment. The Popiſh doctrin ſaith, the fault is taken away by pardon, but there is a commutation of the puniſhment, eternal puniſhment is changed into temporal, either in this life, or that to come; hence their doctrins of Purgatory, and of Prayer for the dead, &c. all which ſtuff comes in upon this account. They caſt all men into three ſorts, ſome are Apoſtles and Martyrs, men very eminently godly, and they go immediately to Heaven: there are another ſort, and theſe are Apoſtates from, or perſecuters of the faith, notorious ſinners, theſe go immediately to Hell: there are a third or middle ſort of ordinary ſinners, and they go immediately after death; neither to Heaven nor Hell, but to Purgatory, where they muſt bear the puniſhment of their ſins till they can be prayed out: Chriſt hath only got ſo much favour for them (ſay they) to change their eternal puniſhment into a temporal. The grace of the Goſpel knows nothing of this Doctrin; that tells us when ſin is pardoned, all is pardoned, both guilt and puniſhment, both temporal and eternal, nothing remains but only chaſtiſement; how ſorely ſoever a believer ſuffers in this life, yet ſtrictly taken, it is but a chaſtiſement, and there remaineth nothing for him to ſuffer in the life which is to come. And if ſo, then

Pardon of ſin is a precious mercy. 'Tis ſo, Firſt, Becauſe it proceeds from the precious mercies of God. Secondly, Becauſe it comes thorow the precious blood of Chriſt, (Col. 1.14.) Thirdly, Becauſe it opens a door to all precious mercies; as ſin unpardoned with-holds all good things from us (Jer. 5.25.) ſo ſin pardoned opens the door for all mercy to flow in upon us. Chriſt ſaid to the ſick man (Mat. 9.2.) Be of good cheer, thy ſins are forgiven thee. Fourthly, It is a precious mercy, becauſe it ſtops and keeps off all evils and judgments ſtrictly ſo called, I forgive, I will not deſtroy. Our comforts cannot ſtand before the guilt of ſin, and our troubles cannot ſtand long before the pardon of ſin; (Iſa. 33.24.) The higheſt wrath of God appears in this, when he will not pardon; and it argues the greateſt diſpleaſure of man againſt man, when he prayeth that he may not be pardoned. That was a moſt dreadful prayer of the Prophet, (Iſa. 2.9.) The mean man is bowed down, and the mighty man humbles himſelf, therefore forgive them not; here was a prayer that they might not be forgiven; and the ground why he prayed ſo, ſeems to be a ſtrange, as the matter of it was dreadful. Is it a ſin to be excepted from pardon, to ſee a mean man bow down, and a mighty man humble himſelf? The meaning is, they bowed themſelves not to God, but to idols; all bowing and humbling our ſelves either to worſhip an idol, or in idol worſhip, is rebelling againſt God. We have a like prayer (Jer. 18.23.) the Prophet having ſpoken of the plots and deviſings of the people againſt him, turns himſelf thus to God, Thou knoweſt all their counſel to ſlay me, forgive not their iniquity, neither blot their ſin from thy ſight. Nothing can be wiſht worſe to any man then this, that his ſin may never be pardoned. And here it may be queſtioned, how the Prophet could make ſuch a prayer, which ſeems to have the height of all uncharitableneſs in it. I anſwer, firſt, The Prophet was led by an extraordinary Spirit to do this. Secondly, We are not to conceive that the Prophet prayed for their eternal condemnation, but that God would call them to a reckoning, and make them feel the evil of their own doings. There is a ſin unto death, for the pardon of which we are not to pray, (1 John 5.16.) yet there is no ſin about which we are to pray that it may never be pardoned. The worſt prayer that can be made againſt any man, is, that he may not be pardoned; and there is nothing better to be prayed for then pardon. It ſhewed the height of Chriſts love, when hanging on the Croſs, he prayed thus for his enemies, (Luke 23.34.) Father, forgive them, they know not what they do; And the Protomartyr Stephen breathed out a like ſpirit of charity, while he was breathing out his life (in a ſhower of ſtones poured upon him from more ſtony hearts, Acts 7.60.) with this prayer, Lord, lay not this ſin to their charge.

Thus, I have finiſhed this 31. verſe, both according to our own Tranſlation, and that other inſiſted upon by many of the learned; only from the connexion of this verſe with the next, according to the latter reading, To God who ſaith I pardon, I will not deſtroy; it ſhould be ſaid, that which I ſee not teach thou me, if I have done iniquity, I will do no more.

> Obſerve, The very conſideration that God is ready to pardon ſin, ſhould make us reſolved againſt the committing of ſin.

The ſin-pardoning mercy of God, is one of the higheſt and moſt ſpiritual arguments by which the ſoul is kept from ſin. There is forgiveneſs with thee (ſaith David, Pſal. 130.4.) that thou mayſt be feared; That is, becauſe thou art ſo merciful as to forgive ſinners, therefore they ought to fear thee, in doing what thy will is, and in avoiding whatſoever is contrary to thy will. 'Tis propheſied, that frame of ſpirit ſhall dwell upon the people of God in the latter days, (Hoſ. 3.5.) They ſhall fear the Lord and his goodneſs; That is, they ſhall fear to offend the Lord becauſe he is ſo good, and ready to pardon. It was ſaid by a Heathen (and it may ſhame many who profeſs themſelves Chriſtians, that a Heathen ſaid ſo) if I did know that men ſhould never know the evil which I do, and that the gods (ſo he ſpeaks in their language) would pardon and forgive the evil which I do, yet I would not do it. Surely, the ſpirit of a true believer muſt needs riſe thus high, and higher, upon the clear grounds of Goſpel grace, and diſcoveries of the free love of God. Cannot a true believer ſay, though I know that God will pardon my ſin, though he hath declared that my ſin is pardoned, and though I could be aſſured that men ſhould never know of this ſin, if I commit it, yet I will not do it. To God who ſaith I pardon, it ſhould be ſaid, I will ſin no more.

Si ſcirem homines ignoraturos & Deos ignoſcituros tamen non facerem. Sen.

I ſhall now proceed to the 32. verſe, which ſtands fair to either reading.

Verſ. 32. That which I ſee not, teach thou me; if I have done iniquity, I will do no more.

Some carry the general ſenſe of theſe words, as if ſpoken by God himſelf to Job, and ſpoken by an irony, or in ſcorn, as if he had thus beſpoken him; If I have afflicted thee beyond thy deſert, or have overthrown thy judgment (that Job had more then once complained of) if I have not kept to the true rules of reaſon and righteouſneſs in chaſtening thee; if in my dealings with thee I have done amiſs, or have not done thee right? Shew me wherein (O Job) and I will afflict thee ſo no more, I ſhall net ſtay upon this, but take the words according to our Tranſlation, as the whole verſe intends a further deſcription of a perſon deeply humbled under, and ſenſible of the hand, the chaſtening, the afflicting hand of God; who having ſaid (with reſpect to all known ſins) in the former verſe, I will offend no more, ſaith here in this verſe concerning all unknown ſins, That which I ſee not, teach thou me; and if I have done iniquity, I will do no more.

Si quid me fugit in te affligendo, vel ſi quid errarem tu me doceas. Si te vexando perperam egi vel injuſtè me habui, non ultra, id fecero, σαρκασμὸς, Merc.

That which I ſee not.] There is a two-fold ſight; Firſt, Corporal, the ſight of the bodily eye. Secondly, Intellectual, the ſight of the eye of the mind, or of the underſtanding; when Elihu repreſents the penitent afflicted perſon ſpeaking thus, What I ſee not, &c. he intends not a corporal ſight but an intellectual. Seeing is here (as often elſewhere in Scripture) put for knowing: the underſtanding is the eye of the Soul. How blind and dark are thoſe men, who have no underſtanding in the things of God! (Eph. 4.18.) When Chriſt had ſaid, For judgment am I come into the world, that they which ſee not might ſee, and that they which ſee might be made blind; ſome of the Phariſees ſaid unto him (John 9.41.) are we blind alſo? (Have we no eyes?) Jeſus ſaid unto them, If ye were blind, ye ſhould have no ſin, but now ye ſay, we ſee, therefore your ſin remaineth; That is, your ſin remaineth upon you in the power and guilt of it. In that ſenſe alſo Chriſt uſeth the word (Matth. 13.14.) Hearing ye ſhall hear, and not underſtand, and ſeeing ye ſhall ſee, and not perceive; ye ſhall have only ſuch a knowledg of God, and of the things of God, of his word, and of his works, as will be of no other uſe to you, then to leave you without excuſe. Seeing ye ſhall ſee but not perceive; ye ſhall have a fruitleſs and an unprofitable ſight.

That which I ſee not (or have no underſtanding of) teach thou me, is the prayer of the humble Soul. But what were thoſe things, which he feared or ſuppoſed he did not ſee? Thoſe unſeen things might be of three ſorts.

Firſt, Thoſe ſins which he did not ſee; and thoſe in a double notion, either corruptions dwelling in him, or evils acted by him. What corruptions, or what tranſgreſſions I ſee not, acquaint me with, anoint mine eyes that I may ſee them.

Secondly, Thoſe favours and mercies which he did not ſee (we have many mercies which are not known to us, or of which we take little, yea no notice at all) thoſe good turns, which I have received and have not been thankful, or have not improved and made ſutable returns for them, ſhew thou me.

Thirdly, Among the things not ſeen we may number the purpoſes, aims, and ends of God, in laying thoſe chaſtiſements upon him. As if he had ſaid, If I have not yet apprehended what thou driveſt at in my affliction, ſhew it me, I beg and heartily deſire a diſcovery of it. And if I have acted unduely with reſpect to thy aims in chaſtiſing me, I will do ſo no more. The acts of God are plain, but his aims lie cloſe and are not perceived, but by an enlightned, yea and a very attentive eye. That which I ſee not, &c.

> Hence Obſerve; Firſt, The choyceſt ſervants of God may be much in the dark about and ſhort in the knowledg of many things which it much concerns them to know.

Though every believer hath an eye, and an eye open to ſee the things of God, the things which concern his peace, yet the cleareſt-ſighted among believers know but in part (*1Cor.*13.9.) We all know, but we do not know all. Thoſe words of the Apoſtle may have a twofold underſtanding. Firſt, we know, but a little of any thing, that which we know we have but a part of it in our knowledg; in this life we know nothing throughly, nothing to the bottom, no not common principles. David ſaith (Pſal. 119. 96.) I have ſeen an end of all perfection, but thy commandment is exceeding broad; There is ſuch a perfection in thy commandment, that I cannot ſee, nor can any man come to the out ſide of it in this world. And as the holineſs of God in the Law is exceeding broad, ſo there is a height, a depth, a length, and a breadth in the love of God revealed in the Goſpel, which exceedeth all our knowledg. (Eph. 3. 19.) That ye may know the love of Chriſt which paſſeth knowledg, &c. We know but a part of that love of God, the fruits and effects whereof are all our portion. We are not able to comprehend, though we labour to comprehend the breadth and length and depth and height of it. Our meaſure of loving God is to love him out of meaſure; but 'tis a very ſmall meaſure of the love of God to us which we can know. Thus we know but little of that we know. Secondly, We know in part, that is, there are many things which we know not at all, we have no knowledg of ſome things, which may be fully known. Though we know many of our ſins and corruptions, yet we have ſins and corruptions which we know not of (Pſal. 19. 12.) Who can underſtand his errors? Who can underſtand the errors of his underſtanding? Who can underſtand the errors of his will? Who can underſtand the errors of his affections? Who can underſtand the errors of his actions? Who can underſtand them all? Yet they are all underſtandable. There are many errors in all theſe, which we know not to be errors, therefore we have need every one of us to pray as David there did, Cleanſe thou me from my ſecret faults. From ſecret faults in my underſtanding, from ſecret faults in my will and affections, in my practice and converſation. The ſecret faults which he asked pardon for were not thoſe faults which he had committed in ſecret, or which other men know not of; but thoſe faults which were ſecrets to himſelf, or which himſelf knew not of. Further, we know not our faults; Firſt, either in reference to the doing of evil, or ſins of commiſſion; nor Secondly, in reference to the not doing of good or ſins of omiſſion; nor Thirdly, do we know our faults in reference to the manner of doing that which is good. Though we do not quite omit a duty, yet we fail many times in the doing of it. We do little of the good which we ought, and little of the good which we do is done as it ought. We have ſecret ſins not only of commiſſion in doing that which is evil, and of omiſſion in not doing that which is good, but alſo in doing good. There are many flaws and errors in our doing of that which is good, which, though we perceive not, yet the pure eyes of God perceive. So then, as we ſee not all our errors in omitting duties, ſo we ſee not all our errors in performing duties; to ſee them requireth a ſpiritual ſight indeed. Many can ſee when they omit a duty altogether, and charge themſelves with a fault for it, but our faults in performance of duty, in prayer, in hearing none take notice of them, but they who have a ſpiritual eye, nor do they always take notice of all of them, nor fully of any of them at any time. We are much in the dark about theſe errors which accompany our holy duties. The iniquities of our holy things are many, and they lie very cloſe. We may quickly and eaſily fall into them, but we cannot eaſily diſcern them.

For, Firſt, though we perform an act of worſhip, of Church-worſhip, of inſtituted worſhip, right for the ſubſtance, yet we may miſs and erre in ſeveral circumſtances, and not come up exactly to the outward performance of it. Secondly, much more may we run into errors and faults in the performance of duty, as to the internal part of it, or that frame of heart with which a duty is to be performed. We ſeldom, I may ſafely ſay, we never come up to that zeal, to that ſelf-abaſement, to that faith, to that love and delight which ſhould be in us when we approach to and appear before God in the duties of his holy worſhip, whether publick or private. The beſt of Saints come far ſhort of knowing all the evil and faylings of their evil and deceitful hearts, while they are engaged about that which is good, how much more are they ſhort in the knowledg of God; and therefore what reaſon have we to ſay, as Elihu here directs the penitent ſoul to ſay; That which I know not teach thou me.

Secondly, Note, It is the duty of the moſt knowing ſervants of God to confeſs their ignorance.

When Elihu would have Job ſay, That which I ſee not teach thou me, he would have him confeſs, that there was ſome good or evil which he did not ſee. He that deſireth God to teach him, what he doth not ſee, doth therein acknowledg that he doth not ſee all that he ought. Our underſtandings are imperfect as well as our wills and affections; and our ſins or imperfections, whereſoever they are, muſt be confeſſed. The deficiency of our knowledg, or the imperfection of our underſtanding muſt be confeſſed as well as the imperfection of our will to do good, and of our doing good. David layeth load upon himſelf in confeſſing the faultineſs of his underſtanding, or inability to judg aright of what he ſaw before him (Pſal. 73.22.) So ignorant was I and fooliſh, even as a beaſt before thee. And the ſpecial point wherein he confeſſed his ignorance, was about the outward diſpenſations of God, in ſuffering wicked men to flouriſh. He had ignorant apprehenſions, and was quite out in that matter; and therefore befools himſelf and calls himſelf a beaſt, ſo far was he from ſeeing the mind and deſign of God as became a Saint. Such an acknowledgment Agur made (Pro. 30.2.) I am more brutiſh then any man, I have not the underſtanding of a man, I neither learned wiſdom, nor have the knowledg of the holy. This worthy man confeſſed his ignorance; and as the more we know, the more we ſee our ignorance, ſo the more we know, the more we confeſs our ignorance. They that have but little knowledg, are eſpecially defective in this point of knowledg to ſee their ignorance; and are therefore but little troubled with their ignorance. Many think they know enough; ſome, poſſibly, think they know all. They who have leaſt knowledg, are leaſt conſcious of their own ignorance. And as there are many ſins of ignorance, ſo ignorance it ſelf is a ſin, and therefore to be confeſſed and bewailed before God.

Thirdly, When Elihu brings in the penitent perſon confeſſing his ignorance, and begging inſtruction,

It teacheth us, Sins of ignorance need pardon.

As our ignorance needs pardon, ſo do our ſins of ignorance. The law of Moſes teacheth this (*Levit.*4.2.) If a Soul ſhall ſin through ignorance, &c. he ſhall bring his ſacrifice. He muſt make an attonement for his ſin of ignorance. And we have further directions about offerings for ſins of ignorance, when they are diſcovered and made known to the ſinner himſelf. (Lev. 5.2,3,4,5,6.) Then (ſaith the Law) he ſhall be guilty, that is, if when he knoweth his ſin, he do not perform what the Law requireth in ſuch caſes, then he is not only ceremonially but morally guilty, as a neglecter if not as a deſpiſer of the ordinance and appointment of God for his cleanſing. That which I ſee not,

Teach thou me.] The words are a prayer for divine teaching. The teaching of God is two-fold; Firſt, Immediate by his Spirit (John 14. 26.) The Spirit which is the comforter ſhall come and teach you all things. And again (1 John 2. 27.) The anointing (that is, the Spirit) which ye have received of him, abideth in you: and ye need not that any man teach you; That is, ye need not reſt in, or pin your faith upon the teachings of man; as you muſt not deſpiſe, ſo ye need not depend upon the inſtruction of man. Secondly, There is a mediate teaching, God teacheth by means, inſtruments, and ordinances. Firſt, by the miniſtery of his word; Secondly, by the works of his hands. He teacheth, Firſt, by his works of creation; Secondly, by his works of providence, they are our maſters, tutors and inſtructers. Now when this penitent perſon prayeth, Teach thou me; we may underſtand him of both theſe teachings. Firſt, of immediate teaching by the Spirit, who is the anoynting. Secondly, of teaching by means, by the preaching of the word of God, and by his providences; in what way ſoever God is pleaſed to teach us, our hearts ſhould ſtand open to receive inſtructions. And what way ſoever we receive inſtruction, it is God that teacheth us. Though men be the inſtruments, yet the effect is of him.

Hence Note, Firſt, God only is able to teach or ſhew us the things which we know not.

Men alone cannot. Chriſt ſaid to his Diſciples, when he commiſſioned them, (Matth. 28.19.) Go teach all Nations. And (*Eph.*4.11.) When he aſcended up on high, he gave ſome Apoſtles, and ſome Prophets, and ſome Evangeliſts, and ſome Paſtors and Teachers; yet no Teachers can bring home inſtruction without the teachings of God. The tenour of the new Covenant runs thus, (Iſa. 54. 13.) All thy children ſhall be taught of the Lord. And again (*Jer.*31.34.) They ſhall teach no more every one his neighbour, &c. That is, they ſhall not be left to the teachings of man: or the teaching of God ſhall be ſo glorious, that all ſhall acknowledg it; though there be inſtruments, yet the flowing forth of the ſpirit ſhall be ſuch, that inſtruments and means ſhall be little taken notice of. For when he ſaith, they ſhall not teach every one his neighbour, it is not an abſolute Negative, but ſhews that there ſhall be a more excellent teaching; as when the Apoſtle ſaith (2*Cor.*3.6.) Chriſt hath made us able Miniſters, not of the letter, but of the Spirit; This Negative is not abſolute, for the Apoſtles did teach the Letter, and the Spirit is uſually conveyed by the Miniſtery of the Letter, or of the external word; the word is (as it were) the chariot wherein the Spirit rideth, and cometh by the ear to the heart. So that, when Paul ſaith, We are Miniſters not of the Letter, &c. his meaning is, we are rather, or we are more the Miniſters of the Spirit then of the Letter. The inward teaching accompanying our Miniſtery, carryeth the matter, both for conviction and converſion, both for illumination and conſolation, not the outward teaching (John 6. 45.) Every man therefore that hath heard and learned of the Father, cometh unto me. And how long ſoever we go to School to men, how long ſoever we ſit under the Miniſtery of the ableſt Goſpel Preachers in the world, we come not to Chriſt till the Father teacheth; till he joyn his inward teaching to the outward teaching of the Miniſter, the light and life of grace is not received. It is God who teacheth effectually, men teach but inſtrumentally. Thus it was propheſied of the Goſpel times (*Iſa.*2.3. and Micah 4.2.) Many Nations ſhall come and ſay, Come and let us go up to the Mountain of the Lord, and to the Houſe of the God of Jacob, and he will teach us of his ways, and we will walk in his paths, that is, he will accompany the Miniſters and meſſengers of his word with his Spirit, he will impower them from on high, and ſo we ſhall learn his Statutes and underſtand his ways. David aſcribes even his skil in Military affairs to Gods teaching, (*Pſal.*144.1.) Bleſſed be the Lord, my ſtrength, who teacheth my hands to war, and my fingers to fight. God only teacheth a man powerfully to be a good Souldier. Surely then, it is God only who teacheth us to be good Chriſtians, to be Believers, to be holy. He hath his ſeat in Heaven, who teacheth hearts on earth.

Secondly, As theſe words hold out to us the temper of an humble ſinner;

> Note, A gracious humble Soul is teachable, or is willing to be taught.

As it is the duty of the Miniſters of the Goſpel to be apt to teach, that's their ſpecial gift, or characteriſtical properly; ſo 'tis the peoples duty and grace to be apt to be taught, to be willing to be led, and inſtructed; naturally we are unteachable and untractable. As we know nothing of God ſavingly by nature, ſo we are not willing to know; we would ſit down in our ignorance, or at moſt in a form of knowledg. To be willing to learn, is the firſt, or rather the ſecond ſtep to learning. The firſt is a ſight of our ignorance; and the ſecond, a readineſs to be taught, and entertain the means of knowledg.

Thirdly, The words being the form of a Prayer;

> Note, It is our duty to intreat the Lord earneſtly that he would teach us what we know not.

It is a great favour and a mercy, that God will teach us, that he will be our maſter, our Tutor. Now, as we are to ask and pray for every mercy, ſo for this, that God would vouchſafe to be our Teacher, (Pſal. 25.4,5.) Shew me thy ways, O Lord, teach me thy paths; Lead me in thy truth, and teach me; David ſpake it twice in prayer, Lead me, and Teach me: Lead me on in the truth which I know, and teach me the truths which I know not. So he prayeth again, (Pſal. 119. 26.) Teach me thy Statutes, make me to underſtand the way of thy precepts. David was convinced that he could not underſtand the Statutes of God, unleſs God would be his Teacher; though he could read the Statutes of God, and underſtand the language of them, yet he did not underſtand the Spirit of them till he was taught (and taught) of God, and therefore he prayed ſo earneſtly, once and again, for his teaching. When Philip put that queſtion to the Eunuch (Acts 8. 30.) Underſtandeſt thou what thou readeſt? He ſaid, how can I, except ſome man ſhould guide me? Or, unleſs I am taught. Though we read the Statutes of God, and read them every day, yet we ſhall know little unleſs the Lord teach us. Solomon made it his requeſt for all Iſrael at the ſolemn Dedication of the Temple, (1 Kings 8. 37.) Teach them the good way wherein they ſhould walk. God who is our Commander is alſo our Counſeller.

Fourthly, From the ſpecial matter wherein this penitent perſon would be taught, which is plain from part of the latter verſe, If I have done iniquity;

> Note, A gracious heart is willing to know and ſee the worſt of himſelf.

He would have God teach him what iniquity he hath done. David was often upon that prayer, (*Pſal.*139,24.) Search me, O God, and know my heart, and ſee if there be any wicked way in me. Lord, ſhew me my ſin; as I would not conceal my ſin from thee, ſo I would not have my ſin concealed from my ſelf. A carnal man who lives in ſin (though poſſibly he may pray for knowledg in ſome things, and would be a knowing man, yet he) hath no mind that either God or man ſhould ſhew him his ſin; He loves not to ſee the worſt of himſelf, his dark part; he as little loves to ſee his ſin, as to have it ſeen. But a godly man never thinks he ſeeth his ſin enough; how little ſoever he ſins, he thinks he ſins too much, (that's the general bent of a gracious mans heart) and how much ſoever he ſees his ſin, he thinks he ſees it too little. And therefore as he tells God what he knows of his ſin, ſo he would have God tell him that of his ſin which he doth not know. That which I know not, teach thou me.

If I have done iniquity, I will do no more.

There are two ſpecial parts of repentance. Firſt, Confeſſion of ſin, whether known or unknown. This we have in the former part of the verſe, That which I ſee not, teach thou me. There is the confeſſion of ſin, even of unknown ſin. The ſecond part of repentance is reformation or amendment a turning from ſin, a forſaking of that iniquity which we deſire God would ſhew us, we have this Second part of repentance in this latter part of the verſe.

If I have done iniquity, I will do no more. But why doth he ſay, If I have? &c. Had he any any doubt whether he had done iniquity or no? Every man muſt confeſs, downright, that he hath ſinned, and done iniquity, without ifs or an's. Solomon having made ſuch a ſuppoſition in his prayer at the Dedication of the Temple, (1 Kings 8. 46. If they ſin againſt thee) preſently puts it into this poſition, for there is no man that ſinneth not. The Apoſtle concludes, (1 John 1.8.) If we ſay we have no ſin, we deceive our ſelves, and the truth is not in us. Therefore, this, If I have done iniquity, is not to be underſtood as if this or that man, as if he or any man might be without ſin; but when the penitent is brought in, ſaying, If I have done iniquity; his meaning is, Firſt, Whatever iniquity I have done, I am willing to leave it, to abandon it, I will do ſo no more. Secondly, Thus, If I have done iniquity, that is, if I have done any great iniquity, if I have acted perverſeneſs, or perverſly, as the word ſignifieth, I will do ſo no more; to do iniquity is more then barely to ſin. As if he had ſaid, though I cannot promiſe that I will ſin no more, yet, Lord, if thou doſt diſcover to me any iniquity, any groſs ſin or perverſeneſs, I will do that no more, I will engage my ſelf againſt that ſin with all my might; and to the utmoſt of my power, by grace received, I will keep my ſelf pure from every ſin. If I have done iniquity.

Perverſe agere.

> Hence Note, Firſt, A godly man hath a gracious ſuſpition of himſelf that he hath done evil, yea ſome great evil, that he hath done amiſs, yea greatly amiſs, though he be not able to charge himſelf with this or that particular iniquity.

He knoweth he hath ſinned and done evil, though he knoweth not every evil he hath done, nor how ſinfully he may have ſinned; he doubts it may be worſe with him then he ſeeth. Poſſibly he hath done iniquity. Job in reference to his children (Chap. 1. 5.) had an holy ſuſpition that in their feaſting they might ſin againſt God; he knew no ſin they had run into, nor could charge them with any exceſs; but he was jealous they had ſinned; nor did Job ſpeak thus, as if his meaning were, that poſſibly in their feaſting ſome corruption might work in them, (he knew there is no man in the beſt duties of his life wholly freed from the workings of ſin) but he had this jealouſie, that they might have faln into ſome great ſin, and ſo provoked God greatly againſt them, therefore he did (as it were) way-lay ſuch guilt, and early ſought reconciliation with God. As Job was thus jealous of his children, ſo a gracious heart, though he cannot charge himſelf with this or that evil, yet he is apt to ſuſpect his own heart, and fears it may be worſe with him, than poſſibly it is.

Secondly, When he ſaith, If I have done iniquity; This humble man, though he doth ſuppoſe that he might have done iniquity, yet he doth but ſuppoſe it.

Hence Note, A godly man may live free from the doing of any groſs ſin.

He doth not put an if upon it whether he had ſinned or no, but, whether he had done iniquity. Zachariah and Elizabeth were not without ſin, but they did no iniquity; for, ſaith the Text (Luke 1. 6.) They were both righteous before God, walking in all the commandments and ordinances of the Lord blameleſs. It cannot be imagined but that the people of Iſrael ſinned, yet (Num. 23. 21.) God ſaw no iniquity in Jacob, nor perverſeneſs in Iſrael. There may be ſuch a time in the Church when the people of God have no iniquity, no provocation to be ſeen or found among them. Though a godly man cannot deny but he hath ſinned, yet he can affirm that he hath not indulged himſelf in any ſin. If I have done iniquity,

I will do no more.] The Hebrew is, I will not add. We render, I will do no more. As if he had ſaid; If upon tryal, it be found that I have done iniquity, yet I will not add iniquity to iniquity. I will not go on, I will not perſiſt, nor proceed in iniquity. I will not take a ſtep more in any way which God ſhall diſcover to me to be an evil way. If I am out of the way, I will not go on in my way.

Hence obſerve, Firſt, A godly penitent perſon is reſolute againſt ſin.

His will is ſet againſt it; I will do no more. I ſhewed in opening the former verſe (It is meet to be ſaid unto God, I have borne chaſtiſement, I will offend no more) in what ſenſe a godly man may make ſuch a promiſe, or ſay, I will ſin no more; here I ſay, A godly man is reſolute againſt ſin, eſpecially againſt great ſins. As a carnal man hath but very weak reſolves for the doing of good, he hath (as ſome expreſs it) but a velleity, ſomewhat like a will to do that which is good; ſo a carnal man makes but weak reſolves againſt evil, he hath not a ſetled will, but a kind of noleity againſt it. He makes ſome flouriſhes of profeſſion againſt it, but he is not reſolvedly ingaged againſt it; whereas a godly man is reſolute both as to the doing of good, and the not doing of evil. If a godly man might have his will, he would never ſin more; And as a godly man waiteth joyfully for that ſtate of glory wherein he ſhall ſin no more; ſo a reſolution to ſin no more, hath, as I may ſay, ſomewhat of glory in it. In glory we ſhall ſin no more, and where grace is in truth, that ſoul would gladly be rid of ſin, and ſin no more. A godly man is reſolved againſt all ungodlineſs; and this is a kind of entrance into glory.

Again, Whereas the penitent man ſaith, I will do no more.

Note, Continuance in any known ſin (for, ſaith he, what I know not teach thou me) or in that which is made known to us to be ſinful, is inconſiſtent with true repentance.

Repentance for and continuance in ſin, cannot conſiſt in the ſame ſubject. This is the voice of every gracious ſoul, I would not ſin any more, or I would not continue any longer in ſin. To ſin is common to man, but to continue in ſin is proper to a wicked man. To err and fail that's humane, but to perſevere in error is diabolical. Sin will continue in us while we continue in this world; but they that are not of the world, do not, will not continue in ſin, how long ſoever they are in the world. Sin may be conſidered three ways. Firſt, as remaining in us; Secondly, as reſerved; Thirdly, as preſerved by us. There is ſin remaining in the beſt of Saints on this ſide heaven (Rom. 7. 20, 21, 22, 23, 24.) Sin is reſerved only in carnal men, they ſave their ſins, and would be ſaved, not from but in their ſins. Sin is preſerved or maintained and defended in the worſt of wicked men. Sin is heightned to the utmoſt, where 'tis not only retained, but maintained and preſerved. The Apoſtle having cloſed the fifth Chapter of his Epiſtle to the Romans, in the triumph of Goſpel grace, That as ſin hath reigned unto death, ſo grace might reign through righteouſneſs unto eternal life by Jeſus Chriſt our Lord, begins the next with a prevention of the abuſe of this Grace; What ſhall we ſay then, ſhall we continue in ſin that grace may abound? God forbid. How ſhall we that are dead to ſin, live any longer therein? How can we continue in ſin, that are partakers of Goſpel-grace? Sin will continue in us, but we cannot continue in it. The queſtion implieth a kind of impoſſibility. We were once dead in ſin, but now we are dead to ſin, how then can we live or continue in it? Perſeverance is either our beſt or our worſt. To perſevere is beſt when we perſevere in good, and to perſevere is worſt when we perſevere in evil. It is bad to be or do evil, but it is worſe to abide in evil. The firſt beſt is not to ſin, the next beſt is not to continue, nor lodg in ſin, no not for an hour. Paul ſaid in another caſe (Gal. 2. 5.) To whom we gave place by ſubjection, no not for an hour; We ſhould not give place to ſin, no not for a minute, but reſiſt it to the utmoſt, and totally diſplace it, if we can.

Laſtly, From the Hebrew elegancy, which ſaith, I will not add.

Note, A godly man may commit ſin after ſin, but he doth not add ſin to ſin.

When he hath committed any one ſin, he breaks it off and deſtroyeth it by repentance. He doth not add ſin to ſin, becauſe the ſin formerly committed is deſtroyed by repentance. His former ſin is taken off the file before he acts a ſecond, who heartily repenteth of the firſt, and as heartily reſolveth not to commit a ſecond. Such a man doth not run a round of ſinning and repenting, though he ſinneth after he hath repented. Daniel gave that advice to Nebuchadnezzar (Dan. 4. 27.) Break off thy ſins by righteouſneſs, and thine iniquities by ſhewing mercy to the poor. If thou repenteſt indeed, the ſin that cometh after will not be added to thy former, becauſe that is done away through Grace. A godly man (according to the former point) would not add or commit another act of ſin to his former; as it is ſaid of Judah (Gen. 38. 26.) who had committed folly with Tamar, He knew her again no more. Though his ſin was great, yet doubtleſs his heart was humbled, and he returned not to his former ſin. But the wicked man continues in his wickedneſs, yea, he bleſſeth himſelf in his heart, ſaying, I ſhall have peace, though I walk in the imagination of mine heart, to add drunkenneſs to thirſt (Deut. 29. 19.) Every new ſin is an addition to his former ſins, becauſe he always liveth in ſin. They who would not have the captives brought into the City, gave this reaſon (2 Chron. 28. 13.) For whereas we have offended againſt the Lord already, ye intend to add more to our ſins, &c. O take heed of ſinning ſo, as to joyn ſins together. As in Arithmetick when we add ſum to ſum, what an huge ſum may we quickly make. Therefore break off ſin by repentance, that if thou ſinneſt again, it may not be an adding of ſin to ſin. That's a dreadful propheſie and threatning (Pſal. 69. 27.) Add iniquity to their iniquity, and let them not come into thy righteouſneſs. How doth the Lord add iniquity to iniquity? will he cauſe any to ſin more? or will he do any iniquity? No; the meaning is (as our margin intimates) the Lord will add the puniſhment of their iniquity to their iniquity; or he will give them up to the power of their own luſts and vile affections, ſo that they cannot but renew the acts of ſin, and add one iniquity to another. It is a bleſſed work when we are much in the additions of grace to grace, and of good works to good. 'Tis the deſign and buſineſs of a gracious heart to add grace to grace, that is, the exerciſe of one grace to another, till every grace be exerciſed (2 Pet. 1. 5.) Give diligence to add to your faith vertue, and to vertue knowledg, and to knowledg temperance, and to temperance patience. Here is a bleſſed addition. When a good man hath done well once, he adds to do more, he adds more acts of the ſame kind, and he adds to do good acts of any other kind; He adds patience to godlineſs, and to godlineſs brotherly kindneſs, and to brotherly kindneſs charity; thus he is buſied in a bleſſed way of addition. But the addition of ſin to ſin, is the bitter fruit of rebellion againſt God (Iſa. 30. 1.) Wo to the rebellious children---- that cover, but not with a covering of my Spirit, that they may add ſin to ſin. They that make excuſes for ſin committed, add ſin to ſin; yet by theſe coverings, we may underſtand not only excuſes and pretences, for ſin acted, but our own good acts; for to cover ſin with any thing of our own, is to add ſin to ſin. Yet I conceive, the adding of one kind of ſin to another, is the addition there meant. The Iſraelites ſaid to Samuel, when they were brought to a ſight of their ſin (1 Sam. 12. 19.) We have added unto all our ſins this evil to ask us a King. They refuſed the Lords government, and asked a King in the pride of their hearts, and ſo added ſin to ſin. Thus 'tis ſaid of Herod (Luke 3. 20.) That to all his evil deeds, he added this, that he ſhut up John in priſon. And as there is an adding of ſeveral kinds of ſin, ſo of ſeveral acts of the ſame kind of ſin, oath to oath, and adultery to adultery, and wrong-dealing to wrong-dealing; this day ſome oppreſs their brethren, and the next day they do the ſame. O let ſuch remember what additions the Lord will make to them, he will add puniſhment to puniſhment, he will add the ſame kind of puniſhment ſeveral times, he will add ſword to ſword, and famine to famine, and peſtilence to peſtilence, and he will add puniſhments of various kinds. The Prophet reports what various or (if I may ſo ſpeak) heterogeneal kinds of ſin men added and ſtrung up together. (Hoſ. 4. 2.) By ſwearing, and lying, and killing, and ſtealing, and committing adultery, they break out and blood toucheth blood. Surely, God will make blood touch blood in a way of puniſhment, as men make blood touch blood in a way of ſin. The adding of ſins makes an addition of plagues. When Jehoiakim the King heard the roll read, he threw it into the fire and burnt it (Jer. 36.) but could he burn or make an end of the threatnings? no (verſ. 32.) And there were added beſides unto them many like words. It is ſaid (Rev. 22. 18.) If any man ſhall add unto theſe things, God ſhall add unto him the plagues that are written in this book. To add any thing to the holy Word of God, is as ſinful as to take from the Word, or act againſt it. God can add plagues as faſt as men add ſins. When ſin is added to ſin, then guilt is added to guilt, and puniſhment to puniſhment. Take heed of this addition, reſolve with the penitent ſoul in the Text; If I have done iniquity, I will add no more.

VERS. 33, 34, 35.

Should it be according to thy mind? he will recompence it whether thou refuſe, or whether thou chuſe, and not I: therefore ſpeak what thou knoweſt.

Let men of underſtanding tell me, and let a wiſe man hearken unto me.

Job hath ſpoken without knowledg, and his words were without wiſdom.

In the Context of theſe three verſes Elihu doth chiefly theſe two things. Firſt, he appeals to the Conſcience of Job (verſ. 33.) Should it be according to thy mind? ask thy ſelf whether it ſhould be ſo, yea or no. Secondly, he appeals to the judgment of Job's friends, yea of all wiſe and underſtanding men, concerning what Job had ſpoken, or whether he had not ſpoken unwiſely, in the 33. and 34. verſes; Let men of underſtanding tell me, and let a wiſe man hearken unto me. Job hath ſpoken without knowledg, and his words were without wiſdom.

The ſcope of Elihu in theſe words is yet further to humble Job, and to provoke him to repentance for his inconſiderate ſpeeches. Yet Elihu doth not call Job to repentance upon the ſame grounds or terms as his three friends had done. They moved him to repentance upon the Conſideration of his former wicked life, as they ſuppoſed; but Elihu moves him to repentance upon the Conſideration of his imprudent and raſh ſpeeches under the afflicting hand of God.

Verſ. 33. Should it be according to thy mind?

This verſe is delivered in as much variety as any Text throughout the whole Book; and as a learned Writer upon it concludes; If we ſhould ſtay upon all the various readings, tranſlations, and interpretations of it, we ſhould rather darken then enlighten, rather entangle both hearers and readers, then unfold the Text. There are at leaſt ſix diſtinct tranſlations of this verſe, which I ſhall paſs only with the naming of them, and then proceed to open the words as they ſtand in our own; which comprehends the ſum and ſubſtance of what is held out in moſt of them.

Si omnes lectiones, verſiones, interpretationes perſequeremur, plus tenebrarum quam lucis afferemus. Pined.

Firſt, Some give it thus; Should he reward it according to thy mind, though thou haſt deſpiſed the one, and choſen the other, yet will not I, therefore ſpeak what thou knoweſt. As if he had ſaid, Why ſhould God reward him, as thou wouldſt have him do it? Though thou haſt refuſed to ſubmit to Gods mercy, and haſt called for juſtice, yet I dare not do ſo. If thou know better teach me.

Secondly, Another thus; Should it come from thee, how he ſhould recompence it, when thou haſt refuſed his correction? but thou ſhalt chooſe and not I, therefore ſpeak what thou knoweſt. The ſenſe of which tranſlation may be thus repreſented; Shouldeſt thou who haſt ſinned, and refuſeſt to be corrected, teach God how he ſhould correct thee? Thou mayſt think ſo, but I do not, ſhew me better if thou canſt.

Thirdly, Should that come from thee, which he will puniſh? I ſpeak it, becauſe thou haſt refuſed Gods correction, becauſe thou haſt choſen that which I would not. Now ſpeak what thou knoweſt. As if he had ſaid; Why ſhouldſt thou ſpeak againſt Gods proceedings, to bring farther trouble upon thee? my deſire of eaſing thee is the cauſe, why I ſpeak thus; I ſhould never have accuſed God as thou haſt done, if I had been ſo handled by him. But if thou haſt any thing to except againſt what I ſay, ſpeak freely.

Fourthly, Did ſuch a ſpeech come from thee? He will recompence it, that thou haſt rejected him; But thou chooſeſt this way and not I: now ſpeak what thou knoweſt. As if Elihu had thus expreſſed himſelf to Job; I never heard thee ſpeak ſo humbly, as I have taught thee (verſ. 31, 32.) Surely God will puniſh thee, becauſe thou haſt ſpoken proudly againſt his proceedings with thee. But this is nothing to me, who like not of ſuch courſes. If thou canſt defend thy ſelf, ſo do.

Thus Junius connecting this verſe with the former, wherein is ſhewed what a penitent perſon ſhould ſay to God, tranſlates and expounds the whole to this ſenſe; Now therefore conſider, haſt thou ſpoken in ſuch a manner, ſurely God will recompence it to thee, if thou refuſeſt to ſpeak ſo, (thus he deterreth him by the conſideration of the event, or of what might follow upon his refuſal, and then he deterreth him by his own example) but if thou chooſeſt to do otherwiſe, truly I will not. (Thou ſhalt go alone for me) Now then ſpeak what thou thinkeſt.

An ergo (hæc oratio profecta eſt) à te? rependet illud ſi ſpreveris (ſc. hac oratione uti, &c. Jun.

Fifthly, Should therefore God recompence that which man hath done according to thine opinion, ſaying, becauſe thou diſlikeſt this, it is but equal, that thou ſhouldſt chooſe another and not I. And what doſt thou know? ſpeak man.

An igitur ex tua opinione rependet Deus illud quod homo fecerit dicendo, &c? Piſc.

Sixthly, Mr. Broughton renders thus; Should that come from thee which he will puniſh; as thou doſt loath, as thou likeſt, where I would not? Now ſpeak what thou thinkeſt.

All theſe rendrings may be reduced to this one common ſenſe; O Job, whatſoever thou ſuffereſt, or by what means ſoever thou art fallen into this miſery, is it fit that God ſhould be ordered by thy opinion and Judgment? And ſurely, O Job, I muſt tell thee plainly, nor canſt thou deny it, that thou haſt not reſted nor ſat down quietly in the determination and decree of God concerning thee; But thou wouldſt rather be chuſing and preſcribing to God, how and in what way he ſhould deal with thee, and diſpence his providences to thee, then ſatisfie thy ſelf in his appointments and pleaſure. Far be it from me, that I ſhould follow thy example, or tread in thy ſteps as to this matter; yet if thou haſt any thing to reply to what I have urged, ſay on, bring it forth, let me and all in thy preſence, hear and judg of it.

Thus Elihu points Job to his grand error, that he did not readily approve, nor quietly ſubmit to the Judgment of God in his own caſe. And ſo had not ſpoken reverently enough of God, nor humbly enough of himſelf.

The reaſon of theſe various readings and rendrings mentioned, is the conciſeneſs of the Hebrew Text, which leaves ſome words to be underſtood and ſupplied for the compleating of the ſenſe. And becauſe the moſt skilful Interpreters are not perfectly acquainted with the dialect or manner of ſpeech uſed in thoſe more remote and ancient times, therefore they muſt needs differ both in their tranſlations and expoſitions, yet (which may free the Reader from all prejudices againſt the holy Scriptures, either as obſcure or dubious) they all center and agree in that which is true in it ſelf, as alſo in the principal ſcope and drift of Elihu in this diſcourſe with Job.

Having thus given ſome account of the various tranſlations of this verſe, I ſhall now cloſe with the explication of our own.

Num ex tuo conſilio & arbitratu rependet illud ſc. bonum vel malum, ſed de malo proprie accipio. Merc.

Should it be according to thy mind?] Thus Elihu beſpeaks Job; Should it be? he doth not ſay what, but leaves us to the whole matter; ſhould this, or that, or t'other thing, or any thing be according to thy mind? the Hebrew Text is but one word, which we tranſlate, according to thy mind, or, as thou wouldſt have it? ſhould it be from thee? that is, ſhould God take counſel or direction from thee? or go to thee as an Oracle to be taught which way to deal with thee, or with any man elſe; ſhould it be from thee? The matter which Elihu inſiſts upon, reſpects the diſpenſations of God; So his meaning is, ſhould God cut out the works of his providence according to thy order? ſhould God reward, or ſhould God puniſh? ſhould God ſet up, or ſhould God pull down? ſhould God bring trouble, or ſhould God cauſe peace according to thy mind? muſt he needs ask counſel of thee, before he proceed to any of theſe reſolutions? no!

> He will recompence it whether thou refuſe, or whether thou chuſe.

The former part of the verſe, is a queſtion or Interrogation, Should it be according to thy mind? He will recompence, &c. That's the anſwer; and it contains both a negative and an affirmative, he will not do according to thy mind, but he will do according to his own; He will recompence it.

ישלמנה à radice שלם

The verb ſignifies to pay, or appeaſe, and make quiet, and the reaſon why the ſame word ſignifieth paying, or recompencing, and peace, is becauſe where payment is made, peace is obtained, where recompence is given, there quietneſs is ſetled; He will recompence, or he will pay, that is, give out and diſtribute in his providences as he pleaſeth.

Whether thou chuſe, or whether thou refuſe.

There are two ſpecial acts of the will, chuſing and refuſing; and theſe two are Intrinſecal and Eſſential to the will; as the proper act of the underſtanding is to apprehend, and then to aſſent; ſo upon thoſe repreſentations which the underſtanding makes to the will, the will doth either refuſe or chuſe. Further, the word which we here tranſlate to refuſe, ſignifies more than that ſimple act of the will, it ſignifies to refuſe with a kind of diſdain and great diſguſt; to refuſe a thing as altogether unworthy to be received; or to refuſe a thing as being much diſpleaſed and burdened with it. Eliphaz uſeth this word (Chap. 5. 17.) Deſpiſe thou not the chaſtening of the Lord; that is, do not refuſe it with a diſlike, or as a thing that is grievous and nauſeous to thee. That which is contrary to our appetite, the ſtomach refuſeth and vomits it up again; ſuch a force there is in this word, he will recompence it, whether and how much ſoever thou refuſe

Or whether thou chuſe.] He puts that in, to ſhew that it is neither the refuſal of man that ſtops God, nor is it the choice of man that brings God on to his work, he will proceed purely from himſelf; he will recompence whether thou refuſeſt, or whether thou chuſe, and not I.

As if he had ſaid, it is God that will do it, it is God that will bring this upon thee, and not I; that's the ſenſe of our reading; But according to other readings, and not I, refers, to thou; do thou refuſe or chuſe whether thou wilt obey the diſpenſation or no, for my part I will not ſtand upon thoſe terms with God, but refer my ſelf wholly to his diſpoſe.

From the words thus opened (Should it be according to thy mind? &c.

Obſerve, Firſt, Man would have every thing go according to his mind.

He would have his mind the meaſure both of all that he is to do for God; and of all that God doth to him. We love to do all things according to our own minds, and we love to have all things done according to our minds. Man naturally would do nothing according to God's mind; nor would he have any thing done to him according to God's mind, unleſs it accord with his own too. The Apoſtle (Rom. 8. 7.) proclaims that Innate Enmity that is in the heart of all men naturally againſt the mind and will of God; The wiſdom of the fleſh is Enmity againſt God: It is not ſubject to the Law of God, neither indeed can be; that is, while a man remains fleſh, or in an unregenerate ſtate, he is altogether at enmity againſt the Law of God; both againſt what God appoints him to do, and againſt what he appoints him to ſuffer. Man equally riſeth up in his thoughts, and rebels againſt both. And as this enmity doth remain whole and unbroken in all men by nature, till they are renewed by grace and born again; ſo there are remainders of it, even in thoſe who are renewed by grace; there is ſomewhat of this oppoſition againſt God in every godly man; he would fain have things go according to his mind; and he hath much of this mind in him; I do not ſay, a godly man would do nothing according to God's mind, that's the natural man's frame; but a godly man would very fain have God do things according to his mind, as may appear, eſpecially in four things.

Firſt, He would have God reward, or do good both to himſelf and others, according to his mind; He would have God lift up thoſe whom he would have lifted up, and prefer thoſe whom he would have preferr'd; he would fain have God ſhew favour to or beſtow favours upon thoſe whom he favours.

Secondly, As to puniſhment and Judgment, he would have God puniſh according to his mind; ſuch a man is proud, he is an oppreſſor, he is an oppoſer of goodneſs and good men, therefore he would have the hand of God heavy upon him, to caſt him down out of hand, or without delay.

Thirdly, He would have God go according to his mind in chaſtning and afflicting himſelf; though he would not be totally uncorrected, yet he would have God correct him only in ſuch a kind, in ſuch a manner and meaſure as he would chuſe; he doth not refuſe chaſtening, but he would be chaſtened in what himſelf pleaſeth, or in his own way. He ſaith in his heart, if God would correct me in this or that, I could bear it, but I do not like to be corrected in ſuch a thing, or in ſuch a way; one ſaith, if God would ſmite me in my Eſtate I could bear it, but not in my body; Another ſaith, if God ſhould ſmite me with ſickneſs, I could bear it, but not in my Children; or let the affliction be what God pleaſeth, if God would afflict me but thus much, or thus far, in ſuch a degree, I could ſubmit, but my heart can hardly yield to this meaſure of affliction. Thus we would have it according to our minds, as to the meaſure, as alſo for the continuance of our afflictions. We would be corrected for ſo long, for ſo many days, but to have months of vanity, and years of trouble, this is not according to our mind.

Admonendus eſt Philippus ut deſinat mundum regere.

Fourthly, He would have God govern (not only himſelf but) the whole world according to his mind: Man hath much of this in him, he would have God order nations as himſelf and other men like himſelf deſire. Some one man would preſcribe and direct what God ſhould do, and how he ſhould do to all men. Luther writ to Melancthon when he was ſo exceedingly troubled at the providences of God in the world; Our Brother Philip is to be admoniſht, that he would forbear governing the world; we can hardly let God alone to rule that world which himſelf alone hath made; Should it be according to thy mind? to this man's mind, or that man's mind? it muſt not be as it is; if every man might have his mind, he would govern and rule the world in another way than God doth. There is ſcarce any good man that is ſatisfied in the government of particular nations, if he might have his mind, he would caſt things into another mould and method than the providence of God hath caſt them in at this day. Yea, 'tis ſeldom, that it either rains or ſhines according to our mind; The weather which God is pleaſed to ſend, whether wet or dry, fair or foul, rarely pleaſeth us.

Secondly, When Elihu ſaith, Should it be according to thy mind? This queſtion implieth a ſtrong Negation; certainly, it ſhould not.

Hence note, 'Tis beſide the duty and above the line of man to deſire that things ſhould be according to his mind, either with himſelf or with others.

There's nothing more againſt the mind of God, nor againſt our own good, than that all things ſhould be according to our mind; we may quickly undo our ſelves and diſhonour God by having our own deſires. And that it is ſinful, very ſinful to deſire to have our own deſires, may appear, by conſidering the ſpring or root of ſuch deſires, I ſhall ſhew a threefold very evil root from whence thoſe deſires ſpring.

Firſt, They ſpring from pride and an over-weening conceit of our ſelves; and that upon a double account; Firſt, from pride as to our deſerts; for if God do ſuch men good, they are apt to think they have deſerved more good, than God hath done them; and if God afflict them, they are ready to ſay, ſurely they have not deſerved ſo much affliction. We think we have deſerved greater kindneſs than God exhibits; and that we have not deſerved ſo great a croſs as he inflicts. Is not this a great piece of pride?

Again, Theſe deſires ſpring from pride in our own wiſdom and underſtanding; as if we knew how to order matters more equally than God. Is it not a huge piece of pride, of Luciferian pride, to think that there might be a better meaſure of things than the mind of God is? doth not ſuch a man make himſelf wiſer than God? and more prudent than God? doth not he ſuppoſe, that he ſees further into things than God? when as alas we cannot ſee an hour before us, but God hath the proſpect of all things, He ſeeth the end from the beginning, and hath all in his eye from all Eternity. When we thus make our ſelves wiſer than God, is not this a high point of pride? Here's the firſt evil root of deſiring to have things according to our mind, pride, or an opinion that we deſerve better, or could order things better.

Secondly, Theſe deſires proceed as from pride, ſo from diſcontent with the dealings of God, and 'tis pride that fills us with diſcontent; he that would have things according to his mind, muſt needs be diſſatisfied when they are not.

Thirdly, When they ſpring not from direct diſcontent, yet they do from ſome degree of impatience. There is not ſuch a quietneſs of ſpirit or acquieſcence as ſhould be in the heart of man, otherwiſe he would let things be according unto God's mind, and never be troubled, when they are not according to his own. Now conſider what can ſpring from theſe three roots, Pride, Diſcontent, and Impatience, but very evil and bitter fruit; therefore, to deſire to have things according to our mind is very ſinful, exceeding ſinful.

Thirdly, This queſtion, Should it be according to thy mind? implieth a ſharp rebuke and a reproof upon Job, as deſiring a thing which was altogether againſt rule and reaſon.

Hence note, It is moſt unreaſonable and abſurd, to deſire that things ſhould be ordered as we would have them, and not as God would have them.

Is it not unreaſonable in a family that things ſhould be as the children would have them, and not as the Father would have them? Or, that things ſhould be done according to the mind of the ſervants, and not according to the mind of the Maſter? Do not the Magiſtrates and Governours of the world think it an unreaſonable thing that Nations ſhould be governed according to the mind of Subjects, and not according to the mind of the Prince, regulated according to the known Laws of the Nation? Who doth not think it an unreaſonable thing, that a journey ſhould be diſpoſed according to the mind of the Horſe, and not according to the mind of the Rider? Should the Horſe guide the Rider, or the Rider his Horſe? Is it not an unreaſonable thing that a man's ſenſe ſhould guide his underſtanding, when his underſtanding is given on purpoſe to guide his ſenſe? Is it not an unreaſonable thing that paſſion ſhould order reaſon, when as reaſon ſhould be the bridle of our paſſion? Is it not an unreaſonable thing that unlearned ignorant men ſhould teach the knowing, when the learned and knowing are ſet up to teach the ignorant? and is it not much more abſurd and unreaſonable for us, to deſire that things ſhould be according to our mind, either with our ſelves or others, Families or Nations, and not according to the mind of God? Should things be as the beſt, as the wiſeſt, as the holieſt men in the world would have them, and not as God would have them; it were more abſurd and unreaſonable than that things ſhould go in a family according to the mind of the ſervants and children, rather than according to the mind of the Maſter and Father; yea it were more abſurd than any of thoſe fore-mentioned abſurdities. Should it be according to thy mind, O Job? how unreaſonable a thing were that!

Fourthly, From thoſe words, He will recompence it, whether thou refuſe, or whether thou chuſe.

Note, God will not yield to men, nor be ſubject to their pleaſure.

God will do what he pleaſeth, as I may ſay, in ſpight of any man's teeth. Things muſt paſs in ſuch a way as God hath appointed, and ſees meet to diſpoſe of them; and not as we would have them. He will recompence: God is reſolute for the doing of his own will, and men are uſually over-reſolute for the doing of theirs; and indeed ſome are as it were wholly changed into will, or rather wilſulneſs; they will do this, and they will do that; they will have this, and they will have that. Men may quickly, but God can never act too highly, too ſtrongly, too confidently upon his own will; the reaſon is, becauſe his will is an holy will, and the rule of righteouſneſs. Only conſider from the whole.

Man is never diſpleaſed with what God doth, till he forgetteth what himſelf is.

Man forgets that he is a worm, and no man, he forgets that he is a creature, he forgets himſelf to be duſt and aſhes, elſe his ſpirit would not be wrought up to ſuch a height, to have things go according to his mind, and not according to the mind and will of God.

And ſeeing God will have every thing go according to his mind and will, know there's no ſtriving nor ſtrugling with God; if man will not bow to the will of God, he ſhall be broken by the will of God: if he will not ſubmit to it, he muſt fall by it. There's no avoiding one of theſe two, for he will recompence. Therefore let us yield up our ſelves freely to God, to be ruled by him, and not ſet him the rule, no nor ſo much as give him advice; let us receive the Law, and take advice from him. God is our Commander, but we muſt not be ſo much as his Counſellors. The Apoſtle ſpeaking of the eternal purpoſes and decrees of God, ſaith (Rom. 11. 34.) Who hath been his Counſellor? As God had none to counſel him concerning his eternal purpoſes, ſo we muſt not adventure to counſel him as to his daily providences or diſpenſations, either toward our ſelves, or others; the true rule of our life is, to yield our ſelves to be ruled by God. He will recompence it, whether we chuſe, or whether we refuſe.

And not I.] As if he had ſaid, If thou wilt ſtruggle with the will of God, thou mayſt, but I will not. God will go his own way, and do as he ſees good, ſay thou what thou canſt, or howſoever it pleaſe or diſpleaſe thee. And for mine own part, I dare not entertain or give way to a thought of preſcribing to him in any of theſe things, what he ſhould do; no nor be unſatisfied with, much leſs cenſure, what he hath done. Therefore, if thou canſt acquit thy ſelf of this crime and accuſation which I have laid to thy charge, as thou didſt theirs who ſpake before, do it, ſay what thou canſt for thy ſelf.

Hence note, He that ſees another do amiſs, ought to take heed of doing the like himſelf.

Again, As theſe words, and not I, refer to the word recompence, He will recompence, whether thou chuſe, or whether thou refuſe; the meaning of them may be conceived, as if Elihu had thus beſpoken Job, If thou doſt ſmart for thy pride, and the height of thy ſpirit, if God pay thee home for it, do not lay the fault upon me; I have given thee counſel to direct thee better, I deſire not thou ſhouldeſt come under ſuch a handling, but certainly God will do it. When we have declar'd the mind and will of God, in the ſeverity of his judgments upon ſinners, it is good for us to ſay God will do it, and not we. The Prophet Jeremiah (Chap. 17. 16.) having warned them of an evil day, adds, Nor have I deſired the woful day, Lord thou knoweſt it : Jeremy had ſpoken woful things againſt that people, but (ſaith he) I have not deſired that woful day, though I have propheſied of it. So Elihu ſeems to ſpeak, he will recompence, and not I; though it be not in my mind, yet I aſſure thee 'tis the mind of God.

Yet further, Some read theſe words with the former as an Interrogation or rebuking queſtion made by God himſelf; What ? Should you chuſe, and not I ? Election or choice is my priviledg, not thine, thou muſt not think to preſcribe to me. I will chaſten and afflict, as I think fit, or according to my own will, not according to thine. Thus he brings in God ſpeaking to Job; thou findeſt thy ſelf much aggrieved, and complaineſt that thou art afflicted more then is meet; It ſhould ſeem then, that I muſt do what thou thinkeſt fit, not what I think fit my ſelf. Surely thou muſt give me the rule, how much, how long, and in what manner I muſt correct both thy ſelf and others. Should you chuſe, and not I : How uncomely !

Verba Dei per Mimeſin eſſe puto. Merc.

Therefore ſpeak what thou knoweſt.

Here Elihu gives Job time to reply, as he had done (at the thirty third chap. verſ. 5.) as if he had ſaid, If thou knoweſt any thing againſt what I have ſpoken, or art able to make any objection againſt it, ſpeak; if thou thinkeſt I have not ſpoken right, ſhew me my error, and ſpare not.

Hence note, Firſt, When we have declar'd what we judg to be the mind of God in any caſe, we ſhould give others liberty of ſpeaking their minds alſo.

This is my opinion, ſpeak what thou canſt againſt it; we ſhould ſpeak (2 Cor. 1. 24.) Not as having Dominion over the faith of others, but as helpers of their joy; The Miniſters of Chriſt muſt ſpeak as Servants to, not as Lords of the faith of others. Elihu did not carry it as a Lord over the faith of Job; but left him to make good his own opinion and practice if he could.

Secondly Note, Knowledg is the fountain of Speech.

We need no other light to ſpeak by than that of reaſon, the underſtanding ſhould feed the Tongue; we muſt not ſpeak at a venture, but keep to rule and take our aim. The Apoſtle Paul tells us of ſome who make a great noiſe, but know not what they ſay, nor whereof they affirm (1 Tim. 1. 7.) they ſpeak they underſtand not what, and vent what they can give no account of; Speak what thou knoweſt.

Thirdly Note, We ſhould ſpeak (when called) what we know.

Knowledg is a Talent, and muſt not be hid in a Napkin; if thou know better than I ſpeak, pray ſpeak, do not hide thy knowledg. As Elihu would have Job ſpeak in his own caſe, ſo he inviteth others to ſpeak about his caſe, as it followeth in the next verſe.

Verſ. 34. Let men of underſtanding tell me, &c.

In this 34. verſe Elihu turns his ſpeech to Job's friends again, preſuming of, or not queſtioning their conſent to what he had ſaid, being confident that himſelf was in the right, and that they were wiſe enough to apprehend it. He was perſwaded that all wiſe men either were, or (upon hearing the matter) would be of his mind, and that therefore what Job had ſpoken, was very defective of wiſdom, as he concludes in the 35. verſe.

Let men of underſtanding tell me, &c.] He appeals to Job's friends, or any other men of underſtanding : let them (ſaith he) conſider what I and he have ſpoken, and give their judgment impartially concerning the whole matter in debate between me & Job. Let men of underſtanding tell me, &c.

The Hebrew is, men of heart : the heart is the ſeat of underſtanding, according to Scripture language, there we read of a wiſe heart, and of an underſtanding heart; and it ſaith of a fooliſh or indiſcreet perſon, he hath no heart; he is a man without a heart. Ephraim is a ſilly dove without a heart (Hoſ. 7. 11.) that is, he doth not underſtand. Mr. Broughton tranſlates; Sad men of heart will ſpeak as I, and the wiſe perſon that hears me. As in the former part of the verſe Elihu called for ſpeakers; ſo in the latter he calleth for hearers; Let men of underſtanding tell me,

Viri cordis. i. e. cordati; cor notat ſapientiam & carere cor dicitur qui deſipit. Cum Jobo non putat amplius producendum eſſe colloquium. Quare viros vocat intelligentes. Sanct.

And let a wiſe man hearken to me;] or as ſome render, a wiſe man will hearken to me. The word rendred hearken, ſignifies more than to hear, even to ſubmit, to obey, a wiſe man will hearken to me; that is, he will aſſent to, and conſent with me, he will vote with me, and declare himſelf to be of my mind. In that Elihu appealed to wiſe and underſtanding men,

Et vir ſapiens audit, i. e. audiet me, & mihi acquieſcet in hoc. Merc.

Note, Firſt, It is not good to ſtand to our own Judgments altogether, in dealing with the Conſciences of others.

Let wiſe men, let men of underſtanding, hear and conſider the matter, let them ſpeak their minds; we ſhould not lean to nor rely upon our own underſtanding in the things which concern our ſelves only, much leſs in thoſe, wherein others are concerned more than our ſelves. Eyes ſee more then an eye. And though it be an argument of too much weakneſs to ſee with other mens eyes; yet it is an argument of much goodneſs and humility, to call in the help of other mens eyes.

Secondly Note, The more wiſe men agree in any matter, the greater is the conviction.

One man may ſpeak to conviction, but if many ſpeak the ſame, it is a very ſtrong conviction. Many (I confeſs) may center and agree in a wrong Judgment; yet we ought to have a reverend eſteem of, and not eaſily differ from that Judgment wherein many wiſe and underſtanding men agree. Chriſt ſpeaking of Church proceedings and cenſures, ſaith (Matth. 18. 19) If two of you (who conſtitute the leaſt number, much more if a greater number of godly wiſe men) ſhall agree on earth as touching any thing that they ſhall ask, it ſhall be done for them, &c. So ſtill the more wiſe, holy, and learned men agree in any point, the greater is our conviction, and the ſtronger our obligation to ſubmit to it. He that doth not hear a ſingle brother, his fault is great; much more if he hear not two or three; moſt of all when he doth not hear the Church ſpeaking to him, and teſtifying againſt him in the name of Jeſus Chriſt.

Thirdly, Elihu having made a long diſcourſe, appeals to wiſe men.

Hence note, He that believeth he hath ſpoken truth, is not afraid to have it conſidered by thoſe who are beſt able to judg what is true.

Truth fears not any teſt, or tryal. He that offers pure gold and ſilver, cares not who toucheth it, or takes the aſſay. Wiſdom is (ſure enough to be) juſtified of her children. They who underſtand truth, and love it, can do nothing againſt the truth, but for it.

Fourthly, Elihu having diſcourſed long, is willing to refer it to men, and to let them judg of it.

Hence note, He that hath ſpoken truth in his uprightneſs, hath reaſon to believe that he ſhall have the conſent of the upright with him.

There is a ſameneſs of ſpirit in all wiſe and godly men for the main, and for the moſt part it is ſo in particulars. If a godly man conſcienciouſly judg ſuch an opinion to be truth, he may be much aſſured, that other wiſe and godly men will be of his opinion too. He dares ſay, as Elihu, Let wiſe men hearken unto me.

Fifthly, and laſtly, In that Elihu makes his appeal to wiſe men, to men of heart,

Note, All men are not fit to give their judgment in a caſe.

All are not competent Judges, nor prepared to give an opinion; and if they do 'tis not much to be regarded; wiſe men, ſpecially godly wiſe men, men of a holy underſtanding, are the men whoſe judgment and opinion is to be regarded. Elihu having beſpoken the thoughts and opinion of wiſe men, ſeems to give his own in the next words.

Verſ. 35. Job hath ſpoken without knowledg, and his words were without wiſdom.

When Elihu had offered it to the Conſideration of wiſe and underſtanding men, whether Job had ſpoken right about that great point, Submiſſion to the abſolute Soveraignty of God, he forbare not firſt, and plainly to declare his own underſtanding of it.

Job hath ſpoken without knowledg.] The Hebrew is, not in knowledg, or, not knowingly; that is, ignorantly, fooliſhly; a very high charge; Job hath ſpoken without knowledg; yet we are not to underſtand it, as if Elihu thought Job an ignorant, or an unknowing man, he could not but know otherwiſe; but as to this particular caſe, he reports him as a man that had ſpoken without knowledg, and declared himſelf both beſide his duty, and the rule.

Hence note, They who are very wiſe and knowing in many things, yet may be out in ſome.

The beſt of men are not perfect, either in grace, or knowledg. We may know much, and yet come ſhort in what we ought to know. A man may ſpeak ſome things very underſtandingly, and yet ſpeak other things very erroneouſly; A Job may be out ſometimes. Job hath ſpoken without knowledg.

And his words were without wiſdom.] When the Lord comes to decide this great Controverſie in the laſt Chapter of this Book, he tells Job's three friends, that their words had not been right, as the words of Job; and yet here Elihu ſaith, Job's words were without wiſdom, or, not in wiſdom. When God ſaid, the words of Job were right; we may underſtand it, that they were ſo according to their general tenor, or they were ſo comparatively to what his friends, Eliphaz, Zophar, and Bildad had ſaid in his caſe, or at leaſt his laſt words (after God had throughly convinced and humbled him) were ſo, though in many things he had failed in ſpeech, or ſpoken thoſe things which were not right before. Yet here Elihu ſpake truth, while he ſaid, his words were without wiſdom in the ſpecial point he had to do with him about; and ſo much Job himſelf acknowledged, I have ſpoken once, yea twice, but I will ſpeak no more; I will no more ſet my wiſdom againſt the wiſdom of God, nor preſume to have things go according to my mind, let God do what he will with me hereafter.

Conſider, how well this good man took the plain-dealing of Elihu; It might be expected that Job would quickly have riſen up in paſſion, eſpecially when he heard himſelf thus urged; But being convinced, with what Elihu ſpake, he gave him not a word, much leſs an angry word.

Hence note, A good man where he is faulty, will hear reproof with patience.

A gracious heart, will ſoon be angry with himſelf for ſpeaking or doing amiſs, but he can take it well to hear himſelf reproved, when he hath indeed either ſpoken or done amiſs. Nor are there many greater and clearer arguments of a gracious heart than this. To bear a reproof well is a high point of commendation. Grace may be ſhewed as eminently by our patience when we are rebuked for doing that which is evil, as by our forwardneſs and zeal in doing that which is good. When Nathan the Prophet applied the parable home to David after he had not only committed but continued long impenitently in his grievous ſins of adultery and murder, telling him to his face, Thou art the man (2 Sam. 12.7.) and not only telling him ſo, but at once upbraiding him with all the former benefits and kindneſſes of God to him, and threatning him with many dreadful future judgments (verſ. 8, 9, 10, 11, 12.) when (I ſay) he was thus ſharply dealt with, it might have been feared, that this great King would have riſen up in paſſion, and roared like a fierce Lion upon the Prophet; yet we hear nothing from him but words of ſorrowful confeſſion, and humble ſubmiſſion (verſ. 13.) I have ſinned againſt the Lord. The boldneſs of Paul was great in blaming Peter openly, and Peter's meekneſs was as great in bearing that blame (Gal. 2. 14.) Nor do I know whether the patience of Job were greater in bearing the great afflictions that God laid upon him, or in bearing the great reproofs which this man laid upon him. I grant, he complained often of thoſe bitter reproaches which his three friends caſt upon him, charging him for a wicked man or a hypocrite, and then he replied and replied home: but here Elihu reproved him ſharply for his raſh ſpeeches and intemperate carriage under his affliction, and he took it both meekly and ſilently. A good man will not ſtorm, nor rage, nor revile, nor threaten, when he is juſtly reprehended, but lies down under it, and takes it quietly, yea thankfully, and goes home and bleſſeth God that he hath met with a knock; Theſe are very hard words, Thou haſt ſpoken words without wiſdom; But Job ſeems to confeſs and patiently bear them: It is beſt for us not to do or ſpeak any thing that deſerves a reproof: and 'tis the next beſt, to receive a reproof well for what we have either done or ſpoken ill.

VERS. 36, 37.

My deſire is that Job may be tryed unto the end, becauſe of his anſwers for wicked men.

For he addeth rebellion unto his ſin, he clappeth his hands amongſt us, and multiplieth his words againſt God.

IN theſe two verſes Elihu winds up his ſecond ſpeech to Job, and in them we have two things conſiderable; Firſt, his motion made in reference to Job at the beginning of the 36. verſe; My deſire is (or this is the thing that I move for) that Job may be tryed to the end. Secondly, we have the reaſon of this motion, which ſome make three-fold, others fourfold, taking the latter part of the 36. verſe for one of the four; My deſire is that Job may be tryed to the end, why?

Firſt, Becauſe of his anſwers for wicked men.

Secondly, I deſire he may be tryed unto the end, why? for he addeth rebellion unto his ſin.

Thirdly, I deſire he may be tryed unto the end? why? he clappeth his hands amongſt us, and Fourthly, I deſire he may be tryed to the end, why? he multiplyeth his words againſt God. Others take the latter words of the 36. verſe, only as the ſubject matter about which Elihu deſires Job may be tryed, that is, concerning his anſwers for wicked men. And ſo the 37. verſe contains three reaſons why he deſires he may be brought to that tryal.

Verſ. 36. My deſire is that Job may be tryed.

So we tranſlate, and we put in the margin, O my father, moſt or many tranſlaters put that into the Text, O my father, Let Job be tryed unto the end. The firſt word of the Text hath a twofold ſignification; ſome taking it as an application to God by the name or title father. The reaſon of this difference is, becauſe the root of that Hebrew word which ſignifies a father, ſignifies to deſire, to will or wiſh. Mr. Broughton renders, O my father (and he adds, O my father which art in heaven) Let Job be tryed unto victory. As if Elihu (ſaith he) looking up to heaven, by O father, meant what followeth, O father which art in heaven. And he quotes Abraham Peritzol (a learned Rabbin) expounding the words ſo tranſlated, at large.

Father is one of the ſweeteſt and moſt honourable compellations of God. (Iſa. 63. 16.) the whole Church of the Jews is brought in beſpeaking God in that relation; Thou art our father, though Abraham be ignorant of us, &c. And God ſpeaking of himſelf, ſaith (Mal. 1.6.) A ſon honoureth his father, if I be a father, where is my honour? It was uſual even among the Heathens to add the name father to their Idol gods, thereby to expreſs their reverence, or veneration of them.

Apud Gentiles pater commune nomen erat Deorum; unde Dieſpiter, Merſpiter, Jupiter.

O my father.] They who embrace this tranſlation take ſpecial notice of that Pronoun My, O my father. He doth not ſay only or barely, O father, but O my father. Thoſe appropriating poſſeſſive Pronouns, mine, thine, have a kind of deliciouſneſs in them, and breath abundance of affection. Luther ſaid the ſweetneſs of the Goſpel lyeth in Pronouns; when a believer can ſay (with believing Thomas) My Lord, and my God. Thoſe things or perſons which we love moſt we call ours; we ſay of a ſingle ſpecial friend, he is mine; and to ſay, ſuch a one is mine, is as much as to ſay, he is much beloved, much prized or eſteemed by me, he, as it were lies next my heart; property raiſeth the price of all good things. We rejoyce in God moſt, when we can call him ours; and ſo doth God in us, when he takes us for his own. We have a meeting or union of ſeveral poſſeſſive Pronouns in one verſe (Cant. 8.12.) My vineyard which is mine is before me: My, mine, before me; implying how much Jeſus Chriſt did appropriate the Church unto himſelf, or how much he thought himſelf concerned in the proſperity of the Church. And as the Title Father is ſweet and comfortable, ſo glorious and honourable; God is the father of all, and all fatherhood is derived from God. That of the Apoſtle (Eph. 3. 15.) which we tranſlate, of whom the Ἐξ ȣ̃ πᾶσα πατριά. Ex quo omnis paternitas. Vulg. Paternitatis nomen ex ſemetipſo largitur omnibus; ſicut enim ſolus bonus dicitur quia bonitatem aliis communicat, &c. Hieron. in Epiſt. ad Epheſ. c.3.

the whole family, &c. Others render, the whole fatherhood, in heaven and earth is named. For as God only is good, and other things are good only by communication from him, ſo God only is a father, and all other fatherhood is by derivation and communication from him. O my father, let Job be tryed unto the end. We ſay,

My deſire is.] The Hebrew Text is as clear for that; and whether we ſay, O my father, let Job be tryed, or, my deſire is that Job may be tryed to the end, the general ſenſe is the ſame. We render the word by deſire (Chap. 9 26.) where Job tells us, that his life or the life of man is like the ſwift ſhips; we put in the margin, ſhips of deſire (it is this word) that is, like thoſe ſhips which being moſt deſirable (as being laden with the richeſt and moſt precious commodities) make moſt haſt home to their Harbour, or proper Port. Thus here, My deſire, or the thing that I ſtrongly wiſh is, &c. The Chaldee Paraphraſe renders, My will is, or I will Volo ego ut probetur Job, &c. Targ.

That Job may be tryed.] But had not Job been tryed already? was there any need to call him to a farther tryal? had he not been in the furnace a long time? why then doth Elihu ſo earneſtly importune that Job might be brought to tryal?

I anſwer; The word ſignifies a twofold tryal; Firſt, a tryal by way of examination, or argumentation; we try a man when we examine him, and argue with him, when we ſcan and ſearch out what he hath ſpoken, or what he hath done. In this ſenſe the word is uſed (Chap. 12. 11.) and at the third verſe of this Chapter, the ear tryeth words; that is, the ear examineth the ſenſe and meaning of thoſe things which are ſpoken; and by the ear, he means not only the ſenſitive faculty taken abſtractly, but the ſenſitive faculty joyned with the intellectual. A beaſt hath an ear and can hear, but a beaſt cannot try or examine that which is ſpoken and heard; only they that have rational faculties joyned with the ſenſitive are able to try words, and matter delivered by them. I deſire Job may be tryed to the utmoſt, that the words and ſpeeches which have paſt from him, may be fully conſidered, or conſidered to the end, that it may, at laſt, appear what he hath aſſerted and maintained.

Sunt qui intelligant probari pro exagitari diſputatione, ſed præſtat ut ad tentationem referatur per afflictiones. Merc.

Secondly, It ſignifies a tryal by affliction (Zech. 13. 9.) One third ſhall be brought through the fire and tryed. As metal gold or ſilver is tryed and refined in the fire, ſo ſhall they in the fire of affliction. Jeſus Chriſt is called a tryed ſtone (Iſa. 28. 16.) and he was ſo in both theſe accounts; he was examined and argued with to the end, and he was afflicted, and grieved to the end, he was a man of ſorrows, and acquainted with griefs all his days; Behold I lay in Zion a tryed ſtone, a ſure corner ſtone; that which is tryed is ſure; we may truſt that which hath been tryed. We ſay, try me and truſt me; we may underſtand Elihu in both, or in either of theſe ſenſes. My deſire is that Job may be tryed, that what he hath ſaid may be further examined, or that his affliction may be continued, till he be brought to a ſight of his errors and miſtakes. I would have him corrected till he ſubmits to God as a conqueror, and recanteth his raſh and inconſiderate anſwers. My deſire is that Job may be tryed

Optatum ut tantiſper flagelletur Job, donec deo vincenti cedat & reſponſis vanis renunciet. Jun.

Unto the end.] He doth not ſay barely, tryed, but, tryed unto the end; that is, fully and throughly tryed, not by halves, overly and ſlightly; If he be indeed juſt and ſincere, the fire of this tryal, how long ſoever he continueth in it, will do him no hurt, it will only purge and refine him from his remaining droſs; but if he be unſound and naught, he will evaporate and fume away into vain complaints and murmurings; Therefore let him be tryed to the end.

Some of the Latines tranſlate, I would have him tryed to death, which is the end or period of man in this world. The word ſignifies ſempiternity, as alſo victory, becauſe that which continueth ever, muſt needs be victorious (1 Sam. 15. 29.) The ſtrength of Iſrael will not lie; we put in the Margin, The eternity or victory of Iſrael (that is, the eternal God, who is victor over all) will not lie. Thus ſome render here, I deſire Job may be tryed unto victory, that is, that God would never give over trying him, till he hath overcome him and brought down his ſpirit, for ſtill the man is too high, too ſtout, his ſpirit is ſtill too big, too unbroken; my deſire is therefore that God would try him to victory, till he hath brought him upon his knees, and made him eat his words, or till he give glory to God by humbling himſelf and confeſſing his ſin: I would have him fully convinced by argument and throughly humbled by chaſtiſement, till he at laſt reſigneth up himſelf to the will of God. The Italian gloſs puts it in the form of a Prayer; Withdraw not thy viſitation from Job, until thou haſt brought him to the duty of a child; Further, this word, unto the end, doth not imply a deſire of the everlaſtingneſs of his tryal, but of the profitableneſs of it. He would not have him always kept upon the rack, or under the rod, but he would have him effectually dealt with, that the matter might iſſue well with him.

From the words thus opened, Note firſt, Affliction is a tryal.

It makes us appear what we are; moſt have but an appearance till they are tryed; and being tryed, what they are doth really appear. Afflictions try our graces what they are; and afflictions try our corruptions what they are. Afflictions draw forth the ſpirit of a man, they turn his inſide outward, and ſet him (as it were) in the open light. Take tryal in the ſecond ſenſe by way of examination, and it yields us the ſame truth. He that is throughly ſifted will appear in his own likeneſs. Let a man be fully dealt and argued with, let his ſpeeches and his actions be brought to the rule of the word, what he is, and what they are, will ſoon be ſeen. That's the tryal which the Apoſtle means (1 Theſ. 5. 2.) Prove all things; prove what men ſay and hold, prove their aſſertions and opinions, and you ſhall come to a clear underſtanding of them. The rule of the word is a ſtraight or right rule, and that which is right will ſhew you both it ſelf, and that which is crooked, or any way ſwerving and departing from it.

Secondly, As tryal is taken in the former notion for affliction, My deſire is that Job may be tryed unto the end.

Note, It is lawful to pray or wiſh for afflictions upon others in ſome caſes.

We may pray for and wiſh afflictions upon others for their good, or for the glory of God. It is not good to wiſh evil as evil upon any man, no not upon the worſt of men. Job profeſſed againſt that (Chap. 31. 29, 30.) If I have rejoyced at the deſtruction of him that hated me, or have ſuffered my mouth to ſin by wiſhing a curſe to his ſoul, then, &c. As if he had ſaid, If I have prayed or wiſhed that any evil might befall mine enemy as evil, I ſhould have done very ill, and deſerved to ſuffer ill. For that had been an evil wiſh. Yet, as we our ſelves ought to chuſe affliction rather than ſin; ſo we may pray for affliction upon others, rather than that they ſhould go on in ſin. As in that caſe of the Churches proceeding to the ſentence of excommunication; which is the delivering of a perſon up to Satan, or a putting him into the very power of the devil for a time (1 Cor. 5. 4, 5.) it is the end or deſign which makes this lawful: our buſineſs in the Miniſtry and in all Church-adminiſtrations, is to put ſouls out of the power of Satan, to reſcue them out of the hand of the devil, to recover thoſe that are led Captive by him at his will; yet ſaith the Apoſtle, Deliver ſuch a one unto Satan, put him into the devils hands, for what end? For the deſtruction of the fleſh, that the ſpirit may be ſaved in the day of the Lord Jeſus. This makes the prayer or act of the Church lawful, becauſe the intendment is the deſtroying of that which ought to be deſtroyed, or to deſtroy that in man which will be the deſtruction of man, his fleſh, his luſt, his pride, his covetouſneſs, his wantonneſs; For the deſtruction of this fleſh deliver him to Satan, that the ſpirit may be ſaved in the day of the Lord Jeſus. Thus we may pray and wiſh for affliction upon others; but 'tis a prayer which muſt be managed with a great deal of caution, leſt our prayers to God in that kind, be found ill wiſhes to men. That which Elihu had in his thoughts, when he deſired Job might be tryed to the very end, was, that he might be prevented from going on in the way wherein he was to end. Yea, I conceive a man may pray for afflictions upon himſelf, rather than he ſhould go on in a courſe of ſin, or, when he finds that other ways and means which God hath uſed with him, have not been effectual to ſubdue his corrupt heart, to mortifie his luſts, and to bring him off from a courſe of ſin, but that (as it is ſaid in the next verſe) he is in danger of adding rebellion to his ſin. A godly man had much rather that God ſhould make him poor, ſick, weak, and nothing in this world, then let his corruptions have dominion over him; He deſires rather God ſhould take the world quite out of his hand, than that the world ſhould get into his heart, or be as fuel to feed and inflame his luſts.

Bono ipſius optat hoc, non odio aut malevolentia. Druſ.

Thus Elihu deſired that Job might be tryed, becauſe tryals by affliction are for our purging, refining, and bettering. Love was the root of this wiſh, not hatred or ill will. Let Job be tryed to the end. Why? we may take the latter part of the verſe for a reaſon why, as well as for the matter about which he would have him tryed.

Propter reſponſiones (communes) cum hominibus improbis. Bez. Tanquam unus è numero virorum vanorum. Piſc.

Becauſe of his anſwers for wicked men.] Let him be tryed concerning thoſe words which he hath ſpoken in common with or after the manner of vain men. He hath ſpoken words wherein he ſeems to comply with wicked men, to ſay as they ſay, to conſent with them, and to be of their opinion, this was charged upon him directly by Elihu at the 8. verſe of this Chapter; What man is like Job, who drinketh up ſcorning like water, which goeth in company with the workers of iniquity, and walketh with wicked men; that is, though Job in his converſation or carriage of his life hath not, yet in this diſcourſe, he hath ſtengthened the hands of wicked men, or confirmed them in their opinion, ſpeaking ſo much of the heavy preſſures of God upon him, and deſiring ſo often to come to a hearing, as if he had ſome wrong done him. We are not to underſtand theſe words of Elihu, Becauſe of his anſwers for wicked men; As if he charged Job to do ſo directly, or as if he had formally taken upon him to plead or advocate the cauſe of wicked men; we are not (I ſay) to underſtand him ſo groſly, nor had it been true to ſay, that Job opened his mouth, or ſpake thus for wicked men; but his meaning is, he hath ſpoken ſuch things as in common apprehenſion ſeem to comply with the opinions of wicked men; or with the ſpeeches which they uſe when they are (like him) in a troubled condition.

Or again, Becauſe of his anſwers for wicked men; that is, that he may acknowledg the anſwers he hath given, are not ſuch as do become a godly man, but rather ſavour of ſuch a ſpirit as unbroken proud perſons hold forth in the time of their affliction; who are never pleaſed with, but always complaining at divine diſpenſations.

Laſtly, Theſe words, Becauſe of his anſwers for wicked men, may, poſſibly, have this ſenſe; Becauſe he hath ſpoken ſuch things as may ſerve the turn of wicked men for anſwers, or, as if he would inſtruct them what to anſwer, when at any time they are under the hand of God. He may be ſaid to anſwer for another man, who any way prompts him how or what to anſwer. And while a good man ſpeaks amiſs, in any caſe, he teacheth, yea and encourageth bad men to ſpeak ſo too. Yet I rather incline to the firſt interpretation, that Elihu would have Job tryed, becauſe his anſwers were ſuch as it might be judged he had taken wicked men for his pattern in giving them, and not as if in them he had given a pattern to wicked men.

Hence Note, Firſt, A good man may ſometimes act the part of a wicked man, or he may ſpeak like wicked men, as if he were one of them.

Though his ſtate be as different from the ſtate of wicked men, as light is from darkneſs, or as ſweet from ſour, or white from black, yet as to ſome actions or ſpeeches, he may bear a reſemblance to them. Good men and bad men do, as I may ſay, enter-common in many things; a wicked man whoſe heart is naught, who is yet in an unregenerate eſtate (for I mean not by a wicked man, him only that is flagitious, a murderer, a whoremonger, a drunkard, but a wicked man is any one that is unregenerate, whoſe heart is not yet changed; Now I ſay, a wicked man) may ſpeak and do many things like a godly man; he may hear the word, and pray, and perform outward duties, which are like and are (take them materially) the ſame which godly men perform. Thus he enter-commons with godly men; and this is the caſe of all hypocrites, who make a pretence of Religion, when they have no acquaintance with the power of it. And thus through temptation, and in ſome very burthenſom afflictions, a godly man may ſpeak as a wicked man; ſuch haſty raſh provoking ſpeeches may paſs from him as proceed from the ungodly, only here is the difference, thoſe evil ſpeeches or actions proceed from the ſtate of the one, and only from the temptation of the other.

Secondly; From the phraſe or form of ſpeech, in which the original expreſſeth wicked men; The words are, Men of wickedneſs, or iniquity; As if it had been ſaid, the worſt of wicked men. This ſhews us what man naturally is; he is a man of wickedneſs; nothing but wickedneſs, altogether wicked. The Lord looking down from heaven upon all the children of men (in a ſtate of nature:) ſaid, There is not one that doth good, no not one. Take any wicked man he hath no good in him, no not one good thought in him; he is a man of iniquity, he is meer wickedneſs, till he be changed, till his heart be broken by godly ſorrow, till he be united unto Chriſt by faith, and through the Spirit. I know this expreſſion is uſed ſeveral times in Scripture, to note thoſe men who are ſinners of the firſt form, being not only ſinners in their ſtate, but in the higheſt degree of activity. Thus Antichriſt is called, The man of ſin (2 Theſſ. 2.) And when the Prophet ſaith (Iſa. 55.7.) Let the man of iniquity turn from his evil way; he means the worſt of men. Yet this is a truth, every man in an unconverted eſtate is a man of iniquity; he hath no goodneſs, nothing of God in him, he bears only the Image and impreſs of the devil upon him. Chriſt told the Phariſees, who were high in reputation with the world for good men (*Joh.*8.44.) Ye are of your father the devil, and the luſts of your father ye will do. The natural man is ſo ſinful, that he is meerly ſin. And ſometimes a godly man ſpeaks and doth as if he were ſo too. Job ſpake like men of iniquity.

Elihu proceedeth more fully to declare both the reaſon why he would have Job further tryed, and likewiſe what he meant by his anſwers for wicked men.

Verſ. 37. For he addeth rebellion (or treſpaſs) to his ſin.

Nomine חטאת intelligitur peccatum ex errore commiſſum; Nomine vero פשע ſcelus propriè rebellio.

Here are two words, ſin and rebellion; the firſt which we render ſin, ſignifies ſin in common; the leaſt tranſgreſſion of the Law it is ſin; the leaſt vain thought of the heart, the leaſt idle word of the tongue is ſin; but every ſin is not rebellion; to that hath many ſpecial marks or brands rather upon it. To rebel is to ſin with a high hand, to rebel is to ſin with a ſtiff neck, to rebel is to ſin with obſtinacy and reſolvedneſs of will; he addeth rebellion to his ſin. But did Job rebel indeed? I conceive the rebellion which Elihu chargeth Job with, is not rebellion in a ſtrict but in a qualified and comparative ſenſe; As if he had ſaid, Job ſinned before, but now his ſin is heightned, we ſee him now (in words) riſing up againſt God, complaining of his juſtice, or as if he had dealt unjuſtly with him. What he did in the time of his proſperity, thoſe ſlips and falls which he had then, weighed nothing as laid in the ballance with the intemperate ſpeeches which he hath uttered in the day of his trouble. He addeth rebellion unto his ſin. So we render as reſpecting what he was and had done before. Others render it potentially not indicatively; Let Job be tryed unto the end, becauſe of his anſwers for wicked men, for otherwiſe he may add rebellion to his ſin; we know not whither his corruptions may carry him if ſuffered to go on. This is a more favourable reading of the Text, not as a charge of natural but feared rebellion againſt God; As if he had ſaid, I ſee the mans ſpirit is ſo entangled, that if he be not well and wiſely dealt with, poſſibly he may come to add even rebellion unto his ſin; and whereas he ſinned before out of ignorance or imprudence, he may ſhortly ſin out of contumacy and perverſeneſs.

Hence Note, Firſt, There are ſins of ſeveral degrees.

Every man ſinneth, he that ſaith he hath no ſin, or doth not ſin, there is no truth in him (1 John 1.8.) But every mans ſin is not rebellion, every man doth not riſe up to that height and degree of ſinning. If any ſhall enquire, when is a mans ſin rebellion? I anſwer.

Firſt, That mans ſin grows to be rebellion, whoſe will is much in it. He that will ſin rebels. The Apoſtle Paul ſaith (Rom. 7.19.) The evil which I would not, that I do. This is the caſe of every godly man at his beſt, he doth thoſe evils which he would not; this is not rebellion, becauſe the will of a godly man is changed and turned off from ſin; he can ſay, the evil which I would not do, that do I. Rebellion is the doing of that evil which we would.

Secondly, In rebellion, or in rebellious acts of ſin, there is much of the underſtanding as well as of the will; that is, a man ſeeth clearly what he doth is ſin, or that the rule is againſt him; to rebel is to ſin againſt the light. It is ſaid in the 24. Chapter of this book, The wicked are of them that rebel againſt the light; that is, they cannot abide the light; he means it there of the natural light; the adulterer and the thief cannot indure Sun or day-light: it is much more true of myſtical light, if he hath any light of knowledg, he reſiſts and rebels againſt it. It's great rebellion to reſiſt the receiving of light offered, but 'tis greater rebellion to reſiſt light received; ſins againſt knowledg are rebellious ſins.

Thirdly, A rebellious ſin is a ſin againſt reproof, admonition and warning; when we have been often told of ſuch a ſin, and admoniſhed of ſuch an evil courſe, and yet we will go on in it, here is rebellion; ſuch a man hath not only light in his underſtanding, that what he doth is ſinful, but this hath been brought home to him and wrought upon him by reproof, counſel, and admonition; here is ſtill greater rebellion. Therefore in the proceeding of the Church, ſpoken of (Matth. 18.) when an offending brother hath been reproved and told of his fault, firſt in private by a particular brother, then by two or three, then by the whole Church; if after all theſe admonitions and reproofs, he doth not repent, he is to be caſt out as a rebel, and accounted as a Heathen or a Publican.

Laſtly, As 'tis rebellion when we ſin as againſt the reproofs of man, ſo againſt the providences of God; and thoſe of two ſorts.

Firſt, When we ſin againſt the favourable providences of God, I mean thoſe which are outward; when God beſtows many mercies and comforts upon us, when he gives us health and riches in the world, and fulneſs of all things, then to ſin againſt him is rebellion. (Deut. 32. 15.) Jeſurun waxed fat and kicked, and rebelled againſt the Lord, and lightly regarded the rock of his ſalvation. When we have received many and great mercies, then to grow vain and wanton, and nouriſh our ſelves as in the day of ſlaughter, this is rebellion againſt God.

Secondly, When the providences of God have broken us by this evil or that evil, when we are broken in our eſtates, broken in our names, broken in our relations, broken with ſickneſs after ſickneſs, and yet perſiſt in a ſinful way, this is rebellion, this is ſin in the very height of it. This was the rebellion of Ahaz, (2 Chron. 28. 22.) Who in the time of his diſtreſs, treſpaſſed yet more againſt the Lord. And this was the rebellion of Judah (Iſa. 1. 5.) Why ſhould ye be ſtricken any more? ye will revolt more and more. Take heed of this; 'tis too much that we ſin at all, let us not be found adding rebellion to our ſin. I may ſay theſe two things concerning the habit or any act of ſin.

Firſt, It is a burthen to a godly man; O wretched man that I am (ſaid Paul) who ſhall deliver me from this body of death?

Secondly, As it is a godly man's burthen when he ſins, ſo it is his care and ſtudy not to ſin; he would not ſin at all; he watcheth himſelf that he may not ſin in the leaſt degree. That was the Apoſtle John's deſire and care for all the Churches (1 Joh. 2. 1.) My little children, theſe things I write unto you, that ye ſin not. I would have you watch over your hearts and ways ſo narrowly, that no ſin might ſlip you; that ye might not have a wrong thought, nor ſpeak an idle word; how much more ſhould we take heed, that we add not rebellion to our ſin? There is ſomewhat of rebellion in every ſin, even in the ſins of good men; but 'tis ſad when they add rebellion to their ſin. Samuel gives a dreadful deſcription of that ſin which is rebellion (1 Sam. 15. 23.) Rebellion is as the ſin of witch-craft, and ſtubbornneſs is as Iniquity and Idolatry. Witch-craft is that ſin wherein men have much converſe and compliance with the devil; The devil and the witch, or the devil and the Diviner (as our Margin hath it) act as loving companions; they have mutual converſe, yea commerce, they trade together. Rebellion is that ſin, or we ſin rebelliouſly, when we declare our ſelves moſt averſe to God. The witch declares himſelf a friend to the devil; the rebellious ſoul defieth and deſpiſeth God; now thoſe ſins that have moſt compliance with the devil, and moſt defiance againſt God, are put together; if a man doth much ſet himſelf to oppoſe God, by ſinning againſt light, againſt reproofs, and againſt providences, whether the gracious or afflicting providences of God (If a man (I ſay) rebel thus againſt God) it is like the ſin of witch-craft, which is compliance and converſe with the devil. Here is an extream on the one ſide, and an extream on the other ſide, yet both meet, rebellion is as the ſin of witch-craft, and ſtubbornneſs is as Iniquity and Idolatry. Theſe latter words are exegetical; ſtubbornneſs (that is, when a man is ſtout and will go on his way) is as Iniquity and Idolatry. We may conſider a great elegancy in thoſe words; Stubbornneſs is as Idolatry. What is Idolatry? it is worſhipping or giving honour to a falſe god, which is indeed worſhipping the devil; all Idolatry is devil-worſhip; the witch worſhippeth the devil intentionally, and ſo doth the Idolater, though he intend it not (1 Cor. 10. 20.) The things which the Gentiles ſacrifice, they ſacrifice to devils and not to God. I do not ſay, every error or failing in worſhip is devil-worſhip, but that which is Idolatry indeed, or the ſetting up of a worſhip of our own deviſing is Idolatry, and devil-worſhip. Thus ſtubbornneſs is as Idolatry, and rebellion is as witch-craft. What is witch-craft? compliance with the devil. What is Idolatry? devil-worſhip, a falling down to the devil. Let the wicked conſider what they do when they rebel; and let the people of God take heed of any ſin, or way of ſinning, which may be accounted rebellion. To ſin with much will againſt much light, againſt many reproofs from men, and againſt the reproving, or againſt the inviting providences of God, hath rebellion in it; He addeth rebellion to his ſin.

Secondly, Taking the words in the mildeſt ſenſe,

Note, Sometimes a good man may go backward, he may be worſe and worſe, and do worſe and worſe.

We ſhould be always growing in grace, that's the condition of believers and their duty, yet under ſome diſpenſations they may decline for a time and grow worſe and worſe, adding that which is like rebellion to their ſin.

Thirdly, If we conſider theſe words in connection with the former; Elihu having prayed for further tryal upon Job, as fearing, that elſe he might add rebellion to his ſin.

Note, He that is not throughly convinced and chaſtned, may quickly grow worſe and worſe.

He may, or he will add rebellion to his ſin. I do not know where a mans ſin will end, if the Lord ſhould let him alone. 'Tis a mercy that any man, eſpecially that God hath a continual inſpection over us; if ſome mens ways were not tryed and queſtioned, they might add rebellion to their ſin; who knows were they would ſtop? it is a mercy to have both words and actions examined by brethren and Churches, how ſadly elſe would many wander? yea, it is a mercy to be tryed by affliction. When God keeps us from a foul way by building a wall againſt us, it is a mercy, elſe we might add rebellion to ſin. No man knows the meaſure of his own evil heart, or what it would do; for though believers have a general promiſe to be kept by the power of God to ſalvation; yet how lamentably have good men fallen, though kept from falling away? Elihu aggravates this yet further by the example of Job in the latter and laſt part of the verſe.

He clappeth his hands amongſt us, and multiplieth his words againſt God.

He clappeth his hands, or, maketh a noiſe amongſt us, as Mr. Broughton reads it; clapping of the hands in Scripture hath a threefold ſignification.

Firſt, It implyeth paſſion or ſorrow. A man under affliction claps or wrings his hands for grief. Both thoſe geſtures are of the ſame ſignificancy.

Secondly, There is a clapping of the hands with indignation; when we are very angry, then we clap our hands.

Thirdly, There is a clapping of the hands for joy, or in a way of triumph; when a man thinks he has conquered and got the day, he claps his hands, and ſo do they who are on his ſide. (Pſal. 47. 1.) O clap your hands (all ye people) ſhout unto God with the voice of triumph. I conceive Elihu intends Job clapping his hands in this third ſenſe; he clappeth his hands amongſt us, or inſults over us, as if he had conquered and won the Garland; and therefore Elihu prayed that he might be further tryed.

Exploſurus eſſet nos, ut qui viciſſet nos diſputando. Piſc.

This is another aggravation of that ill frame which Elihu conceived Job to be in. And indeed to clap our hands when we have done or ſpoken evil, is worſe than the evil, which we have either done or ſpoken; He clappeth his hands;

And multiplieth his words (or, may multiply words) againſt God.] Solomon ſaith (Prov. 10. 19) in the multitude of words there doth not want ſin; that is, there is ſtore of ſin in the multitude of words. They that will be ſpeaking much, ſlip much. Job (ſaith he) multiplyeth words againſt God. There is a multiplying of words againſt God two ways; Firſt, directly; Secondly, by way of reflection or rebound; Elihu could not ſay, Job had ſpoken, nor could he preſume he would ſpeak one word, much leſs multiply words againſt God directly. He knew Job was a godly man, but he aſſerts he had, or feared he might multiply words againſt God reflectively, that is, ſpeak ſuch words as might caſt diſhonour upon God, ſuch words as God might take very ill at his hands, and interpret as ſpoken againſt himſelf.

Hence note, They who ſpeak unduely of the ways and proceedings of God with them in this world, ſpeak againſt God himſelf.

The buſineſs of Elihu in all this diſcourſe, was to hold forth the evil frame of Job's heart, ſignified by the intemperance of his language under the dealings of God. God had afflicted and chaſtned Job, he had multiplyed wounds upon him, and Job in the heat of his ſpirit and bitterneſs of his ſoul, making many complaints about the workings of God with him, is charged with multiplying words againſt God. We may ſpeak againſt God before we are aware; yea we may ſpeak many words againſt God when we think we have not ſpoke one word againſt him. While we ſpeak impatiently of the proceedings of God in the world, and murmur at his diſpenſations to our families or perſons, what do we but multiply words againſt God? we ſpeak much for our ſelves to God, yea (I may ſay) we highly commend our ſelves to God when we ſubmit to his doings, and ſay nothing, but in a ſilent admiration adore his dealings, and wait for a good iſſue of them. Aaron proclaimed both his humility and his faith in holding his peace, when the Lord ſlew his two ſons Nadab and Abihu, ſtrangely with fire, for offering ſtrange fire before the Lord, which he commanded them not (Lev. 10. 1, 2, 3.) But how many are there who proclaim their pride and unbelief, by not being able to hold their peace under the afflicting hand of God, when his hand ſcarce toucheth them, or when he doth but lay the weight of his little finger upon them, in compariſon of that heavy ſtroke which fell upon Aaron. We are in much danger of ſinning, when at any time we ſpeak many words, or (as Elihu ſpeaketh) multiply words, he is a rare man that ſpeaketh many words, and but ſome amiſs, Now, if to multiply words at any time (even when we are moſt compoſed) expoſeth us to error in our words, how much more when our tongues utter many words in the bitterneſs and diſcompoſure of our ſpirits? And as to ſpeak amiſs in any matter is to ſin againſt God, ſo to ſpeak much amiſs of our ſufferings, or of the ſevereſt providences of God towards us, is to ſpeak much, or to multiply words (though not intentionally) yet really and indeed againſt God. O then forbear this multiplication of words, leſt you multiply ſins. Speak but little, unleſs in the praiſe of God; take heed how you ſpeak of what God is doing to others, or doing to your ſelves. Let your words be few, and let them be weighed, for God will weigh your words; and you may hear from him in blows, what he heareth from you in words. 'Tis a dangerous thing to be found ſpeaking words againſt God; yet this may be the caſe of a good man, whoſe heart is with God, and whoſe heart is for God: even while he hath a general bent of heart to lay himſelf out in ſpeaking and doing for God, he through paſſion and temptation may be found ſpeaking againſt God. What we ſpeak diſcontentedly of the ways or works of God, is a multiplying of words againſt God himſelf.

Thus I have given out and finiſhed my thoughts upon the Preface which Elihu made to lead in his diſcourſe with Job, as alſo upon two ſtages of his diſcourſe with him. Job ſits ſilent and anſwers him not a word, which Elihu perceiving takes liberty to urge him further with two diſtinct diſcourſes more, contained in the three Chapters following; which, if the Lord give life and leave, may be opened and offered to the Readers uſe and acceptance in convenient ſeaſon.

SIRS,

H*Aving, in the Prefatory Epiſtle to the former part ſet forth the ſtate of theſe three Chapters here preſented and expounded, together with the general ſcope of* Elihu (the ſpeaker) in them; be pleaſed to look back thither for ſome help towards your ſatisfaction in thoſe points. All that I ſhall entertain you with in this Addreſs, is only to tell you, that, as I have now, through the good hand of God with me, finiſhed my promiſed Commentary upon the whole Diſcourſe of Elihu with Job, divided into a Preface and four diſtinct Speeches, contained and continued in ſix entire Chapters; ſo, I purpoſe, through the ſame aſſiſtance, to proceed (with convenient ſpeed) in drawing up and ſending out (in one Volume more) my ſlender apprehenſions and meditations upon the remaining five Chapters of this Book: In which it will appear, how (when Elihu (doubtleſs with good ſucceſs) had acted the part of a wiſe and learned Moderator, in that grand Controverſie of Providence between Job and his three Friends, Eliphaz, Bildad and Zophar, and had done both with him and them, it will appear, I ſay, how) God himſelf was pleaſed to come forth and undertake the matter in difference, giving, as the Supream Moderator of that Noble Diſputation, an unerring and an irrefragable Determination of it, to the full conviction, and in the iſſue, to the full conſolation of Job, as alſo to the high content of all that heard it, even of his three Friends; who, though they were ſeverely reproved and cenſured by God, as having over-ſeverely reproved and cenſured Job, yet he graciouſly directed them a way to make their attonement, and was not only reconciled unto them himſelf, but reconciled them to his ſervant Job; winding all up in Peace and Love, in mutual rejoycings and embracings. Now the God of Peace, Truth and Love, lead us all into the love of Truth and Peace, and teach us to profit always by what hath at any time been written (according to Truth) upon thoſe things, which himſelf afore-time cauſed to be written for our learning; that we through patience and comfort of the Scriptures might have hope. That, what is here written may be uſeful to all, eſpecially to thoſe who are (as Job was) in a ſtate of ſuffering, till they come to be (as Job is) paſt all ſufferings, is the hearts deſire and prayer of,

AN

AN EXPOSITION WITH Practical Obſervations UPON THE THIRTY-FIFTH, THIRTY-SIXTH, AND THIRTY-SEVENTH CHAPTERS Of the Book of JOB.

CHAP. XXXV. Verſ. 1, 2, 3,

Elihu ſpake moreover, and ſaid.

Thinkeſt thou this to be right, that thou ſaidſt, My righteouſneſs is more than Gods?

For thou ſaidſt, What advantage will it be unto thee, and, What profit ſhall I have, if I be cleanſed from my ſin?

THis Chapter containeth the third Oration, Speech or Addreſs, which Elihu made to Job; in which he giveth anſwer to, confutes, and reproves, three aſſertions, or complaints, we may call them complaining aſſertions, with which he chargeth Job.

The Firſt is laid down in the Second and Third verſes; Thinkeſt thou this to be right, that thou ſaidſt, my righteouſneſs is more than Gods? For thou ſaidſt, What advantage will it be? &c. The anſwer of Elihu to this both complaining and (as propoſed) proud aſſertion, is found in the 4. 5, 6, 7, and 8. verſes of this Chapter.

The Second uncomely complaint is charged on Job at the 9. verſe; By reaſon of the multitude of oppreſſions, they make the oppreſſed to cry: they cry out by reaſon of the arm of the mighty. To this Elihu gives anſwer in the 10, 11, 12, and 13. Verſes.

The Third is expreſt in the former part of the 14. verſe; Although thou ſayeſt, thou ſhalt not ſee him. To this Elihu begins to make anſwer in the latter part of the ſame verſe, and continueth his anſwer to the end of the Chapter; Yet judgment is before him, therefore truſt thou in him, &c. Theſe are the general Parts of the whole Chapter. I ſhall now proceed to the explication of particulars.

Verſ. 1. Elihu ſpake moreover, and ſaid.

Who this Elihu was, I have ſhewed heretofore, as alſo the ſpirit and temper of the man; and it may well be ſaid here, Moreover, he ſaid; for we have already heard many of his ſayings in the 32, 33, and 34. Chapters of this Book.

This firſt verſe is a connecting Preface to that which followeth; for when Elihu had given Job liberty of ſpeech, or of anſwering for himſelf, at the latter end of the former Chapter, and had, as we may ſuppoſe, pauſed a while, expecting what anſwer Job would make, he perceiving that Job either had nothing to offer, or would offer no more, began again; as if the Author of this Book had ſaid, when Elihu ſaw that Job would not reply, or had nothing more to ſay for his own vindication, he let him underſtand, that he had more to ſay for his conviction.

Elihu ſpake moreover, and ſaid.] And he ſaid many things, and thoſe very ſharp things, his words were indeed as goads, and as nails, yea as ſwords, and ſpears, in the heart of Job; he objected againſt him ſuch things, as were in the matter very bad, and ſuch for the manner, as a godly, yea an ingenious man, ought not only to be aſhamed of, but to abhor: And thus he undertakes him,

Verſ 2. Thinkeſt thou this to be right, that thou ſaidſt, my righteouſneſs is more than Gods?

In this verſe Elihu enters his renewed ſuit againſt Job, or here he propoſeth what he had to charge Job with; Thinkeſt thou this to be right? And in the next or third verſe, he indeavours to make good this charge, or to prove that Job had ſaid ſo; for thou haſt ſaid, &c. As if he had ſaid, I will prove it to thy face, that thou haſt ſaid, My righteouſneſs is more than Gods; for thou haſt ſaid, What advantage will it be unto thee, and what profit ſhall I have, if I be cleanſed from my ſin? So then in the ſecond verſe you have the charge, and in the third the proof of the charge.

Thinkeſt thou this to be right?] The word which we render to think, notes more than a bare thinking, even the deviſing, or curious contriving of a matter in the brain; haſt thou formed this in thy Imagination, and concluded it in thy Underſtanding for right, for ſound, and wholſome Doctrin, for a very truth? There may be a threefold expoſition of theſe words:

חשב. An hoc cogitaſti in jus. Heb.

Firſt, As an appeal to Job's own breaſt; Thinkeſt thou this to be right? Let me ask thee the queſtion, Haſt thou ſaid well in this? Doſt thou believe thou haſt? Let thy Conſcience judg, and make anſwer. I doubt not but thou wilt be ſelf-condemned: And indeed no guilty perſon can be abſolved, himſelf (if himſelf) being judg.

Secondly, We may look upon the words, not only as an appeal, but as a reproof, or objurgation; Thinkeſt thou this to be right? What man in his right mind would think ſo! Thou toldeſt thy wife in the ſecond Chapter, Thou ſpeakeſt like one of the fooliſh women; and may it not be told thee, Thou ſpeakeſt like one of the fooliſh men? Would any man in his wits utter a word of this import, a word of ſo groſs a ſavour, of ſo dangerous a reflection upon the Juſtice of God, or ſo much as intimate himſelf by any the remoteſt conſequences, more juſt, more righteous than God? Why hath ſuch a word dropt from thy mouth? Thus he chides, checks, and reproves him.

Thirdly, Theſe words may have the ſenſe of a denying queſtion; Thinkeſt thou this to be right? Surely Job thou doſt not think this to be right, I cannot believe that thou thinkeſt this to be right, thou are not ſurely ſo far left of Reaſon, and of Grace, as to think this to be right. This ſenſe gives ſome allay to, or abatement of the former; ſurely thou doſt not think ſo, though thou haſt ſpoken ſo; though thy words may have this meaning, yet I hope this is not thy meaning; I am unwilling to take up thy opinion from thy expreſſion; Thinkeſt thou this to be right? From the firſt Expoſition,

Note, It is a ſtrong way of conviction, to put or refer a matter to his Judgment and Conſcience, againſt whom we make oppoſition.

Thinkeſt thou this to be right? I refer it to thy own Conſcience, whether this be right yea or no; and thus the Scripture ſpeaks often. When God would ſtop the mouth from all contradiction, and not leave oppoſers a word to ſay, he leaves it upon them to ſay all. Moſes intending to prove that none could prevail againſt Iſrael, unleſs (God provoked by ſin) delivered Iſrael up into their hands, gives this demonſtration of it (Deut. 32. 31.) Their Rock is not as our Rock even our enemies themſelves being Judges; I refer this to our enemies opinion, whether the Dunghil gods, the Idols whom they ſerve and truſt to, be like Jehovah, the living God, whom we have (and ought) to ſerve and truſt to. You that are our enemies, do you think your Rock is like our Rock? I know you do not. The Apoſtles, Peter, and John, referred it back to the judgment of their Judges, whether it were fit for them, to obey their commands, yea or no, when they called them, and charged them to preach no more in that name, the name of the Lord Jeſus Chriſt, (Acts 4. 19.) Whether it be right in the ſight of God to hearken unto you more than unto God, judg ye. We have received a command from God to preach; Go teach all Nations (Matth. 28. 19.) and we have received a command from you not to preach; now we leave it with you, whether it be fit for us to obey God or you. So the Apoſtle having admoniſhed the Corinthians to flee from Idolatry, preſently adds (1 Cor. 10. 14, 15.) I ſpeak as to wiſe men, judg ye what I ſay; I have given you the rule, and I leave it to your conſideration, what's beſt and ſafeſt for you to do. I ſpeak as to wiſe men, that's a holy inſinuation; As if he had ſaid, I know you are wiſe men, men of underſtanding, and therefore I do not ſo much command you to obey what I ſay, as to judg what I ſay; I am much perſwaded you cannot judg otherwiſe in this thing than I do; There is ſo much truth and reaſon in what I ſay, that you cannot but ſay ſo too. The ſame Apoſtle ſpeaks again in a like form about womens praying uncovered; Judg in your ſelves, is it comely that a woman pray unto God uncovered (1 Cor. 11. 13.) As if he had ſaid, I do not ſtand wholly to my own judgment in this caſe of conſcience, I dare refer it to you, and ſtand to yours. Thus in many things we may appeal unto the Conſciences of thoſe we deal with; and no doubt the Conſcience is often ſatisfied while the Will ſtands out. Men of much underſtanding will diſpute, when Conſcience hath nothing to ſay; Yea ſome will for their own ends argue that to be right, which (in their Conſciences) they do not think to be ſo. Thinkeſt thou this to be right? Thou haſt ſaid it, but doſt thou think it? I trow not.

Obſerve, Secondly, There is a Light within us that will ſhew us what's amiſs, or not right.

Elihu doth not direct Job immediately to the Word, (though that's the authoritative and authentick Rule) but to his heart; thou haſt a Light in thy ſelf, whereby thou mayeſt ſee that this is not right. Thus the Apoſtle, (1 Cor. 11. 14, 15.) Doth not even Nature it ſelf teach you, that if a man have long hair, it is a ſhame unto him? But if a woman have long hair, it is a glory to her, for her hair is given her for a covering. The Light which every man hath in him will ſhew this. Again, the Apoſtle (Rom. 2. 14, 15.) proveth that the old Gentiles had a light of Nature in them, which ſhewed them many things amiſs. Thus he argueth; For when the Gentiles that have not the Law, do by nature the things contained in the Law, (they do them by Nature, that is, by the Light of Nature, which ſhews them to do theſe things, that is, it ſheweth them that they ought to be done, and they do them, as to the outward action, by that Light;) theſe having not the Law (that is, the written Word, publiſhed to them in that formality, which the people of God have, theſe having not the Law) are a Law unto themſelves; which ſhew the work of the Law written in their hearts, their Conſcience alſo bearing witneſs, and their thoughts the mean while accuſing, or elſe excuſing one another. This Light ſhewed thoſe Gentiles ſo far what to do according to the Law, as left them without excuſe, for not doing what it ſhewed. Goſpel Miſteries and matters of Faith are purely of Divine Revelation, but what the moral Law commands or forbids, the light of Nature leads us to do and to forbear.

There is a generation of people grown up and ſpreading amongſt us, who cry up the light within them, with neglect of, if not in oppoſition to the Word written and preached to them. Theſe make a very ill uſe of this notion; For whoſoever bids us look to the light within us, to draw us off from the Word or light without us, erre greatly, and may quickly draw us into the greateſt errors both in Faith and Practice. 'Tis dangerous to go or act againſt the light within us, yet if we go or act always by that light alone, we ſhall be in darkneſs before we are aware. Natural light without Scripture-light, proves a falſe light, and may quickly lead us out of the way, and beſides our duty.

Therefore the Prophet, when any ſhould ſay, Seek unto them that have familiar Spirits, &c. doth not ſay, look to the light within you for reſolution, whether ye ſhould hearken to ſuch or no, but to the Law, and to the Teſtimony: if they ſpeak not according to this word, it is becauſe there is no light in them, (Iſa.8.20.) If that which is called light within us, ſpeak not according to the light of the Law and Teſtimony without us, there is no true light (or as the Margin hath it) no morning in us; the Day-ſtar hath not riſen in ſuch hearts, nor do they ſpeak like children of the light. Take heed of ſtriking and ſo ſplitting againſt that Rock; yet certainly there is a light within us that muſt not be reſiſted. The Apoſtle reports that as the ſin of the old Gentiles (Rom. 1.28.) They did not like to retain God in their knowledg; they had a light of God by nature, God was in their knowledg, but they liked not to think of God, but rather thought of the world, and of any vanity, than of God, rather of the creature, than of the Creator; for this cauſe God gave them up to a reprobate mind, to do thoſe things which are not convenient. They who obey not, who anſwer not the light of Nature in doing good, ſhall be left to the doing of thoſe evils which are againſt the light of Nature. Such were thoſe things which the Apoſtle calls (by a modeſt word) not convenient, or not fitting that duty and decorum, which man as man ſhould carefully and religiouſly obſerve. By which negative expreſſion, Not convenient, he poſitively intends the vileſt evils and debaucheries of Nature, not to be named. And if God were ſo wroth with the Gentiles for not anſwering the common Light of Nature, no marvel if he ſpake ſo dreadfully againſt thoſe that refuſe and oppoſe the Light of the moſt glorious Goſpel (John 3.19.) This is the condemnation, that light is come into the world, and men loved darkneſs rather than light, becauſe their deeds were evil. Not to anſwer the Light of Conſcience within us rightly informed, much more not to obey the Light of the Goſpel without us, leaves us under condemnation. The Light within man will ſhew him very much what he ought to do, and judg him for not doing it. Thinkeſt thou this to be right? Doth the Principle planted in thee comply with this Poſition?

Τὰ μὴ καθήκοντα.

But what was it that Elihu puts the Queſtion about? You have it in the cloſe of the verſe;

That thou ſaidſt, My righteouſneſs is more than Gods;

Or according to the ſtrictneſs of the Hebrew, My righteouſneſs is before Gods. The Prepoſition here uſed is often taken comparatively, and hath the ſame ſignification with that (*Matth.*11.19) where Chriſt ſaith (as we tranſlate) Wiſdom is juſtified of her Children; that is, Chriſt, or the Doctrin of the Goſpel, the Divine Light that ſhines there, is juſtified, that is approved and declared juſt, by all who are her Children indeed, born not of blood, nor of the will of the fleſh, nor of the will of man, but of God. This is a good and profitable ſenſe. Though ſtrangers do not, will not juſtifie Wiſdom, yet her Children do and will. Nevertheleſs that comparative tranſlation, and reading, which ſome contend for, carrieth in it a clear truth alſo, and ſerves to illuſtrate this Text in Job, now under hand. Wiſdom is juſtified more than her children, or rather than her children, or before her children. That is, more, rather, and before the Scribes and Phariſees, who pretended highly, that they were the children, yea the chief, if not the only children of Wiſdom; and while they made this boaſt, they really reſiſted and oppoſed Jeſus Chriſt, who is wiſdom, and in whom are hid all the treaſures of wiſdom: And therefore how much ſoever the Scribes and Phariſees flattered themſelves in their own opinion, or were applauded, and preferred by others, as children of wiſdom, or as very wiſe men; yet Jeſus Chriſt the true Wiſdom, was juſtified by God, and all good men, more than they, or before, yea infinitely before them; he was juſtified fully, but they not at all. Such a negative ſenſe Chriſt intends, in that comparative determination, between the Publican and the Phariſee (Luke 18. 14.) I tell you, this man went down to his houſe juſtified rather than the other: That is, the Publican went home juſtified rather, or righteous rather, or more righteous then the Phariſee; the proud Phariſee, not being at all juſtified, nor righteous, but in his own eyes. Some Comparatives imply a perfect Negative to the oppoſite party, others only a partial. Such a comparative ſenſe Elihu intimates in Job's aſſertion of his righteouſneſs. Thou ſaidſt, my righteouſneſs is more than Gods; Or I am to be juſtified rather than God.

But ſome may ſay, where ſpake Job this? where's the Chapter and Verſe? Did Job, or could Job overſhoot himſelf to ſuch a height of blaſphemy?

I anſwer, Firſt, Some indeed charge Elihu deeply, as if he had feigned all theſe things againſt Job, or formed them up in his own Imagination, rather than grounded them upon any of his aſſertions; but we need not thus wound Elihu, to get a ſalve for Job's ſore.

Therefore Secondly, I anſwer, that although Job had not ſpoken this in ſo many words, or ſyllabically, yet he had ſpoken that from which Elihu might gather ſuch a ſenſe, or of which he might make ſuch an interpretation. And therefore he ſeems to ſay at the third verſe, If thou thinkeſt this a falſhood, or too hard a charge, and ſhouldſt deny that thou haſt ſaid, My righteouſneſs is more than Gods; I'le tell thee what thou haſt ſaid, which hath given me ground (I think juſt and ſufficient ground) for this accuſation: Thou haſt ſaid, What advantage will it be unto me? and what profit ſhall I have, if I be cleanſed from my ſin? And is not this to make thy righteouſneſs more than Gods?

But what righteouſneſs is here meant?

I anſwer, There is a twofold righteouſneſs.

Firſt, There is the righteouſneſs of our perſons, which is either imputed in juſtification, or imparted in ſanctification, (as hath been ſhewed upon ſome other paſſages of Elihu's diſcourſe with Job) This is the righteouſneſs of our perſons; as juſtified we are righteous, as ſanctified we are alſo righteous. Now when Elihu chargeth Job to ſay that his righteouſneſs was more than Gods, we are not to underſtand it as if he had ſaid, his perſonal righteouſneſs, in either notion, was more than Gods; for that righteouſneſs which is imputed to our perſons, is indeed the righteouſneſs of God, (Rom. 10. 3.) but 'tis not a righteouſneſs more than Gods. And as for that righteouſneſs planted in our perſons, how imperfect and mixt with corruption is that, at beſt, in this life? And therefore had Job ſpoken any ſuch words, or had harboured ſuch a thought, it had been blaſphemy at the higheſt rate; and (as one expreſſeth it well) If Job had ſpoken theſe horrible blaſphemies, though extorted from him by utmoſt extremity, and in the greateſt anguiſh of his ſpirit, ſurely Satan had got the day, and triumphed as Victor in this great conflict, not Job. Should the moſt righteous man on Earth, or Angel in Heaven, ſay in ſtrict ſenſe, My righteouſneſs is more than Gods, this ſaying were a charging of God with unrighteouſneſs, yea (which Satan promiſed himſelf and told God Job would do, if tryed to the utmoſt) a curſing of God to his face. But as Job abhorred to ſpeak irreverently (though he ſometimes ſpake paſſionately) of God, ſo, that he utterly diſclaimed ſuch thoughts of his own righteouſneſs, hath appeared fully by his frequent proteſtations againſt all dependance upon, and truſt in any ſelf-righteouſneſs or perfection, in divers paſſages of this Book.

Si hæc horrenda blaſphemia fuiſſet ab eo extorta, Satan certè, non autem Jobus, in hoc certamine victoriam obtinuiſſet. Bez.

Secondly, There is a righteouſneſs of our Cauſe, or of the ſpecial matter in controverſie: In which ſenſe (I conceive) Judah ſaid of Tamar, (Gen.38.26.) She hath been more righteous than I. That is, She hath carried this buſineſs better, and more according to right. And thus we may underſtand Elihu charging Job for ſaying, My righteouſneſs is more than Gods; that is, my Cauſe is more righteous than his; and to ſay that (which is the moſt moderate ſenſe) was too great a boldneſs for any creature, yea a blaſphemy againſt the Creator. Shall man preſume to ſay that God doth not carry things righteouſly with him, or that there is no reaſon why God ſhould deal ſo or ſo with him! But did Job ever affirm his Cauſe more righteous than Gods? I anſwer, not categorically, or directly; But Elihu hearing Job make ſo many complaints, might ſuppoſe he thought there was no reaſon why God ſhould deal with him as he had done, and then he had been more righteous in his Cauſe than God.

The Septuagint read it without any compariſon at all, which makes the meaning much more eaſie; they ſay not, My righteouſneſs is more than Gods, but, I ſhall be found righteous before God, or in the ſight of God. This Job had ſaid, and therefore made ſo many appeals to God. I am juſt before

Juſtus ſum ante conſpectum Domini. Sept.

God, that is, My cauſe will be found right and juſt in the ſight of God. And as Job had ſaid this often equivalently, ſo once in terms, (*Chap.*23.10.) When he hath tryed me, I ſhall come forth as Gold, or appear innocent before God; which he ſpake eſpecially with an eye to thoſe heavy accuſations which his Friends brought againſt him, and laid upon him: And even for this Job might well be condemned of raſhneſs by Elihu, who aimed at the throwing down of all ſelf-righteouſneſs, at the ſtopping of every mouth, at the eclipſing of all human glory, in the preſence, and before the brightneſs of the Moſt Glorious, High and Holy God.

Præpoſitio illa Mem verti poteſt à vel ab, in hunc ſenſum juſtus ſum à Deo, vel juſtificabo cauſam meam apud Deum. Cajet.

So then, even, this other more favorable reading, which ſpeaketh not comparatively, but poſitively, I am juſt before God, that is, I ſhall be juſtified by God, or I doubt not but I ſhall be acquitted, and found right before God, this cannot every way be juſtified: It was Job's fault and failing, that he was ſo confident God would not (he was far from ſaying God could not) find fault with him. We may ſee (if we have ſpiritual eyes, or eyes enlightned by the Spirit) ſo many faults in our beſt ſervices, as may make us aſhamed to own them, rather than to boaſt of them before men, much more to bear up our ſelves before God upon them: For (as Eliphaz told Job in the 4. Chapter) God chargeth his Angels with folly, and the beſt of his Saints are unclean before him; therefore that was too much for Job to ſay of himſelf, though that's the eaſieſt and moſt charitable Interpretation of what he ſaid, when he ſaid (as the Septuagint render) I ſhall be found righteous before God, or in the ſight of God.

Our Tranſlation is very hard, hardeſt of all, Thou haſt ſaid, my righteouſneſs is more than Gods; yet this Elihu might gather up conſequentially from what he ſpake in the 19. Chapter, Verſ. 6, 7. Behold I cry out of wrong, but I am not heard, I cry aloud, but there is no judgment. As alſo from the paſſage, Chap. 23. Verſ. 2. Even to day is my complaint bitter, my ſtroke is heavier than my groaning: In both places Job ſpeaks as if God had not dealt rightly with him, as if God had been over-ſevere in afflicting him, or as if his complainings were ſhort of his ſufferings. In both or either of which, Job exceeds the bounds both of truth and duty; ſuch extravagant expreſſions, have no apology but his pain, nor can any thing be an Advocate for him, but this, That Satan who was his Tempter, was alſo his Tormenter, and held him ſo long upon the Rack, that he uttered (as himſelf confeſſed, *Chap.*42.3) that which he underſtood not, yea words by which Elihu underſtood that he ſaid in effect, My righteouſneſs is more than Gods.

Note Hence, Firſt, There is no thought of man further from right, than to think there is any unrighteouſneſs in the dealings of God with man.

Man can hardly do any thing that is juſt, and it is impoſſible God ſhould do any thing that is unjuſt. Let God do what he will, it is right, and he is righteous in doing it: Yea, whatſoever evil God doth to a Job, to any of his good people, he is good to them in doing it (*Pſal.*73.1.) Truly God is good to Iſrael, even to ſuch as are of a clean heart, or clean of heart. Not only is God Righteous and Juſt, but good and gracious in what he doth: though his diſpenſations are often very ſad, yet they are never unequal; and as the worſt of men ſhall at laſt acknowledg that he is juſt; ſo the beſt of men, a Job, a David, ſhall find and ſee at laſt with joy and thankſgivings, that God hath been good, yea beſt to them (conſidering their ſtate) in his soreſt and ſevereſt dealings: For all the paths of the Lord (as well hard as ſoft, as well thoſe that are ſet with Bryars and Thorns, as thoſe that are ſet with Roſes) are mercy and truth, (mercy as much as truth) unto ſuch as keep his Covenant, and his Teſtimonies, Pſal.25.10. He that ſhews mercy cannot but ſhew righteouſneſs to his in all his ways. As he that doth righteouſneſs, is righteous, (1 John3.7.) ſo he that is righteouſneſs, cannot but do righteous things. God is not only righteous, but righteouſneſs; he is eſſentially righteous, his righteouſneſs is himſelf. A mans being, and his righteouſneſs are two things. The man may ſubſiſt without righteouſneſs (all men by nature, and while nothing but nature, though much ſublimated and refined, if not converted, are unrighteous) but it is as impoſſible for God not to be righteous, as not to be. How can he who is righteous, yea righteouſneſs it ſelf, but do righteous things in all he doth, in every cauſe, in every proceeding, whether with Perſons, Families, or Nations? Is it not then a moſt unrighteous thing to think or ſay God hath, or can do any unrighteous thing?

Secondly Note, He that complains that God deals over-ſeverely with him, or otherwiſe than is fit, or otherwiſe than he hath deſerved, makes himſelf as to his Cauſe, more righteous than God.

If we ſay a man deals otherwiſe with us then we have deſerved at his hands, we judg him, as to that action, uneven and unjuſt in his dealings. Surely then, if we think or ſpeak hardly of the hardeſt ways of God, we ſpeak and think hardly of God himſelf. We cannot think well of God, unleſs we ſay all that he doth is well done. A thought, that there is but one twig in our rod more than is meet, or fit, or more than is good for us, or to think it abides one minute longer upon our backs, than is meet, or fit, or good for us, is to ſay, Our righteouſneſs is more than Gods; Yea, 'tis to ſay, Our wiſdom is more than Gods, and our mercies are more than the mercies of God. Therefore take heed of ſuch thoughts. Though we cannot ſee the righteouſneſs of God in his works, yet we muſt ſay his works are righteous. It can never be right, not only to ſay, Our righteouſneſs is more than Gods, but ſo much as to ſay, Our righteouſneſs is any thing to Gods.

Thirdly Note, What we ſpeak raſhly, may at any time be preſt upon us hardly, and is ſometimes very uncharitably.

In diſputando cavendum, ne ex dictis adverſarii per falſam conſequentiam abſurda deducamus, quibus illum gravemus, qua in re hic peccavit Elihu. Piſc.

It is very uſual with thoſe who accuſe, or oppoſe others, to take things doubtful for certainties, their own conjectures for the aſſertions of their adverſary, and every thing which hath a likeneſs to an errour, to be errour. Elihu might have ſpoken more favourably to Job, he might have conſtrued his ſayings more candidly then he did: Had he taken Job's words with a grain of Salt (as we ſpeak) he needed not to have put ſo much Gall and wormwood into his own: Had he not interpreted Job's complaints ſtrictly, according to the ſound, or letter, but conſidered them with the ſcope, his aim, and purpoſe in ſpeaking ſo, together with the extream pain of his body, and anguiſh of his ſoul, when he ſpake ſo, he had never given him ſuch cutting anſwers.

But God juſtly, and in much wiſdom, ſharpned the ſpirit of Elihu, to ſpeak cutting words to Job, that Job feeling the ſmart, might be made ſenſible of his errour, and at laſt be brought low, and broken under his hand. Mild words may skin a ſore before 'tis ſearcht to the bottom, and ſo not only retard the Cure, but endanger the Patient. The holy Apoſtle fore-ſeeing the murmurings, quarrels and diſputes which fleſh and blood would make about Election or Predeſtination, doth not go about ſo much to anſwer them by Reaſon, as to repreſs them by a ſtrong Reproof, and vehement Objurgation, (Rom. 9.20.) Nay, but O man, who art thou that replyeſt againſt God! ſhall the thing formed, ſay to him that formed it, why haſt thou made me thus? Hath not the Potter power over the Clay? &c. Now as about that unſearchable depth of eternal Election, ſo about preſent dreadful diſpenſations, and providences, our undue reaſonings and tumultuating thoughts of heart, concerning God, breaking our bounds, and forgetting with whom we have to do, or who hath to do with us, call for and deſerve ſharpeſt reproofs; Who are you that reply againſt God! Who are you that think this to be right which you do, or any thing wrong which God doth? Who are you, that you ſhould preſume to ſay (ſo much as by inference) that your righteouſneſs is more than Gods, or, that it is any thing compared with the righteouſneſs of God!

Thou haſt ſaid, my righteouſneſs is more than Gods.

What Job had ſaid, which might give colour for this accuſation, hath been touched before, in the mention of thoſe Speeches, or Paſſages, forced from him by the greatneſs of his ſuffering. But Elihu gives it us yet more expreſly in the next verſe.

Verſ. 3. For thou ſaidſt, What advantage will it be unto thee, and what profit ſhall I have, if I be cleanſed from my ſin?

As if he had ſaid, O Job, If thou ſhouldeſt ask me, when or where thou haſt ſaid, My righteouſneſs is more than Gods? or how can I prove that thou haſt ſaid ſo? I may ſoon anſwer thee, and eaſily prove it thus, thou haſt ſaid, What advantage will it be unto thee? &c. Thou haſt ſpoken as if no good were to be gotten by turning from evil; or that thou ſuffereſt evil, being thy ſelf free, at leaſt turned from doing evil; and that therefore it availeth thee no more that thou art righteous, than if thou wert the greateſt ſinner in the world. So thou haſt ſaid, and in ſaying ſo, thou haſt ſaid what I have charged thee with.

But here the Queſtion may ariſe again, as much about the Proof, as about the Charge. When did Job ſay, What advantage will it be unto me? And what profit ſhall I have, if I be cleanſed from my ſin?

I anſwer, as he ſaid not the former words contained in the Charge directly, they were only a collection raiſed conſequentially by Elihu, ſo he ſaid not theſe words which are the proof of the charge expreſly, but by conſequences.

For the clearing of this, we muſt diſtinguiſh of what is meant by profit and advantage, when Elihu ſaith, Thou ſaidſt, What advantage ſhall it be unto thee, and what profit ſhall I have, if I be cleanſed from my ſin? This advantage and profit may be conſidered.

Firſt, As to his eternal well-being and ſalvation; Secondly, as to his preſent eaſe and conſolation. We are not to underſtand it as if Elihu accuſed Job for ſaying, That to be cleanſed from his ſin, would be no advantage, no profit as to his eternal eſtate; that had been impious, and an Atheiſtical Speech, croſſing the whole current of Scripture, and overthrowing the very foundation of godlineſs. Take away eternal reward and puniſhment, and where's Religion? Where's either the love or fear of God? His meaning then is, that Job had ſaid, it would be no profit, no boot to him for the preſent, or as to his then condition, if he were cleanſed from his ſin. This Elihu might gather from thoſe two places (Chap 9.22,23.) This is one thing, therefore I ſaid it, He deſtroyeth the perfect and the wicked. If the ſcourge ſlay ſuddenly, he will laugh at the tryal of the innocent. As if Elihu had ſaid, Thou canſt not avoid this proof of my firſt Charge; for he that ſaith, God deſtroyeth the perfect and the wicked, that is, the perfect as well as the wicked, ſaith alſo in effect, What profit is it, that I am cleanſed from my ſin? But thou haſt ſaid the former, therefore the latter alſo. Again thou haſt ſaid (Chap. 10. 15.) If I be wicked, wo unto me, and if I be righteous, yet will I not lift up my head. I am full of confuſion, therefore ſee thou mine affliction; weigh thy words, Thou haſt ſaid, Wo to me, if I be wicked; and if I be righteous, (it will not be much better with me) I will not, I dare not lift up my head, my confuſion is ſo great. How great ſoever my innocency is, I have little comfort, or 'tis much what alike with me, whether I be righteous, or wicked. In theſe places, and by theſe ſpeeches Job ſeems to put little or no difference between the dealings of God with the wicked and the righteous. Once more. Thoſe words (Chap. 9.28,29,30.) are of a like import, I am afraid of all my ſorrows, I know that thou wilt not hold me innocent. If I be wicked, why then labour I in vain? If I waſh my ſelf with ſnow water, and make my hands never ſo clean; yet ſhalt thou plung me in the ditch, and mine own cloaths ſhall abhor me. Saying this, thou haſt ſaid, how innocent ſoever I am, I ſhall not be dealt with as an innocent; if I make my ſelf never ſo clean, God will throw me into the ditch, that is, into affliction. From theſe ſpeeches Elihu might charge Job with ſaying, What profit is it (as to my temporal good) that I am cleanſed from ſpiritual evil, my ſin? As for his eternal eſtate, that's not the matter controverted in this Book. The ſum of all amounts to this, If I am cleanſed from my ſin, I may be as great a ſufferer and as hardly dealt with in this world, as if I were altogether unclean. And hence it might be inferred, Surely Job was more righteous than God, becauſe while he laboured to pleaſe God as becometh his people and good ſervants to do, God was pleaſed (inſtead of rewarding him, as he had done many, and promiſed all who do ſo) to afflict him, as he uſeth to do and hath threatned to do to the worſt of evil men, the wicked. Thus thou haſt ſaid, What advantage, &c.

Profuit, contulit, utilis, commodus fuit.

The word here rendred advantage, ſignifieth gain any way, or any thing that is commodious and gainful to us; thou haſt ſaid, What advantage will it be unto thee? Thus he brings in Job putting the queſtion to himſelf, what advantage ſhould he get to himſelf in this life by living a religious or a holy life? As if he had ſaid, Doubtleſs 'tis concluded in thy breſt, thou ſhalt get none; And to ſtrengthen this thy unbelief, at leaſt to ſhew that thy unbelief in this point is very ſtrong, thou haſt ſaid the ſame thing in another dreſs of words a ſecond time; For I have heard thee ſaying thus alſo.

What profit ſhall I have, if I be cleanſed from my ſin?

Job was taxed for a ſaying of the ſame ſcandalous ſenſe (Chap. 34.9) He hath ſaid, it profiteth a man nothing, that he ſhould delight himſelf with God. There Elihu accuſeth him for affirming in a third perſon, it profiteth a man nothing; and here for queſtioning in his own perſon;

What profit ſhall I have?] Some derive the word Belial from this root, ſignifying an unprofitable one, or an unthrift, a man that doth no good, either to himſelf, or others; What profit ſhall I have? What ſhall I get? All the good I ſhall get I may put in my eye, and ſee never the worſe: In a word, I ſhall not mend my condition, if I mend my converſation; ſo it followeth; profuit, utilitatem attulit; hinc Belial inutilis.

If I be cleanſed from my ſin.] The words, If I be cleanſed, are not expreſt in the Hebrew Text, but are clearly implyed and underſtood; For Job cannot be ſuppoſed to ask this queſtion; What profit ſhall I get by, or from my ſin? That queſtion were nothing to the preſent purpoſe or diſputation. And therefore though all Interpreters do not make this ſupplement, yet all agree, that a ſupplement is to be made: Moſt concur in this, What profit ſhall I have, if I depart from, or forſake my ſin? We ſay, If I be cleanſed from my ſin? As if theſe were Job's thoughts, this his ſaying, Let me keep my ſin, or not keep my ſin, I ſee I am like to ſuffer. I ſhall ſtill be kept under the rod. That's the plain ſenſe of the words; Elihu chargeth Job with complaining of God, that it would be no advantage to him, as to the caſe of himſelf from any outward affliction and calamity, how much ſoever he forſook or were cleanſed from his ſin. There are two other readings of this verſe, which I ſhall only name, and then give two or three Notes from our own.

First, Thus; Thou haſt ſaid, What profit ſhall I have more by it (that is, by my righteouſneſs) than by my ſins: As if his meaning were (which is a very groſs one) What good ſhall I get by well-doing more than by ill-doing? One of the Rabbins takes in ſtrongly with this comparative expoſition, between thoſe remoteſt moral extreams good and evil, as to his caſe; But I dare not joyn either with the one or other in this interpretation.

Nam dixiſti, quid profutura (ſc. juſtitia tua) ſit tibi? (Item) quid proficiam (ex ea) magis quam ex peccato meo. Piſc. Rab. Selom.

A ſecond gives it thus; If thou demandeſt what may it profit thee, ſaying, What good ſhall I get by further puniſhment or ſuffering?

Si roges, quid profuturum ſit tibi, dicens, quid proficerem à ſupplicio meo. Jun.

It hath been ſaid before, that thoſe words, If I be cleanſed, are not found expreſly in the Hebrew Text; And the word in our Tranſlation rendred ſin, ſignifieth alſo puniſhment or ſuffering, which is the fruit or effect of ſin. So that according to this reading, Elihu in theſe words prevents an objection, which Job might take occaſion to make from what he had ſaid, or wiſhed rather, at the 36. verſe of the former Chapter. My deſire is that Job may be tryed unto the end; That is, further afflicted, or afflicted to the utmoſt. Againſt this deſire of Elihu, Job is by him ſuppoſed making his exception, or objection, in this verſe; As if he had ſaid, Why doeſt thou, or what reaſon haſt thou to deſire that I ſhould be yet again tryed by affliction? What, I pray, would that profit me, if I were afflicted yet more and more? Can the ſuffering of evil do me good, or make me better? To this objection, Elihu gives anſwer in the next verſe, and thoſe which follow to the ninth; and he doth it (as the Aſſerter of this Interpretation judgeth) by this Dilemma. Thy afflictions would profit either God or thy ſelf (ſeeing God doth nothing in vain;) but neither thy ſufferings, how grievous ſoever, nor thy doings, how righteous ſoever, can profit God, no more than thy ſins or evil doings can damage God; therefore it remains, that if God afflict thee further, it will be (if thou haſt a heart to improve it) for thy profit.

This reading, and the ſenſe ariſing from it, is much inſiſted on; but as the former is very harſh, ſo I conceive, this latter is very dark and intricate, and grounded upon the ſuppoſition of an objection very remote, or not eaſily to be ſuggeſted in this diſcourſe. And therefore to avoid both my own and the readers unneceſſary trouble, I ſhall take the Text, as it ſtands in our Tranſlation, and offer ſomewhat for inſtruction from it.

How great ſinfulneſs there is in ſaying, There is no profit in the ways of God, I have ſhewed at the 21. *Chap.Verſ.*11. and *Chap.*34. *Verſ.*9. So that referring the Reader thither, I ſhall here give only this Note.

It is very ſinful to ſay, we ſhall get no advantage by leaving ſin.

We may well put the Apoſtles queſtion (*Rom.*6.21.) to our ſelves, What fruit have we in thoſe things whereof we are now aſhamed? What benefit have we got by polluting our ſelves with ſin? But how vain a queſtion is it to ſay, What profit ſhall I have, if I be cleanſed from my ſin? Elihu chargeth Job with this; yet ſtill remember, he refers not to his eternal, but temporal condition. And this was Aſaphs or Davids temptation alſo, as to his temporal condition; even he, the one or the other, David or Aſaphs ſpake as much in expreſs terms, as Job is here charged with, (Pſal. 73.13.) where complaining of the great tryals and troubles he had been under, and of the proſperity of the wicked; Behold (ſaith he) theſe are the ungodly, who proſper in the world, they increaſe in riches. But how is it with me? Verily I have cleanſed my heart in vain, and waſhed my hands in innocency; for all the day long have I been plagued, and chaſtned every moment. As if he had ſaid, What have I got by my holineſs, and forſaking of ſin? What have I gained by my ſtricteſt walkings, and abſtainings from the very appearance of evil? Have I not reaſon to conclude, in good earneſt, that I have cleanſed my heart and hands in vain, ſeeing my ſufferings are not leſned, though my ſins are, ſeeing my puniſhments are renewed every morning, though I am every morning upon the renewal of my repentance? Thus ſpake the Pſalmiſt in the day of his temptation; and doubtleſs, this day of his Temption had been a day of temptation and provocation to the Lord, (like that of Iſraels in the Wilderneſs, Pſal. 95.7.) had not the Lord come in by his grace, and helped him to bite in his words at the very next verſe; If I ſay, I will ſpeak thus, (if I uſe ſuch, not only uncomely, but wicked language as this, I have cleanſed my heart and hands in vain) Behold, I ſhould offend againſt the generation of thy children. And when I thought to know this, it was too wonderful for me; that is, it was beyond my skill to reconcile theſe works, theſe providences of God towards me, with his word and promiſes; nor was I any whit leſs at a loſs, how to reconcile the proſperity and flouriſhing condition of wicked men, with thoſe terrible threatnings which the Lord in his Word every where thunders out againſt them. Theſe croſs and intricate diſpenſations puzzel'd me greatly, put my Soul into a maze; nor could I ſpell their meaning, nor make out the ſenſe of them, Until I went into the Sanctuary of God, then underſtood I their end; the woful Cataſtrophe, the miſerable end of wicked men, their ſlippery ſtanding, and their ſudden falling, as both are deſcribed (*Verſ.*18.19,20.) Then alſo I underſtood the bleſſedneſs of a godly mans eſtate, both now and for ever, in having God his guide and his portion (Verſ. 24.25,26.) then I underſtood what profit and advantage comes by cleanſing our ſelves from ſin, though to the eye it appear not, yea though all appearances ſpeak the contrary. To be cleanſed from, or to remove ſin is profitable and advantagious:

Firſt, As to the removal of Judgment. When we begin cleanſing work, the Lord uſually makes an end of afflicting work. For as one great end of ſending affliction, is to cleanſe us from ſin, (*Iſa.*27.9.) By this ſhall the iniquity of Jacob be purged, and this is all the fruit, to take away his ſin; ſo our being cleanſed from ſin is uſually the end of our afflictions. When we are cleanſed from ſin, we are troubled no more, we ſmart no more: ſpeak then, Is it no profit to be cleanſed from ſin, when ſo many, not only perſons, but Nations have been ruin'd, becauſe not cleanſed from ſin? God gave his own people cleanneſs of teeth, (Amos 4.6.) that is, famine or want of bread, becauſe of the uncleanneſs of their hearts, and lives; and is it no profit to be cleanſed from ſin, when for our ſinful uncleanneſſes God will cleanſe us of all our comforts, even to a morſel of bread? 'Tis therefore a ſpeech both falſe in it ſelf, and highly diſhonourable unto God, to ſay, I ſhall have no profit, for ſtill I ſhall ſuffer, though I be cleanſed from my ſin; whereas firſt, there is more profit in being cleanſed from ſin than in being delivered from ſufferings; and, ſecondly, when once we are cleanſed from ſin, we are in the faireſt way to be cleared from, and ſee an end of all our ſufferings.

Secondly, The more we are cleanſed from ſin, the more communion we have with God, and the more peace from God. Is not this a great profit? A profit beſides the eternal reward? A profit far better than any temporal reward? Will not communion with God ſatisfie us for the loſs of friends, of eſtate, or health? Will not peace with God anſwer all the tribulations we can meet with in this world? If therefore being cleanſed from ſin, we have cloſer communion and ſweeter peace with God, let no man ſay, What profit ſhall I have, if I be cleanſed from my ſin? And, although there ſhould be no profit, or advantage, though no viſible, no nor ſpiritual income, as to preſent comfort, ſhould redound to us in this world, by being cleanſed from ſin, yet remember, it is our profit, and our beſt profit to be cleanſed from ſin, to be emptied of ſin, to mortifie ſin, to deſtroy ſin; if we ſhould have no profit in hand by leaving ſin, yet there is a profit promiſed, that infinitely exceeds all the profits and pleaſures which we can have or hope for by retaining our ſin; ſuch profit and pleaſure, as will abundantly recompence us for all the worldly loſſes we are at, and penitential ſorrows which we paſs thorow in keeping or cleanſing our ſelves from ſin. The Apoſtle rejoyced at the ſorrow of the Corinthians (2*Cor.*7.9.) But is it good to rejoyce at the ſorrow of others? Should we not mourn with thoſe that mourn? 'Tis true, we ſhould; yet 'tis good to rejoyce in that ſorrow which doth others good; ſuch was the ſorrow of thoſe Corinthians. The Text is expreſs; Now (ſaith St. Paul) I rejoyce not that ye were made ſorry, but that ye ſorrowed to repentance, for ye were made ſorry after a godly manner (or according to God) that ye might receive damage by us in nothing. There is then no damage, no hurt by ſuch ſorrow; But comes there any good, any profit by it? Yes, much every way; for (as it followeth, *Verſ.*10.) godly ſorrow worketh repentance of Salvation, not to be repented of; that is, greatly to be rejoyced in. What is matter of joy, if Salvation be not? True repentance for ſin, is repentance to Salvation: And is there not profit, is there not all profit in that? As there is a Fountain opened (the blood of Chriſt) for ſin and for uncleanneſs (Zech.13.1.) that is, for waſhing away the uncleanneſs of ſin; ſo there are abundance of bleſſings flowing from that Fountain, to all ſuch as by the actings of Faith and Repentance waſh and are clean.

Thus far of Elihu's firſt charge, and the proof of it, taken from Job's own ſayings. How he anſwers and refutes thoſe ſayings of Job, will appear in opening the next words.

VERS. 4, 5, 6, 7, 8.

I will anſwer thee, and thy Companions with thee.

Look unto the Heavens, and ſee, and behold the Clouds which are higher than thou.

If thou ſinneſt, what doſt thou againſt him? Or if thy tranſgreſſions be multiplyed, what doſt thou unto him?

If thou be righteous, what giveſt thou him? Or what receiveth he of thine hand?

Thy wickedneſs may hurt a man as thou art, and thy righteouſneſs may profit the ſon of man.

THe former Context contained the charge which Elihu brought againſt Job, that he ſhould ſay, His righteouſneſs was more than Gods, and that it would be no profit to him, if he were cleanſed from his ſin.

In the Context of theſe five Verſes, Elihu gives anſwer to thoſe (had Job poſitively and purpoſely ſaid, or aſſerted them) blaſphemous ſayings, or aſſertions. And we have here

Firſt, The promiſe or overture of an anſwer, at the 4. verſe, I will anſwer thee, and thy Companions with thee.

Secondly, We have the anſwer it ſelf laid down in the 5.6.7. and 8. verſes; which anſwer conſiſts in three particulars.

First, That God cannot be hurt or endammag'd by our ſin; at the 6. verſe.

Secondly, That God can have no benefit or advantage by our righteouſneſs; at the 7. verſe.

Thirdly, That both Job himſelf, and other men like himſelf may, yea ſhall certainly have hurt and dammage by their ſin, as alſo benefit or advantage by their righteouſneſs, Verſ. 8.

Thus Elihu's anſwer obviates Job's paſſionate queſtion at the 3. verſe, What profit ſhall I have, if I be cleanſed from my ſin? As if Elihu had ſaid, I know that neither thy ſins can do any hurt to God, nor can thy righteouſneſs do him any good; but thy ſins may hurt thee, and thy righteouſneſs advantage thy ſelf; therefore lay down ſuch wicked and deſperate thoughts as theſe, ſay not, What profit will redound to me if I be cleanſed from my ſin? &c. That's his anſwer, according to our Tranſlation. Other readings preſent us with other forms of anſwer; but I ſhall not ſtay upon them.

Verſ. 4. I will anſwer thee, and thy Companions with thee.

Elihu makes overture of anſwering before he anſwers, and tells him he will, before he doth it; I will anſwer thee, or I will return thee words. Anſwering is the returning of words to words; yet not of empty words, but of words fill'd with Reaſon and Authority to reſolve him that is doubting, or to convince him that is gain-ſaying. I will anſwer thee,

And thy Companions with thee.] I will ſpeak that which ſhall not only take off thy Objections, but theirs alſo who are of thy mind, or joyn in Opinion with thee: I will anſwer thee, and thy Companions with thee: I will do both at once; when I have anſwered thee, they alſo will be anſwered; one anſwer will ſerve thee and them. One Line will mark and meaſure both Walls.

Una fidelia duos parietes dealbabo. Druſ.

The word which we render Companions, ſignifies any Friends or Familiars, with whom we uſually converſe, with whom we eat, or who eat bread with us, (2 Sam. 13. 3.) (Prov. 17.17.) We may take it either more ſtrictly for a ſpecial intimate boſom friend, who is to a man as his own ſoul, as Moſes ſpeaks (Deut. 13.6.) or for a friend at large, ſuch as is called a Neighbour, (Exod. 20.16. Levit. 19.18.)

רעה Socius, amicus, familiaris qui ſimul paſcitur convictor.

Yet the queſtion may be, Whom doth Elihu mean by Job's Companions, when he ſaith, I will anſwer thee, and thy Companions with thee?

Some by his Companions underſtand thoſe who came to viſit him in his affliction, and maintained that long Diſcourſe with him, thoſe three friends of whom we read (Chap. 2.11.) Eliphaz the Temanite, Bildad the Shuite, and Zophar the Naamathite. The Septuagint conclude Elihu meant them only, for thus they render, I will anſwer thee, and thy three friends.

Καὶ τοῖς τρισι φίλοις σȣ. Sept.

But why ſhould Elihu joyn them with Job, ſeeing they held Opinions contrary to Job? True, they did, yet they were not able to make good their Arguments, or convince Job; they had condemned Job, but not anſwered him, they did their buſineſs imperfectly, and to halves, or impertinently, and to no purpoſe; ſo that all their anſwerings were called no anſwer, Chap. 32. 3. And therefore Elihu might ſee reaſon to undertake the ſatisfaction, not only of Job, but of his three friends, who had not given Job a ſatisfactory anſwer unto that hour.

Others take the word Companions in a more large ſenſe, for all that were of his Opinion. As if Elihu had ſaid, I challenge all the world, whoſoever accompanies thee, or takes thy part in juſtifying ſuch ſayings or aſſertions, as I have heard from thee, I will anſwer them all, how many ſoever they be; I will undertake thee, and all thy Party, Thee, and thy Companions with thee.

> Hence Note, He who hath truth on his ſide, needs not fear the oppoſition of many, no nor the oppoſition of all men.

To oppoſe two is a very great diſadvantage; but if a man have the truth on his ſide, he may oppoſe all, though he be alone: He may be an Antipas (Revel. 2.13.) a man againſt all men; as that name of Chriſts faithful Martyr, there mentioned, doth import. If there be a thouſand of them, he may undertake them all, for in anſwering one, he anſwers all. Elijah ſaid of himſelf (1 Kings 18.22.) I, even I only, remain a Prophet of the Lord; yet he ſtood up againſt all the Idolatrous Prophets of Baal, who were no fewer than four hundred and fifty men: That we have many with us, is little advantage, and leſs honour many a time. A long train of Followers will do us no good, if our Cauſe be bad. Truth is ſtrong and will prevail; 'tis vain to fight againſt it, though our partakers are many. The ancient Fathers obſerved, how ſome were wont to cry up thoſe that had the multitude on their ſide, and to boaſt that moſt were of their Opinion. It was the ſaying of a Worthy in thoſe times, By my being alone, the word of truth, and the truth of the word, is not at all diminiſhed. One man and the truth are ſtrong enough to oppoſe a multitude in error, and a multitude of errors. The more any men, and the more men appear in oppoſing truth, the more is God engaged in faithfulneſs to appear for it. When one boaſted to St. Hierome that he had a multitude of Followers in his Opinion; he anſwered, That the number of his Companions did not prove him a Catholick, but a Heretick.

Non mea ſolitudine minuitur verbum veritatis. Dictum Liberii ad Conſtantium Arrianum. Theod, lib. 2. Hiſtor. Eccl. c. 16. Multitudo ſociorum te nequaquam Catholicum, ſed Hæreticum monſtrabit. Hieron. l. 3. adverſ. Pelag.

But how did Elihu anſwer Job and his Companions? The next verſe tells us how.

Verſ. 5. Look unto the Heavens, and ſee, behold the Clouds which are higher than thou.

As if he had ſaid, Look to the Heavens, and they'l anſwer thee; behold the Clouds, and they will confute thee: Thy very ſenſes may convince thee, that thou haſt ſpoken theſe things againſt Reaſon. And the Heavens will tell thee, that thy miſtake in this matter is Heavenly wide. If thou turn thy eyes upward, and conſidereſt that diſtance which is between God, who hath Heaven for the Habitation of his Holineſs, and of his Glory, and thee, who dwelleſt in thy houſe of Clay here on Earth, thou mayeſt ſee that thy ſins cannot hurt him, nor thy goodneſs extend to him. The diſtance between Heaven and man is very great; but the diſtance between God and man is far greater; the one is immenſurable, but the other is unimaginable, unconceiveable. Therefore if the Heavens be ſo high, that thou canſt not annoy them with thine Arrows, much leſs art thou able to annoy God, who is higher, and infinitely more out of Bow-ſhot and Gun-ſhot than the Heavens: That's the ſcope of his Argumentation here, to prove that Job could not, or that no man can hurt God by his ſin.

Look to thee Heavens, and ſee.] Both words are applyed to the ſenſe or ſight of the eye, yet they have a reference alſo to an intellectual ſight, to the eye of the mind: Look, and ſee; that is, Take ſpecial notice of, and contemplate the Heavens. We may look, and not ſee; that is, look and not conſider, look and not obſerve: To look and ſee, is to give earneſt attention to the thing looked upon; look curiouſly, critically, how high the Heavens are, Look and ſee.

We may apply the firſt word Look (as ſome do) to the truth of the thing, look how high the Heavens are; it may be ſeen by the eye, that they are very high, though we cannot ſee how high they are. The latter word See, may refer to the admirable contrivance and contexture of the thing ſeen, as the former to the truth and reality of it: Look and ſee how wonderful, how full of wonders the Heavens are; ſee with admiration what a vaſtneſs, what an exactneſs there is in the Heavens above thee. Thus the word is uſed by the Prophet, (Iſa. 42.18.) Look ye blind, that ye may ſee. It is a Propheſie of Goſpel times: that is, Conſider the Meſſages and Myſteries of the Goſpel exactly, view them well, that ye who are blind may behold the glorious light that ſhines forth in them. There were many blind ones in Chriſts time, that looked upon the things of the Goſpel, and did not ſee; the Phariſees lookt upon them, and they were among the blind ones; they indeed had better thoughts of themſelves, and therefore put that queſtion to Chriſt in ſcorn, (John 9.40.) Are we blind alſo? They did not look ſo as to ſee; they were blind when they looked, and blind after they looked: The holy Prophet exhorts poor blind Souls to whom the Goſpel ſhould come, to look better, to look again and again, till they ſaw, Look ye blind, that ye may ſee; That is, be diligent and humble, that ye may ſee the light ſhining in the Goſpel. The proud Phariſees who would not ſee the light which Chriſt offered to them, were the worſt of blind ones.

This is the Look which the word in the Text calls for. Look unto the Heavens, and ſee; it cannot be underſtood of the outward ſight only, for he that looks upon the Heavens cannot but ſee them; but a man may look a great while upon the Heavens, and not ſee them conſiderately, nor underſtand what he ſeeth. The words import attention and conſideration: And ſo they are uſed and placed (2 Kings 3. 14.) Were it not that I regard the preſence of Jehoſhaphat the

Nomen hoc שחקים non poteſt ſignificare Nubes, quæ ſunt ſubſtantiæ denſæ, nempe Aer condenſatus: At Shebhakim dicti ſunt à ſubſtantiæ tenuitate, qualis eſt ſubſtantia cœli; ergo verto tenues cœlos Piſc.

King of Judah, I would not look unto thee, nor ſee thee; ſaid Eliſha to Jehoram King of Iſrael; that is, I would give thee no reſpect, nor take notice of thee. In this ſenſe the Prophet repreſents the Church beſpeaking the incompaſſionate Spectators of her calamity, (Lam. 1. 12.) Is it nothing to you, all ye that paſs by? Behold and ſee (that is, weigh it well, and conſider) if there be any ſorrow like unto my ſorrow. Look unto the Heavens and ſee.

שחקים Ut plurimum Æthera & nubes ſignificat. Bold.

And Behold (with like attention) the Clouds.] There is ſome difference among Interpreters, about this word which we render Clouds. The Hebrew properly ſignifies Thinnes; but a Cloud, is thick, and conſiſts of many Aerial vapors, condenſed into a body; and therefore this word cannot well be tranſlated a Cloud, (ſaith this Author) but the thin Heavens, that is, the higher Heavens, thoſe above the Airy Heaven.

Again, The Clouds are lower than the Heavens, they are neereſt to us, they are ingendred in the middle Region, nor do they at any time riſe higher than that Region. Foraſmuch then as Elihu is endeavouring by the conſideration of the highneſs of Gods royal ſeat, or of the vaſt diſtance (as the Prophet ſpeaks) of the habitation of his Holineſs and of his Glory from us, to prove, that neither any good we do can profit him, nor any evil we do, reach to his diſadvantage; therefore it may ſeem not to make much for the purpoſe of Elihu, to call Job to behold the Clouds, which are neer us, comparatively, though their diſtance from us be really very great: but I conceive, notwithſtanding that Criticiſme of the word, and this reaſon, we may well enough abide by the Tranſlation, which ſaith, Behold the Clouds; for though the Clouds are thicker than the Air, yet they are but thin, and are ſoon diſperſed by wind and rarified by heat.

Again, Suppoſing (as indeed they do) that the Clouds move in the lower part of the Heavens, it increaſeth and heightens the ſenſe of the words to the purpoſe, for which Elihu makes uſe of them. As if he had ſaid, Behold and ſee the Heavens, the upper Heavens, the Starry Heavens, they are higher than thou, yea, behold the Clouds which are neereſt to us, and much, very much below the Stars, thoſe eſpecially which Aſtronomers call the fixed Stars; yet do but behold the Clouds, which at the top of ſome hills one may touch with his hand, (ſome deſcribe great men hiding their heads among the Clouds) Behold, I ſay, the Clouds which are loweſt, yet they are higher than thou, they are beyond thy reach; much more the Heavens, moſt of all God, who is higher than the higheſt Heavens. Thou canſt neither add to, nor diminiſh or blemiſh the beauty of the Heavens, thou canſt not make a cloud better or worſe; What then canſt thou do to or againſt the God of Heaven? To convince Job of this, is the purpoſe of Elihu in calling him to the view of the Heavens. Now foraſmuch as Elihu invites Job to the view and Contemplation of the Heavens;

> Note, Firſt, It is our duty to ſtudy and meditate the natural works of God, or his works in Nature; Eſpecially the Heavens, which are ſo eminent a part of his works.

The Scripture calls ſome, Star-gazers, ſuch are they, who ſtudy the Heavens to a very evil purpoſe, drawing men off from their ſole dependence upon God, by foretelling the events of things, and deſtinies of perſons, from the poſitions and motions of the heavenly Bodies or Luminaries. This kind of Studying and Contemplating the Heavens, is one of the greateſt vanities under Heaven, a vanity often reproved in the Scriptures of the holy Prophets; thus to be Star-gazers, or Heaven-beholders is our ſin: but there is a Contemplation of the Stars which is our duty and commendation, (Pſal. 8. 3, 4.) When I conſider (in that great volum of the works of God) the Heavens, the work of thy fingers, the Moon and the Stars which thou haſt ordained; What is man that thou art mindful of him, &c. David did both look and ſee, he beheld the Heavens for a good purpoſe, a godly purpoſe, his own abaſement, and the advancement of the glory and goodneſs, or of the glorious goodneſs of God, in ſpreading ſuch a Canopy, ſparkling with perpetual fires for him to walk under, and do his work by. And doubtleſs, did we with enlightned eyes behold and ſee the natural Heavens, we ſhould become more ſpiritual and Heavenly.

Secondly, In that we have here three words, look, ſee, and behold. Note,

> The works of God, Eſpecially the Heavens, are diligently to be Conſidered.

We may look to the Heavens and not ſee, we may ſee the Heavens and not behold them. Let me here again mind the Reader of the Emphaſis of that word; it notes a looking unto, or upon the Object, as a Hunter looks for a Hare, or a Fowler for a Bird; how doth he pry and look into every tuft and buſh? So the word is uſed (Jer. 5. 26.) Among my people are found wicked men: they lay wait (or they eye and behold) as one that ſetteth ſnares, they ſet a trap, they catch men. All the viſible works of God, much more the Heavens ſhould be diligently conſidered, lookt into, ſeen, and beheld. It was a good Concluſion of one of the Ancients, who ſaid, That man hath not looked unto Heaven, that hath only looked upon Heaven. A bare look is not ſufficient, he muſt look with admiration, or till he cannot forbear to admire, as the firſt Latine word in that ſentence ſignifies properly. A man may look upon a Picture, and yet not behold it diſcerningly; he may ſay, that's the picture of a man, yet not conſider the Art of the workman in drawing it; he may ſee it is the picture of a man, not of a beaſt, at a look, but he muſt ſee it exactly, if he would find out the worth and workmanſhip of it. A man in paſſage (as ſome ſpeak) may ſee a houſe, yet not apprehend the Symmetry of the Plat-form, the skill of the Architect, nor the commodiouſneſs of its Situation; to diſcern theſe calls for ſerious conſideration, and ſetled reviews. As in the Natural works of God, the Heavens made for man, ſo much more in his Spiritual works, the making of a Heaven in man, or man Heavenly, require our deepeſt thoughts, and moſt ſtudious re-ſearches. O how many are there who look tranſiently upon thoſe works of God, who never ſee nor behold them, never enter into the ſecrets of them! many know ſome Truths, yet never looked into any, nor laboured to comprehend with all Saints (or as all Saints ought to do) what is the breadth, and length, and depth, and height of them; and therefore attain not to that riches of the full aſſurance of underſtanding, to the acknowledgment of the myſtery of God, and of the Father, and of Chriſt, as the Apoſtle ſpeaks (Col. 2. 2.) but are like children toſſed to and fro, and carryed about with every wind of Doctrin, as the ſame Apoſtle deſcribes them, Eph. 4. 14. Remember, we are to look and ſee, and behold the Natural works of God, how much more the Spiritual Myſteries of the Goſpel, and the works of grace? theſe indeed are to be looked upon, and ſeen, and beheld, thoſe other are not to be left unlooked upon.

In cœlum non ſuſpicit, qui cœlum tantum aſpicit. Origen.

> Note, Thirdly, The Heavens are a Divine Glaſs, wherein we may ſee much of God; they are a Natural Alphabet, the Letters whereof being well placed, and rightly put together, we may ſpell the name of God, his Wiſdom, Power, and Goodneſs.

Thus the Apoſtle argues (Rom. 1. 19, 20.) That which may be known of God is manifeſt in them, or to them; that is, to the very Heathens. His proof for this, is taken from the point now propoſed: For the inviſible things of him from the Creation of the world are cleerly ſeen, being underſtood by the things that are made, even his eternal Power and God-head. The Apoſtle layes it down in general, Whatſoever is made, whatſoever is part of the Creation, holds out ſomewhat of God: The very Clods of the Earth declare his Power; how much more the Clouds and Stars of Heaven? Therefore look to the Heavens, Behold the Clouds, conſider them, (Pſal. 19. 2.) They declare the glory of God, and the Firmament ſheweth his handy-work. If you ask more particularly, what do they declare? I anſwer, Firſt, That God is; every Creature doth ſo; if there be a Creature, there muſt needs be a Creator; If there be Effects, there muſt be an Efficient; the made Heavens declare their Maker. Secondly, The Heavens declare, not only that God is, but that he is above. Chriſt hath taught us to pray, Our Father, which art in Heaven; God is every where, yet there eſpecially; Heaven is the Habitation of his Holineſs, and of his Glory. Thirdly, In the purity of the Heavens, we may ſee the Holineſs and purity of God; and they being ſo incorruptible and unchangeable, declare, Fourthly, The incorruptibility and unchangeableneſs of God: He that made them ſuch, is much more ſuch himſelf. The very unchangeableneſs of the Heavens, is changeable, compared with the unchangeableneſs of God. The Heavens (ſaith David, Pſal.102.25,26.) are the work of thy hands; they ſhall periſh, but thou ſhalt endure (or ſtand,) yea all of them ſhall wax old like a Garment: as a Veſture ſhalt thou change them, and they ſhall be changed; but thou art the ſame, and thy years ſhall have no end. Fifthly, The Heavens which God hath built as a Houſe for himſelf, being ſo high above the touch of the Creature, ſhew us that God is infinitely exalted above the reach and moleſtation of ſinful man; that's the thing which Elihu aims at, as appears by what followeth in the next words. Look to the Heavens, and ſee, behold the Clouds which are higher than thou.

Verſ. 6. If thou ſinneſt, what doſt thou againſt him? or if thy tranſgreſſions be multiplied, what doſt thou unto him?

As if he had ſaid, When thou lookeſt to the Heavens, thou plainly ſeeſt thou canſt do nothing againſt them; it would be a vain thing for thee to attempt the Heavens, to clamber up to the Clouds; ſurely then, thy ſinnings, thy frettings, thy diſcontents, and complaints cannot hurt God; therefore be quiet.

If thou ſinneſt.] The word here uſed, notes ſin in the leaſt degree, any error or deviation from the Rule; but it comprehends ſins of the higheſt degree, even ſuch as the Prophet calls (Amos 5.12.) Mighty ſins. If thou ſinneſt at the greateſt rate, at the height of blaſphemy, מעל Non tam nocere, quam operare & laborare ſignificat. q. d. Laborando & adnitendo quid tandem efficies quo illum lædas. Pined.

What doſt thou againſt him?] The Hebrew is, What workeſt thou againſt him? Properly the word ſignifieth only to work; we render it by working againſt, that is, to the hurt and diſadvantage of another, to his miſchief and undoing. As if he had ſaid, If thou ſhouldeſt ſet thy ſhoulder to the work, if thou ſhouldeſt do evil with both hands greedily, yet thou canſt make no work of it in this matter, what doſt thou againſt him? What hurt hath he by it? And to aſſure Job that he hath none, nor can have any, Elihu ſerves him up the ſame Meſs in another Diſh of words, in the cloſe of the Verſe.

Or if thy tranſgreſſions be multiplyed.] Here Elihu ſpeaks as high, as he meant before. Tranſgreſſing is more than ordinary ſinning, though (as was toucht upon the word) under ſinning he comprehended any, the moſt extraordinary tranſgreſſings. If thy ſins be tranſgreſſions, rebellions, or prevarications, and they be multiplyed, if thou ſinneſt out of malice and wrathful purpoſe againſt God himſelf; and doſt not only commit ſome one of theſe, but many, and heapeſt them up together, Yet, &c.

If thy tranſgreſſions be multiplyed.] The word ſignifies both magnitude and multitude; hence ſome render, If thy tranſgreſſions be great; we ſay, If they be many. Sin as much as thou wilt, and ſin as often as thou wilt; ſin as much as thou canſt, what hurt hath God by it? Some by ſin in the former part of the verſe, underſtand that evil which is committed immediately againſt God; and by tranſgreſſions in this latter clauſe, ſuch evils as are done againſt our neighbour: But I ſee no need at all to be ſo diſtinct, we may take it reſpecting God, or man, or both; for thoſe ſins which we commit againſt man, are alſo againſt God; he is the perſon offended, his Law is broken, againſt whomſoever the ſin is committed. If thou multiply thy tranſgreſſions,

מה תעשה לו

What doſt thou unto him?] That word, What doſt thou? Signifies not only, or not ſo much, ſtrong labour and endeavour, as the former did, but cunning in labour, and skill in labour. As if he had ſaid, Though a man ſet all his wits awork to do evil, what can he do to him? Neither pains nor skill, neither induſtry nor policy, neither open force nor ſecret ſtratagems, can do him any, the leaſt annoyance. Some Creatures are weak and inconſiderable, as to any thing they can do by outward power, yet they can do much by their ſubtilty, and cunning; but neither the one, nor the other can do any thing unto God. Scrue up thy wits to the higheſt pin, or peg, yet thou canſt do nothing really prejudicial unto him. The words are plain; from them

Obſerve, Firſt, God receives no damage by the ſin of man, how great, or how many ſoever his ſins are.

A man may quickly vex and undo himſelf by ſin. Wiſdom ſaith (Prov. 8.36.) He that ſinneth againſt me, wrongeth his own Soul: All they that hate me, love death. But the ſinner cannot hurt God, he is far above us; man can no more hurt God by ſin, than he can hurt the Clouds, or the higheſt Heavens. Had we an enemy above the Clouds, were it not a madneſs to ſhoot arrows, or bend our forces againſt him? What is man to God! The School-man concludes, Nothing can be added to, nothing can be diminiſhed, nothing taken from God by any act of man: Yet man, as much as in him lies, takes away from, and gives or brings to God, when he either keeps, or doth not keep that order which God hath appointed. Sinners ſhall be judged and dealt with, as they that have greatly annoyed and diſadvantaged God, as they that have rob'd and ſpoyl'd him, as they that have ſmitten and wounded him, as they that have abaſed him, and laid him low: And there is reaſon they ſhould be judged as having done ſo, foraſmuch as they do their utmoſt to do ſo. Thus they are deſcribed (Pſal. 2.1,2.) The Heathen rage, and the People imagin a vain thing. The Kings of the Earth ſet themſelves, and the Rulers, &c. And why all this? What was it for? It was againſt the Lord, and againſt his Anointed. This was done by the Princes and great Ones of the world; yet they were ſo far from being able to prejudice the Lord, either in his Perſon, or in his Intereſt, that he did but laugh at them for it. And 'tis conſiderable that God is deſcribed there, (according to the notion uſed by Elihu in the Text) ſitting in the Heavens, (Verſ.4.) He that ſitteth in the Heavens ſhall laugh, the Lord ſhall have them in deriſion. And why doth the Lord laugh? ſurely becauſe he ſees they can no more hurt or hinder him in his purpoſes, by any of, or all their ſinful adviſings, and attemptings, than if they ſhould hope to batter down the Heavens by diſcharging a Pot-gun againſt them. And therefore he concludes with a triumphant Yet, (Ver.6.) Yet have I ſet my King (after you have done your worſt) upon my holy Hill of Sion. The ſins of men do turn to the glory of God, but to their own ſhame. The ſins of Gods own children turn to the glory of his mercy; thoſe huge heaps, and numberleſs numbers of ſins committed by his Children before Converſion, what do they in the iſſue, but lift up the glory of his Grace in the pardon of them? And the rebellions committed by impenitent ſinners, going on in obſtinacy to the end, without Converſion, what do they but lift up the glory of God in his Juſtice, and wonderful judgments, which he will bring upon them? The ſins of the old world (which was a world of ſin, all fleſh having corrupted their way before God, and there being but one righteous Family found in it) all thoſe ſins (I ſay) did not damage God at all, but indeed they glorified both his Patience and his Juſtice; his Patience, in ſparing them ſo long, even an hundred and twenty years after warning given; his Juſtice, in ſending the Flood at laſt, which brought ſwift deſtruction upon them, and ſwept them all away. The unnatural, crying ſins of Sodom, did not hurt the God of Heaven, but God took advantage thereby, to glorifie his Juſtice, in raining Fire and Brimſtone upon them from Heaven, (Gen. 19.24.) Pharaoh by all his oppoſition againſt the Iſrael of God, did not diſadvantage God, but gave him an advantage to make his Power known, by ſwallowing up him and his Egyptian Hoſt in the waters of the Red Sea. That which is done againſt the Will of God, fulfills the Will of God. The ſins of men are ſo far from hurting the God of Heaven, that they glorifie him among men on Earth; while they behold him either turning the evil which is done into good, or puniſhing them for their evil doings. That which men ſpeak or do againſt God, like an Arrow ſhot up into the Air, falls down upon their own heads. David (Pſal. 111.2.) breaks out wonderfully into the praiſe of God upon this conſideration. The works of the Lord are great, ſought out of all them that have pleaſure in them. Theſe works of God wherein we ſhould take pleaſure, are not only works of mercy to the Godly, (Verſ. 3 4, 5.) but of vengeance upon the wicked, (Verſ. 6.) He hath ſhewed his people the power of his works, that he may give them the heritage of the Heathen. The works of his hands are Verity and Judgment, (Verſ. 7.) That is, judgment for Saints in ſaving them, and upon ſinners in conſuming them. We ſhould much contemplate the works of God, in bringing glory to himſelf out of the ſins of men. The Angels ſinned and fell; man ſinned as ſoon almoſt as he was ſet up: Theſe Creatures did that which God would not have done, yet God brought about that which he would. And thus it is to this day among all the Children of men; while they break holy Commandments, God fulfills his holy Counſels; no thanks to them, yea woe to them. So then, the Lord hath no hurt by ſin; which way ſoever ſinners turn themſelves, they cannot turn away his Counſels, nor turn from his Counſels: When they are diſobeying his revealed will, he is doing his ſecret will, in which God is moſt righteous, and in his ſeaſon will lift up his Righteouſneſs and Holineſs, his righteous and holy Will, in the face of all the ſinners in the world, and they ſhall know and confeſs that he hath ſerved his own wiſe and holy purpoſes, even in thoſe Providences wherein they have had no purpoſe, but to ſerve their fooliſh and unholy luſts and pleaſures. We have an illuſtrious proof of this, in that extreamly evil and unnatural practice of men good in the main, the holy Patriarchs, againſt their own Brother (Gen. 50.20.) who told them plainly, when he meant them no evil, but good, But as for you, ye thought evil againſt me, but God meant it for good; to bring to paſs, as it is this day, to ſave much people alive.

De eo quod agitur contra Dei voluntatem, voluntas ipſius vel mala in bonum convertentis vel mala punientis impletur. Auguſt Enchirid. c. 100.

Miro & ineffabili modo, non fit præter ejus voluntatem, quod etiam contra ejus voluntatem fit; quia non fieret, ſi non ſineret: nec utiq; nolens ſinit ſed volens. Nec ſineret bonus fieri male, niſi omnipotens etiam de malo facere poſſet bene. Auguſt. in Pſal. 111.

Further, To clear the Point in general, we may diſtinguiſh of ſin, as having a threefold oppoſition; Firſt, Againſt our ſelves. Secondly, Againſt our Neighbour. Thirdly, Againſt God. This diviſion or diſtinction of ſins, muſt be ſo underſtood that the two former, namely, ſin againſt our ſelves, and againſt our Neighbour, brings a real detriment, and diſadvantage to our ſelves, and to our Neighbour. But as ſin hath reſpect to God, it doth not bring any real detriment to him: Only it may be ſaid, Firſt, The will of many ſinners is raiſed up to that height of wickedneſs, as purpoſely to ſet themſelves to diſhonor God, to blaſpheme his name, and do deſpight to the Spirit of Grace, Heb. 10. 29. which is the utmoſt length that ſin or luſt can go. Secondly, The nature of every ſin, or every ſin conſidered in its nature, is a wrong or a hurt to God; for it is an unconformity to his Will, and a breach of his Law: Yet as to himſelf God receives no hurt, nor poſſibly can receive hurt by any, the fouleſt, moſt ſinful ſin.

But ſome may ſay, Doth not ſin damage God at all; could Elihu ſay in Truth, What doſt thou againſt him, or unto him, if thou ſinneſt? Is ſin nothing to God? The Church complained, and cryed out to thoſe that paſſed by her, (Lam. 1.12.) Is it nothing to you, all ye that paſs by? Are all my afflictions nothing to you? May not God ſay much more, Are all your tranſgreſſions nothing unto me? Are our ſins nothing to him? Is he unconcerned in them? How can this be? There are ſeveral Scripture-Expreſſions which ſhew clearly that we do much againſt God when we ſin, and much for him when we ſin not, or abſtain from ſin.

Firſt, When a People, eſpecially when a profeſſing People, ſin, The name of God is prophaned; and is that nothing to God? Is it not againſt God, to have his name prophaned? We find the Lord charging this upon his People (Ezek. 36.20,21.) They prophaned my name among the Heathen, &c. To prophane the name of God, is to make it as an unholy, as a common, yea, as a corrupt thing; and is this nothing to God?

Secondly, To ſin is to diſhonour God, 'tis called, A deſpiſing of God, (1 Sam. 2. 30.) Them that honour me, I will honour; and they that deſpiſe me, ſhall be lightly eſteemed. Is it nothing to be deſpiſed, to be diſhonoured? If a man be deſpiſed, he thinks himſelf wronged; loſs of honour is a great loſs.

Thirdly, We find in Scripture, that ſome kind of ſinning is blaſpheming. The Apoſtle tells the Jews (Rom. 2. 24.) The name of God is blaſphemed among the Gentiles, through you: That is, his name is evil ſpoken of, a bad report is brought upon his name, he hears ill among evil men, among the Gentiles, through you, that is, through the unanſwerableneſs of your doings, to your ſayings, or through the unlikeneſs of your practices, to your profeſſion. To blaſpheme the name of God is to ſtrike through, to wound the name of God; it is ſomewhat to a man to have his name ſtruck through with the poyſoned Arrows and Darts of reproach. An ill tongue falls heavy, and cuts deep. A blaſphemed name is a tongue-beaten name: And is this nothing to God?

Fourthly, Some ſins are not only in themſelves a contempt of God, but they are committed in contempt of God. When men ſin preſumptuouſly, and with a high hand; when they ſin with a command ſhining in their eye, with a threat ſounding in their ear, they even ſend a defiance to Heaven, and bid God do his worſt: And is this nothing againſt God? Nothing unto God? One of the Ancients writing at large of two Cities, calleth one of them, The earthly and unholy City, made by the love of our ſelves, even to the loathing and contempt of God. (Love to our ſelves, riſing up to the contempt of God, doth all the miſchief in the world) The other City he calleth holy and heavenly, and that (ſaith he) is built by the love of God, or when we love God even to a loathing and contempt of our ſelves, and of all our own concernments, intereſts and advantages. When a man comes to love God with a loathing of himſelf, then he is indeed a builder of the holy City: And when ſinners act with an inordinate love to themſelves, they at once caſt contempt upon God, and build that bad City; and is this nothing to God?

Fifthly, The Scripture ſaith, God is angry with ſin. A wiſe man will not be angry with that which is nothing to him, or which doth nothing againſt him; a wiſe man will not be angry for nothing, much leſs will the only wiſe God.

Sixthly, The Scripture ſaith, God is grieved for the ſins of men. Surely God will not be grieved for that which is nothing unto him. Himſelf ſaith, ſinners fret him, (Ezek. 16.43.) Thou haſt fretted me in all theſe things. A well tempered man will not fret for that which doth not ſome way or other afflict him. We read (Iſa. 63. 10.) That Iſrael vexed his holy Spirit ſo much, that he was turned to be their enemy, and fought againſt them. And had they done nothing againſt him? Yea, it is ſaid (Gen. 6. 6.) God was ſo much afflicted with the ſins of the old world, that he repented that he had made man upon the Earth, and it grieved him at his heart. Doubtleſs that is ſomewhat to God, which grieves him thus, and goes to his very heart. And let us take heed of thinking ſin is nothing to God; though Elihu ſaith here to Job, What doſt thou unto him, if thou ſinneſt? Sin hath done all the miſchief to man that ever was done him, nor can any thing do him a miſchief, but his ſin. And though God, as Elihu argueth truly, be above the reach of any miſchief that ſin or ſinners can do him, yet upon tryal they will be found guilty of, and caſt for doing much, and that very miſchievouſly againſt God. And therefore

For anſwer to the Objection, know, The glory of God may be conſidered two ways; Firſt, In it ſelf. Secondly, In its manifeſtations: Or, we may conſider God, Firſt, In his Eſſential glory and bleſſedneſs; Secondly, In his manifeſtative glory and bleſſedneſs. The glory and Majeſty of God in it ſelf, or his Eſſential glory is always the ſame, and receives neither increaſe nor diminution; for 'tis infinite and perfect, or infinitely perfect; and that's the definition of Perfection, or defined perfection, to which nothing can be added, and from which nothing can be taken. So then, Conſider God in himſelf, and 'tis true, our ſins are nothing to him, they hurt him no more than the Stars are hurt by throwing ſtones into the Air at them, or the Sun is hurt by caſting Darts up at it, or the Moon is hurt by the barking of Dogs at it; we can no more hurt or hinder that good or glory of God by our ſins, than Sun, Moon and Stars in Heaven, are hurt or hindred in their Courſe, by ſuch angry aſſaults from Earth. But

Secondly, Conſider the manifeſtations of the glory of God, and this is hindred, or damaged by ſin. That's the meaning of all thoſe Scriptures, where 'tis ſaid, his name is prophaned, diſhonoured, blaſphemed; the preſent manifeſtations of his glory, which ſhould break out every where, are clouded and eclipſed by ſin. And this, their ſins do eſpecially who profeſs his name. Profeſſors are obliged where-ever they come, to hold out the ſavour and excellency of his name: And therefore God will deal with knowing ſinners, as with thoſe that hurt and wound him, as with thoſe that have grieved and broken him, as with thoſe who have burdened and troubled him, yea, as with thoſe who would deſtroy him. Sin is an enemy to God, and would dethrone and thruſt him out of the world; therefore ſinners ſhall be dealt with as ſuch as have highly hurt and wronged God. Sinners have ſometimes riſen up to ſuch expreſſions of wickedneſs that they would even pull God out of Heaven; it is in the nature of every ſin, and in the ſpirit of many ſinners to do ſo, they carry a dayly enmity in their hearts.

Peccatum vocatur Deicidium appetens ſc. Deum deſtruer.

Therefore woe to thoſe who ſay of God, God is not hurt by our ſins? Why then ſhould we trouble our ſelves about them? Yes, the Lord will at laſt let all ſinners know he hath been concerned in their ſins; though they have not at all toucht his Eſſential Glory, yet they have darkned and ſlurr'd the manifeſtations of his Glory. And therefore I anſwer,

Secondly, All thoſe Scriptures before alledged, importing that ſin grieves God, vexes him, and is very burthenſome to him; all thoſe are ſpoken either of God-man, Jeſus Chriſt, who was made like unto us in all things, except ſin, and is ſpoken of in the Hiſtories and Propheſies of the Old Teſtament, before he took fleſh, as having thoſe (in him) ſinleſs paſſions of anger, and ſorrow, and grief, which were found in him after he appeared in the fleſh: Or if expounded of God, ſtrictly conſidered, then what is in thoſe Scriptures ſpoken of God, muſt be underſtood after the manner of men, yet as becomes God, who is without all paſſions and repentings: Or they are to be underſtood, not as importing Affections in God, but Effects upon men. When men ſin, God doth ſuch things as angry men uſe to do, ſuch things as men do that are grieved with what others have done, and repent of what themſelves have done. If grief, anger, repentance, were properly wrought in God, when we ſin, our ſins muſt needs be ſome, yea much annoyance to him. But while man ſees and feels ſuch Effects as theſe paſſions produce, the Lord is infinitely exalted above the leaſt feeling of theſe paſſions, he remains ever the ſame: That's it which Elihu ſignifieth, and holds out to Job; we may trouble one another, and trouble our ſelves by ſin, but we cannot at all trouble God. If thou ſinneſt, what doſt thou againſt him, what unto him? I ſhall conclude, and gather up the ſenſe of this Context in theſe four brief Deductions. Take two of them Negatively, and two Affirmatively.

Hæc de Deo dicuntur ἀνθρωποπαθῶς, & intelligenda ſunt θεοπρεπῶς.

Firſt, God doth not puniſh ſinners in anger, only, though he be angry only with ſin.

Secondly, God doth not puniſh ſinners, at all, for fear. He fears none, whom none can hurt.

The two Affirmatives take thus:

Firſt, When God puniſheth ſin, he doth it out of pure love to Juſtice, or purely out of love to Juſtice.

Secondly, God afflicts the godly in mercy; 'tis not becauſe they have done him hurt, but for their good.

Elihu proceeds further to prove, that as Job could not hurt God by his ſins, ſo his righteouſneſs and innocency were no advantage to him; and therefore it muſt needs follow, that his ſins could only hurt, and his righteouſneſs only profit himſelf, and ſuch as were like himſelf.

Verſ. 7. If thou be righteous, what giveſt thou him? and what receiveth he at thy hands?

Verſ. 8. Thy wickedneſs may hurt a man, as thou art; and thy righteouſneſs may profit the ſon of man.

Elihu having ſhewed in the former verſe, that the ſin of man cannot detract any thing from, nor in the leaſt hinder the happineſs of God; proceeds in the 7. verſe to ſhew, that the ſinleſneſs, ye that the righteouſneſs of man cannot advantage, nor advance the happineſs of God: And therefore leſt he ſhould ſeem to make both the ſin and the righteouſneſs of man to be of no uſe, he ſtates the matter in the 8. verſe, and tells us both to whom the wickedneſs of man is hurtful, and to whom the righteouſneſs of man is profitable; Thy wickedneſs may hurt a man as thou art, and thy righteouſneſs may profit the ſon of man; but neither can thy wickedneſs hurt, nor thy righteouſneſs help or advantage God. That's the ſum of theſe two verſes.

If thou be righteous, what giveſt thou him?] As if he had ſaid; There is no reaſon (O Job) that thou ſhouldeſt at any time (as thou oftentimes haſt) proclaim thy own righteouſneſs, as if that added any thing to God. Job was not ignorant of that; But the ſpeech of Elihu had this ſcope in it, to reprove him for complaining that his goodneſs profited himſelf nothing, becauſe though he was far from wickedneſs, yet he was afflicted, whereas many wicked men proſpered and lived in full content; to which point his other friends had not anſwered. And further, Elihu urgeth Job with this, becauſe he had ſo induſtriouſly defended his own righteouſneſs, as if he would intimate that God was a gainer by it; whereas if God at any time rewardeth our good deeds, that proceedeth from his own goodneſs and Free Grace, not from any obligation which we have put upon him, by what we have done, how well ſoever we have done it. If thou be righteous, what giveſt thou him? This ſuppoſition, if thou be righteous, hath in it a grant, if not an affirmation, that a man may be righteous; For though all men naturally, or in nature, are unrighteous, yet thorough grace all men, that is, all men who receive grace are righteous: And they who receive grace are righteous under a threefold notion. Firſt, they are righteous by an imputed righteouſneſs, or by the righteouſneſs of another accounted to them; and thus every godly man is righteous, becauſe freely juſtified. Secondly, they that have grace are righteous by an Inherent Righteouſneſs, by a ſtock or a principle of Righteouſneſs planted in them at their Converſion. In Converſion, not only the acts, but the ſtate and nature of a man is changed. He who before was nothing but a bundle of unrighteouſneſs, becomes a righteous man; that is, he hath a righteous principle planted in him and abiding with him. Thus a godly man is righteous, becauſe he is ſanctified. Thirdly, every man that hath grace, is a Righteous man by a righteouſneſs flowing out from him, or by a practical righteouſneſs; he is righteous by the doing of Righteouſneſs; The former is Righteouſneſs by Converſion, this is Righteouſneſs by Converſation; and this flows from the former, as the Apoſtle John ſpeaks in his firſt Epiſtle (Chap. 3. 5.) He that doth Righteouſneſs, is righteous; That is, he is in a righteous ſtate through Juſtification; And hath righteouſneſs planted in him through Sanctification; And he that is thus righteous in his ſtate, is alſo a practiſer of Righteouſneſs in his way. As it is ſaid of that worthy pair Zachary and Elizabeth, (Luke 1.6.) They were both Righteous, walking in all the Ordinances and Commandments of God blameleſs. Here was practical Righteouſneſs, they were righteous workers, their courſe was a courſe of Righteouſneſs, as themſelves were in a ſtate of Righteouſneſs. And thus, I conceive, Elihu is chiefly to be underſtood here; becauſe righteouſneſs in this place is oppoſed to unrighteous actions. If thou wert Righteous; That is, if thy ways or thy courſes were as righteous, as thou haſt often reported and aſſerted them to be (for Job in the 27. Chap. ſaid, He would not let go his Righteouſneſs, he would hold it till he dyed; he would never give up his Integrity, how much ſoever his friends accuſed him; he would no more give it up, than give it off, Now ſaith Elihu, If thou art righteous, as thou ſayeſt, and ſtandeſt ſo much upon it, let it be granted, ſeeing thou wilt needs have it ſo, that thou art righteous, The Septuagint render ſo, Seeing thou art righteous, or for as much as thou art Righteous, that is, according to thy own affirmation, yea though God hath ſaid ſo of thee, and born that witneſs of thee) yet what is that to God?

What giveſt thou unto him?] If thy converſation were ſuch as no blame could be laid upon it; though no ſpot could be ſeen upon thy garments, after all thy walkings thorough the affairs of this world, yet what giveſt thou unto him? Surely nothing at all. Some conceive this was a famous proverbial Speech amongſt the godly in thoſe times, full of Reverence and high Eſtimation, or rather Admiration of God; If we are Righteous, what is it to God? or what give we to God? (What giveſt thou him?) The meaning is, thou giveſt him nothing. A gift is the beſtowing of ſome good thing where there is no obligation; that's a gift which a man is not bound to beſtow by any Law of Righteouſneſs; A gift is beſtowed out of meer liberality, or from a free and bountiful ſpirit. Now, ſaith he, What giveſt thou unto God? What ſervice is there in all thy righteous ways and works, which which thou art not obliged to tender unto God, or which thou art not bound to do? Thy Righteouſneſs doth not at all oblige God, for whatſoever good thou doeſt, thou art under a command to do it; there is a Law commanding, yea, compelling thee, if thou ſhouldeſt refuſe; doeſt thou perform any duty to God or man, which thou art not bound or ingaged to perform? Surely thou doeſt not, yea thou can'ſt not. Therefore, what giveſt thou unto God?

Juſtitia tua nihil Deum juveris, ne igitur tuam vendites juſtitiam. Chryſoſt.

Donum eſt rei licitæ nullo jure cogente mera liberalitate facta collatio. Hoſtien.

Or what receiveth he at thy hand?] The words are plain, giving and receiving are Correlatives; where there is giving, there is uſually receiving; and where there is receiving, there muſt be giving. Sometimes there is giving, where there is no receiving. When Belſhazzar promiſed Daniel great things, if he could Interpret the hand-writing on the wall, (Chap. 5. 17.) He anſwered, Let thy gifts be to thy ſelf, and thy rewards unto another. Daniel would not receive his offer: There was giving in promiſe on Belſhazzar's ſide, but no receiving on Daniels ſide. Moſt are ſo much for receiving, that they love the word give, as the Prophet taxed and reproved the Rulers of Iſrael, (*Hoſ.*4. 18.) Her Rulers with ſhame (that is, ſhameleſly, or of which they ſhould be aſhamed, or for which all cry ſhame on them) do love, Give ye; that word ſounded well, even like ſweet muſick in their ears: And if others did not offer bribes to corrupt Juſtice, they invited them, give ye, we are ready to receive. The Apoſtle puts both theſe together in a good way, (*Phil.*4.15.) No Church communicated with me as concerning giving and receiving, but ye only: And he would have the Church at Epheſus to remember thoſe words of the Lord Jeſus, how he ſaid, It is more bleſſed to give, then to receive, (Acts 20. 35.) Artaxerxes, one of the Perſian Monarchs, was ſurnamed, Long-hand; his right hand, or giving hand, being longer then the left; ſhewing, as ſome conjecture, that the Honour of great Kings is ſeen more in giving than in receiving. But as we have nothing of our own to give unto God, ſo he hath no need to receive any thing of us. Thus Elihu here, What giveſt thou him? Or what receiveth he at thine hand?

Artaxerxes longimanus dextram manum habebat longiorem; Rege dignius eſt dare quam accipere.

Of thine hand.] He expreſſeth it not barely, What receiveth he of thee, but of thine hand; becauſe as the hand is the great Inſtrument of working, ſo alſo of giving; we give and beſtow with the hand, (what hath he received of thy hand,) there is a ſpeciality in that. Conſider thy hand, what can the hand of God take out of thy hand? Thy hand is, Firſt, a weak hand; Secondly, a narrow ſcanty hand; Thirdly, thy hand is an ineffectual hand to thy ſelf, it cannot bring any work about to the iſſue, to the full end and accompliſhment; therefore what is thy hand, thy weak, thy narrow, thy ineffectual hand, that God ſhould receive any thing out of thy hand? And then conſider what the hand of God is; His is, Firſt, a ſtrong hand; Secondly, a large, a wide hand; Thirdly, a hand full already; and, Fourthly, as his hand is full already, ſo it is a hand filling all things; He openeth his hand, and fills all things with good. Now God having ſuch a hand, how canſt thou fill his hand with thy hand? What receiveth he at thine hand? I need not labour further in the explication of the words; Take one general Obſervation from them, which I ſhall draw down into ſome particulars.

The Righteouſneſs or Righteous Actions of men, contribute nothing to God;

They are no advantage to God: The beſt things that we can do, cannot at all better God, or God is never the better for them: That is the meaning of David, (Pſal. 16.3.) ſpeaking as a tipe of Chriſt; My goodneſs extendeth not to thee, but to the Saints which are on the Earth, and to the Excellent, in whom is all my delight. Jerome was of opinion, that theſe words of the Pſalm were taken out of this place of Job. (My goodneſs) that is, my good deeds extend not to thee; the good deeds of Chriſt did not add any thing to God, they did not give any thing to God; for it is impoſſible that any good, or any goodneſs ſhould ſo be made an addition to him, who is all, and hath all: but (ſaith he) to the Saints, to them my goodneſs extendeth, I can and will do good to them. Thus Saint Paul ſpake to the Athenians, (Acts 17.25.) God is not worſhipped with mens hands, as though he needed any thing: God calls for worſhip, but he is not worſhipped, becauſe he needs our worſhip, or becauſe he would receive ſome benefit at the hand of worſhippers. The ſame Apoſtle puts the queſtion, (Rom. 11. 35.) Who hath given unto him, and it ſhall be recompenced unto him again? As much as to ſay, no man hath given any thing to God, he is above and beyond all the gifts and givings of the creature.

There is a three-fold ground of it, why nothing can be given to God, either to oblige him, or to add any thing to him.

Firſt, All is due to him, what-ever we do is a debt to him; we cannot make the payment of a debt a gift. Be as holy and as righteous as you will, as exact in your walkings as you can, it is all of debt, and therefore not a gift. (Luke 17. 10.) When you have done all, (when you have run your whole Courſe of obedience, both as to firſt and ſecond Table duties,) ſay you are unprofitable ſervants, we have done no more than was our duty to do. There is no gift, where all is due.

Secondly, What-ever we do in a way of Righteouſneſs, is not a gift, nor an advantage to God; for it was all firſt given us by God, we and all that we have came firſt from him; whatſoever we have, we have had it of God. It is ſaid in that place before noted (Acts 17.25.) He is not worſhipped of mens hands, as if he needed any thing, (why?) For he giveth to all men life and breath, and all things; he gives all things, and therefore he needs nothing, nor can any thing properly be ſaid to be given to him, who giveth all things. We have that remarkable Scripture (1 Chron. 29. 10.) where David praiſeth the Lord for the offering and gift which he himſelf and his people had brought towards the building of the Temple; And he deſired that his offerings might be accepted of the Lord, not ſo much as they were given by his hand, as becauſe they and the heart to give them, were received from the hand of God. Wherefore David bleſſed the Lord before all the Congregation, and ſaid, Bleſſed be thou Lord God of Iſrael our Father, for ever and ever, for all that is in Heaven and in Earth is thine; thine is the Kingdom, O Lord, and thou art exalted as head above all. And, now therefore, O God, we thank thee, and praiſe thy glorious Name; But who am I, and what is my people, that we ſhould be able to offer ſo willingly after this ſort; for all things come of thee, and of thy own have we given thee. And again at the 16. verſe; All this ſtore cometh of thee, and all is thine own. We cannot be ſaid properly to give another that which is his own already; whatever God receives of us, came from himſelf: And as whatſoever we give comes from God, ſo every action or duty which we perform to God, comes from God; he beſtows the power to do upon us, before we can do any thing, and therefore it cannot be any addition unto him. There are two graces, which we exerciſe, very pleaſing to God; Firſt, Faith; Secondly, Charity; yet neither of theſe contribute any thing to God. Faith is ſo far from giving God any thing, that its whole work lyeth in receiving; And though charity be a giving grace, yet it gives to man only, not to God. So then, what doth God receive of man? Surely nothing but his own. David inquires (Pſal. 116. 12.) What ſhall I return to the Lord for all his benefits? Mark that word, return; the Hebrew Text may be thus rendred; What ſhall I make to return to the Lord of all his rendrings, or contributions unto me; As if he had ſaid, Lord I have received abundance from thee, thou haſt paid or recompenced me fully for all my pains, and I am looking over it all, and conſidering what of it I ſhall return to thee; it is all thine own, and now Lord what ſhall I return of it back again to thee? What he received was returned, if not in kind, yet in effect, and the return of that was but his duty, it could not be his deſert. Chriſt indeed merited and ſatisfied, becauſe he gave of his own, and as God-man wrought all righteouſneſs for us in his own ſtrength.

Thirdly, The Lord receives nothing at our hands, for he is full already. We can put no more into a full veſſel; if there be any empty ſpace, you may put ſomewhat more into a Veſſel, but when it is as full as it can hold, what can you put into it? Who can make the Ocean fuller, which hath in it the fulneſs of all waters? All that we can give to God is not ſo much an increaſe to him, as a drop of the Bucket is to the whole Ocean. Who can make the Sun brighter? All we do to, or for God, is not ſo much as a Candle to the Sun. What can he receive, who hath all things in himſelf? God is infinitely full, therefore there is no giving to him, nor receiving by him at our hands. That word which is one of the Titles of God holds forth as much, he is Elſhaddai, that is, A God every way full, every way ſufficient, he is all-ſufficient for us, and he is ſelf-ſufficient. Some of the Heathens had ſuch notions and glimmering apprehenſions of God. Plato ſaith, The exerciſe of Godlineſs, or of Worſhip, is acceptable to God, but is not at all profitable to God. It is manifeſt, ſaith Ariſtotle, that God needs no friends, nor any thing to help him. The Sacrifices of the Jews were great and royal Offerings, they brought their Sheep, and Oxen, and Bullocks, and Goats in abundance, yet the Lord would have them know he had no need of them, (Pſal. 50. 8.) I will not reprove thee for thy Sacrifices, and burnt offerings to have been continually before me; I will take no Bullock out of thy Houſe, nor he-Goat out of thy Folds, for every Beaſt of the Forreſt is mine, and the Cattel upon a Thouſand Hills: I know all the fowls of the Mountains, and the wild Beaſts of the Field are mine. If I were an hungry, I would not tell thee, for the World is mine, and the fulneſs thereof. Some conceive that Elihu aims eſpecially at thoſe gifts. If thou bringeſt or giveſt many Sacrifices, what receiveth he at thy hand? The Lord doth not call for Sacrifices becauſe he is hungry; that is, hath need of them. The Lord (*Zeph.*2. 11.) threatens the gods of the Heathen, that he would ſtarve or famiſh them; that is, he would deſtroy the means of their Worſhip: But who can famiſh the Lord, whoſe the World is, and the fulneſs of it?

Eſt quidem pietas illis grata, non autem utilis. Plato in Euthyphra. Manifeſtum eſt quod nulla re Deus, nec amicis egebit. Ariſt.lib.7. Eth. c. 12.

Now if God receives nothing at our hands by way of ſupply, or addition, then

Firſt, No Creature is neceſſary unto God. We all depend on him, he is altogether neceſſary to us, but we are not neceſſary to him; we are and ought to be his Servants, but he doth not need our ſervice; we need ſuch a Maſter, ſuch a Lord, we need to have ſuch a one over us, but he needs not ſuch as we are under him. Earthly Maſters and Servants have need of one another; Maſters keep and maintain their Servants, and Servants are very helpful and profitable to their Maſters. As a Servant needs a Maſter to give him meat and drink, apparel, and the conveniences of this life; ſo the Maſter needs the Servant, he needs his work, his labour, his hand, he cannot tell how to do his buſineſs without him; Maſters cannot live comfortably without their Servants, much leſs honourably, they cannot keep their State and Degree amongſt men without Servants; and Servants need their Maſters, they cannot ſubſiſt, they cannot live, but by wages, or the reward of their labour. God hath made ſuch a tie, knit ſuch a knot among the Creatures, that one, though a Superiour, ſhould not deſpiſe the other, though much his Inferiour, for both concur as parts, to the conſtitution of the whole, or general conſtitution of the World. But God is not a part, but the Principle, or Conſtituter of the Univerſe, not at all depending upon any part of it. If a Servant ſhould have need of his Maſter, and not the Maſter of the Servant, the Maſter would deſpiſe his Servant; but God hath ſo ordered it, that as the Servant needs the Maſter, ſo the Maſter needs the Servant, while himſelf hath no need of either. God hath no need of our ſervice, but we need his ſervice, or him as our Lord and Maſter. It is an honour to God that he hath ſo many to ſerve him, but it is his greateſt honour that he needs none to ſerve him. Before there were either men or Angels, God had the ſame honour and happineſs that now he ſaith, he is ſelf-ſufficient; It were a ſhame and a diſhonour to us, ſhould we own him for God, who needed our good; he cannot be our God, who needs our good. All Creatures need the help and good of one another, and the help or good of all Creatures comes from God; but God himſelf is ſtrong enough to help himſelf, and good enough to make himſelf everlaſtingly happy. There is nothing without him, but he can be happy without it; there's no Creature, whether thing or perſon, in Heaven or Earth, neceſſary to God, either as to his Being, or well-being: And therefore we may ſay, not only to the beſt man on Earth, but to the moſt glorious Angel in Heaven, (as Elihu to Job) What receiveth he of thine hand?

Secondly, If what we do, adds nothing to God, if he receive nothing by our moſt righteous ſervices! Then ſurely God ſhews wonderful goodneſs towards us, in that he is pleaſed to make ſo great an account of, and ſet ſuch ſtore by our ſervices and righteouſneſs, even of any, the leaſt good we do in uprightneſs. Is it not a ſingular comfort that the Lord puts ſo much worth upon what we do, though what we do be of no worth to him? And that God ſhould bind himſelf to us, when he is not all beholden to us? The Lord doth not ſay, What do you give me? Or, What do I receive at your hands? Thereby to put a ſlight upon our performances and ſervices; tis far from the Lord, that becauſe he hath no need of us, therefore to contemn us; no, he declares a great acceptance of any, the leaſt faithful ſervice to himſelf, or to our brethren, which we do at his command. Though, ſhould we ſtretch our endeavours, and ſtrain our wits to the utmoſt, to do him good we cannot, yet he doth not undervalue what we do, but takes what is well done, well at our hands, and puts all our good deeds into his Book of remembrance, and we ſhall one way or other hear of them again to our comfort. Hence,

Thirdly, We may infer, How good is God, who highly rewards us for the good we do, though it do him no good! Man will ſcarce thank a man for any good that he doth, unleſs it redound ſomewhat to himſelf, much leſs will he pay or reward another for that ſervice which ſtands him in little or no ſtead. If a man make a bargain with a man, he comes hardly off with him, if he gets no benefit by it: Seeing then the Lord rewards us for thoſe ſervices by which he gets no good at all, how wonderfully doth this declare his goodneſs!

Fourthly, How doth the goodneſs of God appear; ſeeing though we can add nothing to his glory, yet if we do good and righteous things, he tells us that we glorifie him, which is the higheſt commendation imaginable of what we do. 'Tis the command of Chriſt (*Matth.*5.16.) Let your light ſo ſhine before men, that they ſeeing your good works, may glorifie your father which is in Heaven. The Apoſtles Caution is, Whatſoever ye do, do all to the glory of God, 1 Cor. 10. 31. Now though (according to this and the other charge) we, in all we do, ſincerely aim at the holding forth and manifeſting of that glory and goodneſs that is in God, yet he receives no increaſe of glory; is it not therefore wonderful goodneſs, that he is pleaſed to ſay, we glorifie him? which is the higheſt attainment of the Creature, and the nobleſt improvement of our pains and labours. Theſe and many other inferences, may be made for our inſtruction, from this humbling queſtion, If thou be righteous, what giveſt thou to him, or what receiveth he at thy hands?

Elihu having told Job that neither his ſin did hurt God, nor his righteouſneſs advantage him, leſt any ſhould thence infer, ſurely then it is no great matter whether we be righteous or wicked, whether we do good or evil; to prevent this miſchief, he ſhews that though your ſin cannot hurt God, yet it will do hurt enough, and though your righteouſneſs add no good to God, yet it may do much good. This he doth in the next verſe.

Thy wickedneſs may hurt a man as thou art, and thy righteouſneſs may profit the ſon of man.

As if he had ſaid, I will tell thee what will become of the good and evil thou doeſt, as to advantage or diſadvantage; foraſmuch as thou canſt not advantage God by thy righteouſneſs, nor hurt him by thy wickedneſs, it muſt needs follow, that the one may be helpful, and the other hurtful to thy ſelf, and to ſuch as thou thy ſelf art: If it were otherwiſe, or not ſo, there would be no difference between the doing of good or evil, as to the event, how greatly ſoever they differ in their Nature.

Si bona agerimus, noſtro bono; ſi malo, noſtro malo.

Thy wickedneſs may hurt a man as thou art, only it cannot hurt God. God is as great and as happy as ever he was, and he will ever be as great and as happy as now he is, let men do their worſt, and be as wicked as they can.

Thy wickedneſs.] The word Wickedneſs notes ſin in the higheſt degree, at leaſt of a high degree; every wickedneſs is ſin, but every ſin is not wickedneſs; yet we are not to underſtand Elihu's meaning, as if great ſins only did miſchief and hurt. The truth is, every ſin doth hurt and miſchief; as a little poiſon, and the leaſt poiſon may do hurt, unleſs it be corrected. We uſe to ſay of ſome things, A little doth not hurt; but we cannot ſay a little poiſon doth no hurt, unleſs you do not take it, or unleſs it be corrected; a little poiſon uncorrected will do hurt. So then, when Elihu ſaith here, Thy wickedneſs may hurt, we are not to underſtand it only of great ſins, as Whoredom, Murder, Perjury, Drunkenneſs, and Witchcraft, &c. but even of idle thoughts, of vain words, or undue paſſions; theſe hurt as well as greater ſins, commonly called wickedneſs.

Modicum non nocet.

Thy wickedneſs

May hurt a man as thou art.] Theſe words (may hurt) are not expreſſed in the Original Text, but they are plainly intended and implyed: Yet if we ſhould leave them out of the reading, the ſence would be the ſame (Thy wickedneſs is to a man as thou art) That is, thy wickedneſs is to the hurt or damage of a man as thou art; it may hurt thee or thy brother, it may hurt thy ſelf, or any like thy ſelf.

Hence Note, Firſt, That ſin is a hurtful thing.

Whereſoever ſin is, it doth miſchief. Sin is ſo bad in the nature of it, that we have reaſon enough to avoid it and fly from it, and ſin is ſo dangerous in the Effects of it, that we have further, though not more reaſon to avoid it, and fly from it; indeed we ſhould rather (and that is our ſpiritualneſs in avoiding of ſin) avoid it becauſe of the evil that is in the Nature of it, becauſe it riſeth up againſt the Will, and breaks the holy Commands of God; we have greateſt reaſon to depart from ſin, becauſe it is a departure from God, becauſe of the blackneſs and filthineſs of it; yet not only the blackneſs of this Coal, but the fire, the eternal fire that is in it, gives us cauſe enough to depart from it. 'Tis true, a truly gracious heart would not ſin, though he might eſcape all the ſad effects of ſin, but when he hears it is as hot as fire, and as deadly as poiſon, and as killing as the plague; when he hears that it is the ruine of Perſons, and of Families, of Churches and Nations, when he hears that 'tis ſin which hath done all the hurt and miſchief that ever was in the World, he ſees he hath further reaſon to dread it, and depart from it.

Note, Secondly, Sin doth miſchief to man, and to man eſpecially.

Sin doth miſchief all the World over; the whole Creation groans under the miſchief and vanity, which ſin hath brought upon it, (Rom. 8. 22.) Sin hath done damage to the whole Creation; but the great damage which ſin doth, is to man, to him that acts it to others before whom it is acted, or towards whom it is acted. Sin is diſtributed into two ſorts, as to its hurtfulneſs. Sin either reſpects our ſelves in the hurt it doth, or others, and thoſe others are either God or our Neighbour; ſin hurts our ſelves moſt, yet ſin as it is a wrong to God, may be ſaid to hurt his honour, and diminiſh the manifeſtation of his glory in the World, (as hath been ſhewed before). And ſin is really a wrong to our Neighbour. There are a number of ſins committed againſt our ſelves, yea, every ſin, though committed againſt our Neighbour, hits and hurts our ſelves; no man can hurt his Neighbour, but he hurts himſelf moſt. So that, although there are many ſins which reſpect others, yet all are againſt our ſelves. Some ſins (unbelief eſpecially, and the neglect of holy duties) hurt our ſelves only; there are ſins which more properly hurt others, as oppreſſion and uncharitableneſs; there are ſeveral ſins which at once hurt others and our ſelves. Adultery hurts ſelf and others too; evil words hurt our ſelves and others too, as the Apoſtle tells us out of a Poet, (1 Cor. 15. 33.) Evil communication corrupteth good manners; that is, you corrupt the good manners of others, you debauch others by unſavory ſpeeches; our ill example hurts our ſelves and others. Our Neighbour is hurt by our ſin. Firſt, By any thing that is a wrong to him, as to his Eſtate, or as to his Perſon, or as to his Credit: Secondly, By the ſcandal of it, when we do that which is evil, it hardens the wicked, and makes them go on more ſecurely in their ſin, and keeps them off from the ways of God; it endangers good men alſo, and diſcourageth them in the duties they owe both to God and man in the profeſſion of the Goſpel. Thus ſin may hurt our ſelves and our Neighbours.

Thy wickedneſs may hurt a man as thou art.

But why ſaith he a man as thou art? What, a man juſt of thy Complexion, or juſt of thy height, ſtature, and pitch? What, a man of thy State and Degree, a man juſt of thy eminency in the World? Certainly no; but when he ſaith, A man as thou art, his meaning is, any man, becauſe all men are in many things alike, they are all mortal, and ſinful, and weak, and apt to receive hurt by the ſins of others. Thus every man is a man as thou art.

Hence Note, All men are alike.

Though the faces of men are very different, and we know one man from another, becauſe they are unlike in face, yet as to their conſtitution and natural condition, they are alike; he that is greateſt, is ſuch a man as the leaſt; and the ſtrongeſt is ſuch a man as the weakeſt, the richeſt as the pooreſt, the learnedeſt as the moſt ignorant, and the godlieſt man is as the wickedeſt man, as to his natural compoſition. All men are alike in theſe four things; Firſt, all men need that which is good. Secondly, all men are ſenſible of that which is hurtful and afflictive to them. Thirdly, all men are apt to take hurt, and to run into danger by the ſin and ill examples of others, or to receive good by their good deeds, and profitable examples, all men being aſſociated in the ſame common Nature, and familiar each to other. Fourthly, all men are alike in this, that they are not ſelf-ſufficient, but ſtand in need of the help of one another; he that is helpful to a man like himſelf, helpeth himſelf, and doth acknowledge that (conſidering humane frailty) he may have occaſion to call for and deſire the help of another; and therefore (ſay ſome) man hath two hands, two arms, that he may underſtand himſelf born as much to need and receive help, as to give it. Thus every man is a man as thou art; and upon theſe and many other Conſiderations thou mayeſt hurt a man as thou art. There is an excellent paradox, handled by ſome of the Ancients; No man is hurt, but by himſelf; for unleſs a mans Soul be hurt, he is not hurt; which is much confirmed by, and appeareth clearly in the example of Job. For the Devil planted all thoſe engines, and made all thoſe aſſaults upon and againſt him, not becauſe he had a deſign to make him poor, childleſs, and diſeaſed, (all which, he knew, could not hurt him) but to make him impatient, and to extort one evil and blaſphemous word againſt God from him. But though it be true, that no man is hurt but by himſelf, yet it is true alſo, that the ſin of one man may hurt another. Oppreſſion hurts other men, (as to civils) whether they will or no; but no ſin can hurt another (as to morals) unleſs he will; no man is infected by vice, if himſelf refuſe, and be againſt it; yea the oppreſſions and afflictions which other men thruſt violently upon us, cannot hurt us, unleſs we by our impatience under them bring hurt to our ſelves. The cruel uſage of Tyrants, did not hurt the Martyrs; when they burnt them, and impriſoned them, and hanged them, they did not hurt them, becauſe they were patient under thoſe oppreſſions, and took their ſufferings for Chriſts ſake with joyſulneſs. What hurt did the poverty and ulcers of Lazarus do him? What hurt had Abel by that inhumane cruelty of his Brother Cain? What hurt had Paul by all his ſufferings? What any of the Saints, by impriſonment, or baniſhment, by being ſawn aſunder, or ſlain with the Sword? Properly no hurt at all. It is out of the power and reach of wicked perſecuters, to hurt the witneſſes of Chriſt, though they have power to ſlay them. Stephen was not hurt when he was ſtoned, becauſe he freely gave up himſelf. In a word, take it thus; Firſt, no man is hurt by the ſin of another, but as himſelf is pleaſed with, or practiſeth the ſame ſin; Secondly, no man is hurt by the temptations of the Devil, but as he conſents and yields to them;

Nemo poteſt ab alio lædi niſi à ſeipſo, niſi enim quis lædatur animo non læditur.

them; Thirdly, no man is hurt by the oppoſitions and perſecutions of others, but as he is impatient under them. Thy wickedneſs may hurt a man as thou art,

And thy righteouſneſs may profit the ſon of man.

That is, thy righteous actions or deeds, may profit the ſon of man; that is, thy ſelf, or any man, good or bad. Thoſe words, may profit, are not expreſſed, but are clearly implyed in the ſenſe of the Text. Righteouſneſs tends to every mans benefit, it may help and profit thy ſelf, it may be helpful or profitable to thoſe who are about thee, or with whom thou haſt to do.

Hence Note, Firſt, Righteouſneſs, or righteous actions, have profit in them.

Wickedneſs turns to mans hurt of it ſelf, but righteouſneſs doth profit. Although there be a vaſt and wide difference betweens mans righteouſneſs and unrighteouſneſs; this latter of it ſelf deſerving all manner of evil; and the former, becauſe imperfect at the beſt, deſerving no good at all; yet through the bounty and benignity of God it comes to paſs, that the ſmalleſt (if ſincere) endeavour after righteouſneſs ſhall profit a man as much as his greateſt unrighteouſneſs can hurt or damage him. For God who doth not reward us according to our iniquities, (Pſal. 103. 10) will moſt amply reward us according to our righteouſneſs. The Apoſtle gave command, Exerciſe thy ſelf unto godlineſs, (follow that trade well; why?) for godlineſs is profitable unto all things, (1 Tim. 4. 8.) it profits by vertue of the promiſe, and it hath the promiſe of this life as well as of that which is to come. (Titus 3. 8.) This is a faithful ſaying, and this I will that thou conſtantly affirm, that they which have believed in God, might be careful to maintain good works, (why? for) theſe things are good and profitable unto men. Some expound theſe words, good and profitable unto men, chiefly of doctrine; to teach men to follow works, that indeed is good and profitable doctrine; now if it be a good and profitable doctrine to preſs men to good works, to works of righteouſneſs, then righteouſneſs it ſelf, and good works, muſt needs be profitable. There is ſuch an excellency in the Nature of righteouſneſs, it is ſuch an hononreble, amiable, and beautiful thing in its own Nature, that it is enough draw us to the doing of it (as ſome have ſaid in Vertue in general, If vertue could be ſeen, it would draw all to the admiration of it; ſo I ſay of righteouſneſs in ſpecial, If it could be ſeen, it would draw all eyes and hearts after it) But beſides that, here is an excellent Loadſtone, here is profit, thy righteouſneſs may profit another; profit draws much, it draws on all men in the World; where there is any profit and benefit to be had, how do men ſtrive to trade there, as if Heaven were to be had there? Now righteouſneſs is profitable; the exerciſe of righteouſneſs is no poor trade, there is a great deal of advantage in it; and I might ſhew you how every work, good for the matter, done in a right manner, and for right ends, is profitable to others, and to our ſelves. To ſpeak a good word, may be a means to miniſter grace unto the hearers; and to do a good work, of any ſort, miniſters a gracious example to the beholders: By doing good, you may draw others to do good; to ſee one walking in ways of righteouſneſs, invites and allures others into ways of righteouſneſs; as bad examples corrupt, ſo good examples inſtruct as bad examples build up for Hell, ſo good examples build up for Heaven; to be built or helpt on Heaven-ward, is the beſt profit in the World, greater profit than the gain of the whole World. And as every good work miniſters a good example to the beholders, ſo works of Charity miniſter comfort and relief to the receivers, as alſo an occaſion of bleſſing God for their benefactors; yea works of Charity to others are profitable alſo to our ſelves, for there is a promiſe of reward to thoſe who miniſter the leaſt charities to ſuch as deſerve the greateſt charity: though uſually they find the leaſt, (Matth. 10. 42.) Whoſoever ſhall give to drink unto one of theſe little ones, a cup of cold water only (and how cold is their charity who will not give that!) in the name of a Diſciple, ſhall in no wiſe loſe his reward; that is, he ſhall ſurely have it. Thus we ſee how profit and advantage, even great profit and advantage comes by righteouſneſs; yet take heed of thinking that your righteouſneſs deſerves any the leaſt profit at the hand of God. Though we preſs you to righteouſneſs as profitable, yet it becomes you to ſay, we are unprofitable ſervants, and therefore cannot challenge any profit as our due, how righteous ſoever we are. It doth not at all follow, becauſe we affirm righteouſneſs will profit us, that therefore righteouſneſs can juſtifie us, or that, becauſe it is profitable to us, therefore it can ſave us. All our righteouſneſſes are but as a filthy garment, ſaith the Prophet, and therefore unprofitable for this thing. The Apoſtle counted all things loſs (not gain) dung (not profit) that he might win Chriſt, and be found in him, not having his own righteouſneſs, (Phil. 3. 8, 9.) Righteouſneſs is profitable, if you keep it in its proper place, and apply it to its proper uſe; it is profitable to what God hath appointed it; he helps us to work righteouſneſs, and then rewards us for our righteous working: God is not unrighteous to forget our work and labour of love, (Heb. 6. 10.) Let us be found in our duty, and then in due time and place we ſhall find our profit. Our experience will teach us at laſt, that while we have been doing good to others, we have done good to our ſelves; Righteouſneſs is profitable unto all things, and to all men, as well as to thoſe who do it, as to thoſe for whom it is done.

VERS. 9, 10, 11, 12, 13.

By reaſon of the multitude of oppreſſions they make the oppreſſed to cry: They cry out by reaſon of the arm of the mighty.

But none ſaith, Where is God my maker, who giveth ſongs in the night?

Who teacheth us more than the Beaſts of the Earth, and maketh us wiſer than the fowls of Heaven.

There they cry (but none giveth anſwer) becauſe of the pride of evil men.

Surely God will not hear vanity, neither will the Almighty regard it.

I Have diſpatched the firſt of thoſe great Objections which Elihu made afreſh againſt Job in this Chapter, his ſpeaking unduly of God. This context contains a ſecond, with the anſwer to it.

The Connection is given by ſome thus; whereas Elihu told Job at verſ. 8. That his wickedneſs might hurt a man like himſelf; He here reproves that the wickedneſs of man is very hurtful to men, ſo hurtful, that by reaſon of the multitude of oppreſſions they make the oppreſſed to cry: They cry out by reaſon of the arm of the mighty. Yet I ſhall not proſecute the words in that dependance, but as they are matter of a ſecond complaint or charge brought by Elihu againſt Job. The charge is laid down in the 9 verſe, and his anſwer is proſecuted in the 10, 11, 12, and 13. verſes.

Verſe 9. By reaſon of the multitude of oppreſſions they make the oppreſſed to cry.

This offended Job; the poor cryed, and they had no helper, no deliverer. We may conceive, that Elihu gathered up this complaint from the words of Job, (Chap. 24. 12.) Men groan from out of the City, and the Soul of the wounded cryeth out, yet God layeth not folly to them: As if he had ſaid, The Lord lightly paſſeth by, and takes little notice of the greateſt afflictions, the oppreſſions of the poor, though righteous men.

Elihu grants theſe general truths; Firſt, that many are oppreſſed; Secondly, that many cry out in their oppreſſions; Thirdly, that many remain undelivered from, and unrelieved in their oppreſſions. God ſometimes ſeemeth not to regard the groans and crys of the afflicted, nor doth he always preſently take vengeance of oppreſſors according to their folly. Elihu grants all this, he grants that many poor men are ſo mightily oppreſſed by the mighty, that they are forced to cry mightily; yet he ſtrongly acquits God from any ſuch imputation, as thoſe words of Job ſeem to admit or inſinuate. And in the proſecution of his anſwer (as will appear in opening the 10. and 11. verſes) he ſheweth, that the reaſon why the oppreſſed are not delivered, or anſwered when they cry, is in themſelves, and not in God, (and he would have Job conſider, whether he were not of that number) they cry (ſaith Elihu) but they do not cry with ſuch a frame of heart, with ſuch a diſpoſition of Spirit, as they ought; they cry as men preſſed rather with the weight of their own ſufferings, than toucht with any ſenſe of their ſins, or reverence of the ſoveraignty of God, giving them up to the power of oppreſſors; or as having any faith in him for their deliverance, or quiet ſubmiſſion to him, who is ready to help all thoſe who religiouſly fly to him for refuge, and is able to bring them out of their darkeſt and moſt deplorable condition. Theſe may be ſaid either not to pray at all, or they pray not with ſuch holy aims and deſigns, with ſuch integrity and uprightneſs of heart, as becometh the people of God: They pray under the power of impatience, or moved with envy at the power of their adverſaries, or with a deſire of utmoſt revenge, which nothing ſtops them from, but their own want of power, or becauſe they cannot; and therefore God takes no notice of their prayers, (v. 12,13.) There they cry, but none giveth anſwer; ſurely God will not hear vanity, neither will the Almighty regard it. Thats the ſum and ſcope of the Context. I ſhall now open the words in order.

By reaſon of the multitude of oppreſſions.

Here are oppreſſions, and a multitude of oppreſſions. The word ſignifieth magnitude as well as multitude, the muchneſs as well as the manyneſs (if I may ſo ſpeak) of the oppreſſions which were upon them. Any one great oppreſſion will make men cry, how much more many great ones? We render it as a word of number, By reaſon of the multitude

Of oppreſſions.] The Original notes oppreſſion of all ſorts: Firſt, oppreſſion upon the credit and good name of another, by ſlander and falſe accuſation; ſo the Septuagint render it, By reaſon of calumnies, or unrighteous charges, or Sycophantiſms, (that's the word in the Greek Tranſlation) they cry. Falſe accuſers undermine others, and bring them into danger by burdening them which lies. Secondly, it notes uſually oppreſſion upon a mans eſtate, (1 Sam. 12.4. Iſa. 33.15. Ezek. 18.7. Mal. 3.5.) Thirdly, upon his perſon, (Iſa. 52 4.) Now when a man is oppreſſed all over, when his credit or good name is oppreſſed by calumniation, his eſtate by wrongful ſeiſure, and his perſon by violent reſtraint, here's a troop, a multitude of oppreſſions. By reaſon of the multitude of oppreſſions

They make the oppreſſed to cry.

That is, the oppreſſed do not only complain a little, but are forced to open lamentations; the load upon them is ſo heavy, that they cannot contain, they cry; yea as the next clauſe hath it, they cry out, as a woman in travel, when her pains comes upon her.

They make the oppreſſed to cry.] they make them cry upon a double conſideration; firſt, becauſe of the miſery which they feel, and are burdened with; ſecondly, for the mercy which they deſire, expect, and think long a coming; men cry for eaſe, for help, for aſſiſtance, for deliverance: We may ſuppoſe the oppreſſed ones in the Text crying in all theſe reſpects; the burden was ſo heavy upon them, that it made them cry out for the very weight of it, and they cryed and called for ſome charitable, or tender heart, to come and eaſe them of it, and deliver them from it. Elihu doth not reſt in ſpeaking this once, but repeats it again; By reaſon of the multitude of oppreſſions they make the oppreſſed to cry.

They cry out by reaſon of the arm of the mighty.

Theſe words point us expreſly to the cauſe of their cry, or out-cry; it was the arm of the mighty; which may be taken either properly, or figuratively. Properly, the arm is a well known and moſt uſeful member of the Body: And becauſe there is a great deal of ſtrength and power in the arm, therefore by a figure, the arm ſignifieth ſtrength, might, or power; and to ſay, they cry out by reaſon of the arm of the mighty, is as much as to ſay, they cry out by reaſon of the power of the mighty. The arm is frequently in Scripture for power; the powerful wrath of God is called the arm of God. The Prophet (Iſa. 30. 30.) ſpeaks of the lighting down of his arm. When the Lord lets his arm fall, or light down upon a Man, a Family, or a Nation, in wrath, it cruſheth either or all of them to pieces. And as the powerful wrath, ſo the powerful grace of God is called his arm, (Iſa. 53. 1.) Who hath believed our report? To whom is the arm of the Lord revealed? That is, his mighty power, working by and manifeſting it ſelf in Chriſt, and in the miniſtry of the Goſpel, for the conviction, converſion, and ſalvation of ſinners. Thus alſo the arm of man, is the power of man, (Dan. 11.6) She ſhall not retain the power of the arm; neither ſhall he ſtand, nor his arm: That is, his power ſhall fall, or both he and ſhe (Bernire and Antiochus Theas) ſhall fall and be powerleſs. (Pſal. 37. 16.) The arm of the wicked (that is, their power) ſhall be broken, but the Lord upholdeth the righteous. They cry out by reaſon of the arm

Of the mighty.] The ſame word which in the firſt part of the verſe is tranſlated multitude, is here tranſlated, The mighty. But what was the mightineſs of theſe men? There is a four-fold mightineſs. Firſt, there is mightineſs of body, that is natural might, and 'tis properly the might of the arm. Secondly, there is a mightineſs in valour and in Arms: Thus Souldiers and Warriers are mighty men; they who having courage in their hearts, have alſo weapons in their hands, and Swords by their ſides, are the mighty. Such a one was Gideon, to whom the Angel ſaid, (Judg. 6. 12.) The Lord is with thee, thou mighty man of valour. Thirdly, there is a mightineſs of Authority: And thus the Magiſtrate is a mighty man; ſuppoſe he be weak in body, yet he is mighty in power, and can do great things. Fourthly, there is a mightineſs of wealth and riches: Thus Boaz is called a mighty man of wealth, (Ruth 2. 1.) Riches have ſo much might in them, that in the Hebrew one word ſerves to ſignifie both might and riches. We may underſtand the mighty man here in any or all theſe four ſenſes. The oppreſſed cry out by reaſon of the arm of the mighty. They who have much bodily ſtrength, often oppreſs the weaker, and ſo do the mighty in Arms, and ſo do the mighty in Authority, and ſo the mighty in Riches have often done, making the poor and the oppreſſed cry; They cry out by reaſon of the arm of the mighty. From the former part of the verſe;

Obſerve, Oppreſſion is a common ſin.

Not only was Babylon ſtained with it, but Jeruſalem. That's an amazing paſſage (Jer. 6.6.) Thus hath the Lord of Hoſts ſaid; hew ye down Trees, and caſt a Mount againſt Jeruſalem. This is the City to be viſited, ſhe is wholly oppreſſion in the midſt of her. Not only was Jeruſalem a City, but, The City, a City above all Cities, to be viſited by an oppreſſing enemy; and why? Even becauſe ſhe not only had oppreſſors in her, but was oppreſſion. O how oppreſſive was that City, which was oppreſſion, and that not only in ſome parts of her, but wholly, and that not in her skirts and Suburbs, but in the midſt of her! The Lord to ſhew that the Jews were ſuperlatively rebellious, or moſt rebellious againſt him, calleth them (in the abſtract) rebellion, as the Margin hath it, (Ezek. 2.7.) and to ſhew how ſuperlatively oppreſſive they were one againſt another, he calls Jeruſalem oppreſſion. Here in the Text we have a multitude of oppreſſions, ſurely then, there were a multitude of oppreſſors. To hear of a multitude of ſins of all ſorts, is very ſad, but when there is a multitude of one ſort, and that one of the worſt ſort, and ſuch a ſin as cannot go alone, but draws after it a heap of almoſt all ſorts of ſin: what a multitude of ſins are there! It cannot be denied, but that oppreſſion is a very common epidemical ſin, if we take and conſider it in the full latitude of it. For there is a two-fold oppreſſion. Firſt, there is a ſecret oppreſſion. To deceive, defraud, or go beyond another, in the Apoſtles ſenſe, is to oppreſs him. And thus 'tis ſaid, (Hoſ. 12.7.) He is a Merchant, the balances of deceit are in his hand, he loveth to oppreſs. He doth not oppreſs by violence, with a Sword in his hand; but by craft with balances in his hand; he oppreſſeth while he over-reacheth in dealing and trading. This ſort of oppreſſion runs up and down every where; and though this kind of oppreſſion make not a great cry, yet it is a great ſin, a crying ſin. There is alſo a ſecret oppreſſion under colour of Law; many turn the very Rules of Juſtice into Rods of Oppreſſion: And this is by ſo much the worſe, by how much it hath the better cover. Secondly, there is an open oppreſſion, the Nimrods of the World, the mighty hunters tear and vex and trouble all they can, and would make all tremble before them, or run from them, as the Hare and Hart from their merry, but mercileſs purſuers. Now if both ſecret and open oppreſſions are ſo commonly practiſed, oppreſſion may juſtly bear the title of a common ſin.

Secondly, Note, Oppreſſion is a very crying ſin.

That cannot but be a crying ſin, which makes ſo many cry. Oppreſſion then is a crying ſin. Firſt, as to the nature of it: Secondly, as to the effect of it. Oppreſſion cryeth, and it makes thoſe cry who are oppreſſed. Solomon ſaith, (*Eccleſ.*7.7.) Oppreſſion maketh a wiſe man mad. That which puts a man even out of his wits, or beſides the right uſe of his reaſon, will put him much to the uſe of his tongue, cauſing him to complain, cry out, and clamour. But who are they that are moſt given to, and deepeſt drencht in this ſin of oppreſſion? The Text anſwers, They cryed out by reaſon of the arm of the mighty.

Hence Note, Thirdly, Power is commonly abuſed to oppreſſion.

We read indeed of a poor man oppreſſing the poor, (Prov. 28. 3.) And Solomon tells us, that ſuch a mans oppreſſion is the ſoreſt oppreſſion; for he compares it (in the ſame verſe) to a ſweeping rain, which leaveth no food. They who have nothing, will take all when they can come by it, and get it. If all men in power ſhould be as hard to their inferiors, as ſome are who have little or no power, there were no living in the world. Neceſſity may drive the poor to be more oppreſſive, then Ability draws the rich. Tis a ſad encounter when the poor contend with the poor; the neceſſity of the one knows no mercy, and the imbecillity of the other, can give him no help. Nothing hardens the heart ſo much as want or hunger, (*Lam.*4.10.) They have little or no ſenſe of anothers miſery, who are under the extream ſmart, and feel the biting of their own. But though poor men oppreſs ſoreſt, yet they oppreſt ſeldomeſt and feweſt. They can oppreſs none, but ſuch as are poorer or weaker than themſelves, and cannot do that often. There muſt be an over-matching power in all who oppreſs; and uſually, they who oppreſs, are great and mighty in power. (*Pſ.*52. 1.) Why boaſteſt thou thy ſelf in miſchief, O mighty man? The man was mighty, and what did this might ſerve him for? What uſe did he put it to? Even to do miſchief. Many have a mind and will enough to do miſchief, who want both power and opportunity to do it: But they who have power and opportunity to do miſchief, ſeldom want a mind or will to do it. Power is of great uſe to do good, and 'tis a great temptation to do bad things. As Laban brag'd to Jacob, and crowed over him as his underling (Gen. 31.29.) It is in the power of my hand to do you hurt; And what hindred him then, or what hath hindred many in all Ages of the World, from doing that hurt to others, which they had power to do? Not a diſlike or abhorrence of the fact (which through grace ſtops every good man from hurting others, how great ſoever his power is) but a ſecret reſtraint upon their heart, like that, which Laban had in a dream, or viſion to his ear; Take heed thou ſpeak not to Jacob good or bad; that is, meddle not with him in any caſe to ſtop his journey. The Prophet (*Ezek.*22.6.) deſcribing the ſinfulneſs of thoſe times, ſaith; Behold the Princes of Iſrael, every one were in thee, to their power, to ſhed blood. They did it, to their power; we put in the Margin, to their arm; that is, they uſed and improved their arm or power to the utmoſt length and ſtretch for the oppreſſion of others. The Prophet Jeremy chargeth that people with ſinning in general at that rate, (Chap. 3. 5.) Behold thou haſt ſpoken and done evil things, as thou couldeſt. Some men ſin (as all men ſhould love and ſerve God) with all their might, with all their ſtrength; they do evil with both hands greedily; that they ſin no more, is not for want of will, but ability. As the people were thus ſet upon all manner of ſin, ſo the Princes upon that ſpecial ſin, oppreſſion. They were to their power, for ſhedding blood; yea many deſire to get power into their hand, that they may avenge themſelves by their own hand, and be ready to hurt whom and where they do not love. 'Tis not ſo much ambition which provokes ſome men to affect power and greatneſs, as malice and a deſire of having their ends upon whomſoever ſtands in their way. Theſe like the great Fiſhes of the Sea, delight to ſwallow up and feed upon the leſſer; or like the great and ſtrong Beaſts of the Forreſt, they tear and devour the Lambs or Sheep of the paſture. They uſe (that is, indeed abuſe) their power, not ſo much for their own good, as in wronging their neighbours, whoſe hurt they ſhould never ſeek, and whoſe good they ought to ſeek and promote next their own. Power ſhould be uſed and put forth, for help, not hurt, for protection, not ruine; and therefore Magiſtrates, who are the chief mighty men of the Earth, who are called Powers, (Tit.3 1.) are alſo called the Shields of the Earth; implying, they are to uſe their power for a defence (a Shield is for defence) of the oppreſſed, not to oppreſs. The Scripture calls Magiſtrates Shields, but it never calls the Magiſtrate a Sword. It ſaith indeed the Magiſtrate hath a Sword, and that he beareth not the Sword in vain, (*Rom.*13.4.) that is, he doth not bear it ſo as to bear with evil doers, and never draw it, nor uſe it. But the Scripture doth not ſay, the Magiſtrate is a Sword, as it ſaith, he is a Shield; hereby intimating, that the Power of the Magiſtrate ſhould rather be exerciſed in protecting than in puniſhing, rather in ſaving than deſtroying. What the Apoſtle ſaith concerning the deſign or purpoſe of his miniſterial office, We have this power to edification, and not to deſtruction, (2 Cor. 13. 10.) is true of all power; the primary deſign of it is for protection, rather than for deſtruction and not at all for oppreſſion or vexation. Magiſtrates have Swords, but they are Shields, not Swords; they have a Sword to cut off evil doers, and by that the good are preſerved and defended. Such mighty ones, who delight to be Swords, but care not to be Shields, who are all for cutting and deſtroying, not at all for ſaving, relieving, and protecting, (ſuch mighty ones, I ſay) cauſed the oppreſſed to cry, yea to cry out in Job's time; and in what times ſoever they are, they make the oppreſſed cry out. And the matter, that Elihu ſuppoſed Job was offended at, was, that God did not hear the cry of theſe oppreſſed ones, nor appear for their deliverance; which yet he hath declared himſelf ready to, as David afterward deſcribeth him, (Pſal. 12. 5.) For the oppreſſion of the poor, for the ſighing of the needy, now will I ariſe (ſaith the Lord) I will ſet him in ſafety from him that puffeth at him. But Job hearing this cry of the oppreſſed, or crying out of his own oppreſſion, and God ſeeming not to regard it, was ſtumbled at the matter. To remove this, Elihu anſwers in the next verſe.

Verſe 10. But none ſaith, where is God my maker, who giveth ſongs in the night?

There is a two-fold Expoſition of theſe words, ariſing from a doubt about the Antecedent to none, or who is meant by thoſe that ſay not, Where is God my maker? Who are thoſe?

The firſt Interpretation gives it to the oppreſſors, to the mighty men before ſpoken of; They make the oppreſſed to cry by reaſon of the multitude of oppreſſions; but none of theſe mighty oppreſſors ſay, where is God my maker, that giveth ſongs in the night? Thus the verſe is tranſlated quite through, with reſpect to wicked oppreſſors, who caſt God out of their thoughts, never ſaying, Where is God my maker, who hath ſet me up, who hath given me this power, and given me ſongs, (that is, occaſions of joy) in the night? The wicked have abundance, they can feaſt it and ſing it day and night, yet mind not God the fountain and beſtower of all. This is a truth in it ſelf; and becauſe the interpretation is inſiſted upon by ſome as the truth intended in the preſent Text, take this Note from it, Oppreſſors put away the thoughts of God, or mind not God, when they do, or are about to do, miſchief.

They make the oppreſſed cry, but they ſay not, Where is God? They neither ſpeak nor think of God, who hath clothed them with power, and made their arm mighty. We find this frame frequently aſcribed in Scripture to oppreſſors; Elihu chargeth Job with it, (*Chap.*22.) where having told him to his face, of many acts of oppreſſion; Thou haſt ſtripped the naked of their clothing, (verſ.6.) Thou haſt withholden bread from the hungry, (verſ.7.) And the arms of the fatherleſs have been broken, (verſ. 9.) Having (I ſay) reckoned up theſe his ſuppoſed oppreſſions, he concludes, (*verſ.*13.) And thou ſayeſt, how doth God know? Can he judg through the dark Cloud? David in prayer, ſpeaks the ſame of his oppreſſors, (*Pſ.*86.14.) O God, the proud are riſen againſt me, and the aſſemblies of violent men have ſought after my Soul, and have not ſet thee before them. (Pſal. 94. 5,6.) They break in pieces, O Lord, thy people, and afflict thine heritage; they ſlay the widow, and the ſtranger, and murder the fatherleſs: Yet they ſay, the Lord doth not ſee it, neither ſhall the God of Jacob regard it. All theſe Scriptures may be reſolved into the Text; They ſay not, Where is God my maker? They who do all they can to unmake and undo their fellow-Creatures, care not to remember him, who is the maker and creator of us all. But Secondly, I conceive thoſe words, None ſaith, Where is God my maker? Are rather to be referred to the oppreſſed, than to the oppreſſors: The oppreſſed cry indeed, but not unto God their maker. As Job ſaid, (Job 24. 12.) Men groan from out of the City, and the Soul of the wounded cryeth out, yet God layeth it not to heart; ſo here Elihu ſaith, men groan and cry, yet themſelves lay not God to heart; None ſaith, Where is God my maker? Thus our tranſlation ſeems to carry it, and thus 'tis moſt generally underſtood; None of the oppreſſed ſay, &c.

Taking this ſence, Elihu here begins to aſſign the reaſon why the oppreſſed are not delivered. As if he had ſaid, 'Tis true there are a multitude of preſſures and oppreſſions, and they tranſport all manner of men with paſſion; the oppreſſed cry, they make much ado, when they ſuffer, againſt them, under whom they ſuffer: But few or none are ſo wiſe, in ſuch a caſe, as to recollect themſelves, and make ſerious application to God, putting him in mind of his own gracious nature towards the work of his hands, to have mercy upon it, and in faith to ſeek to him for remedy and comfort, as being only able to relieve and glad the heart in great extremities; they look not to the hand of God, when they cry out by reaſon of the arm of the mighty: They only toil and tear themſelves with complaints, they cry out of this and that man, of this and that inſtrument; but, alas, they find neither, redreſs nor deliverance, becauſe they ſay not, Where is God my maker? That is, they are more forward to complain of wrong done them by men, than to remember what good, or what favours God hath done them; they do not particularly and ſpecially apply themſelves to God in their trouble, they do not ſeek nor enquire early after God, nor humble themſelves before him, or under his mighty hand, neither do they conſider what God is to them, nor whether he be with them, and in them; and if they find not God near them, nor in them, they conſider not how they may be united to him, or get him near them. We find God, when we hear his voice ſpeaking to us by his Word and Spirit, and hearken to his voice; we find God when we are at peace with him, truſt upon him confidently, and rejoice in him comfortably. The oppreſſed conſidered not theſe things.

Non habet cogitationem, deliberationem, propoſitum quærendi Deum, neque agnitionem æſtimationemq; beneficiorum ejus; ſunt ἀσύνετοι. Coc.

None ſaith.] Here is an univerſal Negative, none, that is, not ſo much as one; yet we may underſtand it with an allay, none, that is, few or none (as we commonly ſpeak) ſay, Where is God my maker? Poſſibly many ſay it is with their mouths, but few or none ſay it; either firſt, heartily; or ſecondly, ſpiritually; or thirdly, humbly; or fourthly, repentingly; or fiftly, believingly; or ſixthly, ſubmittingly; and therefore no wonder, if they are not heard and helped when they cry. It is a common thing for men in diſtreſs, or under oppreſſion, to cry out, O God, O Lord; the name of God is taken by many in vain, when any thing afflicts or hurts them, but few call upon his name. It is no eaſie matter to cry out, in deed, O God my maker, or to ſay with a ſerious holy and gracious frame of ſpirit, Where is God my maker?

There is a twofold underſtanding of theſe words.

Sunt verba optantis.

Firſt, Some look upon them, as an earneſt wiſh or prayer for help; None ſaith, Where is God my maker? That is, none ſaith, O that God my maker would appear in the preſent manifeſtations of his power to ſuccour and deliver me. In which ſenſe Eliſha is conceived to ſpeak when he ſmote the waters with Eliahs Mantle, (2 Kings 2. 14.) And ſaid, Where is the Lord God of Elijah*?* As if he had ſaid, O thou God of Elijah come, ſhew thy glorious power, and divide theſe waters.

Sunt verba gratulantis.

Secondly, Others expound them as an expreſſion of praiſe, or as the words of a man looking up to God in thankfulneſs for former benefits, in preſent ſtraights. Where is God my maker? Where's he that made me, and hath preſerved me hitherto? As if Elihu had ſaid, none of theſe oppreſſed ones have recourſe to God in the day of their calamity, confeſſing and acknowledging his great goodneſs to them in their Creation and further preſervation, which might much comfort and encourage their hearts under preſent grievances and preſſures; none ſaith, Where is God my maker?

The word Maker, may be taken in a threefold notion; Firſt, for him that hath given us our being. As God is the maker of Heaven and of Earth, ſo he is our maker, (Gen. 1. 26, 27.) Secondly, for him that hath continued us in and preſerved our being; for providence is a renewed Creation. Thirdly, for him who hath raiſed us up, or preferred us, and done us good all our days. In which ſence the word is uſed (1 Sam. 12. 6) And Samuel ſaid unto the people, it is the Lord that advanced Moſes and Aaron. We put in the Margin, made Moſes, &c. it is this word, he made them great, and put them in thoſe high places of Government and Truſt. The Lord is he that maketh men in this ſence. We ſay commonly of a man that is advanced to ſome great place, He is a made man; and on the contrary, of a man that is thrown down, He is an undone man. God giveth us a being, and a bodily fabrick, he protects us in our being, he advanceth us to a well-being, in all we may call him, and call upon him as our Maker. And when men would unmake us, that is, oppreſs and undo us, then we ſhould ſay in faith, Where is God our maker? Who once gave us life, and hath ſince lifted us up from the gates of death, and put us into a good condition. Many are crying out upon, and poſſibly, ſome railing and raging at men, but who ſaith (in the ſence opened) Where is God my maker?

There is one thing further conſiderable in the Grammar of the Text. The Hebrew is plural, or a plural with a ſingular; as (Gen. 1. 1.) In the beginning God Created: The word Elohim, rendred God, is plural; the word Bara, Created, ſingular. Thus here, Where is God my maker? Mr. Broughton tranſlates, Where is the puiſſant my makers? I might ſpend much time in ſhewing the conſent of ſeveral Scriptures in that point. Joſhua ſaid to the people, (who promiſed and engaged to ſerve the Lord) ye cannot ſerve the Load, Why could they not? The reaſon follows; For he is an Holy God, (Joſh. 24. 19.) The Hebrew ſtrictly is, God holies he. Thus the Prophet expreſſeth it, (Iſa. 54. 5.) Thy makers is thy Husband. Solomons admonition runs in the ſame plural ſtile, (Eccl. 12. 1.) Remember now thy Creators in the days of thy youth. But though the Scripture ſpeaks of God ſometimes in the ſingular, ſometimes in the plural number, yet the ſenſe is always ſingular. The true God being but One, and the onemoſt one, and therefore the plural word (Elohim) is always rendred in the ſingular number God, where mention is made of the true God; they having regard to the true meaning or Divinity of the Text, not to the Grammar, or termination of the word. There are uſually two reaſons given by learned tranſlaters and interpreters, why the true God who is but one in eſſence and being, is ſo often expreſſed in the Hebrew Text plurally. Firſt, to inſinuate or intimate unto us that great and glorious myſtery of the bleſſed Trinity of perſons in the Godhead; I ſay, to intimate it, we cannot make a full or convincing proof from it againſt any Antitrinitarian Adverſary; becauſe though the word Elohim notes a plurality, yet we cannot by any force of the word, determine that plurality preciſely to a Trinity, that muſt be done by other Scriptures, of which we have an abundant ſtore to ſtop the mouth of all gainſayers. Secondly, they tell us, this plural word is uſed to ſet forth the honour of God, according to the uſage of Kings and Soveraign Princes (called Gods) who ſpeak of themſelves (though ſingle perſons) in a plural ſtile, We and Us. But I conceive, neither is this cogent, though both this and the former may be piouſly improved. So much for the opening of theſe words, No man ſaith, Where is God my maker?

Hence Obſerve, Firſt, Many cry and complain in affliction, but look not to God in affliction.

(Deut. 32. 18) Of the Rock that begat thee thou art unmindful, and haſt forgotten God that formed thee. Which as it is often verified in times of peace, plenty, and proſperity, ſo not ſeldom in times of trouble, preſſure, and affliction. Yea, there are ſome who cry and complain in affliction, yet turn away from God in affliction, (Hoſ. 7. 14.) They have have not cryed unto me with their heart, when they houled upon their Beds; they aſſemble themſelves for corn and wine, and they rebel againſt me. Theſe are ſo far from ſeeking God indeed, or ſaying, Where is our maker, with their heart, that they rebel againſt him, while they would be relieved and fed by him. How frequently, even at this day, do ſome men ſtorm, and fret, and rage, little minding God in their afflictions, though formally or vocally calling on him. 'Tis eaſie to complain, but hard to pray in a day of trouble. The Jews are reproved for their regardleſneſs of God, while they made great preparations in a time of danger and War, or of a feared Siege, (*Iſa.*22.8.&c.) Thou didſt look in that day to the armour of the Houſe of the Forreſt; ye have ſeen alſo the breaches of the City of David, that they are many, &c. And the Houſes have ye broken down to fortiſie the wall: Ye made alſo a ditch between the two walls for the water of the old pool, &c. Here were politick warlike preparations, yet God was little thought upon in all this; as it followeth, (verſ. 11.) But ye have not looked unto the maker thereof, neither had reſpect unto him that faſhioned it long ago. 'Tis thus with the moſt of men; when outward miſery comes upon them, what crying? What working is there? yet little returning to God, little turning into their own hearts.

Secondly, Note, When men oppreſs and vex us, it is beſt to have our recourſe to God, and apply to him.

That counſel, Look to me and be ſaved, (*Iſa.*45.22.) is true of temporal as well as of eternal ſalvation. God is our beſt friend at all times, even in the beſt times, and it is beſt to look on him in the worſt times. David could ſay, (*Pſal.*73.28.) when fleſh, and ſtrength, and heart, when all failed him; It is good for me to draw near to God. Let our condition be what it will, but eſpecially if we are in a bad condition, it is good, yea beſt to go to him who hath our times, that is, all the changes of our condition in his hand, to him, in whoſe hand the arm of the mighty is, and in whoſe hand alone there is might to help and deliver us from the arm of the mighty. Is it not beſt to look to him in affliction, who can either ſupport us in, or bring us out of our affliction as pleaſeth him? He that made us can protect and ſave us; therefore in every pinching ſtrait, in every preſſing danger, let us go to God in faith and hope, and he will either give us enlargements, or do us good by and in our worſt and greateſt ſtraits.

Thirdly, Note, As it is good, when at any time we are in trouble to look to God, ſo we ſhould then look to God, ſpecially under this relation, as he is our Maker.

It is good then to ſay, God is my maker, and I am the work of his hands, and therefore he will take care of me, and deliver me out of the hand of my oppreſſors. There are five duties which ariſe from this conſideration, that God is our Maker. Firſt, We ſhou'd highly eſteem and be thankful for this benefit, our making. Secondly, We ſhould be confident that he who hath made us will preſerve us. Thirdly, We ſhould patiently ſubmit to him, when he afflicts us himſelf, or ſuffers others to afflict us. Fourthly, We ſhould give him glory, by believing that he will take care of us in, or deliver us out of all our ſufferings and afflictions. Fifthly, We ſhould not think nor ſpeak hardly of God, becauſe he hath made us ſubject to tryals, and the exerciſe of patience; neither ſhould we take it ill, that he hath made others ſo high or great, that they have power to oppreſs us. In all theſe reſpects, we ſhould look to God our maker, and neither murmur at, nor be afraid in a day of affliction. The Lord himſelf points us to that, (Iſa. 51.12, 13.) Who art thou that thou ſhouldeſt be afraid of a man that ſhall die, and of the Son of man which ſhall be made as graſs, and forgetteſt the Lord thy maker? It is good in time of affliction to remember God in all our relations, and in this, as our maker, in a three-fold making of us. Firſt, As our maker in a natural capacity, that is, as he hath made theſe Bodies of ours; we may plead with and urge the Lord to take care of and preſerve our Bodies, becauſe he hath made them; preſervation is an act of providence, and providence followeth Creation. Secondly, As our maker in a civil capacity, that is, as he hath made us rich or poor, high or low in the World, or in any worldly enjoyments, Pharaoh that great Dragon, lying in the midſt of the Rivers, ſaid, (Ezek. 29.3.) My River is mine own, and I have made it for my ſelf. But grace teacheth us to ſay otherwiſe; if we are rich or ſtrong, God hath made us ſo; if our River be broad and deep, full and over-flowing, God hath made it ſo; and if we are poor, and weak, if our River be narrow and ſhallow, empty and dry, God hath made it ſo; and who ſhall ſay to him, Why haſt thou made it ſo? That God is the maker of our croſs, ſhould make us quiet under it. Thirdly, A godly man ſhould look to God in affliction, as his maker in a ſpiritual capacity; I do not mean as he hath made our Spirits, but as he hath made us ſpiritual, or as we are his workmanſhip, (that's the Apoſtles word) Created in Chriſt Jeſus unto good works, (Eph. 2. 10.) That we are thus wrought, works much upon the heart of God in the day of our affliction. That God hath made us men, that we are his Creatures, is a good argument, a fair plea, and moves much; but that he hath made us new men, or new Creatures, his Sons by grace, and Temples of his Spirit, that he hath made us holy, believing, righteous, is a far ſtronger argument, a fuller plea, and moves much more. A Soul that can go to God thus, and tell him he is his maker; a Soul that can ſay, (as 'tis ſaid of the Church, *Iſa.*54.5.) My maker is my Husband; he that made me, hath married me to himſelf; a Soul that can ſay this, may indeed triumph in and over all his tribulations. How ſweet is it to have an intereſt in Chriſt, and by a relation to God as our maker in this reſpect. When the Lord rejects a people to the utmoſt, he ſaith he will not be ſtaid, no not by this relation as their maker, from doing it, (*Iſa.*27.11.) This is a people of no underſtanding; therefore he that made them will not have mercy on them, and he that formed them will ſhew them no favour. As if the Prophet had ſaid, if any argument could move the Lord to ſhew mercy, this would do it, to tell him, he hath made ſuch a people, or, he is their maker. But there are none whom the Lord hath made in the third ſenſe, as to a new Creation, but he will have mercy on them, and ſhew them favour; his making of them ſuch, is a greater mercy and an higher favour, than any they can ask of him; nor are there any of that making, who are of no underſtanding. So then, he that is made of God ſpiritually, needs not care for all the unmaking or undoing he can receive from men, nor fear that he ſhall ever be unmade or unmercy'd by God. All he can loſe in this World, doth not, cannot make him miſerable, who is made fit for the World to come: He knoweth he hath an eſtate ſetled upon him by his Maker, which cannot be taken away. A man thus made, may ſay to his ſpoilers, Ye have taken nothing from me but the ſcraps and ſweepings, the parings and chippings of my eſtate: The Archers indeed have ſorely grieved me, and ſhot at me, but my Bow abides in ſtrength, and the arms of my hands are made ſtrong by the hands of the mighty God of Jacob. He that is ſpiritually made, or made a new Creature, is made for ever, and in every ſtrait he may look to God his Maker, as a helper and reſtorer. He that made us when we were nothing, can help us when we are reduced to a very nothing. It is an encouragement to go to God for healing, becauſe he hath wounded us; Come, and let us return unto the Lord, (ſaith the Church) for he hath torn, and he will heal us, he hath ſmitten, and he will bind us up, (Hoſ.6.1.) Much more is it an encouragement to go unto God to be our healer, becauſe he hath been our maker. He that hath made us, can mend us; he that built us, can repair us, if we ſay, as we ought, and have been taught, Where is God our maker?

Who giveth ſongs in the night.

Thoſe words contain a ſecond conſideration, why the oppreſſed ſhould ſeek to God; he giveth ſongs, that is, matter of ſongs, or cauſe of ſinging, joy and comfort, even in the night. There are ſeveal opinions about the meaning of theſe words. Some (as I ſhewed before) interpret this verſe of the oppreſſors; None (of them) ſay, Where is God my maker, who giveth ſongs in the night? So the words are a deſcription, as of the great worldly ſecurity, ſo of the great worldly felicity of thoſe oppreſſors. Poor men labour all day hard, and being wearied out with their labours, when night cometh they go to bed; but prophane great and rich men, idle away the day, and ſport and play and ſing away the night. As good men have holy ſongs in the night, (Iſa. 30. 29.) Ye ſhall have a ſong as in the night, when a holy Solemnity is kept, &c. So the wicked have their wanton, vain, revelling ſongs in the night, when their ſenſual Solemnities are kept. Belſhazer was drinking in the night, and doubtleſs, he had his muſick and ſongs that night: And as he had his ſongs, mirth, and muſick in the night; ſo he ſaid not Where is God my maker, who giveth me ſongs in the night: He inſtead of minding God his maker in his mirth, minded only the gods which himſelf had made (as the Text ſpeaks, Dan. 5.4.) They drank wine, and praiſed the gods of gold and ſilver, &c. And thus 'tis in proportion with all the wicked to whom God gives ſongs in the night, they ſay not, Where is God my maker? This interpretation which carrieth the ſongs to the oppreſſors before ſpoken of, contains a truth, yet I ſhall not ſtay upon it, but take the words as referring to the oppreſſed.

How it may be queried, how doth God give them ſongs in the night? I ſhall not inſiſt upon thoſe conjectures, which ſome have made about this giving ſongs in the night. As Firſt, implying God ſo gracious, that he giveth us not only in the day, but in the night, occaſion of joy in ſorrow, namely, the view and contemplation of the Heavens and Stars, which are very pleaſant and refreſhing, (Pſal. 19.1.)

Others, Secondly, conjecture, that God may be ſaid to give the ſorrowful and oppreſſed ones ſongs in the night, by the ſinging of Birds in the night, of that Bird eſpecially which hath its name from ſinging in the night, the Nightingale. Some inſiſt much upon theſe interpretations. It is, I grant, a great mercy of God that when the Sun is down, we have Moon-light and Star-light, and that in the night we have the innocent harmleſs Birds to ſing and make us pleaſant melody. But leaving theſe, we may take the words in a double notion; firſt, Properly; ſecondly, Metaphorically.

Firſt, Properly, and ſo to give ſongs in the night, as the night is taken for night time, imports the goodneſs of God to man, not only in the day time, but in the night.

Hence Note, God in the night ſeaſon, as well as in the day, gives his people matter of joy.

Night-mercies deſerve and call for day praiſes; eſpecially two ſorts of night mercies; firſt, Night preſervation, (Pſal. 3.6.) I laid me down and ſlept, for thou Lord makeſt me to dwell in ſafety. The night is ſubject to many dangers; the Septuagint render fully to this ſenſe; Who giveth watch or preſervation in the night; that's matter of praiſe and thankſgiving to God. Secondly, he gives us cauſe of praiſe and ſinging, not only for preſerving our lives while we ſleep in the night, but for refreſhing us with ſleep in the night, (Pſal. 127.2.) So he giveth his beloved ſleep. The Lord gives us not only ſafety, but ſleep. Sweet ſleep is a great mercy, (Eccl. 5.12.) The ſleep of a labouring man is ſweet, whether he eat little or much; and they who ſleep ſweetly get refreſhing and renewings of ſtrength after all their former labours, for new labours. So that, if we take night properly for the night time, there is much occaſion of rejoycing given by God to mankind in general, and more peculiarly to his faithful Servants, in reference to thoſe common mercies of bodily ſafety, and the return of natural ſtrength and ſpirits.

Qui diſtribuit nocturnas cuſtodias. Sept.

Secondly, Take night properly; and then this aſſertion, He giveth ſongs in the night, may have this meaning; The Lord gives his people a praiſing frame of heart in the night ſeaſon! When they are wrapped up and compaſſed about with outward darkneſs, when they are ſolitary and alone, when no worldly object holds out any occaſion of comfort to them, yet then the Lord lets in a light, or ſhines into their Souls by his good Spirit. The Lord may well be ſaid to give ſongs even in the night, when by the immediate work of his Spirit, he filleth our Spirits with joys unſpeakable and glorious. Theſe are the moſt raviſhing ſongs of the night.

Etiam cum nulla ad eum laudandum documenta circumfulgent, intus ſpiritu excitat ad laudes. Jun.

Hence Note, God by his good Spirit doth often ſuggeſt ſweet meditations and comfortable thoughts to his people in the night.

In the night the Lord minds his ſervants either of ſuch mercies as they have already received, or of ſuch, as according to his promiſe, he is ready to, or will ſurely beſtow, that ſo they may be buſied in that heavenly work of praiſing him, and rejoycing in him, when they awake or cannot ſleep. This was David's experience, (Pſal. 17.3.) Thou haſt viſited me in the night. Men uſe to viſit us in the day when we are up or awake. But (ſaith David) God gives me viſits in the night, when I am in Bed he gives me many a ſong, or makes me to rejoyce. When we are in our retirements, or freeſt from the hurry of worldly buſineſſes and enjoyments, then we are in the fitteſt poſture for the entertainment and enjoyment of God. The Lord viſits his ſervants in the night, not only (as David there) to try them, or as elſewhere to inſtruct them, but to comfort them, as David was aſſured, (Pſal. 42.8.) The Lord will command his loving kindneſs in the day time, and in the night his ſong ſhall be with me. That is, a ſong concerning him. I will ſing and rejoyce, even in the night time, becauſe of the goodneſs and kindneſs of God to me in the day. The experience of Aſaph, or of David, communicated in that Pſalm to Aſaph, gives further proof of this, (Pſal. 77.6.) where having ſaid, (verſ. 1.) I cryed unto God with my voyce, and he gave ear unto me: He adds. (verſ. 6.) I call to remembrance my ſong in the night; that is, thoſe occaſions of joy and ſinging which God hath heretofore given me. Theſe ſongs were ſweeter to me than ſleep. As it ſheweth an excellent frame of Spirit to remember the commandments of God in the night, which David alſo profeſſed as his practice, (Pſal. 119.55.) I have remembred thy Name, O Lord, in the night, and have kept thy Law. The name of God is any manifeſtation of God, either in his word or works. And again, (Pſal. 119.62.) At midnight I will riſe to give thanks to thee, becauſe of thy righteous judgments. Some watch in the night to give thanks, (Pſal. 134.1.) others give thanks when they wake at any time in the night; both are acts of pureſt love to God, and proceed from pureſt conſolation in God. (Cant. 3.1.) By night on my Bed I ſought him. The Spouſe doth not ſay only, by night I ſought him, but by night on my Bed, I ſpend not the night in ſleeping, but in ſeeking him whom my Soul loveth. (Pſal. 16.7.) My reins inſtruct me in the night ſeaſon; that is, I have as it were diſcourſes and ſoliloquies, ſecret debates about, and ſtrong deſires after the things of God, even in the night. That Soul is indeed awake to God, which is acquainted with and uſed to theſe divine ſongs in the night, the time of ſleep.

Further, Take the word Night in a metaphorical notion, as night ſignifieth a troubleſome ſtate; God may be ſaid to give ſongs in the night, when he comforts us in or at any time of affliction. I need not ſtay to prove that in Scripture the night is put for affliction, nor need I prove, that, to give inward joy in a day of outward ſorrow, is to give ſongs in the night. The Obſervation riſing from this metaphorical underſtanding of night, is this, which the Scripture and experience are full of.

God ſends comfort to his people, or cauſeth them to rejoyce in the midſt of their afflictions.

It is the Apoſtles deſcription of God, (2 Cor. 1.3,4.) The God of all comfort, who comforteth us in all our tribulation. What ſweet ſongs have ſuffering Saints found in the darkeſt midnight of their affliction! What inward peace in outward troubles! What Soul freedom in bodily reſtraint! One of the Ancients hath put the queſtion, and anſwered it. What's a ſong in the night? 'Tis joy in time of trouble. When ever God gives a Soul joy in time of trouble, he gives a ſong in the night. Paul and Silas ſang in the night, in both notions of night. If we take night in a proper ſenſe, they ſang in the night, and in an improper ſenſe, they were in priſon, that was a night of affliction to them, yea it was midnight with them, the power of darkneſs, or the darkeſt outward affliction to them, yet, ſaith the Text, At midnight Paul and Silas ſang: They had ſongs in their mouths, and in their hearts too; they ſang ſo loud that all heard them. And hence we may collect the ſtrength of the argument or reaſon upon which Elihu here ſaith, God doth not regard the cry of many under oppreſſion, they make a noiſe, but none ſaith, Where is God my maker, who giveth ſongs in the night, who is able to comfort us in all our afflictions, who is able to make darkneſs light to us, and turn our ſorrows into ſongs of joy; they had not theſe high thoughts of God, nor theſe holy confidences in God, while they lay under the oppreſſions of men, and therefore God did not regard their cry, nor ſave them from the the arm of the mighty. This is the firſt part of the anſwer which Elihu made to Job's complaint that the oppreſſed were not delivered, though being preſſed ſo ſorely they could not forbear to cry, yea to cry out in their miſery. The next words give us a fuller and more expreſs anſwer to that complaint,

VERS. 11, 12, 13.

Who teacheth us more than the Beaſts of the Earth, and maketh us wiſer than the fowls of Heaven.

There they cry (but none giveth anſwer) becauſe of the pride of evil men.

Surely God will not hear vanity, neither will the Almighty regard it.

ELihu proceeds in aſſigning a ſecond reaſon to heighten their ſin, who being in diſtreſs, ſay not, Where is God my maker? Or he giveth a further account, why the Lord doth not preſently attend to the prayers and crys of ſome men under great oppreſſion. He had ſhewed in the former verſe one reaſon of the Lords forbearance to help them in ſuch diſtreſſes, they did not ſay heartily, Where is God our maker? Nor did they remember him according the ſpecial benefits which they ſometimes had received from God, even ſongs in the night.

In this verſe 11. Elihu aggravates the ſin of ſuch oppreſſed perſons by the conſideration of that light, and underſtanding wherewith God hath indued, and inriched man above the irrational Creatures, and which he hath therefore furniſhed man with, that he might know what to do in a time of diſtreſs, in the day of affliction; they ſay not, Where is God my maker?

Who, not only gives us ſongs in the night, (matter of praiſe, but) teacheth us more than the Beaſts of the Earth.

Some of the Jewiſh Interpreters read theſe words poſitively, not (as we) comparatively, or they render them, to ſhew that God hath appointed the very Beaſts to be our Tutors, not (as we) that himſelf tutors us beyond the Beaſts: Thus; Who teacheth us by the Beaſts of the Earth, and maketh us wiſe by the fowls of Heaven. This anſwers what Job ſpake in Chapter 12. of this Book, (*v.*7.) Ask now the Beaſts, and they ſhall teach thee: And the fowls of the Air, and they ſhall tell thee. 'Tis a truth that God doth teach us by the Beaſts of the Earth, and makes us wiſe by the very fowls of the Air. We may learn much in the School of thoſe Creatures who have not only no learning, but no underſtanding, and may be ſtirred up to the exerciſe of excellent vertues, by thoſe which have not the exerciſe of reaſon. The Scripture ſendeth man, the higheſt of viſible Creatures, to the loweſt of viſible Creatures, to Creatures ſo little, that they are ſcarce viſible, for inſtruction; Go to the Ant, thou ſluggard, conſider her ways, and be wiſe, (Prov.6.6.) There are ſeveral obſervable qualities, and, as I may call them, vertues, not only in the Beaſts of the Earth, and fowls of the Air, but in the meaneſt creeping things, which are very imitable by man; and thus God doth teach us by the Beaſts of the Earth, and by the fowls of the Air, vertually, though not formally, by their practice and example, though not by their precepts or rules; for ſuch teachings neither the Beaſts of the Earth nor the fowls of the Air have any competency at all. Man alone cannot teach man effectually to converſion and ſalvation, all that are ſo taught, are and muſt be taught of God, (1 *Cor.*3.5,6,7.) yet the Beaſts of the Earth, and the fowls of the Air, may and do teach us inſtrumentally to conviction, and if we learn not by them, their teachings (as rude as they are) will be to our ſhame, confuſion, and condemnation.

But I rather take the words, as we tranſlate them, comparatively; Who teacheth us more than the Beaſts of the Earth: As if he had ſaid, God teacheth the Beaſts ſomewhat, but he teacheth man much more.

They who expound this context of the wicked man, who oppreſſeth the poor, give the ſenſe thus; God teacheth us more than the Beaſts of the Earth, and maketh us wiſer than the fowls of Heaven; that is, he teacheth us that we ſhould not like Beaſts, vex, tear and rend one the other, that we ſhould not like the Bear of the Wood, and the Lyon of the Forreſt, nor like the Vulturs and ravenous Birds of the Air, prey one upon another; they who are fierce againſt, and unmerciful to their Brethren, degenerate into Beaſts, whom God hath taught no better, but left them to live by rapine and ſpoil: Whereas he hath laid more noble principles into the heart of man, and taught him to be kind and charitable, loving, and compaſſionate, not to devour and vex thoſe of his kind, how much ſoever inferior and below him in degree. And therefore what a ſhame is it for men to be more oppreſſive and cruel to men like themſelves, than Beaſts are to Beaſts, or fowls to fowls? This is a truth: yet I conceive the context is rather to be underſtood of the oppreſſed, (as hath been touched before) than of the oppreſſor, and therefore our reading runs moſt clearly;

Quidam Hebræorum ſpecialiter eo referunt, ne beſtiarum aut avium more invicem rapiamur. Merc.

Who teacheth us more than the Beaſts of the Earth.

That is, though the very Beaſts of the Earth, are taught ſomewhat by God, and have a kind of knowledg, yet men are taught of God in a more eminent, tranſcendent, and noble way, than they, whether wild, or tame, one or other. God doth not ſet up ſuch a School for Beaſts, as he doth for man, nor provide ſuch inſtructions for them, as he doth for man; he gives men more means of inſtruction, he gives them more time for inſtruction, he takes (as I may ſay) more pains to inſtruct them, riſing early, and ſending his Miniſters now, as the Prophets of old, to teach his people. He every way teacheth us more than he teacheth the Beaſts of the Earth;

And maketh us wiſer than the fowls of Heaven.

But what? Are the fowls of the Air indued with wiſdom? I anſwer, firſt, wiſdom is is put ſometime for that inbred ſubtlety, which is no more than an inclination to avoid that which is hurtful to Nature, and to follow that which is ſuitable to it. That which is wiſdom indeed is the proper and peculiar gift of God to men and Angels only. God hath given ſomewhat like wiſdom to the fowls of Heaven, they have a natural forecaſt; but what is the wiſdom, with which the fowls of Heaven are indued, to that wiſdom with which man is indued, thoſe men eſpecially, who (through grace) are heirs of Heaven? What is the wiſdom which Beaſts have by a common inſtinct, to the wiſdom which man hath by divine inſtruction, yea ſometimes by divine inſpiration. Beaſts and Birds are wiſe, they are taught by God what is convenient for their ſtate, yet the beſt of their knowledg is ignorance, and the top of their underſtanding folly, compared with man. And hence it is that when men act fooliſhly or uncomely, they are ſaid in Scripture to be like Beaſts, to corrupt themſelves like brute Beaſts, to be brutiſh in their knowledg. We may eaſily conclude the wiſdom of Birds and Beaſts extreamly below mans, ſeeing whenſoever man acts below himſelf, or doth any thing unwiſely, he is ſaid to be and do like a Beaſt. The Hebrew word which we tranſlate wiſer, being applyed in Scripture to Emmets or Ants, to Conies, to Locuſts, to Spiders, (Prov. 30. 24.) doth not imply, that they truly know either what or why they do ſuch or ſuch a work, it ſheweth that the work which they do, hath an order, uſefulneſs, and reaſon in it, according to knowledg. Solomon ſaith indeed, thoſe four little Creatures are exceeding wiſe, not that they exceed the wiſdom of man, but among brutes they exceed, or are among them of the firſt form for wiſdom. He maketh us wiſer than the fowls of the Air.

Hence Obſerve, Firſt, The Beaſts of the Earth, and fowls of the Air, have a kind of knowledg, and wiſdom.

They have ſomewhat which is Analogous to or like knowledg and wiſdom, yet neither knowledg nor wiſdom ſtrictly taken. Some of the Ancients have reported to us, the opinion of the Manichees, and Marcionites, who maintained, that the Beaſts of the Earth, and fowls of the Air, were indued with reaſon, properly ſo called; which opinion was by them juſtly numbred among hereſies, and indeed a little reaſon may ſerve for the refutation of that opinion, which aſſerts Beaſts and fowls indued with reaſon; though ſome other learned men in their time, and great Philoſophers have aſſerted as much as the Manichees or Marcionites in this point. Quintilian ſaid, that Beaſts did rather want an ability of ſpeaking, than of underſtanding: And Plutarch endeavoured to prove the ſame in his Dialogue about that Queſtion, Whether brute Beaſts have or are endued with with Reaſon? But we affirm the wiſdom of Brutes is only brutiſh, and at moſt, but ſimilitudinary to the rational actings of man and a ſimilitude of, or ſomewhat like wiſdom and reaſon cannot with reaſon be denied them. It's ſaid of the Serpent (*Gen.*3.1.) that he was more ſubtil than any Beaſt of the Field, which the Lord God had made. And when Chriſt ſaith, (*Math.*10.16.) Be ye wiſe as Serpents, he implyeth, according to that in *Geneſis,*that Serpents have ſome ſhadow of wiſdom, ſomewhat like wiſdom. And when the Prophet Jeremiah (Chap.8.7.) ſaith, The Stork, the Turtle, the Crane, and the Swallow,know the time of their coming, he affirms that thoſe Fowls have a kind of knowledg. Another Prophet upbraids men with the knowledg of Beaſts, (*Iſa.*1.3.) The Ox knoweth his Owner, and the Aſs his Maſters Crib, &c. Here in the Text, to learn or be taught is aſcribed to Beaſts, becauſe they are tamed,broken, brought to hand, and made uſeful for the ſervice of man. And wiſdom is aſcribed to the Fowls of the Air, becauſe they keep their ſeaſons duly, make their Neſts ſafely and fitly, and bring up their young ones tenderly, with pains and diligence. There are very ſtrange inſtances, ſcarce credible, given by Pliny and others, concerning the ſagacity and docibility of ſome Beaſts of the Earth, and Fowls of the Air; we are told how they have acted more like rational Creatures, than Brutes: And daily experience gives proof enough, that they have a kind of knowledg, reaſon and wiſdom, only we cannot allow them reaſon, wiſdom,or knowledg in kind: They do works of Reaſon and Underſtanding, only (which is mans excellency) they underſtand not the reaſon of their works,

Secondly, Note, The knowledg or wiſdom (ſuch as it is) that the Beaſts of the Earth, and Fowls of the Air have, is of God.

If he teacheth men more than the Beaſts of the Earth, and maketh them wiſer than the Fowls of the Air, then in ſome way and meaſure he teacheth them, and maketh them wiſe. That wiſdom and knowledg, whatſoever it is, which Beaſts and Fowls have, is planted in them by God; they have that which ſerves their turn, and anſwers their ſtate by a common inſtinct of Nature, which man hath anſwerable to his ſtate, either by immediate Revelation, or by means of inſtruction from God. So then, Beaſts and Birds receive their peculiar qualities and abilities from God, as well as their Being: And God hath beſtowed thoſe qualities, which are ſhadows of wiſdom and underſtanding, upon Beaſts and Birds, not only for their own preſervation, but for the benefit of man, that they may be more uſeful to him, and fitter for his ſervice. As God hath made both Man and Beaſt for himſelf, ſo he hath made the Beaſts of the Earth, and Fowls of the Air for Man, either to ſerve mans neceſſity, or to procure his honeſt delight: And that they might teach both theſe ends, he hath furniſhed them accordingly. A Creature which hath not ſomewhat in it like Reaſon, could be little made uſe of by the Reaſon of Man.

Thirdly, Note, Man is far better taught, than either the Beaſts of the Earth, or Fowls of the Air.

Man, as Man, hath that in him, which wonderfully exceeds the Beaſts of the Earth and Fowls of the Air; he hath reaſon in him; which they have not; he is a reaſonable Creature, which they are not, and ſo can do that which they cannot. Man, by the power of Reaſon is able, firſt, to propoſe to himſelf an end in what he doth; ſecondly, to chuſe fit means for the attaining that end; neither of which Beaſts can do. And if any man be without wiſdom to propoſe to himſelf a right end, and to chuſe due means leading thereunto, there's little difference between that man and a Beaſt, ſurely all his wiſdom is but brutiſh. Further, God hath not only given Man a ſenſe of thoſe things which are hurtful to him, as he hath to the Beaſts of the Earth and Fowls of the Air; but God hath given Man an Underſtanding, by which, he knowing God, may worſhip him, by which alſo he may ſee into and foreſee the cauſes of things, and likewiſe rightly apply known means, either to prevent or remedy evils, and to bring about that which is good. Again, as God hath beſtowed that wonderful bleſſing of Reaſon upon Man, above Beaſts and Fowls, which makes him capable of higher inſtructions and fruitions, than either of them; ſo God hath provided higher and better means for the inſtruction of Man, than he hath for the inſtruction of Beaſts. He teacheth us more. For,

Firſt, He hath given his Word to Man, not to Beaſts; he hath not made a Bible for the Beaſts of the Earth, and the Fowls of the Air; but for Man he hath, that he might both know his will and do it, know his favour or good will to him, and enjoy it. Secondly, He hath given ſome men his Spirit, he hath not beſtowed his Spirit upon any Beaſts, nor upon any Fowls of the Air: And becauſe his Spirit teacheth us, we are ſaid to be taught of God, eminently taught of God. Thirdly, He hath given us his Ordinances, and appointed Officers, or ſet perſons in Office, to mannage and hold out thoſe Ordinances, wherein himſelf is both honoured and enjoyed. He (ſaith the Apoſtle, *Eph.*4.11,12.) gave ſome Apoſtles, and ſome Prophets, and ſome Evangeliſts, and ſome Paſtors and Teachers; for the perfecting of the Saints, for the work of the Miniſtry, for the edifying of the Body of Chriſt, for the bringing in, and building up of Souls. He ſheweth his Word unto Jacob, his Statutes and Judgments unto Iſrael, (Pſal. 147.19.) and as it follows in the next verſe of the ſame Pſalm, He hath not dealt ſo with any Nation, as with his Iſrael, his Church, to be ſure he hath not dealt ſo with the Beaſts of the Earth, nor with the Fowls of the Air, as was ſhewed alſo in the Text.

Further as to the matter in queſtion about the Providences and dealings of God with man; God hath taught Man much more than Beaſts: As Firſt, That all things which befal us, come from, and are ordered by himſelf. Secondly, That we ought to receive the Rule and take inſtruction from God, how to behave our ſelves under his various dealings. Thirdly, He hath taught us at all times, and in all turns of Providence, to ſtay our ſelves in waiting upon him, (Pſal. 37.7.) Fourthly, He hath taught us in times of trouble and affliction, to cry to him, and call upon him as his Children in faith, not barely to complain, much leſs to be impatiently outragious like Beaſts.

Now if God hath taught us more than the Beaſts, then, we ſhould not live by ſenſe, nor purſue ſenſible things, as Beaſts do, but aſpire to and ſeek after union and communion with God, whom the Beaſts of the Earth know not. How greatly will this aggravate the ſin of Man, if having beed taught more than Beaſts, any Man ſhould be found to have learned leſs than Beaſts; as will appear yet more in the next Obſervation but one.

Fourthly, Elihu at leaſt intimates this Note,

Men ſometimes act but as, or indeed below, the very Beaſts of the Earth, and the Fowls of the Air.

For (ſaith he) they ſay not, Where is God our maker, who gives us ſongs in the night? Who teacheth us better, or more, than the Beaſts of the Earth. As if he had ſaid, The Beaſts of the Earth anſwer the inſtinct of Nature, (which is all the coſt God beſtows in teaching them) better than men do thoſe coſtly teachings and inſtructions which God beſtows upon them by his Word, by his Spirit, by his Miniſters, by his Ordinances, and by his Providences; for all theſe ways doth the Lord teach and inſtruct men from day to day; yet men often act, not only beſide and below, but quite contrary to all theſe teachings. The Beaſts of the Earth keep up to the inſtruction which they have received, the inſtinct of Nature, they move according to that; but man who hath an underſtanding, doth not always move ſuitable to his underſtanding; man hath reaſon, yet he doth not always regulate his motions by reaſon, but is hurried by paſſion, or led by ſenſe, as a Beaſt. (Pſal. 49.20.) Man that is in honour, and underſtandeth not, is like the Beaſts that periſh; that is, though his ſtate and ſphere be higher than a Beaſt, yet he moves by as low a principle as a Beaſt, even by ſenſe, or ſenſual appetite, either by iraſcible, or concupiſcible, as a Beaſt doth. By the man in honour, that underſtandeth not, the Pſalmiſt intends not a fool that hath no underſtanding, nor an Idiot that hath no uſe of reaſon, but he is ſaid not to underſtand, becauſe he doth not uſe his underſtanding; as he in the Parable that did not uſe his Talent, is ſaid to have none (*Math.*25.29.) Underſtanding is a Talent, and a great one, a choice one too. A man that hath the greateſt Natural underſtanding and reaſon, yea poſſibly the greateſt learning, and experience, may be ſaid, not to underſtand, when he doth not behave himſelf underſtandingly, or according to the Laws and Rules of reaſon.

reaſon. Men of the beſt underſtanding and greateſt honour are like the Beaſts that periſh, as to their frailty, that is, they die; which may be the meaning of the Pſalmiſt at the 12. verſe, where he ſaith, Man being in honour abideth not, he is like the Beaſts that periſh. But all men that are in honour and underſtand not their duty, or do not what they underſtand, are like the Beaſts that periſh, as to their inability, that is, they live as if they had nothing, but (what Beaſts have) ſenſe and appetite to govern their lives by. He that doth not practiſe according to knowledge what he knows, is like, and worſe than a Beaſt that hath no knowledge. For when a Beaſt doth any thing abſurdly, he doth like a Beaſt; but when man doth any thing abſurdly, he degenerates or falleth from his own form, he doth not like a man, and therefore is worſe than a Beaſt. And that's it, I conceive, which the Apoſtle Jude aims at in verſe 10. of his Epiſtle, where rebuking a very vile generation of men, Revilers, who ſpeak evil of thoſe things which they know not; he preſently adds, But what they know naturally as brute Beaſts, in thoſe things they corrupt themſelves. When he ſaith, what they know naturally as brute Beaſts, his meaning is, what they know in common with Beaſts, that is, by ſenſe and appetite, which are common to man and Beaſt, (as reaſon and underſtanding are common to Man and Angels). Now (ſaith the Apoſtle) what they know naturally as brute Beaſts, in thoſe things they corrupt themſelves, which brute Beaſts do not. For theſe words, as brute Beaſts, are to be taken in conſtruction and interpretation, with the former part of the ſentence, What they know naturally, not with the latter, they corrupt themſelves. Their knowledge indeed is no better than the knowledge of brute Beaſts, natural, but in corrupting themſelves they are unlike to, and do worſe than brute Beaſts, who run not to ſuch exceſſes; yet there is nothing more common in Scripture, than to ſay that men act the Beaſt, when they ſin, and put off thoſe manners which become and are worthy of an ingenuous and rational man. For as man is partaker both of a ſpiritual and ſenſitive Nature, ſo he takes his denomination from that part to which in his diſpoſition and converſation he moſt inclines: Hence he is ſometimes called God, or an Angel of God, and ſometimes he is compared to the moſt hurtful of Beaſts, a Lyon, ſometimes to the worſt of Beaſts to a Fox, to a Wolf, to a Dog, to a Swine, to a generation of Vipers, to what not, which may put a mark of diſhonour and reproach upon him.

Fifthly, Note, It's a great ſhame, reproof, and reproach to man, when he acts unanſwerably to the teachings of God.

It is better to be a Beaſt in or by Nature, than to be a Beaſt (and continue ſo) in qualities and conditions. O what a reproach is it, that they who have a far better Nature than Beaſts, ſhould lead no better lives than a Beaſt, yea poſſibly much worſe! The Pſalmiſt cries ſhame upon ſuch (*Pſal.*32.9.) Be ye not as the Horſe, or as the Mule, which have no underſtanding, whoſe mouth muſt be held in with bit and bridle, leſt they come near unto thee. The Horſe and Mule are unruly Creatures, if left to their own rule, they have no underſtanding how to mannage and order themſelves; they muſt be mannaged and order'd by bit and bridle in the hand of a skilful rider, elſe they do more hurt than good ſervice to thoſe that come near them: Now, ſaith the Lord to man, Be not you like the untaught or unmannag'd Horſe and Mule; as ye are better taught, ſo ye ſhould have better manners. We ſay of ſome men, they are better fed than taught; and we may ſay of many men, they are better taught than manner'd; they mend not their manners, though daily taught, yea urged to mend them. For this neglect the Lord reproves the ſluggard, (Prov. 6.6.) Go to the Ant, thou ſluggard, conſider her ways, and be wiſe; thou doeſt not anſwer natural, much leſs ſpiritual light, thou doeſt not learn by any teachings; one of the leaſt of my Creatures may teach thee more than thou haſt yet learned of all the teachers which I have ſent thee. The little Ant that dwels upon a Mole-hil, that creeps upon the ground, may teach thee better manners, and make thee wiſer. Art thou not aſhamed to need ſuch a teacher, having had ſo many teachers? That's alſo the ſence of thoſe rebukes which the Prophet pours out (with a ſtrong conteſtation) upon the people of Iſrael, calling Heaven and Earth to witneſs againſt them, (*Iſa.*1.2.) Hear O Heavens, and give ear O Earth, I have nouriſhed, and brought up Children, and they have rebelled againſt me. But how doth the Lord convict them of rebellion, and by whom? Even by the teachableneſs and tractableneſs of the dulleſt brutes, The Ox knoweth his owner, and the Aſs his Maſters crib: But Iſrael doth not know, my people doth not conſider. As if he had ſaid, The Ox and the Aſs out-do you, the Ox knoweth his owner that feeds him, and the very Aſs knows the crib where he is fed, Theſe Beaſts take notice of, regard and ſubmit to their Maſter and Benefactor: But Iſrael doth neither obſerve nor ſubmit to me, who have tenderly nurſed and plentifully nouriſhed them; who have (as the Lord ſpake by his Prophet, *Hoſ.*11.4.) been to them, as one that taketh the yoke off their jaws, and layeth them meat, the fat and the ſweet, the fineſt of the wheat, and honey out of the Rock to feed upon; and, which is more than this, who have not only fed them better, but taught them better than the Ox or Aſs; O ye Heavens, be aſtoniſhed at this! Further, as in this Scripture the Lord conteſted with, and reproved his people by the Beaſts of the Earth, ſo he doth it in another by the fowls of the Air, (*Jer.*8.6,7.) I (ſaith the Lord) hearkned and heard, but they ſpake not aright, &c. every one turned to his courſe, (his ſinful courſe, or his courſe in ſin) as the Horſe ruſheth into the Battle; that is, fiercely, fearleſly, preſumptuouſly, at once ſlighting, at leaſt forgetting, both their own danger, and my command. As the Lord thus rebukes the head-ſtrong obſtinacy and wilfulneſs of that people, by their likeneſs to the Horſe; ſo in the next verſe he reproves their blindneſs and blockiſhneſs, by their unlikeneſs to the Stork, &c. Yea the Stork in the Heaven knoweth her appointed time, and the Turtle, and the Crane, and the Swallow obſerve the time of their coming, but my people know not the Judgments of the Lord. Then followeth, (*verſ.*8.) How do ye ſay, we are wiſe, and the Law of the Lord is with us? Lo certainly in vain made he it, the pen of the Scribe is in vain: As if he had ſaid; You have been taught, you have had the Law of the Lord, and you are ready to boaſt of it, as the Apoſtle obſerved (Rom. 2.23.) but with what face can ye take it upon your ſelves to be wiſe men, or arrogate wiſdom to your ſelves, or ſo much as own the Law, when you are ſo unready to pay that obedience which you owe to it. The Crane, the Turtle, and Swallow, the very fowls of Heaven, follow the light of Nature better than you have done the light of Scripture and daily inſtruction. Theſe reaſonleſs Creatures, reaſon with themſelves more rationally than you have done; they ſay thus in themſelves, It is beſt for us to change our quarters, and take our flight to ſome more benign or milder Region, for here the ſeaſon grows ſharp, and the weather tempeſtuous, if we abide here we ſtarve, we periſh with cold and hunger: But you my people are ſo ſottiſh, that you change neither your minds nor manners, you mend neither your ways nor your works; what changes ſoever I bring upon you, or how much ſoever I vary my ways and workings towards you, you apply not your ſelves to my courſe and dealings with you, but ſtill take your own courſe, ſay I or do I what I will; you neither embrace ſeaſons of grace and offers of mercy, nor do ye labour either to prevent or to avoid thoſe ſtorms of wrath and divine vengeance, with which you have been often threatned, and which hang in the Clouds ready to drop down and overwhelm you. And will ye ſay after all this, we are wiſe, when the fowls of the Air appear wiſer than you? And will you ſay, the Law of the Lord is with us, when they guide themſelves better by the Law of Nature? And foraſmuch as it is thus with you, have I not reaſon to conclude, that, Lo, certainly in vain made he it, the pen of the Scribe is in vain; that is, it was to little or no purpoſe that God at firſt enacted and publiſhed his Law, (Exod. 20.) or appointed Scribes to write it out, that Copies of it might be transferred to and read by his people, (*Deut.*17.18. *Chap.*31.9.) Is not both the making and writing of the Law vain, (as to you) ſeeing you are thus vain and fooliſh, even much more vain and fooliſh than the Stork in the Heaven, than the Turtle, Crane, and Swallow, notwithſtanding the making and writing out of the Law for you?

This will fill the faces of the wicked, that is, both of the prophane and and formal profeſſors of the Lords name, with ſhame and confuſion for ever, when they ſhall be made to ſee and confeſs, that the Beaſts of the Earth have followed their light, better than they, though God hath taught them more than the Beaſts of the Earth, and that the Fowls of the Air have carried themſelves more wiſely than they, though God hath made them wiſer than the fowls of the Air.

Verſe 12. There they cry (but none giveth anſwer) becauſe of the pride of evil men.

When Elihu had thus cloſely hinted the ſin of thoſe perſons that acted below Beaſts and Birds in their afflictions, he proceeds to tell us, what they do in their affliction; There they cry (but none giveth anſwer). We tranſlate theſe words, But none giveth anſwer, in a parentheſis; we may read the verſe without it, and transfer thoſe words to the end of the verſe, There they cry, becauſe of the pride of evil men, but none giveth anſwer. That is, (as ſome give the meaning) they being oppreſſed by the pride of evil men, cry out of their inſolencies, and their own miſeries, and yet can get no anſwer; for the reaſons given in the two former verſes, that is, becauſe they do not heartily and believingly apply themſelves to God their Maker. Mr. Broughton underſtands it thus of the pride of oppreſſors; There (ſaith he) they cry, but he anſwers not concerning the wrongdoers pride. Others take it for the pride of the oppreſſed; There they cry. The word rendred there, is an Adverb of place, but here it notes the time or eſtate rather in which theſe perſons lived; they were in an oppreſſed eſtate or condition, when they cryed, yet ſaith the Text, None giveth anſwer; that is, they have no help when they cry; they cry to men, yea they cry to God for help, but have none, help is far from them. God doth not anſwer them immediately by himſelf, neither doth he ſend them anſwer by the hand of any other. Now, what is the reaſon of this? The Text gives it partly (yet ſomewhat obſcurely) in this verſe, more fully and clearly in the verſe following. The reaſon given here is their pride, Becauſe of the pride of evil men; that is, becauſe themſelves are ſo proud, they are at once poor and proud, humbled but not humble; they are oppreſſed and ſubdued under the power of men, yet their pride remains unſubdued and in full power; they are laid low in eſtate, but they are not lowly in Spirit: Proud men oppreſs them, and they, though oppreſſed, are ſtill proud; their hearts are not brought down, though they are come down wonderfully, as the Prophet ſpake of the captivated Jews, Lam. 1. 9. They are fallen before men in miſery, but they are not fallen before God in humility; they cry of wrong, but themſelves are not right, and that's the reaſon why they are not righted; There they cry (but none giveth anſwer) becauſe of the pride of evil men. This alſo is a good ſenſe, and may yield us profitable inſtruction; I leave the Reader to his choice, both being ſafe and uſeful. There they cry, &c.

Hence Note, Firſt, They that are oppreſſed, and brought low, will be crying and complaining.

Both God and Men ſhall hear of them: There they cry. An afflicted condition, is a complaining condition; Nature being pinch't will ſpeak. I (ſaith Job, Chap. 7. 11.) will not refrain my mouth, I will ſpeak in the anguiſh of my heart, I will complain in the bitterneſs of my Soul. I mourn in my complaint, ſaid David, (Pſal. 55. 2.) The title of the 102. Pſalm runs thus; A prayer of the afflicted when he is overwhelmed, and poureth out his complaint before God.

Elihu doth not ſay, There they repent, and there they humble themſelves, and there they turn to God, but there they cry; that they are troubled is the all, the only thing that troubles them. 'Tis ſaid before, God teacheth man more than the Beaſts of the Earth; but many in a day of affliction, do no more than the Beaſts of the Earth. A Beaſt, when hurt, will cry, he will rage and roar; and that's as much as many men do when they are hurt, though God hath taught them more, many leſſons more, which they ſhould be practiſing under ſorrowful diſpenſations. The Ox loweth, and is taught no more, when he wants fodder; the Aſs brayeth, and is taught no more, when he wants graſs; but man is taught to act repentance, and faith, and patience, and ſubmiſſion to the will of God in want. How ſad is it when we hear nothing but fleſh cry in man, or when nothing is cryed for by man but fleſh, that is, the ſupplies of Nature, in the day of his diſtreſs. As 'tis ſaid of thoſe (Hoſea 7. 14.) They have not cryed unto me with their heart, when they howled upon their Beds; they aſſemble themſelves for corn, and for wine, and they rebel againſt me. How miſerable are they in their miſeries, whoſe tongues cry to God, but not their hearts, or their hearts being ſilent; who cry for corn and wine, not for grace and repentance, or not for grace to repent; who cry much becauſe they ſuffer evil, but not at all becauſe they have done evil, yea who are doing evil at the very time when they are crying out becauſe of the evils which they ſuffer: Such was the wretched frame of thoſe in the Prophet; They aſſembled themſelves for corn and for wine, and rebelled againſt God. 'Tis bad enough, when there is crying, and nothing but crying, this is to cry but as Beaſts cry; but to cry and rebel againſt God, is to be worſe than Beaſts, for Beaſts do not rebel againſt God when they are pinched with want, and cry. It is ſad to be in afflictions; to be put to cry in afflictions is more ſad; only to cry for the affliction is yet more ſad; when nothing comes from a man but a cry, there is nothing in the cryer, but what is meerly of man; but to be found ſinning againſt God, while we are crying out in our affliction is moſt ſad, that's the ſaddeſt and worſt condition of man in affliction. The Lord teacheth his people better, let us ſhew our ſelves better taught, than only to cry in our afflictions; and let it be the abhorrence of our Souls for ever to ſin at all, much more to ſin up to rebellion againſt God in our affliction, that it ſhould be ſaid of any of us as of that wicked King Ahaz, (2 Chron. 28. 22.) that in the time of any diſtreſs, we have treſpaſſed more againſt the Lord.

Thirdly, Whereas thoſe oppreſſed ones cryed, yet (according to the ſecond interpretation) continued proud and naught.

Obſerve, The greateſt oppreſſion and worldly trouble, cannot break the power of ſin, nor bring down the proud heart of man.

Neither oppreſſion from man, nor affliction from God, can break the pride of mans Spirit. Theſe were oppreſſed, yet proud ſtill. Our eſtates may be broken, our relations broken, our comforts broken, yet our hearts remain unbroken. The oppreſſed are many times, as proud as their oppreſſors, and they who are unjuſtly dealt with, are as bad as they that deal unjuſtly with them. Oppreſſors (though not all who oppreſs) are always bad, and the oppreſſed are many times ſo too, even as bad as their oppreſſors. There is no proof of any mans grace or goodneſs by this, that he is oppreſſed, or wronged; for he may be wronged, and ground to powder with oppreſſion, yet his heard as hard as a neather Milſtone, and his Spirit as high, and as much lifted up as Lucifers. There is nothing in affliction, trouble, or oppreſſion, that can humble the heart of man; the Spirit of God, God himſelf muſt do it. Outward changes work no inward change; we may be emptied from Veſſel to Veſſel, from one condition to another, yet have our ſin-ſent remaining in us. It was, indeed, ſaid of Moab, (Jer. 48. 11.) He hath not been emptied from Veſſel to Veſſel, neither hath he gon into Captivity, (that is, he hath not been troubled much in his own Land, nor carried into ſtrange Lands, as Iſrael hath been) therefore his taſt remained in him, and his ſent is not changed; that is, as he ſtill retains his civil ſtate and ſtrength, ſo his ſpiritual vanity, impiety, and impurity, even as Wines that have not been drawn off the Lees, and put into other Cask, (to that the Scripture there alludes) retain their firſt taſt and ſent or ſmell, and are not meliorated or made more fit for the palat and ſtomach of thoſe that drink them. Now (I ſay) as many for want of changes or afflictions, are not mended, ſo ſome mend not though they have many changes and afflictions; nor can any thing or affliction mends us, or work a change of heart and life in us, unleſs grace work with it.

Fourthly, Whereas it is ſaid, they cry, but none giveth anſwer, God doth not hear and anſwer them.

Note, The crys of proud, or bad men, how much ſoever they are oppreſſed, do not move God, nor will he anſwer them.

There is no reaſon he ſhould anſwer their cry, (though they have reaſon enough to cry) who will not anſwer his call, his command; let ſuch cry and cry, tear the air, and rend their throats with crying, they ſhall not be anſwered. Job ſaith of the hypocrite, (Chap. 27. 9.) Will God hear his cry when trouble cometh upon him? No, he will not. Solomon leaves the contemners of wiſdoms counſel under the ſame doom, (Prov. 1. 28.) Then ſhall they call, but I will not anſwer; they ſhall ſeek me early, but they ſhall not find me. But when was this Then in which they called, and the Lord would not anſwer? The 27. verſe tells us, The when or time of this rejection, it was when they had moſt need of hearing and acceptation, even when their fear (that is, the thing feared, or at leaſt which made them afraid) came upon them, as deſolation, and their deſtruction as a whirlwind; when thoſe ſad Meſſengers came they ſought God early, that is, earneſtly and diligently, but could not find him: But what was the reaſon of this refuſal? They hated knowledge, and did not chuſe the fear of the Lord, (v. 29.) They had been wicked, and naught, before trouble came, and when trouble was come they were no better, therefore the Lord regarded not either their perſons or their cries. The Lord (ſaith the Apoſtle preaching to the Athenians, Acts 17. 27.) is not far from every one of us; yet 'tis ſaid (Prov. 15. 29.) The Lord is far from the wicked, but he heareth the prayer of the righteous: He is far, that is, far from hearing and anſwering, far from helping and relieving the wicked when they pray. The Lord is not far from any of us as men, for in him we live, move, and have our being, (verſ. 28.) and he giveth to all life, and breath, and all things, for the ſupport of life and natural being; but he is far from all proud men, as to any complacency in their perſons, and as to the hearing of their prayers. He is far from hearing them, and he knows them afar off, (Pſal. 138. 6.) that is, he deals with them as with men at a diſtance. Thus the Lord told the impenitents among his own people by the Prophet, (Iſa. 1. 15.) Though you make many prayers, I will not hear, for your hands are full of blood. Ye are full of bloody ſins, and ye have not humbled your ſelves, nor cleanſed your hearts and hands by the blood of the Covenant to this day; and being in that caſe, you may cry and pray till your hearts ake, and your tongues ake too, yet no prevailing with God, no grant, no hearing. Another Prophet tells them as ſad news from the Lord, (Jer. 11. 11.) Behold, I will bring evil upon them, which they ſhall not be able to eſcape, (or, go forth of) and though they ſhall cry unto me, I will not hearken unto them. Though the Lord threatned, I will bring ſuch evil upon them, that they ſhall not eſcape; they might ſay, well, but when the evil hath taken hold of us, we hope God will hear us, and deliver us. No, ſaith God, when the evil hath overtaken and arreſted you, yet your prayers ſhall not overtake me; Though you cry, yet I will not hearken unto you. That's a dreadful Scripture of the ſame import, (Pſal. 18. 41.) They cryed, but there was none to ſave them: even unto the Lord, but he anſwered them not. They cried being in great diſtreſs, and they cried to the Lord; he brings in that, leſt any ſhould ſay, they cried indeed, but poſſibly 'twas to falſe gods, to idols, poſſibly they knockt at a wrong door, and ſo were not heard: No, they cried to the Lord, to the Lord by name; they were right as to the object of prayer, but their hearts were not right; they were not right ſubjects of prayer. That once blind man ſaw this truth, when anſwering the Phariſees about the perſon by whoſe power he received his ſight, he told them plainly, (Joh. 9. 31.) We know that God heareth not ſinners; that is, Such as love and live in ſin, ſuch as go on impenitently in their ſins. By this anſwer he cloſely, but ſtrongly confuted that blaſphemous opinion and cenſure of the Phariſees, who reputed and reported the Lord Jeſus Chriſt, who came into the world to ſave ſinners, as one of the vileſt ſinners in the world, and upon that account got him crucified at laſt. As if the man had ſaid, Were he that cured me of my blindneſs ſuch a ſinner as you reckon him to be, he could never have obtained power from God to cure me of my blindneſs, for we know God heareth not ſinners. When men ſin and pray as it were by turns, their prayers are turned into ſin, and therefore will not be returned in mercy. God ſometimes hears ſinners in wrath and judgment, and he ſometimes will not hear Saints, as to the grant of the thing in hand prayed for, in love and mercy; but he never denies praying Saints in wrath, nor he ever hear a ſinner (ſuch a one as is here intended) in mercy when he prayeth.

Now, as when the Diſciples heard Chriſts anſwer to the Phariſees queſtion about Divorce, they preſently ſaid, (Matth. 19. 10.) If the caſe of the man be ſo with his wife, it is not good to marry; ſo ſome hearing this doctrine, that God heareth not proud ſinners when they cry or pray, may poſſibly ſay, if the caſe of the proud be thus with God, it is not good for them to pray at all. To ſuch I anſwer, this doctrine is not urged to make proud or impenitent ſinners to leave praying, but to leave their pride, 'tis urged to make them humble under their oppreſſions and afflictions, not to make them prophane. They who (as they are) cannot get by prayer, certainly they cannot get by caſting off prayer. What anſwer can they have who cry not at all to God, when ſome may cry and get no anſwer! as Elihu here ſpeaks, There they cry, but none giveth anſwer, becauſe of the pride of wicked men. This ſenſe or interpretation moſt inſiſted upon in this 12. verſe, will appear more full and fair in opening the 13. in which Elihu brings down what he ſaid here into a ſtrong and peremptory concluſion; or the next verſe renders another reaſon why God would not relieve thoſe oppreſſed ones, It was not only for the pride of their ſpirits, (verſ. 12.) but alſo for the emptineſs and heartleſneſs of their prayers; or becauſe the prayers of proud and evil men are heartleſs or empty.

Verſ. 13. Surely God will not hear vanity, neither will the Almighty regard it.

They cry, but God will not hear: why will he not hear? what hinders? He tells us both why and what.

Surely God will not hear vanity.] What is vanity? What ſaith vanity? hath vanity a tongue? can vanity ſpeak? the Text ſaith, God will not hear vanity. 'Tis frequent in Scripture, to aſcribe a tongue, and a voyce to ſin of any kind; though ſome ſins are more vocal, and ſpeak louder than others, yet all ſpeak. But when he ſaith, Surely, (or, without all Queſtion) the Lord will not hear vanity, by vanity we are to underſtand vain men praying; or vanity is put for the prayers and crys of thoſe perſons who are as vain as vanity it ſelf. The word rendred vanity, ſignifieth a lie, as alſo raſhneſs, temerity; God will neither hear raſh-headed, nor falſe-hearted prayers, he will not hear vain prayers, or the prayers of vain men. The Abſtract is often put for the Concrete in Scripture, (Pſ. 107. 42.) All iniquity ſhall ſtop her mouth. When the Lord brings about that mighty work, the bringing down of the mighty, and ſets the poor on high, (thoſe that are at once poor and humble the Lord will ſet on high,) then Iniquity, that is, wicked men, men of iniquity, ſhall ſtop their mouths, or have their mouths ſtopt, they ſhall not have a word to ſay, as gain-ſaying that righteous and glorious work of God. So here, God will not hear vanity, that is, vain men, or men that pray vainly; all that, which men ſpeak or act, is vain or vanity, if it be not good, if it be not anſwerable to the will and ends of God; yea whatſoever prayer doth not proceed from faith, and flow from a pure heart, is vanity, 'tis but ſtraw, and ſtubble, droſs, and dung. God will not hear vanity,

Neither will the Almighty regard it.] He that will not hear, will much leſs regard vanity. The ſenſe is gradual, regarding is more than hearing, we may put both together, he will not hear with regard, not regard what he hears from ſuch. The ſtrong God, who hath all power in his hand, the power of Authority, or the power of a Judge, will not hear vanity. The Almighty, The All-ſufficient, who hath all power of efficiency in his hand, the nouriſher, and preſerver, the puniſher and correcter of all men; this Shaddai will not regard vanity, he will not give it a look with reſpect, no not one good look. The word ſignifies to fix, or ſet the eye with ſtrong intention upon any thing or perſon. The Prophet Eliſha ſpake to this ſenſe, though he uſed another word, when he ſaid to the King of Iſrael, (2 King. 3. 14.) Were it not that I regard the preſence of the King of Judah, I would not look to thee, nor ſee thee. The Lord will not regard, he will not look to vanity, to the prayers of vain men, he will as it were ſhut his eyes, he will not ſee though he doth ſee; The Almighty will not regard it.

The Text doth not ſay, their oaths are vain, and their lies are vain, and their idle words are vain, but their cry, their cries in prayer to God are vain, yea vanity. There may be vanity in the prayer of a good man, but his prayer is not vanity. That's a juſt reproof upon the good works of many, which Chriſt gave the Angel of the Church of Sardis, (Rev. 3. 3.) I have not found thy works perfect, or, I have not found thy works full. Though that Angel had done good works, and poſſibly was full of good works, yet his works were not full. A man may be full of prayer, pray often, yet his prayer not full, his prayers may be empty, vain prayers; that's a vain thing which is an empty thing. How vain are they whoſe beſt things are vanity! If the prayers of a man are vanity, then certainly all is vanity; and we may ſay of him in the whole bulk of all, he is vanity of vanities, all is vanity. When once God calls a mans prayer, and hearing, vanity; when he calls thoſe works, which are good for the matter of them, vanity, then the man is indeed altogether vanity. You will ſay, when is prayer vanity, or a vain thing? I ſhall anſwer it in a few particulars.

Firſt, That prayer is vain, or vanity, which is not put up in faith. A faithleſs prayer is a fruitleſs prayer. All the prayers of an unbeliever, or of him who is in a ſtate of unbelief are vain; and the prayers of a believer, that is, who is in his ſtate a believer, are vain, if he hath not faith about that thing for which he prayeth. Now if the prayer of a believer is vain, when he hath not actual faith, then the prayer of an unbeliever muſt needs be vain, who hath no habitual faith.

Secondly, All the prayers that are for our luſts, or when we reſolve to continue in the practice of any luſt, are vain prayers. When we do not pray with a purpoſe to glorifie God, with what we ſhall obtain by prayer, but only to ſerve our own turns, and ſo beſtow it upon our luſts, that's a vain prayer, (Jam. 4. 3.) Such praying is rather a mocking than a worſhipping of God, a ſerving of our ſelves rather than a ſerving of God. How do they abuſe God in prayer, who cry to him for help, whom they have no mind to honour? who would fain be heard of God, yet have no heart to hear God?

Tales clamores non fides, ſed malorum ſenſus extorquet.

Thirdly, That's a vain prayer, when we pray meerly to get eaſe, or deliverance from an affliction, not at all minding our profiting by, or the improvement of an affliction. 'Tis not faith in God, but ſenſe of our own ſmart, which moves to pray, when we rather look how to get off our burdens, than out of our ſins, or to get out of the fire, than to get out our droſs; when we pray more to have the plague taken away, than our hard and proud hearts, that is a vain prayer; 'tis like the prayer of Pharaoh, who begged that he might be delivered; but it was the plague of God for his ſin, for his hard heart, that troubled him; his hard heart, his ſinning againſt God never troubled him. Pharaoh-like prayers, are vain prayers.

Fourthly, Thoſe prayers are vain which we make in our own ſtrength. What can thoſe prayers be, which go forth in our ſtrength, ſeeing we are told that we know not what to pray, much leſs then how to pray, but as the Spirit of God helpeth our infirmities, (Rom. 8. 26.) Unleſs the Spirit make interceſſion for us, that is, make our interceſſions for us in our hearts, as Chriſt maketh interceſſion for us in heaven, we pray in vain.

Fifthly, Thoſe are vain prayers, which we make in our own name, not in the name of Chriſt. And remember, though it be an eaſie matter to name Chriſt in prayer, yet 'tis no eaſie matter to pray in the name of Chriſt. 'Tis as common as that which is commoneſt, for all ſorts of people, yea for children, to name Chriſt in prayer; but to pray in the name of Chriſt, is the peculiar work of the Spirit in the heart of a true believer. If the Reader deſire to know more diſtinctly what it is to pray in the name of Chriſt, I refer him for ſome help towards it to the 27 verſe of the 16 Chapter, where alſo the requiſites of pure and powerful prayer, are more fully held out.

Sixthly, Angry paſſionate prayers are vain prayers. The Lord loves zeal and much warmth of affection in prayer, but he cannot abide wrath, or any the leaſt ſparks of paſſion in prayer. The Apoſtles Rule is, (1 Tim. 2. 8.) I will that men pray every where, lifting up pure hands, without wrath, and without doubting. A peaceable heart is as neceſſary in prayer, as a pure hand. When a ſoul coming to God in prayer, hath I know not what wrathful and angry diſputes within himſelf againſt his Brethren, how can he look for a gracious acceptance with God? Will the Lord be pleaſed with us, while we nouriſh ſecret diſpleaſure againſt our Neighbour? Now be ſure when you go to God for mercy and favour, that ye carry no wrath in your ſpirits towards man, one or other; therefore Chriſt hath taught us in that moſt perfect model of prayer, which he hath left us, (when we ask the forgiveneſs of our own treſpaſſes) to forgive thoſe that treſpaſs againſt us. We muſt lay down our unquiet thoughts of revenge, if we would have favour with, and compaſſion from God.

Seventhly, Thoſe are vain prayers, which are not both formed and matter'd according to the Will of God, (1 John 5. 14.) which are not grounded upon a juſt cauſe, and which are not directed to a right end. Beſides all theſe I may add all cold Prayers, ſleepy Prayers, ſlight-ſpirited or heartleſs Prayers, meer formal Prayers, tongue-wording Prayers, which are not ſoul-working and ſelf-affecting Prayers, are, to them who pray ſo, but vain Prayers, or as the Text ſpeaks, vanity.

Theſe Rules muſt be obſerved in all our prayer-addreſſes to God, elſe prayer is vain, or vanity; and when the prayer it ſelf is vain, the perſon praying hath no hearing: God will not hear vanity, neither will the Almighty regard it. Conſider that, Elihu doth not only ſay, God will not hear, but he adds, neither will the Almighty regard it. The doubling of the matter in higher Language intimates ſomthing to us; and we may note this from it;

As the Prayers of evil men are vain, ſo they have not any, the leaſt regard from God:

He will neither hear, nor regard. David ſaith (Pſal. 66. 18.) If I regard iniquity in my heart, God will not hear my Prayer. God will not hear a David, a good man, as to that particular prayer, if he regard iniquity in his heart, that is, if he hold any, the leaſt compliance or ſecret correſpondence with any ſin, yea, if he hath not repented of, and laboured to mortifie every known ſin: Doubtleſs then he will not regard the prayers of evil men, when they pray alſo with an evil mind. And when this, and other Scriptures ſay, he doth neither hear nor regard them; there is more intended than expreſſed, even that he doth reject and abhor them, that they are a burden and an abomination to him. The Scripture is much in ſhewing how much God makes of holy prayers. For firſt, God hath not only promiſed to hear, but regard ſuch prayers, (Pſal. 102. 17.) He will regard the prayer of the deſtitute, and not deſpiſe their prayers; that is, he highly prizeth and eſteemeth them. Secondly, The Scripture telleth us, God delighteth to hear ſuch prayers, they are ſweet to him, they are the beſt muſick in his ears: Let me hear thy voice, for ſweet is thy voice (her prayer-voice he means chiefly) ſaith Chriſt to his Spouſe, (Cant. 2. 14.) Thirdly, The Scripture aſſureth us, that God looks upon or reckoneth prayer as an honour done to him, 'tis an eminent part of worſhip, 'tis the giving of him glory; certainly therefore (take prayer purely) God doth regard it very much; he will have regard to that which he hath promiſed regard to, he will have regard to that which is ſweet and delightful to him, which is an honour and brings glory to him; therefore there muſt needs be a great matter in it, when he ſaith, He will not regard a prayer; ſuch a prayer muſt needs be very vile, impure, and ſtark naught in it ſelf, which he thus thruſteth from him, or cannot away with.

It muſt be confeſſed, that God ſometimes defers to hear (that is, to anſwer) the prayers of thoſe that call upon him in faith, and even their prayers who call upon him humbly and ſincerely. Holy prayers are not alwaies preſently anſwered, but holy prayers are never unregarded, never rejected. 'Tis never ſaid in Scripture, God doth not regard the prayers of a godly man. God may let him ſtay long for the anſwer of his prayer, to try his faith, and patience; but he will not ſlight his prayer. As it is the duty of all men to pray, and the deſire or delight of a godly man, (when his heart is in a right frame) to pray, ſo it is the priviledge of every godly man, that his prayer is heard and regarded. And as it is ſin of moſt wicked men that they pray not at all, (Pſal. 14. 4. Jer. 10. 25.) ſo it is the miſery of all wicked men that their prayers, though they make many and long prayers, are not heard, are not regarded. They are far from the grace and fear of God, who regard not to pray unto him; and they are as far from the mercy and favour of God, whoſe prayers are not regarded. And if a man be upon ſuch bad terms with God, that he is not regarded, when he is at his beſt work, his praying-work, O how little is ſuch a one regarded when he is at his worſt work, his ſinning work! If ſome men are not regarded, when they are praying to God, what are they when they are ſwearing, and blaſpheming God, when they are cauſleſly vexing or oppreſſing their brethren? If ſome men are not regarded when they are praying, what are they when they are revelling and reviling! The Lords indignation breaketh out the utmoſt againſt wicked men, when he tells them, the beſt of their duties, their prayer is vanity, and though they cry much to him, he will not hear nor regard them. The Lord hath not ſaid to the ſeed of Jacob, ſeek ye me in vain, (Iſa. 55. 19.) that is, ye ſhall not ſeek me in vain, no, as your prayers are honourable and acceptable unto me, ſo they ſhall be profitable and beneficial unto you; you that go forth weeping, bearing, and ſcattering this precious ſeed, ſhall doubtleſs come again and bring your ſheaves with you, your prayers ſhall be returned with bleſſings upon your ſouls, upon your bodies, upon your eſtates, upon your families, in which you live, as alſo upon the Nations and upon the Churches among whom you live. Thus the ſeed of Jacob have found and ſhall further find by the bleſſed experiences of all theſe bleſſings, that God hath not ſaid to them, Seek ye me in vain. He hath only ſaid of them who are vain, your ſeekings of me are vain in themſelves, and will be vain, fruitleſs, anſwerleſs unto you; for I the Lord will not hear vanity, neither will I the Almighty regard it.

Although thou ſayeſt thou ſhalt not ſee him, yet Judgment is before him, therefore truſt thou in him.

There is a two-fold rendring or tranſlation of this 14. verſe; Firſt, Some connecting it with the former, and taking it in a dependance upon what Elihu had laſt affirmed concerning God, He heareth not vanity, neither doth the Almighty regard it, tranſlate thus, Much leſs will he hear thee, if thou ſayeſt thou doeſt not look to, or regard this; judge thy ſelf therefore before him, and wait for him. As if Elihu ſhould bring an argument from the leſs to the greater; God will not hear vanity, nor will the Almighty regard it, how much leſs will he hear thee, who ſayeſt, (upon the matter) that thou regardeſt not him, or what he ſaith and doth. That word, which in the cloſe of the 13. verſe, we render regard, is the ſame with that in this 14. verſe, rendered, ſee; as if the whole were a rebuke, or a conviction of Job for his ſtoutneſs, in not viewing and contemplating the power and prerogative of God as he ought, in laying his hand upon him; and therefore ſaith Elihu, if God will not hear thoſe that pray vainly, how much leſs will he regard thee, who ſeemeſt not to regard him? that is, not to humble thy ſelf before him as becomes thee to thy Soveraign Lord: And thereupon Elihu gives him counſel in the cloſe of the verſe; Judge thy ſelf before him, and then wait for him, or truſt him, as we render it. Mr. Broughton ſeems to ſpeak in his tranſlation much to this ſenſe, giving it thus; So, when thou ſayeſt thou wilt not mark it, judge before him, and wait for him. As God will not regard vain prayer, ſo when thou ſayeſt to him, thou wilt not mark it, that is, attend to providences as thou oughteſt, he will not regard thee. There is a truth in this, and the Original word may fairly bear this tranſlation; yet I ſhall not ſtay upon it: but rather take this Context as the beginning of a new argument, than as the inforcement of the former; underſtanding it ſo, the words have yet a reading different from ours.

Multo minus ſi dicas, non contemplaris iſtud (exauditurus eſt) judica coram eo & expecta eum. Jun.

Another modern tranſlater diſliking the former reading only in the firſt part of the verſe, gives his own, thus; In this alſo (thou haſt ſinned.) Thoſe words are ſupplied to make up the ſenſe, as being the bringing of a further charge againſt Job; In this alſo (thou haſt ſinned) that thou haſt ſaid, thou ſhalt not ſee him; judge therefore thy ſelf before him, and look for him. This is the matter of his new charge, Thou haſt ſaid, thou ſhalt not ſee him, this is thy ſin. And having given him this charge, Elihu gives him counſel according to this tranſlation in the cloſe of the verſe, Judge therefore thy ſelf before him, and look for him. We ſay in our tranſlation, Judgment is before him, that is, before God; this tranſlation ſaith, Judge thy ſelf before him; and the reaſon of it is becauſe ſome take the word here as a Noun, others as a Verb of the Imperative mood; Judge thy ſelf before him, and then look to him, or truſt in him; that is, thou haſt failed greatly, and ſinned in taking up ſuch a Concluſion as this, that thou ſhalt not ſee God, (the ſenſe of which I ſhall open when I come to our own tranſlation) therefore I adviſe thee to judge thy ſelf thoroughly, and humbly to acknowledge thy fault. This tranſlation is much inſiſted upon, and becauſe it hath a profitable ſenſe, I ſhall note two or three points from the latter part of the verſe, where it differs from ours, and then proceed to our own Tranſlation. Job being charged with ſin for ſaying, that he ſhould not ſee God, is here adviſed to judge himſelf, Judge thy ſelf, and look to, or truſt in him.

Etiam (in hoc peccaſti) quod dixiſti te non contemplaturum eum; Judica (te) coram eo, & expecta eum. Piſc.

Aliqui דין pro nomine exponunt, Judicium alii pro הדין verbo imperativi modi; Judica. Merc.

Hence Note, It is our duty to judge our ſelves.

And 'tis a great Goſpel duty: The Apoſtle gives it in plain words, (1 Cor. 11. 31.) If we would judge our ſelves, we ſhould not be judged of the Lord. We are very apt to judge one another, but very backward to judge our ſelves. It is a great work to erect a Tribunal (as I may ſay) in our own Souls and Conſciences, to ſit in Judgment upon our ſelves; which that we may do, we muſt do theſe three things. Firſt, we muſt ſend Summons to our ſelves, we muſt cite our ſelves to our own Tribunal; for always before Judgment, Summons muſt go out and be ſent to the party offending: Here we are to ſend Summons to our ſelves, that is, to call together all the powers of our ſouls to appear in this Judgment, and anſwer what is or may be alledged againſt us. And when we have Summoned our ſelves, then Secondly, we are to examin, ſearch, and try our ſelves, (Lam. 3. 41.) Let us ſearch and try our ways, and turn again unto the Lord. Thirdly, having tried and examined our ſelves, before we can come to Judgment (that Judgment which is here intended) we muſt humble our ſelves under a Conviction of our own vileneſs and ſinfulneſs, whether of our nature or of our actions, whether of our ſtate or of our way; for whereas there are two parts of Judgment, Abſolution and Condemnation, we can never come to that part of Judgment, the judging of our ſelves, as perſons worthy to be condemned by the Lord for our ſins, unleſs we are firſt convinced of our ſins. Now when we have ſummoned, examined, and convicted our ſelves, then we are ready to judge our ſelves, to judge our ſelves even with the judgment of condemnation, reſpecting what we have done, yet we ſhould do it (with hopes of abſolution) acting our faith upon the free grace and mercy of God through the ſatisfaction which Jeſus Chriſt hath made for us.

Again, The ſcope of this counſel, or the reaſon why Elihu adviſeth Job to judge himſelf, was to ſhew, that he had raſhly judged of the ways of God, becauſe he had not duly judged himſelf.

Hence Note, Self-judging, or judging our own doings, will preſerve us from raſh judging the doings and dealings of God with us.

We ſhall never think God deals harſhly, or rigorouſly with us, if we do but enter into and paſs a right judgment upon our own ſouls. As they that judge themſelves ſhall not be judged of the Lord; (1 Cor. 11. 31.) ſo, they that judge themſelves will never judge the Lord; no, they will acquit and juſtifie the Lord under all his proceedings, even in his foreſt and ſevereſt ones. Thus did Ezra in reference to thoſe great and unparallel'd ſufferings of the Jews in the Babylonian war and captivity, (Chap. 9. 13.) Thou our God haſt puniſhed us leſs then our iniquities deſerve. And ſo did Daniel (Chap. 9. 7.) O Lord, righteouſneſs belongeth unto thee, but unto us confuſion of faces, as at this day.

Further, Elihu concluded Job very much affected with, or highly conceited of himſelf, becauſe he pleaded his own innocency or integrity ſo much, and was ſo deſirous to come to a hearing, and have his matter tried before God; and therefore ſaith he, Judge thy ſelf.

Hence Note, Self-judging will keep us from proud or high thoughts of our ſelves, of our own ways or works, how good ſoever they are.

Suppoſe our ways and our works pure and good, as Jobs indeed were for the main, (he was a man of the higheſt elevation in holineſs and of greateſt integrity) yet if we would throughly examine and judge our ſelves, conſider our ſhort comings in duty, our ſinnings againſt duty, and the ſins that cleave to our beſt duties, we ſhould find our very innocency to be guilty, and our righteouſneſs to be unrighteous; and ſurely ſuch a diſcovery would lay us very low in our own thoughts, and go very far towards the ſubduing of that pride of our hearts, which often ariſeth from the contemplation of our own well-doing.

Laſtly, Conſider this counſel was given Job (according to this tranſlation) with reſpect to that which follows; Judge thy ſelf, and truſt in or wait for him.

Hence Note, We are never fit to truſt, nor to wait upon God in any of his providences, till we judge our ſelves; or, Judging of our ſelves-will diſpoſe and prepare our hearts for truſting and reſting upon the power, goodneſs and mercy of God.

The more we judge and humble our ſelves, the readier hath God declared himſelf to help us in our extremities, (1 Pet. 5.6.) we alſo then are the readier to truſt and wait on him, both becauſe we then ſee more clearly what need we have to truſt on him for help, and may have the more aſſurance of his help, while we truſt him.

I ſhall now proceed to our own tranſlation, which fairly accommodates the ſcope of Elihu's dealing with Job in this place.

Although thou ſayeſt, thou ſhalt not ſee him.

Elihu had reprehended two of Jobs ſayings before in this Chapter; here he reprehends a third; Although thou ſayeſt this, thou ſhalt not ſee him; although thou ſayeſt it, either ſecretly in thy heart (the fool ſaith in his heart, there is no God) or although thou ſayeſt it with thy mouth, and haſt openly declared thy deſpair of ſeeing him. Some paſſages in the diſcourſe of Job do more than intimate and imply, that he had ſaid, he ſhould not ſee God. And we may conceive that Elihu aimeth at that paſſage ſpecially (*Chap.*23.8,9.) where Job ſeems to ſay this thing: Behold, I go forward, but he is not there, and backward, but I cannot perceive him; on the left hand where he doth work, but I cannot behold him; he hideth himſelf on the right hand, that I cannot ſee him. Now, Elihu gives anſwer in this 14. verſe, ſhewing that although God would not give him a preſent hearing upon his importunate call for it, yet he might reſt aſſured, that God would do him juſtice, and therefore adviſeth him quietly to reſt upon him. Although thou ſayeſt thou ſhalt not ſee him, or canſt not ſee him, yet Judgment is before him, therefore truſt thou in him. In that 23. Chapter, Job made a ſad complaint, that though he much ſolicited and deſired to ſee God (in what ſenſe I ſhall open preſently) yet he could not be admitted, he could not find him, nor come near him; I (ſaith he) cannot perceive him, I cannot behold him, I cannot ſee him; we have all theſe words negatively expreſſed there; as here, Although thou ſayeſt thou ſhalt not ſee, (or contemplate) him.

There is a two fold ſight of God; Firſt, immediate, or in himſelf; and thus God is ſeen only by himſelf, and of him ſelf, to all others he is inviſible, No eye hath ſeen him, nor can ſee him, (1 Tim. 6. 16.) The Lord told Moſes, No man can ſee my face and live; that is, no man can ſee me immediately, no man can have any ocular ſight of me, as we ſee thoſe things that are before us; God is a Spirit, and therefore inviſible. Job doth not complain, (in this ſenſe) that he could not ſee God, for he knew God was not to be ſeen, nor did he wait for any ſuch corporal view or ſight, or preſence of God. Secondly, there is a mediate ſight of God, and that by a three-fold means; Firſt, in or by his Word; for that is one glaſs wherein we behold him. Secondly, there is a ſight of God in his Works, they are another glaſs wherein we ſee and behold him; and thoſe works are two-fold; Firſt, the works of Creation, in them we may ſee or contemplate God all the world over, in his power, wiſdom, and goodneſs, (Rom. 1.19,20.) Secondly, his works of providence, ordering and diſpoſing all the motions of the creatures, as himſelf pleaſeth, how much ſoever any of their motions are diſpleaſing unto him. Thus we may ſee God in his works, that is, it is ſeen by his works, not only that he is, but what he is, or that he is Eternal and Infinite, that he is Moſt Wiſe and Omnipotent, that he can do all things, or that nothing is too hard for him, he having brought all things out of nothing. There is a Third Medium or Means by which we may ſee God, and that is, His Son, our Lord Jeſus Chriſt, (2Cor. 4.6.) The light of the knowledge of the Glory of God ſhineth to us in the face of Jeſus Chriſt; that is, in the perſon of Chriſt, God-Man, we may behold the glorious Grace of God unto poor ſinful loſt man. All the beams of Divine Love are collected in, and iſſue forth from the face of Jeſus Chriſt. He that would ſee how good, how gracious, how merciful the Lord is to ſinners, let him by an eye of Faith, or ſpiritual Contemplation look Chriſt in the face, and there he ſhall find the expreſs Characters of all that Glory. By theſe Means, or mediately in all theſe ways, God may be ſeen, and is ſeen by his People. This threefold ſight of God, is the ſight of Faith; it is by Faith that we ſee him in his Word; it is by Faith that we ſee him in his Works; it is by Faith that we ſee him in his Son. Thus we are to underſtand that of the Apoſtle concerning Moſes, (Heb. 11. 27.) He endured, as ſeeing him that is inviſible.

We may alſo diſtinguiſh of this ſight of God two ways; there is a ſight of God firſt in grace, which is, though a true and real, yet an imperfect ſight, of which the Apoſtle ſpeaks (1 Cor. 13.12.) Now we ſee as in a glaſs, darkly. Secondly, There is a ſeeing of God in glory, which is there called A ſeeing of him face to face: Of that ſight Chriſt ſpeaks (Matth. 5. 8.) Bleſſed are the pure in heart, for they ſhall ſee God. As they now ſee him in the diſpenſations of his Grace here, ſo they ſhall ſee him in the givings forth, or manifeſtations of his Glory to them hereafter. Now when Job complaineth, or Elihu brings him in complaining, That he ſhould not ſee God, we are not to underſtand it, as if he deſpaired of ever ſeeing God in Glory, or had concluded in his own breaſt, that he ſhould never ſee him in his ways of Grace, or profeſſed that at preſent he had no ſight at all of God by faith; for, though I conceive Jobs ſight of God by faith, or in the actings of his Grace, at that time was very low and dim, yet ſome ſight he had of him by faith, enough I am ſure to preſerve and keep him from making any ſuch negative Concluſion againſt himſelf, that he ſhould not ſee God in Glory. But that which he chiefly intendeth, is, that he feared he ſhould not come to ſee him in ſuch a day and way of tryal, as he before deſired in the 23. Chapter, (verſ. 8, 9.) or that God would never manifeſt himſelf ſo clearly in his Providences and dealings about his caſe in this world, as might acquit him, and bring the matter in queſtion to a full ſtate, that all might take notice of his wronged integrity. Job was under a great Cloud at that time, and feared that God had covered himſelf with a Cloud alſo, (as the Church bemoaned her ſelf, Lam. 3. 44.) and therefore ſaid, I ſhall not ſee him; I ſhall not ſee him as a Judge acquitting me, and giving ſentence for me. Some conceive, that the Hebrew word rendred Seeing, refers to a perſon brought before a Judge, for the trial of his Cauſe, and ſtanding before him, not as a guilty Malefactor, with a heavy heart, and a down look, but as a man conſcious of his own innocency, with much honeſt boldneſs, and well tempered confidence. The words following intimate ſuch a ſenſe of that word, Although thou ſayeſt, thou ſhalt not ſee him, (that is, be brought to tryal,) yet Judgment is before him, he will certainly try thee. This I take to be the moſt proper Explication of theſe words, Although thou ſayeſt thou ſhalt not ſee him.

Job ſpake this as the worſt of his caſe, as that which was a greater grief and miſery to him, than all his other miſeries and griefs, that God would not ſet him in a clear light before others, or that himſelf ſhould not have a clear light from God concerning his condition.

Hence Note; The ſight of God, or Gods diſcovery of himſelf in any dark caſe, is very ſweet to an upright and gracious ſoul.

Job had begged for this once and again, though poſſibly, as Elihu would here convince him he was ſomething too forward in it, and did not enough reflect upon himſelf; yet as he had often deſired it, ſo doubtleſs it was exceeding much upon his heart, that he might have a clear diſcovery from God. The Apoſtle, in ſomewhat a like caſe, in being aſperſed in his Miniſtry, ſaith, We are made manifeſt unto God, (2 Cor. 5. 11.) It pleaſed him that he was manifeſt unto God: But when God is pleaſed to manifeſt himſelf unto a Soul, how pleaſing is that? When we can ſay, now we ſee God, we ſee him clearing up our way, clearing up our integrity, clearing up our ſtate, how ſatisfying is it! And as it is moſt ſweet and ſatisfying to ſee God clearing up our ſtate to our own conſciences, ſo it is exceeding ſweet to ſee him clearing up our actions to the eye of the world; as the Apoſtle ſpake in the ſame place, We are manifeſt unto God, and I truſt alſo are made manifeſt in your conſciences. As if he had ſaid, we hope, God hath diſcovered us to you, and your conſciences do alſo atteſt with us and for us what we are. Light is ſweet (the light of the air, ſaith Solomon) and it is a pleaſant to behold the Sun, the Sun in the firmament; how much more ſweet is the light of divine favour, as alſo of our own faithfulneſs, ſhining into our hearts, and upon our ways, ſo that we are able to ſay, now we ſee the Lord graciouſly rolling away our reproach, owning us, and taking our part before and againſt all the oppoſing contradicting world!

Secondly, Note, A godly man may loſe the ſight and preſent apprehenſion of God, as owning of him, and taking care of him.

It is ſo often as to our ſpiritual eſtate, and it may be ſo, as to our outward ſtate; hence thoſe many complainings which we find in the Pſalms, and thoſe many deprecations, as to the hiding of Gods face; David would fain have kept ſight of God, O how he deſired to ſee him, to behold him! yet many times he did not, neither as to the aſſurance of his ſpiritual intereſt, nor as to the comforts of his outward condition, (Pſal. 13. 1. Pſal. 27. 9. Pſal. 30. 7.) As God ſometimes ſheweth himſelf in a kind of cloud or darkneſs, in fire and tempeſt, which is very terrible to the ſoul; ſo he at other times diſcovers himſelf only a little, or gives but a glimpſe of himſelf clearly, to ſtir up further deſires of ſeeing him, and to make us weary of all we ſee in this world: in theſe caſes we may be ſaid not to ſee God when we ſee him. Many godly men are in ſuch a dark condition, that they think God hideth his face from them in diſpleaſure, when indeed he doth not, but only tryeth them, to ſee what is in them, and whether they will obey him in hope and patience, and keep cloſe to him in holy walkings even when he ſeemeth to depart from them, and withdraw his preſence.

Sæpe deus oſtendit faciem ſuam, ſed non ita ut cupiunt homines, ideoque non vident ſe videre, ut ita dicam. Coc.

Thirdly, Obſerve, Good men are apt ſometimes to make over-ſad concluſions againſt themſelves,

As evil men are apt to make over-good concluſions for themſelves, they doubt not but they ſhall ſee and enjoy God. O what preſumptuous thoughts have men, and what peremptory, though groundleſs, concluſions do they make for themſelves upon falſe and rotten premiſes! they will ſay, they know God, and are known of God, they ſee God, and enjoy God, when they know not the meaning, much leſs have taſted the comfort of knowing God, or of being known by him, of ſeeing God, or of enjoying him. Theſe myſterious experiences are not every man's meat, nor every man's matters, who makes title to the knowledge of God. The Apoſtle ſaith expreſly, (1 John 2. 4.) He that ſaith, I know him, and keepeth not his Commandments, is a liar, and the truth is not in him. And again, (Chap. 3. 6.) Whoſoever ſinneth (that is, loves and lives in ſin) hath not ſeen him, neither known him. Yet how many are there, far from keeping the Commandments of God, far from a holy life, yea far from a holy ſtate, ſo far from ſuch a holy life, as of which it may be ſaid in a Goſpel ſenſe, that they ſin not, that indeed they do nothing elſe but ſin! yet theſe are apt to conclude, they ſee God, they ſee him by faith, they know him, they donbt not but he is their God. Now as many carnal men are apt to make falſe concluſions to themſelves of an intereſt in God, when there is no ſuch matter, kindling a fire, and compaſſing themſelves about with their own ſparks, as the Prophet ſpeaks, (Iſa. 50. 11.) that is, with vain conceits of their own blowing up, that all is well with them; when all that they, who do ſo, ſhall have at Gods hand, is, they ſhall lie down in ſorrow. So on the other ſide, godly men oftentimes make ſad concluſions againſt themſelves, they ſay (as Job in the Text) they ſhall not ſee him; who though (as was ſhewed in opening the Text) he did not conclude againſt his ſight of God by grace, or that he had no ſight of him by faith, yet he had not a comfortable ſight as to his preſent enjoyment, and he doubted whether ever he ſhould in this world. Jonah made ſuch a concluſion (Chap. 2. 4.) Then I ſaid, I am caſt out of thy ſight. As Hezekiah ſaid in his ſickneſs, (Iſa. 38. 11.) I ſhall not ſee the Lord, even the Lord in the Land of the living; that is, I ſhall die, and ſhall no more go into the houſe of the Lord, to behold the beauty of the Lord, and to enquire in his Temple, which was the one thing, even the only thing (in this life) which David deſired and reſolved to ſeek after, (Pſal. 27. 4.) So many, while they live, are apt to make ſuch concluſions, they ſhall ſee God no more, they ſhall not ſee him as long as they live, they are afraid they ſhall never have comfort more, nor peace more, while they are in this world, while they are on this ſide heaven; yet whether ever they ſhall come to ſee him in heaven, is their greateſt, their ſaddeſt, their moſt heart diſquieting and heart breaking doubt and fear. And indeed as we cannot ſee God, until he gives us eyes, ſo we cannot believe we ſhall ſee him, until he gives us hearts. Many times his dealings, both as to outward terrible providences, and inward terrors, are ſo dark, that we can ſee nothing but darkneſs, nor ſay any thing but as Job is here charged to ſay, that we ſhall not ſee him. Yea, God doth often hide himſelf from his people on purpoſe to try whether they will truſt him and wait upon him under ſuch withdrawings, for ſalvation, whether temporal or eternal, (Pſal. 45. 15.) Thou art a God, that hideſt thy ſelf, O God of Iſrael, the Saviour: Let us therefore take heed of ſaying, he will be for ever hidden, or that we ſhall never ſee, nor behold him as a Saviour; ſay not it is ſo dark with us, that as now we ſee no light, ſo our night ſhall never have a morning.

Fourthly, From theſe words, Although thou ſayeſt, thou ſhalt not ſee him,

Note, A good man is apt to give his heart and tongue too much liberty.

We ſhould watch our hearts, to keep out or caſt out vain thoughts we ſhould ſtrangle diſtruſtful and unbeliving thoughts in the very birth, that ſo our tongues may never bring them forth, nor publiſh them to the offence of others. Thou haſt ſaid, thou ſhalt not ſee him. But when our unbridled tongues have run at random, and ſpoken what is not right, yet God will do what is right, as the next words aſſure us.

Yet Judgment is before him.] Theſe words plainly intimate, that Jobs ſcope, when he ſaid he ſhould not ſee God, was, that he ſhould not ſee him as a Judge clearing up his cauſe, or appearing to vindicate the wrong done him, and to do him right. As if Elihu had ſaid, Whatever thy opinion is concerning God, that he will never appear in thy cauſe to do thee right, yet know this (O Job) Judgment is before him, and therefore I adviſe thee, be thou better perſwaded both of his preſence with thee, and of his providence over thee. The word rendred Judgment, is that from which one of Patriarchs had his name, and it is a great elegancy, (Gen. 49. 16.) Dan ſhall judge his people. The proper name Dan, is the ſame with the Verb which follows, ſhall judge.

When Judgment is ſaid to be before the Lord, it may be taken three ways, (ſo we find it in the Scripture) Firſt, we read there of Judgment as it is oppoſed to mercy. Theſe terrible and dreadful Judgments of God are every where ſpoken of. Secondly, Judgment is oppoſed to imprudence and want of underſtanding or diſcretion; Judgment is a wiſe and clear ſight or apprehenſion of things; as we ſay ſuch a one is a Judicious man, or a man of great Judgment. Thirdly, Judgment is oppoſed to injuſtice or to unrighteouſneſs; thus we do judgment and juſtice. Many have a great ſtock of judgment or underſtanding, who yet will do little judgment, that is, little juſtice, they have a right underſtanding of things, yet will do little or nothing right.

Here, when it is ſaid, Judgment is before him, we are to underſtand it in the two latter ſenſes; for though it be a great truth that judgment as oppoſed to mercy, is before the Lord, And he ſhall have judgment without mercy, that hath ſhewed no mercy, though (as the Apoſtle adds in the ſame place, James 2.13.) Mercy rejoyceth (or glorieth) againſt Judgment; The Lord hath judgments, all manner of judgments about him, yet that notion of judgment doth not belong to this place, but the two latter. Judgment is before him; that is, he is a God of infinite underſtanding and wiſdom, he ſeeth every thing to the utmoſt, he goes to the bottom of every mans caſe, yea, to the very bottom of every mans heart; he ſees every action quite through, and every perſon: And as he knows the truth of every mans cauſe and caſe, ſo he will do every man right, according to the merit of his cauſe and caſe. Juſtice and Judgment are the habitation of his throne, while clouds and darkneſs are round about him, (Pſal. 97.2.) that is, though preſent diſpenſations are obſcure (as in Jobs caſe) yet both the procedure and dealings of God, as alſo the iſſue or determination which he gives in every matter, is juſt and righteous to all men, as well as gracious and comfortable to good and upright-hearted men. Thus, Judgment, or this judgment is always before him, that is, he hath a clear ſight of it, and he is ready to do it.

Hence Note, Firſt, God hath a right and clear apprehenſion of all perſons and actions;

His underſtanding is infinite. The Lord is (as Hannah ſpake in her Thankſgiving-Song, 1 Sam. 2.3.) a God of knowledge, and by him actions are weighed: That is, he knoweth them exactly, to a grain, as we do the weight of thoſe things which we have laid in an even Balance. It is required of Judges (in that advice which Jethro gave to Moſes, Exod. 18.21.) That they ſhould be able men, that is, (not ſo much men of able purſes, as) of able parts, men of able judgment, and of more than common underſtanding, even ſuch as were able to look through every mans Cauſe that came before them. Such is the ability of the Lords underſtanding to the full, he is Omniſcient, He is light, and in him is no darkneſs at all. And as in him there is no darkneſs, ſo nothing is dark to him; the moſt intricate and knotty Caſe, the moſt ravell'd and vext Cauſe that ever was, is plain and evident before his eyes, with whom we have to do, and who hath to do with us. Judgment is before him; neither is there any Judgment before any other in compariſon of him; God hath ſo much light, that Men and Angels are to him but darkneſs, God ſeeth ſo much, that all others may be ſaid not to ſee, or to be ſtark blind; even thoſe Judges may be called blind, who are not blinded, we may ſay they have no eyes, whoſe eyes are not put out with gifts, compared with God. How blind then are thoſe Judges, who are blinded? and whoſe eyes are put out, either by prejudice or paſſion, by hopes or fears! it cannot be, but Judgment muſt be before God, becauſe as he clearly ſees, and fully underſtands whatſoever comes before him, ſo nothing can divert or biaſs him from doing every man right, according to his ſight and underſtanding. Judgment is before him.

Hence Note, Secondly, God will do right to every man, as ſure as he knows the right of every man.

There are many who know what is right, we know whoſe Cauſe is right, yet will not do right. But as ſure as God knows every mans right, ſo certainly he will do him right. Abraham pleaded thus with God, Shall not the Judge of all the Earth do right? (Gen. 18.25.) Certainly, he will do right, he cannot but do right; Judgement is before him. The Scripture is expreſs, He will reward every man (and award to every man) according to his works. Every man ſhall have as he is; for (as the Apoſtle ſpeaks, 1 Cor. 4. 6.) He ſhall bring to light the hidden things of darkneſs, and make manifeſt the counſels of the heart; and then ſhall every man have praiſe of God; that is, every man ſhall have it, who is fit for it; every man ſhall have praiſe, who is (as we ſay) praiſe-worthy, how much ſoever he hath been diſpraiſed, ſlurr'd in his credit, unworthily dealt with, and accuſed in this world. God will not hold, or detain the truth of men in unrighteouſneſs, though men hold both the truth of God, and the truth of men (the truth of their Cauſes) in unrighteouſneſs. Judgment is before the Lord.

Further, That Particle which we render yet, gives us this Note;

God is never a whit the leſs Righteous, because it doth not appear to us that he is ſo.

Although thou ſayeſt, thou ſhalt not ſee him, yet Judgment is before him. The ways of God are often ſecret, but none of them are unjuſt; Judgment is before him, even then, when we think it is fartheſt off from him. Therefore, if we will give God the glory of governing the world, and of ordering all our perſonal conditions, we muſt not meaſure him by the things we ſee, or which appear; for we cannot ſee the meaſure of his Judgment by what appears, that which appears to us is not his Judgment, ſomething elſe is his judgment, and he in the cloſe will make his judgment clear to all men, he will make it appear that judgment is his, though what his judgment is doth not appear. The miſapprehenſions, or miſ-conſtructions of men do not at all retard or ſtop the righteouſneſs of God, as the Apoſtle ſpeaks in another caſe (Rom. 3.3.) Shall the unbelief of man make the Faith of God (that is, the Faithfulneſs of God) of none effect? God forbid; God will be Faithful and True, though all the world be Unbelievers and Lyars. Now, as the unbelief of man cannot make the Faithfulneſs of God of none effect; ſo our not believing that Judgment proceeds, or our ſaying it is delayed, does not at all take off God from righteouſneſs in doing Judgment; he is doing Judgment righteouſly, whatever apprehenſions men have of his doings. Judgment is before him;

Therefore truſt thou in him.] Elihu according to the firſt reading of the former words, exhorts Job to Repentance, Judge thy ſelf; and here he exhorts him to Faith, Truſt thou in him. Judgment is before him, therefore truſt thou in him, or wait and hope in him; for ſeeing God is a Juſt and Righteous Judge, he will not neglect or ſlight the Cauſe of any of his People; therefore they have all the reaſon in the world to truſt in him, and wait upon him. It is unbelief which makes haſte, Faith is content to wait and tarry.

The Original word hath ſeveral ſignifications. Firſt, More general, to grieve, or be in pain and trouble. Secondly, In ſpecial, to bring forth, or the pain of a woman in travel to bring forth; there is much pain in that travel. Thus ſome tranſlate here, Wait for him, as a woman in travel waits for deliverance. Thirdly, As it ſignifies to have pain, and to have that pain in bringing forth children, ſo to attend, to wait, to ſtay quietly, and expect. Reſt in the Lord (ſaith David, Pſal. 37. 7.) and wait patiently for him. We may give the reaſon of this ſignification from that alluſion. The woman though ſhe be in pain, yet ſhe patiently bears it, becauſe ſhe hath hope a man ſhall be born into the world, (John 16. 21.) A woman in that pain, hath not only patience but comfort under it, becauſe ſhe hopes a child ſhall ſhortly be born, who will recompence all her ſorrows, in bearing and bringing him forth into the world. That's the force of this word, Truſt in him. Thou art in pain, in trouble, in travel for the preſent, yet thou ſhalt have a bleſſed deliverance, thou ſhalt certainly find, that it is not in vain to truſt upon God. Thus Elihu adviſeth Job to ſuch a patience as a woman in travel with child hath, who bears her pains comfortably, being refreſhed and ſupported with an aſſurance, and fore-ſenſe of that joy which ſhe ſhall have, being once delivered. Truſt thou in him. I have in ſome other places of this Book, met with this Point of truſting in God, Job ſaid in the 13. Chapter of this Book, (verſ. 15.) Though he ſlay me, yet will I truſt in him; And therefore I ſhall not ſtay to open that general duty, or the exerciſe of that Grace, which here Elihu exhorts Job to, Truſting in, or waiting upon God. Only from the Connexion,

Note, Firſt, It is our duty to wait and truſt upon God.

And 'tis ſuch a duty as will keep us cloſe to all other duties; a mind ſtaid on God, is a mind fit to move about any good work whatſoever, which God calleth us unto.

Secondly, Put all together, Thou ſayeſt, thou ſhalt not ſee him, (thou art doubtful whether ever things will mend,) yet Judgment is before him, therefore truſt.

Hence note, When things are not clear to us, when we have no light about what God is doing, or what he will do, yet it is our duty to truſt and wait upon God.

We muſt wait upon God, and truſt in him, though we do not ſee him, yea, though we cannot ſee him, for Judgment is before him. That of the Prophet (Iſa. 50. 10.) is a clear proof of this duty, (and ſome expound this Scripture ſpecially reſpecting outward dark providences, as others of inward darkneſs, or darkneſs of ſpirit) Who is among you that feareth the Lord, and obeyeth that voyce of his ſervants, that walketh in darkneſs, and hath no light (as Job ſaith here, I ſhall not ſee him) What ſhall a poor benighted ſoul do in that caſe? The anſwer or advice followeth, Let him truſt in the name of the Lord, and ſtay upon his God. How dark ſoever our condition is, yet it is our duty to truſt upon God; and if once we are enabled to give God the glory due to his name, in confeſſing, that Judgement is before him, we ſhall readily truſt upon him, to order all things for us, though all things ſeem out of order, even to amazement; though we ſee heaven and earth, as it were, confounded, yet we ſhall readily truſt upon him, becauſe we believe, that even then Judgment is before him. How ſoon can he turn our darkneſs into light, who in the firſt Creation, when all lay together in a confuſed heap, and darkneſs over all, brought forth light and ſet all in order? The Lord can command light out of darkneſs, good out of evil, order out of confuſion, and he can do all this eaſily, and at an inſtant; therefore whatever the appearances of things are, let not us judge according to appearance, but hope and wait, and ſtick to what God hath promiſed. Though providences appear croſs to promiſes and propheſies, yet they never fruſtrate either. Let us alſo be ſure to ſtick to the commandments of God, for we may reſt aſſured, God will ſtick to his promiſes. To keep Commandments is our work, to keep promiſes is Gods work; though we fail much in our work, God will not fail at all in his work: To believe this, is the higheſt and trueſt work of faith. But if we are faithful in our work, the keeping of Commandments, we have a further evidence, that God will be faithful in his work, the keeping or fulfilling of promiſes, (a great part, the moſt ſpiritual part of Gods fulfilling promiſes, being his enabling of us to keep Commandments) and then we ſhall be able to ſay, not only in faith, but from experience, that Judgment is before him. And until we come to this concluſion of faith in dark times, when we cannot ſee him, the ſoul never ſits down in reſt. Nothing fixes the ſoul but truſt in God; we are unquiet, yea we boyl with unquietneſs, and toſs as the angry Sea with the winds, till we truſt fully upon God, upon his wiſdom and power, upon his goodneſs and faithfulneſs, and can ſay, let him do as ſeems good in his eyes; we know he is and will be good to Iſrael, even to ſuch as are of a clean heart. When we can once ſtay our minds on God, we are quiet; but when we muſt bring God to our mind, and muſt have God go our pace, or come at our time, and work in our way, (none of which he will do, what a do ſoever we make to have it ſo) O how reſtleſs and troubled are we, even like the troubled Sea when it cannot reſt! And O how much of this reſtleſs trouble diſcovers it ſelf in the minds of many (that I ſay not the moſt of) men, and all becauſe they cannot truſt God when they do not ſee him, or becauſe when they do not ſee him (which was Jobs failing) they ſay, they ſhall not ſee him. If matters come not to paſs according to their platform, and model, or hit not the dates and days, the times and ſeaſons which they have fixt in their unſcriptural Kalendar, or by a miſtake of the Scripture Kalendar, they are ready to ſay, they ſhall not ſee him, their hopes are as the giving up of the ghoſt, that is, they give all for loſt, and paſt recovery. Many truſt God (as they do ſome men) no farther than they ſee him; they are the worſt and coarſeſt ſort of men, whom we truſt no otherwiſe. How diſhonourable then, how infinitely below God is ſuch a truſt? Elihu would have Job (and ſo ſhould we) truſt God, though he could not ſee him, and ſaid he ſhould not. Thou haſt ſaid, thou ſhalt not ſee him, yet truſt in him.

Laſtly, From the illative particle, therefore (that is, becauſe Judgment is before him) truſt thou in him, Note hence, The conſideration of the Righteouſneſs and Juſtice of God, is a mighty argument to provoke us to truſt him, and wait upon him.

Truſt is not every bodies due; ſome (as we ſpeak proverbially) are to be truſted no farther than a man can throw a Milſtone, that is, they are not to be truſted at all: Truſt (I ſay) is not every bodies due: but to truſt God is every bodies duty, yea and intereſt too, for he is clothed as much with righteouſneſs and juſtice, as he is with ſtrength and power. Will you not truſt an honeſt man, will you not truſt a wiſe man? We can come to a height of confidence in man ſometimes, if we think him a man of judgment and wiſdom, of honeſty and faithfulneſs, we can truſt all we have in ſuch a mans hand; how much more ſhould we ſay to God, ſeeing Judgment is before him, therefore will we truſt in him! We have an eminent Scripture, urging this duty upon this ground, (Iſa. 30. 18.) The Lord is a God of Judgment (Judgment is there taken in the ſame notion as here in the Text, he is a wiſe and juſt God, the Lord is a God of judgment, what followeth) Bleſſed are they that wait for him. There can be nothing ſaid, more urging, more encouraging to wait and truſt on God, to do us right, then this, He is a God of Judgment, a righteous God, Judgment is before him.

Thus far of the good counſel which Elihu gave Job in this his dark and deſerted ſtate; and counſel it was worthy to be embraced with both arms, and with an open breaſt; and that Job had need of it, he ſhews in the next words, while he tells Job and us, it was not ſo with him yet, as appeared by the ſad hand of God upon him, and his own diſtemper under it.

VERS. 15, 16.

But now becauſe it is not ſo, he hath viſited in his anger, yet he knoweth it not in great extremity.

Therefore doth Job open his mouth in vain: he multiplieth words without knowledge.

IN the cloſe of the former verſe, Elihu called upon and exhorted Job to a patient reliance, and truſt on God, Judgment is before him, therefore truſt thou in him; here in the 15. verſe he ſhews, that the reaſon why God viſited him ſo ſorely, and yet continued his viſitation upon him, was becauſe he did not, as he ought, patiently truſt in, and rely upon him.

There are ſeveral readings of this verſe, but I ſhall only mention one, beſides our own, and having ſtayed a little about that, go on to the explication of the Text, as it lies in order before us. Some render thus;

But know now, his anger hath viſited thee but a little, (Hebr. nothing) neither hath he made any great inquiſition, The ſenſe of the verſe, according to his rendring, riſeth thus; As if Elihu had ſaid, God hath dealt with thee, O Job, far better than thou haſt dealt with him, or then thou haſt cauſe to expect; he hath not laid his hand ſo heavy upon thee, as thy iniquity hath deſerved, and yet thou complaineſt much of his ſeverity; whereas indeed he hath not ſtrictly inquired into the multitude of thy ſins, which if he had done, he would certainly have brought upon thee, a greater multitude of afflictions, he would have afflicted thee much more: Thou art too well uſed to complain thus; That's the ſum of this rendring, which the learned Authors of it make fairly out from the Original, to whom I refer the Reader, and ſhall only offer two notes from it, for inſtruction.

Nunc autem ſcito quod paululum te viſitavit ira ipſius, neque inquiſivit multum admodum. Merc. Scito perexiguum eſſe, quo te deus iratus plectit, niſi leviter in te inquirere maluiſſet. Bez.

First, The ſoreſt afflictions that fall upon ſinners in this life are little or nothing to what God might lay upon them.

There is no condition here actually ſo bad, but poſſibly it might be worſe; though the darkneſs of night be upon us, yet it may be darker with us; God can make a night ſo dark, that the former darkneſs may be called light; God can add ſo much bitterneſs to that which is very bitter, ſo much weight to that burden of affliction, which is already very heavy, that the former bitter may be called ſweet, and that former weight of affliction, light. Are any poor, ſick, or pained, God can make them poorer, ſicker, and ſo increaſe their pain, that former poverty, ſickneſs, pain, may go for riches, health, and eaſe. And as preſent ſufferings of one kind or other, are but little to what they may be, ſo they are but little to what we have deſerved they ſhould be: The leaſt mercy is more than we deſerve, and the greateſt affliction is leſs than we deſerve. He hath viſited thee little or nothing, (ſo the word is) ſaith Elihu, according to this reading of the Text. The Lord hath not only not viſited thee too much O Job, but he may be ſaid, not to have viſited thee at all, or the All of thy viſitation is nothing to that which the Lord could have brought upon thee. David gives a general aſſertion near this concerning the dealings of the Lord, in his angry diſpenſations, (Pſal. 103. 10.) He hath not dealt with us after our ſins, nor rewarded us according to our iniquities; that is, our ſins and our iniquities might have born out the Juſtice of God in laying heavier evils and troubles upon us, than yet he hath done. Sinners never have their full puniſhment till they come to hell. As the ſweeteſt joys and ſtrongeſt conſolations which the godly find and feel on earth, are only taſts and firſt-fruits of that they ſhall have in heaven; ſo all the ſorrows and ſufferings of the wicked in this world, are but taſts, light touches and beginnings of ſorrow, compared with the pains and ſorrows of the next world, where ſinners ſhall be paid their wages in full.

Et nunc quia nihil eſt quod viſitavit ira ejus. Druſ.

Secondly, From the latter part of the verſe thus tranſlated, Neither hath he made any great inquiſition; that is, he hath not taken ſtrict knowledge of thy ſins, though a multitude, though even paſt number; though there be abundance of them, and they abounding in ſinfulneſs, yet he hath not made any great inquiſition after them;

Utrumque viſitandi & recenſendi vel cognoſcendi verbum in hoc loco judicis vel magiſtratus in peccatores animadverſionem, inquiſitionem punitioni conjunctam importat. Bold.

Hence Note, The Lord doth not ſeverely mark the ſins of his people, no not the multitude nor magnitude of their ſins, to puniſh them.

(Pſal. 130. 3.) If thou Lord ſhouldeſt mark iniquity, implying that the Lord doth not mark (in the ſenſe here intended) if thou ſhouldeſt mark iniquity, O Lord, who ſhall ſtand? The word in that Pſalm rendred to mark, notes, firſt, to watch, or to obſerve with exacteſt diligence, and is therefore in the Noun rendred a watchTower, upon which a man is placed to take obſervation of all things that are done, and of all perſons that paſs by, or approach and come near. A Watch-man placed upon a high Tower, is bound induſtriouſly and critically to obſerve all Paſſengers, and paſſages all that his eye can reach: So ſaith the Text, If thou ſhouldeſt mark as a Watch-man, and eye with rigour every thing that paſſeth from us, Who could ſtand? That is, make good his Cauſe in the day of his judgment and trial before thee? Secondly, The word ſignifieth to keep in mind, to lay up, to have, as it were, a ſtore and ſtock, a memorial or record, of ſuch and ſuch things by us. In that notion it is ſaid (Gen. 37. 11.) Joſephs Brethren envied him, but his Father obſerved the ſaying; he marked what Joſeph ſpake about his Dreams, he laid it up, and did not let it paſs away as a Dream, or a viſion of the night: Thus in the Pſalm, If the Lord ſhould mark iniquity, if he ſhould treaſure up our ſins in his memory, and keep them by him, who were able to ſtand when accounted with? The Lord in a way of grace, ſeeth as if he ſaw not, and winks at us oftentimes when we do amiſs, as he is ſaid to have done at thoſe times, the times of ignorance, when not only many things, but even every thing was done amiſs, and out of order, in the dark Gentile world, before the approach of Goſpel light, (Acts 17. 30.) And the times of this ignorance God winked at, but now commandeth all men every where to repent. That is, the Lord took little notice of thoſe untaught times, in compariſon of that ſtrict notice which he will take of theſe times; concerning which, he gave command to his Apoſtles, Go and teach all Nations; and yet the ſtricteſt notice which he takes of our ſins in theſe times, is but little to what he might.

So much from that Tranſlation of the Text; our own runs thus:

Verſ. 15. But now becauſe it is not ſo, he hath viſited in his anger; yet he knoweth it not in great extremity.

We muſt expound this Verſe in Connexion with the latter part of the former.

But now becauſe it is not ſo.] What is not ſo? what is miſſing? what is wanting? What had Job done amiſs? or what had he miſt to do? Elihu ſeems to anſwer, he hath miſt the doing of that duty which he was moved in the cloſe of the foregoing Verſe, expreſſed in thoſe words, Truſt thou in him, or wait upon him: But now becauſe it is not ſo; that is, Becauſe thou doſt not put forth ſuch acts of holy confidence, and patient waiting upon God as thou oughteſt, and as I admoniſhed thee to do, therefore God is engaged, and even compelled to treat thee thus roughly and ſeverely, He hath viſited in his anger. As if he had ſaid, Though thou haſt profeſſed a truſt in God, yet thou doſt not truſt in him fully, as becomes thee, yea, thou ſeemeſt ſometimes (as a man forlorn) to caſt up thy hopes; therefore, becauſe thou doſt not truſt in him, becauſe it is not ſo as I have exhorted and directed thee, the Lord hath viſited in anger. Mr. Broughton renders, But now for miſſing, his anger doth viſit. For miſſing; that is, for miſſing of duty, or for not acting up to duty, for not truſting fully in the Lord, the Lord hath viſited thee in his anger. This ſenſe is obvious and commodious according to our reading. But now becauſe it is not ſo,

He hath viſited in his anger,] or ſtrictly, his anger hath viſited; That is, God hath heavily afflicted thee. God is far from all paſſion and perturbation of mind, only he is ſaid to be angry, or to viſit in his anger, when he doth that which anger produceth among men; when he caſts down and puniſheth, when he lays his hand ſorely upon the Creature, then he is ſaid to be angry, then His anger hath viſited. The word notes quick breathing in the Noſtrils; anger appears, or vents it ſelf there; as it is ſaid of Paul, when Saul (Acts 9. 1.) And Saul yet breathing out threatnings, and ſlaughter againſt the Diſciples of the Lord, went unto the High Prieſt. You might ſee anger, as it were foam, yea flame out of his mouth, and evaporate at his noſtrils. Thus ſaith Elihu, Becauſe it is not ſo, his anger

Homo tentatur & in examen vocatur ut probetur ejus ſpes & patientia; quandoquidem igitur illa non extat, invaſit ira ejus, qua odit, & amolitur peccatum, etiam in iis quos diligit, & ſalvos vult maxime. Coc.

Hath viſited.] To viſit, is properly to go, and ſee any perſon whom we reſpect and love; thus we viſit friends in civility and courteſie. Secondly, To viſit is an act of pity and mercy; and thus we viſit the ſick, the widow, and the fatherleſs (James 1. 27.) Pure Religion, and undefiled before God, and the Father, is to viſit the fatherleſs and widows in their affliction; that is, to go to them in pity, either for the ſupply of their wants by our purſe, or for the comforting of their hearts by our counſel. Thirdly, We viſit in care, as well as in kindneſs, that is, when we go to our Families or Flocks, or places of charge, whereſoever they are, and ſee that, or whether, all things are well and right with them, or well, and rightly done towards them, according to the rules that ſuch perſons under our charge ought to act, and live by: Thus in Colledges and Hoſpitals, there is a viſitation of care, to make enquiry of perſons in truſt, about perſons and things under their truſt.

To the point in hand; there is a twofold viſitation of God.

Firſt, He viſits in love and mercy, (Ruth 1. 6.) Then ſhe (that is Naomi) aroſe with her Daughter in Law, that ſhe might return from the Country of Moab, for ſhe had heard in the Country of Moab, how that the Lord had viſited his people in giving them bread. That is, God had ſhewed them kindneſs and mercy in relieving them from that devouring famine. Again, (Gen. 21. 6.) And the Lord viſited Sarah, as he ſaid; that is, he gave her the promiſed mercy of a Son. Once more, (Luke 1. 68.) Bleſſed be the Lord God of Iſrael, for he hath viſited, and redeemed his People; and that's a bleſſed viſitation indeed, which brings redemption. Thus the Scripture often ſpeaks of Gods viſitation in mercy.

Secondly, There is a viſitation of God in anger, wrath and judgment. The Law ſaith (Exod. 20. 4, 5.) Thou ſhalt not make to thy ſelf any graven Image, &c. Thou ſhalt not bow down thy ſelf to them, nor ſerve them; for I the Lord thy God am a jealous God, viſiting the iniquity of the Fathers upon the Children, unto the third and fourth Generation of them that hate me: That is puniſhing the iniquity of the Fathers upon the Children theſe Children continuing in their Fathers ways, to do ſinfully; ſuch Children as take up the evil examples, or tread in the bad ſteps of their fore-Fathers, ſhall ſuffer for it. The Prophet at once upbraided the impudent Jews, and threatned them in this Language, (Jer. 6. 15.) Were they aſhamed when they had committed abominations? nay, they were not aſhamed, neither could they bluſh; therefore they ſhall fall among them that fall at the time that I viſit them, they ſhall be caſt down, ſaith the Lord. Again, (Iſa. 26. 14.) Therefore haſt thou viſited and deſtroyed them. There is a viſitation for deſtruction, that's a ſad viſitation. In this ſenſe we read of a time of viſitation (Jer. 8. 12. Jer. 10. 15.) We read of days of viſitation, (Hoſea 9. 7.) The days of viſitation are come, the days of recompence are come. We read alſo of a year of viſitation, (Jer. 23. 12.) For I will bring evil upon them, even the year of their viſitation, ſaith the Lord. As alſo (Chap. 11. 23.) I will bring evil upon the men of Anathoth, even the year of their viſitation. This is the viſitation here ſpoken of; it is a time, a day, a year of ſore viſitation with thee, O Job. Becauſe it is not ſo, he hath viſited in his anger.

Hence note, Firſt, God expects the work of Faith and Patience, when his afflicting hand is upon us.

Faith hath much work to do at all times, but moſt in times of affliction. There is alſo a uſe of two ſorts of patience in our beſt days; the patience of labouring in Gods work, and the patience of waiting for the reward of our work, after all our labours: But in ſad days the Lord expects we ſhould exerciſe both patience in ſuffering, and in waiting for deliverance out of all our ſufferings; then 'tis that both Faith and Patience, truſting and waiting muſt have their perfect work.

Secondly Note, When the Lord doth not find or ſee, as he expects, the work of Faith and Patience in a time of affliction, he will afflict more and more until he finds or works it.

This is it which Elihu ſaith in the Text, Becauſe it is not ſo, he hath viſited in his anger. Job was ſorely afflicted before, but now he is viſited in anger, becauſe he did not manifeſt ſuch truſt in God as he expected in that condition. As when the wicked repent not of their ſins under the puniſhing hand of God, he will puniſh them more and more, even ſeven times more for their ſins, (Levit. 26. 41.) So when good men act not their Graces, believe not, truſt not under the afflicting hand of God, he uſually afflicts them more and more, gives them ſorer ſtripes, and layeth yet heavier burdens on them. When God miſſeth what he look'd for, we may quickly feel what we looked not for. Mr. Broughtons Tranſlation ſpeaks the Point fully, But now for miſſing, his anger doth viſit. Man ſeldom miſſeth trouble from God, when God miſſeth duty from man; and 'tis a mercy that he doth not: 'tis mans mercy when God minds him of his deficiencies in duty, though by a ſmart viſiting rod. Thus the Lord ſpake of Davids Seed, (and 'tis to be underſtood of all the Seed of Chriſt, whom David typed, Pſal. 89.) If his children forſake my Law, (verſ. 30, 31.) Then (verſ. 32.) will I viſit their tranſgreſſions with the Rod, &c. How true this charge of Elihu was, as to Jobs omiſſion of duty, I ſhall not ſtay to enquire; only this we know, Job had profeſſed truſt in God, yet becauſe it was mingled with ſo much complaint, with ſo many unbelieving expoſtulations, Elihu might ſay the Lord miſſed the patience, truſt and confidence, which he expected from Job. Doubtleſs, more of all theſe ſhould have appeared in him, and they ſhould have appeared more in that time of affliction. There are two things which God looketh for, and aims at in the time of our affliction; firſt, the mortifying of corruptions, that they work no more, at leaſt no more ſo ſtrongly as they have done; Secondly, The ſtirring up, and acting of our Graces, that they may be more working, and work more ſtrongly than ever they have done. Where the Lord ſees not theſe effects of affliction, that our ſins grow leſs, and our graces more, that we complain leſs, and truſt or believe more, we are like to be afflicted more, and he will diſcover his anger more. Becauſe it is not ſo, he hath viſited in his anger. And thence,

Note, Thirdly, Diſtruſt or impatience under the afflicting hand of God, or our not truſting God in our worſt condition patiently, is a very provoking ſin.

We provoke the Lord to viſit us in his anger, when we do not truſt in his mercy. Our not-truſting God muſt needs provoke him to anger; for when we do not truſt him, we queſtion him; diſtruſt or unbelief queſtions all that God is, and all that God hath promiſed, it queſtions his Truth, and his Faithfulneſs, his Power, his Mercy, and his Goodneſs; all theſe, which are the glory of God, and in all which the ſons of men ought to glorifie him, theſe are all queſtioned and darkned, when we put not forth acts of truſt and reliance upon God, in times of greateſt affliction and extremity. Is it not then a provoking ſin, I ſay not to withdraw truſt from God, and give it to an arm of fleſh, but not to put freſh and full acts of truſt upon God, let our affliction or extremity be what it will! The Children of Iſrael were in great extremity at the Red Sea, a mighty Army purſuing them at the heels to deſtroy them, and mighty waters being before them, ready to ſwallow them up; in theſe ſtraits (whileſt they ſhould have done their utmoſt to get, and aſſure God to be their Friend) the Pſalmiſt tells us, They provoked him, (Pſal. 106. 7.) But wherein lay their provocation? that Scripture ſaith, They remembred not the multitude of his mercies: The former mercies of the Lord did not ſtrengthen their truſt in preſent troubles; that was one provocation. And as former mercies did not ſtrengthen their truſt, ſo the preſent trouble drew out their diſtruſt, as another Scripture aſſures, reporting their behaviour in it (Exod. 14. 11.) And they ſaid to Moſes, Becauſe there were no Graves in Egypt, haſt thou taken us away to die in the Wilderneſs? Wherefore haſt thou dealt thus with us, to carry us forth out of Egypt? What were theſe fearful fore-caſts, theſe amazing bodements of an unavoidable (as they apprehended) ruine, but the overflowings of unbelief, or diſtruſt in God; and this was another provocation. Former mercies are forgotten, yea eaten up by unbelief, as the ſeven lean Kine in Pharaohs dream, eat up the fat ones, and preſent difficulties are aggravated by unbelief, as if all the power of God could not remove and overcome them. And will not the Lord (think you) viſit in anger for ſuch a ſin as this?

Again, As Elihu doth not ſay barely, he hath viſited, but he hath viſited in his anger, or his anger hath viſited, ſo conſider, who was it that was thus viſited in anger? It was Job, a godly man perfect and upright.

Hence note, Fourthly, God viſits or afflicts, even his own people, his elect, and choiceſt ſervants, with fatherly anger, when they diſpleaſe and provoke him.

We find the Scripture ſpeaking expreſly of the anger of God towards the beſt of his ſervants, even towards a Moſes, (as himſelf made confeſſion, Deut. 1. 37.) when they diſpleaſe him; Alſo the Lord was angry with me for your ſakes, ſaying, thou alſo ſhalt not go in thither. Moſes was a moſt meek man, the meekeſt man upon the face of the earth, nor was he an inferiour in any other grace, yet the Lord was angry with him, and angry with him upon that ſpecial occaſion, his unbelief, (Numb. 20. 12.) And the Lord ſpake unto Moſes and Aaron, becauſe ye believe me not, to ſanctifie me in the eyes of the children of Iſrael, therefore &c. We read of the Lords anger breaking out againſt Aaron for another ſin, (Numb. 12. 9.) The anger of the Lord, was kindled againſt them, that is, againſt Aaron and Miriam, becauſe they had ſpoken againſt Moſes, (verſ. 1. 8.) Aaron was the High Prieſt, and as he was high in office, ſo eminent in grace; and doubtleſs Miriam was a very gracious woman, yet the Lord was not only angry with them, but exceeding angry; his anger waxed hot againſt them and kindled, when they forgot their duty to Moſes, and remembred not their diſtance with reverence. Solomon in his prayer at the Dedication of the Temple, ſpeaks of the people of God collectively; If they ſin againſt thee, and thou be angry with them. The Lord is not only angry with the world, but angry with his Church, not only angry with Babylon, but with Jeruſalem. And as Solomon ſpake that of the whole Nation of the Jews, ſuppoſing they might fall under the Lords anger all together as a body, ſo he did experience it ſadly in his own perſon, (1 Kings 9. 11.) And the Lord was angry with Solomon becauſe his heart was turned from the Lord God of Iſrael, which had appeared unto him twice. Wiſe Solomon departed from God through an evil heart of unbelief and vanity, after the Lord had come and appeared to him more than once in grace and favour; and the bitter effects or fruits of that departure, appeared to him ſhortly after, the Lord (ſaith that Scripture) was angry with Solomon; and the ſequel of his Hiſtory tells us, there went out very hot diſpleaſure againſt him.

As theſe Scriptures are a proof of the Lords anger kindling againſt his people when they ſin; ſo we find the Church repreſented praiſing the Lord for quenching the fire of his anger, (Iſa. 12. 1.) And in that day thou ſhalt ſay, O Lord, I will praiſe thee: though thou waſt angry with me, thine anger is turned away, and thou comforteſt me. When we turn from God, his anger is turned againſt us, and when we turn to God, his anger is turned away from us. When the Lord is angry, what can comfort us, but the turning away of his anger? And by the very act of turning away his anger, he comforts us, though all the world be angry with us.

But ſome may ſay, How doth the Lord, who is ſaid to love his people with an everlaſting love, viſit them in anger? To clear that, we may diſtinguiſh of anger.

Firſt, There is correcting anger: Secondly, there is conſuming or deſtroying anger. Deſtroying anger is inconſiſtent with everlaſting love, but not correcting anger: correcting anger may be very grievous, therefore the Prophet deprecates it, (Jer. 10.24.) Correct me, O Lord, in Judgment, not in thy anger. The Lord doth often exerciſe (that is as often as there is cauſe, and we give him cauſe too often to exerciſe) a ſmart and ſevere anger towards his own people; but his conſuming and deſtroying anger is the lot and portion of the wicked; If his anger be kindled but a little (namely againſt his enemies) bleſſed are they that truſt in him; bleſſed are they that believe, when the anger of the Lord breaks forth againſt unbelievers. Or we may ſtate it thus;

Firſt, God is angry with ſinful perſons; thus he is angry with the world, or with wicked men.

Secondly, God is angry with perſons for ſinning, (there is a great difference between theſe two; anger with ſinful perſons, and anger with perſons for their ſin, or for ſinning) and thus he is angry with his own people, even with the godly when they ſin, though not for every ſin.

Further, We may diſtinguiſh of anger thus; There is anger mixed with a deſire of taking revenge upon thoſe that we are angry with, a revengeful anger: thus the Lord is angry only with the wicked. Of this anger Moſes ſpeaks, having deſcribed a preſumptuous ſinner, who believes not only without a word, but againſt the word, who when he heareth the word of the curſe, bleſſeth himſelf in his heart, ſaying, I ſhall have peace, though I walk in the imagination of mine heart, to add drunkenneſs unto thirſt; then the anger of the Lord and his jealouſie ſhall ſmoak againſt that man, &c. (Deut. 29. 19, 20.) Read more of this revengeful anger of the Lord, (Deut. 32. 22, 41, 42.) Secondly, there is anger with a deſire to reform, and reclaim thoſe that we are angry with: Thus a loving and indulgent father is angry with his child, when he hath committed a fault; he is angry, not with an anger of deſire to revenge, but with an anger of deſire to reform. And thus the Lord is angry with his own people, with his choiceſt ſervants, and deareſt children, when they forget their duty and play the wantons.

Laſtly, We may diſtinguiſh of anger thus; There is Firſt, a temporary anger: As there is a temporary faith in hypocrites, ſo (we may ſay) there is a temporary anger in God againſt the faithful when offending; that is, he is angry with them for a while, for a ſeaſon: Sing unto the Lord, O ye Saints of his, and give thanks at the remembrance of his Holineſs, (ſaith David, Pſal. 30. 4.) But why doth he call them to ſinging? we have the reaſon of it given at the 5. verſe, For his anger endureth but a moment; he ſpeaks there of the Lords anger againſt his Saints and peculiar people: while they indeed have cauſe to mourn for provoking the Lord to anger, they may alſo ſing, both becauſe his anger endureth but for a moment, that is, becauſe (if that be all) it endureth not at all, (a moment is of no endurance) as alſo becauſe in his favour is life; weeping may endure for a night, but joy cometh in the morning, Once more, hear the Prophets report of the Lords anger, (Micah 7. 18.) Who is a God like unto thee, that pardoneth iniquity, and paſſeth by the tranſgreſſion of the remnant of his heritage; he retaineth not his anger for ever, becauſe he delighteth in mercy. God doth not retain his anger for ever; that is, not long; yea, that not for ever, is but a little while, a moment, and that but a ſmall moment, as the Prophet Iſaiah ſpake, (Chap. 54. 7.) As if he had ſaid, The Lords anger is not retained ſo long, as if it ſhould be always retained; his anger towards you is ſoon blown over, and gone, upon the matter (like a moment) as ſoon as come. Such is the anger which God diſcovers towards his own people.

Secondly, There is anger for ever, an abiding wrath, a fire of anger which never goeth out, nor can be put out, which is kindled in the breaſt of God againſt ungodly men, and againſt them only as living and dying without repentance, in their ungodlineſs. Job a godly man, was viſited in the former, not in this latter anger.

Yet for the fuller anſwer to this query, as it concerns Jobs caſe, I conceive Elihu ſpeaks with the higheſt and hardeſt towards him. For though it be a truth, that the Lord diſcovers, as was ſhewed before, a fatherly anger towards his children when he chaſteneth them for their ſin, yet he chaſteneth them more, or rather, in love than in anger; As whom he loves, he rebukes and chaſtens, (Rev. 3.19.) ſo he chaſtens and rebukes them in love. And as for Job, whom God dearly loved, it is clear from the firſt and ſecond Chapters of this Book, that God afflicted him not for any ſpecial ſin, or way of ſinning, but for his tryal, and to ſet him up as a great pattern of patience to all ſucceeding generations. Or we may ſay that God afflicted Job, not becauſe of any provocation which he had given him, but as Satans inſtance and provocation, (Chap. 2. 3.) All that can be ſaid for Elihu's help in ſaying that God viſited him in anger, is only this, That though Job had not provoked the Lord to viſit him in anger when he began to viſit him, yet ſome impatient and over-bold ſpeeches of his, or that liberty of ſpeech which he took in expoſtulating and almoſt conteſting with God about his afflictions, might cauſe him to viſit him in ſuch anger as hath been ſet forth in anſwer to the query. And now becauſe it is not ſo, becauſe the Lord miſſeth thoſe acts of grace, truſt and patience, which thy caſe calleth thee to the exerciſe of, He hath viſited in his anger; and what followeth?

Yet he knoweth it not in great extremity.] Elihu ſeems to have ſpoken this turning himſelf to the company, and complaining to them of Jobs inſenſibleneſs, Yet he knoweth not, &c.

Some refer this clauſe of the verſe to God alſo, He hath viſited in his anger, and taketh no notice of the great increaſe, or of that which is greatly increaſed; that is, God hath ſpared nothing from his viſitation, although the party viſited were never ſo much grieved or damnified in the loſs and ſpoil of his all. There was a neceſſity (ſaith this Author) that he who was viſited ſhould be ſo toucht as to be ſenſible of the ſtroke; which could not be, unleſs the greateſt of his increaſe, and thoſe things which were moſt dear to him were taken away from him, or he were ſtript naked and bereaved of them.

Et non advertit ad auctum valde (i.e.) Nihil diſcrevit: (ſc. deus) quod non viſitaret etiamſi ea re viſitatus magis doleret. Nam neceſſe erat viſitatum ita tangi ut ſentiret: quod fieri non poterat, ſi non & pleraq; & chariſſima quoque bona adimerentur. Coc.

Our tranſlation refers theſe words to the perſon viſited, as if he, though reduced to the greateſt extremities, yet was not ſenſible of it, or took no notice of what he ſuffered, or was done to him; Yet he knoweth it not in great extremity. Who knoweth not? the Antecedent to he is Job, according to this tranſlation; becauſe he knoweth not. But what did not Job know? Firſt, He knew not the dealings of God with him, to ſubmit to them as he ſhould. Secondly, He knew not that there was ſuch a miſs or deficiency in the acting of his graces, he perceived not how weak a ſoul he had in that weak body; his truſt, his faith, did not act, and yet he knew it not, or took no notice of his failing in thoſe duties. Thirdly, He hath viſited in his anger, yet he knoweth it not, that is, he knoweth not the anger of God, who viſiteth him. To know may be taken three ways.

Firſt, For the bare notion or apprehenſion of a thing; thus; certainly Job did know that he was viſited, for he ſpake often and enough of it.

Secondly, To know, is to conſider, to lay a thing to heart, (Iſa. 1. 3.) My people doth not know, Iſrael doth not conſider, the latter part is exegetical, and expounds the former, My people doth not know, that is, doth not conſider. So (Hoſ. 2. 8.) She did not know that I gave her corn, &c. (Pſal. 90. 11.) Who knoweth the power of thy anger? that is, who conſiders it? who weighs what the anger of the Lord is? we have ſweet thoughts, about the mercy, and love, and goodneſs of God, yet 'tis little, very little of any of theſe that we know. The love of God, which we delight to know, paſſeth knowledge, (Eph. 3. 19.) But for the anger of God, which is ſo dreadful, we ſeldom ſet our ſelves to the ſtudy of it; none can know it comhenſively, and few ſeek or labor to know it induſtriouſly, conſiderately.

Thirdly, To know, is to be under a due ſenſe of what we know: We may know a thing, and conſider it, yet not have a feeling of it. I conceive we are to underſtand the word know here, in theſe two latter ſenſes; He knoweth it not; that is, he doth not conſider, nor hath he a due ſenſe, either of the defect of his own graces, that his faith acts not as it ought, that his truſt performs not its part as it ſhould; nor doth he know the anger of God in this viſitation; that is, he knoweth not, nor conſidereth, the ſcope and meaning of God in this angry diſpenſation. Yet he knoweth it not רוב eſt פש Multitudo, multum paſſim occurrit in Targ. Interdum in Hebraiſmo. Merc.

In great extremity.] The word ſignifieth any kind of increaſe (Mal. 4. 2.) They ſhall go forth, and grow up as the Calves of the Stall. So 'tis uſed (Jen. 50. 11.) Becauſe ye are grown fat, we put in the Margin, big or corpulent. (Lev. 13. 5.) If the Plague (of Leproſie he means) increaſe, grow great, and ſpread it ſelf, then &c. Jobs affliction was a great one at firſt, and it grew greater afterwards: He was in great extremity, or in extremities; of what? in great extremity, Firſt, of loſs and poverty in his Eſtate; Secondly, of pain and torment in his Body; Thirdly, of grief and anguiſh in his Soul: In all theſe he ſuffered, and ſuffered extreamly, or in great extremity. Mr. Broughton renders, Becauſe Job knoweth not this great plenty, namely, of ſorrows, which compaſs him about.

This was the cenſure of Elihu upon Job, and Job had given Elihu too much ground for this cenſure. Though Jobs Faith and truſt were ſtrongly at work ſomtimes, yet they did not always continue their in the ſame degree or ſtrength: and while he often complained in his extremity, that God dealt with him as with an enemy, he did not well conſider what that anger of God was, in which he viſited him, during the time of that great extremity: Yet he knoweth it not in great extremity.

As this not knowing is referred to his weakneſs in acting his Graces; now, it is not ſo, yet he knoweth it not;

Note, A godly man is not always ſenſible of his defects and failings in grace.

As ſome have little or no grace, who yet conceit they have much (Rev. 3. 17.) Thou ſayeſt, I am rich, and increaſed in goods, and have need of nothing, and knoweſt not that thou art wretched and miſerable, and poor and naked. So others who have grace, yea, much grace in the habit (as Job had) may be very inſenſible how little it acts, yea they may ſuppoſe it acts much, when the actings of it are intermitted or extreamly ſuppreſſed by paſſion, and corruption: They may think their Faith ſtrong, or that they truſt fully in God, they may think themſelves patient and humble under the hand of God, and yet be greatly defective in the working of all theſe Graces; I mean not ſuch a deficiency only, as is common to all believers (the beſt come ſhort in the exerciſe of grace) but ſome great deficiency may be, and yet the ſoul not ſenſible of it. As ſome are over-ſenſible of their failings, complaining that they have no Faith, no Patience, when they not only have Faith and Patience, as to their Being, but as to their working alſo, and poſſibly, working well. (It is a different work of the Spirit, to act and ſtir up Grace in us, and to diſcover to us the actings and ſtirrings of Grace) Now as ſome godly men act Grace, and know it not, ſo in others that are godly Grace acts not, and they know it not; Faith is down, and they know it not; they can bear little or nothing patiently, yet they take no notice of it. Thus the words of Elihu concerning Job, he knoweth it not, refer to the former part of the verſe, It is not ſo; that is, his Graces act not, yet he takes no notice of it, but thinks Faith and Patience, with other Graces, work well enough.

Secondly, As not knowing refers to the viſitation of God, He hath viſited him in his anger, and he knoweth it not (yea, though) in great extremely, though he have a very hard time of it.

Hence Note, Firſt, A good man may not only be viſited, but extremity viſited by the hand of God;

He may be under many extremities at once; extreamly viſited in Body, extreamly in Mind, extreamly in his Relations, extreamly in his Name, extreamly in all his worldly concernments. As there is no outward evil, for the matter, ſo none for the degree; but a good man may be in it. Let us be moderate in judging thoſe, who are in the extreameſt extremities of ſuffering.

Secondly, Note, Some good men, or good men ſometimes under very great afflictions, are not ſenſible of the hand of the Lord upon them.

As a good man may receive many mercies, and yet not not obſerve (at preſent) how, or from whom he receives them, ſo he may be under angry viſitations or diſpenſations in great extremity, and not mind the dealing of God with him in it, nor what he intendeth by it; yea, he may complain of the burthen, and cry out under the preſſure, yet not know it at that time for his own good, for his humbling or purging. The Prophet ſaith concerning Ephraim, (Hoſ. 7. 9.) Strangers have devoured his ſtrength, and he knoweth it not: That is, Enemies have ſwallowed up, or taken away that wealth; thoſe riches, they have ſubdued thoſe Armies, thoſe Forces, which he looked upon, and boaſted of, as his ſtrength; they have broken him quite with Wars and Invaſions, yet Ephraim knew it not: and not only ſo, but as it followeth, Yea, Gray hairs are here and there upon him; that is, he hath many Symptoms or Signs of ruin and deſtruction, yet he knoweth it not. Grief of heart for great changes in our Eſtate, change the hair; many grow gray with ſorrow. So that, when 'tis ſaid gray hairs are upon him, 'tis an alluſion taken from the Body Natural to the Body Politick; for as when the natural Body of a man hath gray hairs appearing, or (as Solomon allegorizeth, Eccl. 12. 5.) when the Almond-Tree flouriſheth, it is an argument that old Age and infirmities are coming upon him (Gray hairs tell us that Death and the Grave are not far off, they ſignifie ſome decay of nature.) Now as the natural Body hath its gray hairs, ſo a Politick Body, the body of a State hath its gray hairs too; that is, ſomething may come upon a State, which ſheweth that it is declining and waxing old, that it is ready to break, and go to the Grave. I ſhall not ſtay to enquire what are the gray hairs of a Nation; I only bring that Scripture, to prove that many are inſenſible of the hand of God; he viſiteth in his anger, yet man, poſſibly a good man, knoweth it not, as Ephraim knew not of his gray hairs.

But did not Ephraim know his affliction? or did not Job know his? what is it to know, or who may be ſaid to know an affliction?

I anſwer, they only know their afflictions, or that God is viſiting in his anger,

Firſt, who labour to find out the cauſe of Gods viſitation. If we feel the afflicting hand of God upon us, and enquire not, whence is this? why is it ſo? what hath moved or provoked the Lord to this manner of proceeding with us? If, I ſay, we make not ſuch enquiries, we are viſited in anger, and know it not. And therefore in that caſe, the Prophet Jeremy exhorts the afflicted, captivated Church of the Jews in Babylon, to ſearch and try their ways, (Lam. 3. 41.) that is, to conſider why it was ſo with them, what was the cauſe of their capacity. Till we ſit down and make diligent ſearch, why we are viſited, why any affliction or calamity is upon our Perſons and Families, or upon the Kingdoms and Nations reſpectively where we live, we know neither the day of our viſitation, nor what our viſitation is. Then only we know Gods viſitation, when we are ſtudying the cauſes of it; To know a thing is to know it in the cauſes of it.

Scire eſt per cauſas ſcire.

Secondly, They may be ſaid to know the viſitation of the Lord, that are ſtudying, as the cauſe which they have given, ſo the ends and purpoſes which God hath in viſiting them; for how much ſoever we find and ſee the cauſes of an affliction, yet till our hearts are drawn out to anſwer the ends of it, we do not truly know it.

But you will ſay, what are the uſual ends which the Lord hath in afflicting his people?

I anſwer, Firſt, to turn them from ſin; Secondly, to unglew and wean them from the world; Thirdly, that they may live nearer to, or more with him; Fourthly, that they may live more unto him, or (which takes in both the latter ends) that they may enjoy him more while they live, and honour him more with their lives. Now (I ſay) till we are upon this kind of ſtudy, both the cauſes of our viſitation, and the ends of it, and beg that we may both remove thoſe cauſes, and comply with or anſwer thoſe ends, we may be ſaid not to know the viſitation of the Lord, though it be, and we are, in great extremity. And if this be to know the viſitation of God, ſurely many are periſhing and ſinking under the hand of his viſitation; who yet know it not. How many are there, who neither endeavour to ſearch out the cauſes, nor to fulfil the ends for which the Lord viſiteth them in his anger! I conceive this aſſertion, or ſuppoſition at leaſt of Elihu's concerning Job, both as to his not truſting God in his affliction, and not knowing his viſitation, was, though in part true, and occaſion'd on Jobs part, yet over-harſh and ſevere: nor was the inference which he made from it in the next verſe, leſs ſevere and harſh.

Verſ. 16. Therefore doth Job open his mouth in vain, he multiplyeth words without knowledge.

Here's the concluſion of Elihu's third Diſcourſe with Job,

Therefore doth Job open his mouth in vain.

Some connect this verſe with the former, according to the firſt reading of it, before mentioned, that giving a reaſon of this; But now his anger (or he in anger) hath viſited thee but a little, or nothing, &c. Therefore thou, O Job, openeſt thy mouth in vain. As if he had ſaid, Becauſe the anger of God hath not puniſhed Job ſharply enough, nor in proportion to the multitude and greatneſs of his ſins, therefore he ſpeaks thus boldly and raſhly. Therefore doth Job open his mouth in vain.

To open the mouth] is a Periphraſis of ſpeaking; As if he had ſaid, therefore Job ſpeaks in vain. To ſpeak in vain, or to uſe vain words, is to ſpeak to little or no purpoſe, as I have had occaſion to ſhew upon other places of this Bonk (Chap. 15. 2. Chap. 16. 3.) and therefore ſhall not ſtay upon it here. Job was no vain ſpeaker, he uſed to ſpeak words of weight, words of ſoberneſs and truth, yet was overborn by paſſion, though not to ſpeak vain words in the matter, yet to ſpeak or open his mouth in vain.

Therefore Job openeth his mouth in vain.] Conſider the Inference, therefore, that is, Firſt, Becauſe he doth not humble himſelf in a patient dependence upon God; Secondly, becauſe he doth not, as he ought, duly take notice of the purpoſe of God in viſiting him; Thirdly, becauſe he ſeems more ſollicitous and zealous in defending his own right and credit, than the honour and righteouſneſs of God; for all theſe Reaſons he openeth his mouth in vain, that is, he loſeth his labour, in all this diſcourſe, and might (as we ſpeak proverbially) have ſaved his breath to cool his broth: Therefore doth Job open his mouth in vain. Taking the Charge which Elihu brought againſt Job in the former verſe, to be well grounded and true, we may Note, Oratio vana ſenſus atque ſapientiæ inops, tantum ſonitu verborum & querimoniarum clamoſa.

> All our complaints to, and debates with God, as alſo our Apologies for our ſelves in affliction, and fruitleſs and ſucceſleſs, till we give Glory to God, and anſwer his purpoſes, in laying his hand upon us.

Unleſs our hearts bow to God, he will not bow his ear to us. We only fill the air with words, we are but ſounding braſs and tinkling Cimbals in all we ſay to God, unleſs we do what God ſaith. Elihu ſuppoſing Jobs ſpirit yet unſubdued or not wrought and brought into a right frame under his affliction, might well ſay, he openeth his mouth in vain; and as it followeth to the ſame effect in the cloſe of this verſe and Chapter,

He multiplieth words without knowledge.

Here is another hard cenſure, upon this good, this holy, and wiſe man Job. Some Expoſitors fall heavy upon Elihu, as charging Job too far; he ſpake (ſay they) many things that were right, but not rightly; he ſpake many things that were true, but he did not ſpeak truly in fixing them upon Job; he ſpake all uprightly, but ſomewhat too rigorouſly: And indeed, if he had charged him ſo far, as to ſay, he had no knowledge at all, and had not opened his mouth at all to purpoſe, he had charged him beyond both truth and modeſty. But Elihu, who was ſet up by God for this very end to humble Job, had ground to tell him, that as to ſome things, he had both opened his mouth in vain, and multiplied words without knowledge; that is, he had ſpoken many words which ſeemed not to proceed from any ſound or well grounded knowledge; and I may give a fourfold ground of it.

Firſt, Becauſe he had not ſufficiently attended and magnified the Soveraignty of God, in laying thoſe afflictions upon him.

Secondly, Becauſe he had not, as he ought, ſate down quietly under the hand of God; but often called to know the cauſe, and that God would plainly tell him the reaſon, or give him an account why he ſuffered: Whereas he ſhould have remembred, that as many of the judgments of God are unſearchable, and his ways paſt finding out by man, ſo he hath reſerved ſome of them as ſecrets in his own breaſt, and will no more give any man an account of them, than any man ought to deſire an account of them.

Thirdly, Becauſe he had not more conſidered his ſin, or had not been ſo much in conſidering the greatneſs of his ſin, as he had been in ſetting forth the greatneſs of his integrity. For though it were true which Job ſpake, that his way was upright, and though God had given teſtimony to his uprightneſs and integrity in all his ways, yet he ſhould not have inſiſted ſo much upon that point, which had ſo much affinity with ſelf-boaſting, though he intended it only for ſelf clearing, or for the righting of himſelf. It had been more becoming him to have been aggravating his ſin, than ſetting forth his righteouſneſs; this was the point that Elihu ſtruck at, that he had juſtified himſelf too much, and judged himſelf too little. Yea Job was convinced of this at laſt, Once have I ſpoken, but I will ſpeak no more, that is, of my own integrity, or righteouſneſs.

Fourthly, He may be ſaid to have multiplied words without knowledge, becauſe he had ſpoken ſo much in the aggravation of his afflictions: 'Tis true, his afflictions were very great; yet Elihu cenſures him deſervedly, becauſe he took too much notice of them, complaining often and often, how heavy the hand of God was upon him, yea that God was an enemy to him; whereas he ſhould rather have lookt upon the viſitation of God, as light and eaſie, or (at leaſt) as but little comparatively, to what the Lord was able to lay upon him, or what his ſin might juſtifie God in laying upon him. Elihu having obſerved Job often and long ſtriking upon that ſtring, hightning his ſufferings and troubles, had reaſon enough not only to call him off from it, but to check him for it. And therefore let us remember and be admoniſhed, that in all our afflictions we ſhould not ſo much ſet forth the greatneſs of our ſuffering, as the greatneſs of the mercy of God; we ſhould look upon little mercies as great, (it ſhews an excellent ſpirit, when we heighten and greaten the mercy and goodneſs of God, even in little things) but we ſhould ſpeak of, and look upon our greateſt chaſtenings and afflictions as light, and little, Job failed ſomewhat in all theſe things, and in ſome of them his failings were great; and upon ſome of, if not upon all theſe grounds, I judge Elihu gave this judgment upon Job; He openeth his mouth in vain, and multiplieth words without knowledge.

Inſcitiam objicit quod pugnantia, ſaltem non ſatis inter ſe cohærentia conjunxit. Merl.

Job alſo yielded himſef thus faulty at laſt (Chap. 42. 3.) Who is he (there he ſpeaks of himſelf in a third perſon, Who is he) that hideth counſel without knowledge; therefore have I uttered that I underſtood not, things too wonderful for me, which I knew not.

I ſhall cloſe my thoughts upon this Chapter, with minding the Reader: Firſt, of Elihu his candidneſs towards Job, beyond what he found from his other friends; for Elihu chargeth Job here, only with vanity and inadvertency, not with any premeditated wickedneſs or blaſphemy, as Eliphaz had done, (Chap. 22. 13, 14.) Secondly, let me mind the Reader, of that liberty and plainneſs of ſpeech which Elihu uſed towards Job, in telling him of, and cenſuring him for his failings; as alſo of that patience, meekneſs, and equanimity, with which Job heard, received, and bare his ſharpeſt cenſures, not replying one word in paſſion, nor ſo much as pleading the leaſt excuſe for his former paſſionateneſs, but taking all in good part, and doubtleſs, improving all for his ſpiritual profit.

CHAP. XXXVI. Verſ. 1, 2, 3, 4.

1. Elihu alſo proceeded and ſaid,

2. Suffer me a little, and I will ſhew thee, that I have yet to ſpeak on Gods behalf.

3. I will fetch my knowledg from afar, and will aſcribe righteouſneſs to my Maker.

4. For truly my words ſhall not be falſe: he that is perfect in knowledg is with thee.

Elihu hath already made three addreſſes or ſpeeches to Job, and here he begins a fourth; this and the next Chapter are wholly ſpent in it, and are the iſſue of his whole diſcourſe with this ſorrowful man. In which we may conſider three parts.

Firſt, the Preface, or rather the Prefaces of his Speech.

Secondly, The Body or Subſtance of his Speech.

Thirdly, the Concluſion of it.

The Preface or Prefaces, the Introductions of this Diſcourſe of Elihu with Job, are contained in the four verſes of this Text under hand.

The Body of his Diſcourſe, is begun at the fifth verſe incluſively, and continued to the twenty third verſe of the next Chapter excluſively.

The Concluſion of all, is laid down in the two laſt verſes of the 37. Chapter.

In this copious Diſcourſe or long Oration, Elihu brings not any new aſſertion, or ſaying of Job, to be proved againſt him, nor doth he reprove Job for any new fault, but inſiſts upon the proof of what himſelf had aſſerted before, to ſhew that God is righteous, or to maintain the righteouſneſs of God; which he doth variouſly by looking through the various works of God, thoſe eſpecially which are wrought on high, the Meteors of the aiery region, the rain, the ſnow, the lightning, and the thunder, in and by all which, report is made, as of the Wiſdom and Power, ſo of the Juſtice and Righteouſneſs of God, who often declareth his mind to Mankind by thoſe Teachers, and proclaims by their mouths (as it were by ſound of Trumpet) how terrible he is, and will be to wilful and impenitent ſinners. That's the ſum of his Argumentation, or the Scope of this his laſt undertaking with Job.

Verſ. 1. Elihu alſo proceeded, and ſaid.

This is the Pen-man's Preface, he makes the connexion thus between the former and this diſcourſe; Elihu alſo proceeded, and ſaid: The Hebrew is, Elihu added, that is, to his former ſpeeches he added this. We render the word he continued, (Chap. 23. 1.) Elihu alſo proceeded, or continued his ſpeech, and ſaid; and what ſaid he? that begins at the next verſe.

Verſ. 2. Suffer me a little, and I will ſhew thee, that I have yet to ſpeak on Gods behalf.

Here begins Elihu's own Preface, the aim or tendency of which is to gain Job's attention and ſubſcription to what he had to ſay, and he ſuggeſteth four Arguments or Motives in theſe three verſes, to draw out the attention of Job, and likewiſe to gain his ſubmiſſion to what he ſhould lay before him.

כתר Hoc ſignificatu Chaldaicum eſt. Druſ.

Firſt, He gives him an Argument from his intended brevity, I'le be ſhort, I mean not to be tedious, I will not tire thee, nor wear out thy patience with a long Diſcourſe: Suffer me a little.

His ſecond Argument is taken from the greatneſs of the Perſon, in whoſe name and behalf he was about to ſpeak: As if he had ſaid, Hear me, for it is not my own cauſe, nor the cauſe of any man that I have in hand, I ſpeak for God, Suffer me a little, and I will ſhew thee, what I have yet to ſay for God.

His third Argument is taken from the Authority in which he would ſpeak. Hear me diligently, for what I have to ſay, is not only for God, but from God; I will fetch my knowledg from afar, and aſcribe righteouſneſs to my Maker, verſ. 3.

Nihil vulgare nihil non magnum dicam. Sanct.

Fourthly, Which is a neceſſary conſequent of the former two, he would be heard, becauſe he reſolved (and hoped he ſhould make good that reſolution) to ſpeak the truth, and nothing but the truth; he offers this at the fourth verſe, For truly my words ſhall not be falſe, he that is perfect in knowledg is with thee. Theſe are the four arguments contained in this Preface, by which Elihu like a wiſe perſwaſive Orator would draw on the attention of Job in hearing, and gain his approbation in receiving what he had to ſay. We may gather up the ſpirit and ſubſtance of all his arguments into this one.

> He is to be patiently heard, and readily aſſented to, who intends to ſpeak but a little, and that little for God, and that little from God, and that in truth, and nothing but the truth.
> But what I am now about to ſpeak ſhall be but little, and that for God, and from God, and that in truth and nothing but the truth;
> Therefore I am to be heard patiently, &c.

Suffer me a little.] Some render, ſtand, or ſtay about me; that is, have patience awhile, be not haſty. Impatient perſons will be gone, they will not abide by it, to hear another out. Our tranſlation reaches this ſenſe fully (according to the Idiom of our Language) Suffer me a little. The word which we render little, may refer either to the littleneſs or brevity of his Speech, or to the littleneſs of the ſpace or time which he would ſpend in ſpeaking; we joyn both here; as if he had ſaid, I will not ſpeak much, and therefore I ſhall not take up much of your time. The word is uſed by the Prophet with an addition, (Iſa. 10. 25.) Yet a very little while, and the indignation ſhall ceaſe, and mine anger in their deſtruction; that is, in the deſtruction of the enemies of my People. As if he had ſaid, My wrath ſhall not abide, it ſhall not laſt long, nor continue upon my People; and when I have done with them, it ſhall be turned upon their enemies and oppreſſors, the Aſſyrians, and towards them it ſhall not ceaſe, till they are utterly overturned. Take one inſtance more in the ſame Prophet, nearer the buſineſs of the Text in Job. (Iſa. 28. 10, 11.) Line upon Line, Precept upon Precept, here a little, and there a little, or, now a little, and then a little. They ſhall not be over burdened, they ſhall have it by drops, by inches, by little and little, as they are able to bear; juſt as Children and young Novices are taught, who cannot receive much at once but now a letter and then a letter, now a rule, and then a rule. Poſſibly Elihu perceived Job was not in a caſe to hear much, and therefore condeſcending to his weak condition by reaſon of his long ſufferings, he ſaith to him, Suffer me a little.

Sta circa me paululum. Mont.

Yet further, I conceive, when Elihu ſaith to Job, Suffer me a little, it may ſignifie one of theſe two things, or both of them. Firſt, That Job had given him ſome interruption as he was ſpeaking before. It is uſual with us, if when a man is ſpeaking, any interpoſe, to ſay, Pray ſuffer me a while, you ſhall have your liberty to object or reply what you pleaſe when I have done. Secondly, That he had ſhewed ſome diſſatisfaction with what Elihu had ſpoken fully out, or when he had done ſpeaking, and therefore he deſired that he might further clear the matter, and ſpeak out his mind, yet, at leaſt, a little more, if it might be to his full ſatisfaction, and the removal of all his doubts. Suffer me a little.

Lay all theſe things together, and they will teach us a point of prudence, ſo to compoſe and compact what we have to ſay, that it may not be grievous or burthenſom to thoſe that hear us, eſpecially not to thoſe who (as Job was) are already grieved in mind, or body, or both. As the Spirit of God, leſt the Faith and Patience of his People ſhould fail in ſufferings, telleth, yea aſſureth them, it is but a little while that they ſhall ſuffer; relief, or deliverance, and which is more, the Reliever, the Deliverer, is making haſt towards them, (Heb. 10. 27.) Yet a little while, and he that ſhall come, will come, and will not tarry; as the Spirit of God (I ſay) doth thus nurſe up the Faith of his People in ſuffering times: ſo we had need to nurſe up the attentions of our Hearers at all times, but then chiefly when they are under any kind of ſuffering, and ſay, yet a little, ſuffer us a little, we will not burthen you much. There are two things of admirable uſe in ſpeaking. Firſt, Brevity. Secondly, Perſpicuity. 'Tis true, that they that ſtrive to be ſhort, prove very obſcure; yet doubtleſs, 'tis no very hard thing, in moſt matters, to joyn perſpicuity with brevity, and to give a clear ſenſe in a few words. And though it be a truth, That when we have ſaid much of God, and of the things of God, we have ſaid but little, yea, that when we have ſpoken our all, there remains infinitely more to be ſpoken, yet we ſhould as much as may be, aim at brevity, eſpecially where the Perſon ſpoken to is weak, and unfitted by bodily indiſpoſitions to hear much. Suffer me a little,

רךח Amplam & fuſiorem rei elucidationem & declarationem importat. Bold.

And I will ſhew thee, &c.] That is, I will make all plain to thee, I will give thee a full declaration of my mind, and I hope of the truth, I will ſet all before thee, that ſo upon a review thou mayſt the eaſier apprehend my ſenſe, and give thy ſentence about it. Day unto day uttereth ſpeech, (ſaith David, Pſal. 19. 2.) and night unto night ſheweth knowledg. 'Tis this word, and it notes a very plain and evident manifeſtation of that which is offered to be known; the very night carrieth a light in it concerning the glory of God; I will ſhew thee

Dativus verbis additus indicat honorem & cultum, loqui Deo, eſt non ſolum pro Deo defendendo, ſed etiam honorificando ſermonem aſſumere. Bold. Quia ſæpe arrogantes ſibi ſentiunt ſilentii reverentiam non deberi, Domini nonnunquam potentiam, de quo quaſi loquuntur inſinuant, &c. Greg. in Loc.

That I have yet to ſpeak on Gods behalf.] Some read for God, or to God; that is for the glory of God, or to the honour of God, in the clearing up of his righteouſneſs, againſt thoſe blemiſhes which thy ſpeech, if not intentionally, yet conſequentially, hath caſt upon it; I will ſpeak that which may both convince thee, and juſtifie God. The Original Text ſtrictly is thus, I will ſhew thee that there are yet words for God; that is, I will make it appear that many things more may be ſaid and proved in purſuance of this Point, for thy further humiliation under the mighty hand of God, and for the Lord's vindication in all his dealings with thee. I ſpeak for God: Nor was this a meer pretence, or a vain boaſt, as I find ſome Expoſitors (I conceive very cauſeleſly) charging Elihu, as if here he publiſhed a zeal to ſpeak for God, that he might gain applauſe, or draw a reverence upon himſelf, in what he had to ſpeak. Some ('tis granted) have cryed up the Name of God, when they cloſely aimed at their own: But doubtleſs, Elihu was honeſt and plain hearted, when he ſaid, that what he had to ſay was for God; as he pretended, ſo he was really for God; I have yet to ſpeak on Gods behalf,

Hence obſerve, Firſt, It is a mans honour, as well as his duty, to be an Advocate for God.

As it is mans comfort, his choiceſt comfort, that God hath provided an Advocate for him, that he hath found out one to ſpeak to himſelf in our behalf, namely, Jeſus Chriſt; ſo it is both the duty and honour of man, to be an Advocate for God.

For if, Firſt, it be a great honour to know God, and to have God made known to us; He hath not dealt ſo with any Nation (as he dealt with the Jews, in giving them the knowledg of his mind) and as for his Judgments they have not known them, (Pſal. 147. 20.)

Secondly, If it be a greater honour to believe, and obey according to what we know, then

Thirdly, When we know, when we believe and obey, our greateſt honour of all is to plead for, and ſtand up in God's behalf, to undertake (being called) the defence of his truth and of his ways, to contend earneſtly for the Faith, once (by God) delivered to the Saints, which is indeed the only good contention. Paul ſaith (Phil. 1. 17.) I am ſet for the defence of the Goſpel. Paul was a Champion ready to cope and buckle with all comers for Chriſt or the Goſpel; and therefore at the 20. verſe of the ſame Chapter, he ſaith, the great thing he lookt after was, That Jeſus Chriſt might be magnified in his body, whether by life, or by death. There are three ways whereby we appear as Advocates on God's behalf; Firſt, By ſaying, or arguing; Secondly, By doing or practiſing; Thirdly, By enduring and ſuffering; and by all Chriſt is magnified in our body; the two former ways, by life, the latter by death, or by that which bears the Image of it. There's nothing needs a fuller meaſure of defence for God, than the Truth of God; and we never ſtand up ſo fully on God's behalf, as when we ſtand for his Truth, though our ſelves fall. To ſpeak and do on God's behalf, is moſt for our own behoof, though we get but ſmall fees or wages, yea though we loſe our all in this world for ſuch ſpeaking and doing. I could wiſh there were not too much cauſe of complaint, that God hath not many to ſpeak on his behalf, and that Chriſt Jeſus, our great, our only Advocate with God, hath few Advocates among men. When God as it were calls to us, Who is on my ſide? who? Truly there are but few that will appear for him, that is, for Truth, for Holineſs, for holy Worſhip; few appear for theſe things when differences ariſe about them. The corrupt part of the world in any Age will not, and the better part are not ſo free as they ought, to ſpeak and appear in ſuch caſes, on God's behalf. The world (ſaith St. John in the Revelation) wondred after the beaſt; and he cannot want Advocates, who hath ſo many Admirers. But as the Admirers, ſo the Advocates of the Lamb are not many, they are only a ſealed, a ſelected Company. We can be very warm in ſpeaking in our own cauſe, and on our own behalf; but how cold and dead-hearted are we when we come to ſpeak in the behalf of God! what a ſad withdrawing is there from that duty! God ſtands up often on the behalf of his People, and owns them in their need, yet few own God, or the Truth of God, when there is moſt need. Remember, as it is our honour, ſo our duty to ſpeak on God's behalf; and they will come to a bad reckoning at laſt both for their doings and ſpeakings, for the work both of hand and tongue, who have done and ſpoken much in their own behalf, and little or nothing on Gods.

Again, As Elihu makes this an Argument to provoke Job to hear him patiently,

Note, They that ſpeak for God, ought to have audience.

It is an Argument commanding attention, to ſay, I ſpeak from God, or for God. As when the Lord himſelf ſpeaks, all ought to bear; even thoſe things that have no ears, are call'd upon to hear him ſpeaking, or what is ſpoken from him, Hear O Heavens, and hearken O Earth, ſaith the Lord (Iſa. 1. 2.) Now, as when the Lord ſpeaks, all ſhould hear, ſo all ſhould hear when any thing is ſpoken on the Lords behalf; they that ſpeak for the Lord in truth, ſpeak alſo from the Lord. As truth bears the ſtamp and Image of God, ſo it tends to the glory of God. To reſiſt the truth of God, ſpoken by a true Meſſenger, is to refuſe the God of truth (Luke 10. 16.) He that heareth you, heareth me, and he that deſpiſeth you, deſpiſeth me. Not to hear thoſe that ſpeak for the Lord, and from the Lord, is indeed not to hear the Lord, and ſo they will be judged in the great day.

Thirdly, In that Elihu gathers up his ſpirits, girds up the loins of his mind upon this conſideration, that he was to ſpeak on God's behalf,

Note, They who ſpeak for God, may ſpeak with courage, and be bold.

If any thing can encourage us to, and in a work, 'tis this, that we engage for God. That which puts ſpirit and life into us, is our end and deſign in doing or ſpeaking; now this is the higheſt end or deſign, to argue for God; and therefore it may put the higheſt life, and livelieſt ſpirits into man, it may make him that is weak, ſtrong as a Gyant, and him that is fearful, bold as a Lion, when he can ſpeak in truth, that he is ſpeaking truth on God's behalf.

I will ſhew thee that I have yet to ſpeak.

That word (yet) hath a great Emphaſis in it; he had been ſpeaking in Gods behalf before, & ſays he, I have yet to ſpeak.

Obſerve, They that truly begin to ſpeak for God, will perſevere in ſpeaking for God.

As when we have ſpoken our all of God, and for God, there is yet more to be ſpoken of him, and for him (God is an everlaſting argument, a ſubject that can never be finiſhed) ſo they who have begun (with an honeſt heart and right aims) to ſpeak for God, will hold on and never give over to ſpeak for him, while they have a call to it. A ſoul toucht with true zeal, finds it hard to make an end, when once he hath begun ſo good, and ſo honourable a ſervice, as to ſpeak for God. So much of the ſecond Argument uſed by Elihu to gain attention: Suffer me a little, and I will ſhew thee what I have yet to ſpeak on Gods behalf. He ſpake for God. The third followeth.

Verſ. 3. I will fetch my knowledg from afar, and will aſcribe Righteouſneſs to my Maker.

This (I ſay) is Elihu's third Argument brought to the ſame purpoſe as before.

I will fetch my knowledg from afar,] Or a great way off. From how far? There are four notions under which knowledg may be ſaid to be fetcht from afar.

למר־חוק è longinquo, ex abundanti, ex linguæ idiomate adjicitur. Merc. Utar ſcientia quadam longe petita. Vatab.

Firſt, That's knowledg from afar, which is of things out of ſight, or inviſible, of things which not only are not, but cannot be ſeen. As if Elihu had ſaid, I will not diſcourſe about ſuch things as fall under common ſenſitive obſervation, I will not ſpeak of eye-objects, but of that and ſuch things, as no eye hath ſeen, nor can ſee, of God, and of divine things, the things of God.

Secondly, From afar, may imply this, I will not treat about matters of a late date or Edition, but of things done long ſince. Thus David prefac'd his ſpeech, (Pſ. 68.2,3.) I open my mouth in a Parable, I will utter dark ſayings of old, which we have heard, and known, and our fathers have told us. Such things are far off from us, which were tranſacted and done a great while ago, or in former Ages, or in the firſt Age. As if Elihu had ſaid, I'le fetch my knowledg, not from yeſterday, but from ancient times, from the very beginning of the Creation, or from the foundation of the world; ſuch things are truly afar off; or, I will fetch my knowledg from thoſe things which were before the beginning; that's more truly afar off. Thus a learned Tranſlater gloſſeth upon the Text, I will ſpeak even of thoſe things which were before any thing viſible was, even from Eternity. The things of Eternity are moſt proper to ſet forth and illuſtrate the honour of God, and moſt lively expreſs his power and divine perfections.

Prout res fuit non tantum inde à ſeculis, ſed etiam ante omnia ſecula. Jun.

Thirdly, When he ſaith, I will fetch my knowledg from afar; the meaning may be this, It ſhall be of admirable and ſublime things, the reaſon of which could not eaſily be given, nor preſently found out. Thoſe things are far from us, which we cannot dive into, nor reach, nor fathom the bottom of, by the line of our underſtanding: Such are the ſecret counſels of God before the world was, and ſome ways of his providence in dealing with men ever ſince the world was, which are therefore ſaid to be unſearchable, and paſt finding out; and of theſe Elihu ſpeaks at large in this Chapter, to the 26. verſe.

Ex operibus Dei admirandis & ſublimibus. Merc.

Fourthly, I will fetch my knowledg from afar, may be thus underſtood, I will ſpeak to thee of things which I have much ſtudied for; I will not ſpeak what comes next, nor what lyes uppermoſt, but will beat my brains for what I ſay, in moſt ſerious meditation; I will not offer thee any raw or undigeſted ſentiments, but ſhall well and maturely conſider before I ſpeak; nor will I ſpeak what my weak reaſon only tells me is true, but what by light from above, and I hope by the ſpecial teachings of God, I know to be true: I will fetch my knowledg, or that which I make known from the depths of my heart, not from ſudden flaſhes and conceits of my head. In all theſe ſenſes poſſibly Elihu was reſolved to fetch his knowledg from afar, he would not take up, nor trouble Job with things that were obvious, common, or eaſie to be had, but bring what he had to ſay out of the cloſeſt Cabinets, and utter conceptions, which were moſt remote from the common road.

Ex remotis ſed neceſſariis principiis agam, non noviter excogitata ſed à principio cognita, & accuratè, præmeditata proferam. Scult.

There is yet another apprehenſion concerning Elihu's purpoſe, when he ſaith, I will fetch my knowledg from afar, with which I rather cloſe than any of the former; that his meaning was to ſpeak to Job of thoſe things, which as they are not eaſily comprehended, becauſe the ſublimeſt works of God in nature, ſo becauſe they might ſeem far from the preſent matter; As if he had ſaid, We have been arguing all this while about God's diſpenſations here below, but now I'le ſpeak of things that are wrought above, of thoſe both uſeful and dreadful or terrible Meteors, the ſnow and rain, the winds, the lightning and the thunder; theſe things may be thought very foreign and heterogeneal, very far off from the buſineſs in hand, but I will ſpeak to thee of theſe things, even of the works of God in the Heavens, in the Air, in the Chambers of the Clouds, and I will convince thee by what God doth there above, of his righteouſneſs, in what he doth here below. The wiſdom and power of God, in ordering thoſe natural works in the Clouds, and in the Air prove that man hath no cauſe to complain about his providential works on earth: For as thoſe wonderful viſible works of God are real demonſtrations of thoſe inviſible things of God, his eternal power and Godhead, ſo they declare both his righteouſneſs and goodneſs, his wrath and mercy towards the children of men in the various diſpenſations of them. And ſo although thoſe things might be thought far from the point which Elihu ſuppoſed Job queſtioned, at leaſt by conſequences, the righteouſneſs of God in his ſevere dealings with him, yet indeed they contained principles or general grounds, by which that which Elihu had engaged to maintain might be fully confirmed and unanſwerably concluded. This, I conceive, is the ſpecial afar off, that Elihu intended to fetch his knowledg from, as may appear in the cloſe of this Chapter, and in the next, quite thorow. I will fetch my knowledg from afar.

Hence Note, Firſt, The natural works of God, or the works of God in nature, are to be ſtudied and ſearched out.

As the works of grace are afar off from all men, in a ſtate of nature; ſo the works of God in nature, are very far off from the moſt of men; they know little of God's works in the Heavens, or in the Earth, in the Sea, or in the Air, yet all theſe are to be ſearched out with diligence by the ſons of men.

Secondly, Note, The works of Creation and Providence, ſhew that God is, and what he is.

We may ſee who God is, in what he hath done; we ſay things are in their working, as they are in their being. God hath done like himſelf in all that he hath done; his own works (as well as his own Word) ſpeak him beſt, (Pſal. 19. 1.) The heavens declare the glory of God, and the firmament ſheweth his handy-work, &c. The rain and ſnow declare the power of God, thunder and lightning ſhew what he can do.

Thirdly, Note, Knowledg is worth our longeſt travel, it will quit coſt to go far for it.

We ſay, Some things are far fetcht, and dear bought; true knowledg, eſpecially the knowledg of Jeſus Chriſt deſerves to be far fetcht, and it cannot be too dear bought; we muſt drive a ſtrange kind of trade with the truths of God; we muſt be always buying, and never ſelling, yet that's a commodity will never lye upon our hands, never brayd. If we were to fetch our knowledg from afar, as to the diſtance of place, we ſhould not think much of it. The Queen of the South fetcht her knowledg from afar, ſhe came a very great way, undertook a long journey to hear the wiſdom of Solomon; in that ſenſe we ſhould be willing to fetch our knowledg from afar; yet ſome will ſcarce ſtep over the threſhold to fetch in knowledg. It is propheſied (Dan. 12. 4.) Many ſhall run to and fro, and knowledg ſhall be increaſed. Knowledg ought to be travell'd for as much as any thing in the world. We fetch our gold and ſilver, and rich commodities afar off, we go to the ends of the Earth for them, through a thouſand deaths and dangers; we ſail within three inches of death for many months together, to fetch worldly riches from afar off; and ſhall we not fetch knowledg afar off, how far ſoever it is from us in diſtance of place, and what labour or coſt ſoever we beſtow to fetch it in? I will fetch my knowledg from afar.

I will aſcribe righteouſneſs to my Maker.

Theſe words contain the ground, purpoſe or deſign of Elihu in this whole diſcourſe, which was to maintain the righteouſneſs of God; I (ſaith he) will aſcribe (the Hebrew ſtrictly is give) righteouſneſs to my Maker; here's a very great undertaking, to give righteouſneſs to God; God gives and imputes righteouſneſs to us; 'Tis the ſum of the Goſpel, that God imputes or aſcribes righteouſneſs to ſinners: Now as God in a Goſpel ſenſe, gives righteouſneſs to us, both the righteouſneſs of juſtification, which is lodged in the perſon of Chriſt, and the righteouſneſs of ſancti-ſanctification, which is lodged in our own perſons, though the ſpring and principle of that alſo be in Chriſt ſtill; ſo we muſt give righteouſneſs to God; that is, both believe and declare or publiſh to all the world, that God is juſt, and give him the praiſe of his juſtice, which is the beſt and nobleſt work we can do on God's behalf in this world. There are two moſt excellent works, which indeed contain all our work in this world.

Firſt, To do righteouſly, or act righteouſneſs our ſelves. Secondly, To aſcribe righteouſneſs unto God.

But you will ſay, what is it to give or aſcribe righteouſneſs to God?

I anſwer, It is to acknowledg, that God is righteous in all his ways, and holy in all his works. 'Tis man's duty to juſtifie God, to aſcribe that righteouſneſs to him, which is properly his own. 'Tis God's grace, his free-grace to juſtifie man, to aſcribe that righteouſneſs to him which is properly anothers. David made profeſſion of the former as his duty, (Pſal. 51. 3, 4.) I acknowledg my tranſgreſſions, and my ſin is ever before me; that thou mighteſt be juſtified in thy ſayings, and clear when thou judgeſt: That is, I'le confeſs my ſin, that all the world may ſee the righteouſneſs of thy dealings with me, though thou ſhouldſt deal never ſo ſeverely with me, though thou ſhouldſt ſpeak the bittereſt things againſt me, and pronounce a ſentence of heavieſt judgment upon me. The Apoſtle referring to this place in the Pſalms, quotes the words in a paſſive form and ſenſe, not of God judging man, but of God judged by man, (Rom. 3. 4.) Let God be true, but every man a lyar; as it is written, that thou mighteſt be juſtified in thy ſayings, and mighteſt overcome when thou art judged. As if David had ſaid, according to the Apoſtles reading out of the Septuagint, (which yet as learned Beza in his Annotations affirmeth, ought to be expounded actively, as if, I ſay, David had thus expreſſed himſelf) Lord, I know ſome men will take the boldneſs to queſtion thee, yea and to condemn thee of rigour, when they ſee thy afflicting hand heavy upon me; therefore, either to prevent ſuch raſh judgments of man, or that thou mayſt gain the day, and have the better in the opinion of all good and wiſe men, over thy Judges; Behold, I here freely confeſs my great ſin, with all the aggravating circumſtances of it, and ſurely they who know, or ſhall hear how greatly I have ſinned againſt thee, cannot but juſtifie thee, how great ſoever my ſufferings may be. To ſpeak thus is to aſcribe righteouſneſs unto God, in all that he doth, whether with reſpect to his publick judgments upon Nations, or particular, upon perſons, in any way of affliction he is pleaſed, and ſeeth need, to exerciſe them with.

Is qui peccat & confitetur Deo peccatum juſtificat Deum, cedens et vincenti & ob eo gratiam ſperans. Ambroſ. l. 6. in Luc.

Iſtud ἐν τῷ κρίνεσθαί σε, active meo quidem judicio neceſſario explicandum eſt, ut Græca Hebræis reſpondeant. Bez. in Rom. 3. 4.

And the reaſon why Job was here charged by Elihu as a perſon not giving righteouſneſs to God, was, becauſe he did not ſit down quietly and patiently under his hand in ſufferings, but muttered and complained as a man unſatisfied with, though he did not openly murmur againſt the dealings of God with him. To give righteouſneſs to God, is not only, not to accuſe him as unrighteous and unjuſt, but to thank him for, and honour him in all that he doth, or to ſpeak good of his Name, under all our ſufferings of evil. Further, to aſcribe righteouſneſs to God, is to juſtifie him, though he give never ſo much proſperity to unjuſt and wicked men (Jer. 12. 1.) Righteous art thou, O Lord, when I plead with thee; yet let me talk with thee of thy judgments. Wherefore doth the way of the wicked proſper? wherefore are all they happy that deal very treacherouſly? Some begin to think, ſurely God is not righteous, when they ſee the unrighteous proſper, and at reſt, while righteous ones are afflicted with continual hurries and troubles; but whatſoever God doth with us or ours, whatſoever peace he gives to wicked men, whatſoever trouble to good men, he is ſtill righteous; and to acknowledg this ſincerely, is actually to do what Elihu undertakes to do, even to aſcribe righteouſneſs to our Maker. And ſurely that knowledg will quit the coſt, though we have fetcht it very far, by which we are taught, and have learn'd to aſcribe righteouſneſs (for that's the aſcribing of glory) to our Maker. I (ſaith Elihu) will aſcribe righteouſneſs

To my Maker.] There's ſomething in that expreſſion very conſiderable; Elihu doth not ſay, I will aſcribe righteouſneſs to God, but ſpeaks of God under that relation, His Maker. The word ſignifies not only in general to make or create, of which work Moſes treats in the firſt of Geneſis, but it notes the doing of a thing, firſt, with diligence, ſecondly, with skill and great intention of mind, 'tis to draw all our ſpirits together in a work, as Artiſts do; This divine art or skill did chiefly appear and ſhine forth in the creation or formation of man. Not that God ſtrains himſelf in any work, but he ſpeaks thus, to ſhew that the higheſt perfections and exactneſs imaginable, yea beyond all imagination, were centred and laid into the works of God, or the things that he hath made, will aſcribe righteouſneſs to פעל importat facere aliquid cum intentione, diligentia, energia, quæ valde enitet in formatione hominis. Bold.

My Maker.] He doth not ſay, to the Maker of man, or to the Maker of Heaven and Earth, but to my Maker; he appropriates that common work of God to himſelf. God is the maker of every creature, the leaſt worm, the leaſt fly is of his making, yet Elihu ſpeaks of it as his peculiar priviledg, my Maker.

There's a great Emphaſis of affection in thoſe Pronouns, Mine, Thine, His. Elihu in this my intimates a friendly ſweetneſs and cloſeneſs of relation between God and him. To call another Mine, is more than to call him a friend of mine; And to ſay, God is my Maker, is more than to ſay, He is the maker of me, or the maker of my ſoul and body. 'Tis the Dialect of lovers: whom we love we call Ours. It is ſo in the writings of Heathen Poets and Orators. One of them ſaid, I muſt do this with the gifts of mine, that is, of my friends; and another, I only am my to mine. Much love reigns in this language of faith up and down the Scriptures, chiefly in thoſe raptures of divine delight between Chriſt and the Spouſe in the Book of Canticles. Elihu is here greatly affected, as with the righteouſneſs of God in all his works, ſo in the workmanſhip beſtowed on him: I (ſaith he) will aſcribe righteouſneſs to my Maker.

Delicata ſunt hæc pronomina Meum, Tuum, Suum, & plena affectionis; pronomen hoc ſubſtantive ponitur pro amico. Dulciſq; meorum reliquias. Virg. Æneid. 4. Ego meorum ſolus ſum meus. Terent.

Hence note, Firſt, God is the Maker of man.

I ſhall not ſtay upon that.

Secondly, In that he holds himſelf engag'd to ſtand up for God as his Maker,

Note, The common benefits of God to man, ſhould be acknowledged, and he honoured for them.

God hath made man and beaſt, and he preſerves man and beaſt. A godly man ſees peculiar mercy to him in both, though they be common mercies. General mercies ſhould have, they highly deſerve, ſpecial remembrances. All the works of God are to be lookt to as perſonal engagements. God hath made others as well as thee, yet ſo remember him to be thy Maker, as if he had made none but thee; and indeed every one that is made, is as much beholden to God, as if he alone had been made. As ſome things which are made in common for all men (the Sun, the Air, &c.) are ſo made, that no man could have more of them than he hath, if they had been made for him only: So though it be common to all men, that God is their Maker, yet no man could have more in his making, if none had been made but he. One of the Ancients repreſents all the creatures offering themſelves to man, in general, and ſpeaking theſe three words: Firſt, Receive us cheerfully, for we were made for thee; Secondly, Render thanks for us daily, for we are all made uſeful unto thee; Thirdly, Take heed you do not abuſe us, for you muſt give an account to our Maker and yours, how you have uſed us. And ſurely, as we ſhould ſtrive to honour God for all things which he hath made, ſo moſtly for our own making. The Lord is often (in the Old Teſtament eſpecially) ſpoken of under this Relation (Pſal. 121. 2.) Our help ſtandeth in the Name of the Lord, who made Heaven and Earth. (So Pſal. 124. 8. Pſal. 95. 6. Pſal. 146. 6.) Still God is remembred as the Maker of all things; and he is thus remembred, not only in oppoſition to Idols, or falſe gods, who are gods made by man, not the makers of man, but God is thus remembred and recorded in Scripture, to preſerve a grateful memory of God in man, as he is the Maker of man. He that forgets God as his Maker, will never remember, much leſs anſwer and accompliſh the ends for which he was made.

Accipe, Redde, Cave.

Thirdly, I will aſcribe righteouſneſs to [My Maker.]

Note, A godly man takes God as his own, and appropriates him by Faith in all his Relations.

Faith takes not only a ſhare in God, but all of God; My God, my Father, my Maker, my Redeemer, are ſtrains of Faith.

A Believer doth as it were ingroſs God to himſelf, yet deſires and endeavours, that all, as well as himſelf, may have their part and portion in God, yea God for their portion. Job ſaid (Chap. 19. 25.) I know that my Redeemer liveth: He ſpake as if he had got a Redeemer, not only to, but by himſelf. Thus alſo holy Paul of Chriſt, (Gal. 2. 22.) Who loved me, and gave himſelf for me; as if he had been given for him alone, and loved none but him. This is the higheſt work of Faith, and 'tis the ſignification of our hotteſt love to God, it ſhews endearedneſs of affection to him, as well as nearneſs and clearneſs of intereſt in him, when we thus take him as our own Saviour, Father, Maker. I will aſcribe righteouſneſs to my Maker.

Obſerve, Fourthly, He who is the Maker of all men, can be unrighteous to no man, nor is liable to the cenſure of any man, whatever he doth.

'Tis impoſſible that he who made us ſhould wrong or injure us, and that upon a twofold Principle; Firſt, Of the reſpect he hath for juſtice towards all thoſe whom he hath made. God is ſo tender, that he doth not willingly, (or with his heart) afflict, nor grieve the children of men, to cruſh under his feet all the Priſoners of the earth (Lam. 3. 33, 34.) much leſs will he (as it followeth, verſ. 35, 36.) turn away the right of a man before the face of the moſt High, that is, before his own face, who is the Moſt High: As if it had been ſaid, The Lord will not pervert Judgment in any man's caſe that comes before him. Or, if we take thoſe words before the face of the Moſt High, as denoting the higheſt Judicatory on Earth, as our Margin intimates, putting there, for Moſt High, A Superiour; then the meaning is, The Lord doth not approve, that any earthly Judg, though Supream, or moſt Superiour, ſhould turn aſide the right of a man, how inferiour ſoever; for, as the 36. verſe hath it, To ſubvert a man in his cauſe, the Lord approveth not; or, as the Hebrew is rendred, ſeeth not, that is, he ſeeth it not with approbation, but indeed with deteſtation, and will ſeverely puniſh ſuch ſubverters of Juſtice. Secondly, It is impoſſible that he who hath made us ſhould wrong or injure us, upon the principle of his Soveraignty over all thoſe whom he hath made. He that gives all men their being, he that gives all to all men that are in being, can be unrighteous to no man, whatſoever he taketh from him, or doth with him. We have Job in the beginning of this Book (Chap. 1. 21.) aſcribing righteouſneſs to God his Maker upon this reaſon, or principle, The Lord hath given, and the Lord hath taken away; bleſſed be the Name of the Lord. It is he that made me a man, 'tis he who once made me a rich man, a great man, the greateſt man of all the men of the Eaſt, (Chap. 1. 3.) What if now he hath leſſened me, and left me little or nothing? what if he hath now made me a mean man, a poor man (in account) a no man? what if God hath now ſtript me naked, and taken all from me? He hath taken nothing but what he gave; why then ſhould I take it ill at his hands, or have ſo much as an ill thought of him? The Lord gives, and the Lord takes; there's no unrighteouſneſs in all this. If God ſhould utterly undo us, he doth us no wrong; if he ſhould as it were, unmake us, let us conſider he is our Maker, and then we muſt ſay, there is no unrighteouſneſs in him, yea we ſhall be ready (with Elihu in the Text) to aſcribe righteouſneſs unto him. And therefore, as a Corollary from the whole.

Note, Fifthly, Whatſoever God doth with us, or others, we ought to maintain the honour of God, and retain good thoughts of him, both as righteous and good.

Though Heaven and Earth be moved, though the World be full of confuſion and unrighteouſneſs, yet we muſt aſcribe righteouſneſs to God. Whatſoever or whoſoever falls to the duſt, the Honour and Juſtice of God muſt not. Thus far of Elihu's third Argument for attention; the fourth is at hand in the next verſe.

Verſ. 4. For truly my words ſhall not be falſe; he that is perfect in knowledg is with thee.

As if he had ſaid, I am purpoſed to ſpeak the truth, and nothing but the truth; therefore hear me. Truly my words ſhall not be falſe. He gives aſſurance for, or warrants the truth of his words, while he ſaith, they ſhall not be falſe. Negatives in Scripture often carry a ſtrong affirmation. The father of a fool hath no joy, ſaith Solomon (Prov. 17. 21.) that is, he ſhall have a great deal of ſorrow. When the Scripture denieth forgiveneſs to any ſort of impenitent ſinners, or ſaith, their ſin ſhall not be forgiven, the ſenſe is, they ſhall be puniſhed. When we ſay proverbially, Goods ill gotten ſhall not proſper, the meaning is, they ſhall periſh, and do him miſchief that hath gotten them; not only ſhall he not thrive with them, but they ſhall ruine and undo him; his goods ill gotten ſhall do him no good when the evil day is come, much leſs ſhall they be able, or he by them, to prevent the coming of an evil day. Once more: When we ſay, Such a thing is not ill done, our intendment is, 'tis very well done, excellently done. So here, when Elihu ſaith, Truly my words ſhall not be falſe, his meaning is, I will ſpeak truth, and truth to the higheſt, I will ſpeak nothing but what ſhall endure the Touchſtone and the Teſt; I will not offer thee a ſyllable of falſhood; what I alledg and urge either for God, or againſt thee, ſhall not be fetcht or hammer'd out of my own brain, and ſo ſubject to error and miſtake, but ſuch as God, who cannot err (by whoſe Spirit, and in whoſe ſtead, I ſpeak unto thee) hath inſpired me with, or taught me for thy conviction and inſtruction.

Non eſt bonum, pro piſſimum eſt; ſic non remittetur ei, i. e. punietur. Druſ.

Further, When he ſaith, Truly, my words ſhall not be falſe, we may take it two ways: Firſt, As to the matter ſpoken; Secondly, As to the mind of the Speaker: when truth is thus ſpoken, 'tis truly ſpoken; thus much Elihu engag'd for: As if he had ſaid, The matter that I ſpeak, ſhall be true, and I will ſpeak it in truth, or with a true mind and heart; I will not ſpeak any thing to flatter thee, nor for my own ends, to trouble thee; my words ſhall be candid and ſincere, as well as ſound and orthodox: I will ſpeak the truth, and ſpeak it in truth. Some ſpeak that which is falſe (as I may ſay) in the ſincerity of their heart, thinking it to be true; and others ſpeak truth in the falſeneſs of their heart, that is, they have ſome by-ends in ſpeaking it, from both thoſe Elihu here clears himſelf, and with both theſe Job had taxed his Friends, Chap. 13. 7. Chap. 17. 5.

Hence obſerve, It is the higheſt Commendation of a Speaker to ſpeak truth, and the higher the Truth, the higher the Commendation of the Speaker.

Words can have no greater beauty, nor richer ornament than Truth; and Truth is never more adorn'd than by plainneſs of Speech, nor more beautiful than when (like our firſt Parents in innocency) 'tis naked. To ſpeak truly, is much more honourable, than to ſpeak eloquently; one plain word of plain truth, is better than a long painted Oration, tinctured with the leaſt error. What then are long Orations, and large Volumes, which have upon the matter, as many errors as words, as many lies and flatteries, as Periods and Sentences! at beſt, ſome in putting off their words, do as others in putting off their wares, mingle good and bad together. 'Tis dangerous to make ſuch medlies. As we muſt not put bad for good, darkneſs for light, bitter for ſweet, falſhood for Truth, ſo we muſt not blend or put bad among the good, nor mix darkneſs with light, nor falſhood with Truth. And as 'tis dangerous to mix any falſhood of Doctrine with Truth, ſo to mix falſhood of Heart with Truth of Doctrine, or to ſpeak Truth, but not in truth. The Apoſtle is zealous in proteſting againſt falſhood, and profeſſing for the Truth in both theſe reſpects; Firſt, as to the truth of the Doctrine, or of the matter ſpoken (2 Cor. 2. 17.) We are not as many, which corrupt (or deal deceitfully with) the Word of God; we do not adulterate or mix it with our own imaginations or inventions; which he further confirms (Chap. 4. 2.) We have renounced the hidden things of diſhoneſty, &c. Secondly, As he ſpake truth of Doctrine, ſo he ſpake it in the truth of his heart, as he aſſured the Corinthians, in both the places laſt mentioned; we are, not only no corrupters of the Word of God, but as of ſincerity (there's truth of heart) as of God, in the ſight of God, ſpeak we in Chriſt. And again, We walk not in craftineſs, nor handle the Word of God deceitfully, but by manifeſtation of the truth, commend our ſelves to every mans Conſcience, in the ſight of God. He makes a proteſt yet once more in the ſame tenour, and ſomewhat higher, (2 Cor. 13. 8.) We can do nothing againſt the Truth; O bleſſed Impotency! but for the Truth; O bleſſed Ability! Who would not be weak againſt the Truth? who would not be ſtrong for the Truth, which is ſtrongeſt of all, and will prevail? And as we ſhould ſpeak nothing againſt the Truth, ſo nothing but the Truth, nothing beſide the Truth, nothing that may be any blemiſh, or turn to the leaſt diſſervice of the Truth; yea, though it ſhould be (as we hope) for the ſervice of that excellent and amiable thing called Peace; a thing ſo excellent, that we cannot over-bid, nor pay too much for it, unleſs we part with, and pay away truth for it: and if ever we do ſo, we over-bid for it, and over-buy it indeed, and ſhall have cauſe at laſt to repent of our bargain, and cry out, we have burnt our Fingers, and it would be well if that were all. Therefore let us remember the Lord's admonition by his Prophet (Zech. 8. 19.) Love the Truth and Peace: Firſt, Truth, then Peace. Nor was there ever any true Lover of Truth, that was not alſo a Lover of Peace; nor any true Lover of Peace, but was ſuch a Lover of Truth, that he could lay down or let go, his Peace for it. One of the Ancients tells us, There ought to be ſo great a love of Truth in us, that, whatſoever we ſay to be true, ſhould be as much as if we had ſworn it to be true, or had delivered it upon Oath. There is no more goodneſs in what we ſay, than there is Truth in what we ſay. A Lye in report of Diſcourſe, and a Lye in Doctrine or Diſpute, are both abominable to God, and ſhould be ſo to man; therefore Elihu heartily diſclaims it, Truly my words ſhall not be falſe.

Tantus ſit in te veritatis amor, ut quicquid dixeris, juratum putes. Hieron.

He that is perfect in knowledg is with thee.

This Aſſertion ſuits well with the fore-going Proteſtation: He that is perfect in knowledg, will not, cannot utter words of falſhood. But who is that? and where to be found? Some underſtand it of God; He that is perfect in knowledg is with thee, that is, God is with thee in this buſineſs; and without all controverſie, it may be ſaid of God, in the higheſt and ſtricteſt ſenſe of Perfection, He is perfect in knowledg. The Lord is a God of knowledg (1 Sam. 2. 3.) as well as a God of mercy; he is as knowing, as he is merciful, perfect in both. Taking the Text ſo; 'tis as if Elihu had ſaid, Thou hadſt need, O Job, look to thy ſelf, and diligently attend to what is ſpoken, for thou haſt not to do with man, with one like thy ſelf only, but thou haſt to do with God. Some inſiſt much, yea, altogether upon this Interpretation of the word; God is with thee, therefore receive truth; God cannot be deceiv'd, nor doth he deceive, therefore hearken and obey. Yet Elihu might ſpeak thus with reſpect to the meſſage brought by himſelf; for when man ſpeaking in the Name of God ſpeaks the mind of God to us, it may be ſaid, God is with us, and ſpeaks to us by him. The Apoſtle ſaith (2 Cor. 13. 5.) If any require a Sign or Token of Chriſt ſpeaking in me. Chriſt ſpeaks, while his Meſſengers and Miniſters ſpeak truth. The ſame Apoſtle teſtified of the Theſſalonians, that they took his ſpeaking as God's ſpeaking, (1 Theſſ. 2. 13.) When ye received the Word of God which ye heard of us, ye received it not as the word of man, but (as it is in truth) the Word of God. And therefore I conceive we are to underſtand the words of Elihu concerning Elihu himſelf, yet not as in himſelf, but as fitted for, and aſſiſted in the work by God, He that is perfect in knowledg is with thee; As if he had ſaid, Though I am but a young man, yet thou haſt not to deal with an ignorant man, with one who is but a novice or ſmatterer in the things of God, with one that is yet in the Elements of Divine knowledg and learning; He that is perfect in knowledg is with thee. And it is conceiv'd that Elihu ſpeaks thus in the third perſon for Modeſties ſake, as the Apoſtle Paul alſo did (2 Cor. 12. 2, 3.) I knew a man in Chriſt, &c. He doth not ſay, I Paul was caught up to the third Heaven, and heard unſpeakable words, &c. but I knew ſuch a man. Thus Elihu here; and doubtleſs he had been liable to cenſure, as arrogating too much to himſelf, had he ſpoken in the firſt perſon, I that am perfect in knowledg am with thee: Therefore he covers and conceals himſelf by expreſſing it in the third perſon, He that is perfect in knowledg is with thee; that is, He that is with thee to convince thee of thy former errour, and to give thee better counſel, is perfect in knowledg.

תמים דעות Integer ſcientiarum, vel integer ſcientiis. Heb.

But is that true? was Elihu, or is any man perfect in knowledg, or (as the Hebrew hath it plurally) in knowledges, that is, in all kinds of knowledg, or in all the degrees of knowledg of any kind? Surely, No man is perfect in the knowledg of any one thing, much leſs of all things, (1 Cor. 13. 9, 12.) We know in part, and propheſie in part, we ſee but darkly, &c. How then can it be ſaid of Elihu, He is perfect in knowledg? I anſwer, There is a twofold perfection. Firſt, Abſolute. Secondly, Comparative. There's no man living here below hath abſolute perfection of knowledg; yet one man being compar'd with another, may be ſaid to be perfect in knowledg, another not: There are various degrees of knowledg in man; the higheſt degree of knowledg compar'd with the loweſt, may be call'd perfect knowledg. Thus we are to underſtand Elihu ſpeaking at the rate of a creature, not of God, or as becomes and is commenſurable with the ſtate of man in this life, whoſe beſt perfection in knowledg, is to know his own imperfections.

Secondly, Elihu ſpeaks not of any perfection of knowledg, but of being perfect, that is, ſincere, in knowledg. As if he had ſaid, What I know, I know with an honeſt upright heart and intention: I do not know to abuſe thee or others, I make not uſe of my knowledg to deceive the ſimple, but to inform them. Some are crafty and cunning in knowledg, not perfect in it; they are knowing as the Devil is knowing, who takes his name Dæmon from his knowledg, yet he is not perfect, but corrupt in his knowledg, he is ſubtil, and full of devices to do miſchief with his knowledg. That's perfect knowledg, which is ſincerely imployed for the glory of God, and the good of thoſe with whom we have to do. So then, the meaning of Elihu may be ſumm'd up thus in ſhort; He that is with thee (that is my ſelf) will deal with thee to the beſt of my underſtanding, and in the Integrity of my heart. This alſo ſuits well with the former part of the verſe, Truly my words ſhall not be falſe.

Hence note, Firſt, Though no man knoweth all things, yet ſome know much more than others.

One is a Babe, and needs milk; another is a grown Chriſtian, and can, not only receive, but give the ſtrong meat of inſtruction, (Heb. 5. 13, 14.) Some cannot underſtand wiſdom, when ſpoken by the perfect, they know not how to learn, yea, ſome (as the Apoſtle ſpeaks, 2 Tim. 3. 7.) are ever learning, but never able to come to the knowledg of the truth. Others can ſpeak wiſdom among them that are perfect (2 Cor. 2. 6.) that is, they are got to the higheſt Form of Goſpel-knowledg, and are fit to be Teachers.

Secondly, Note, Whether we know little or much, this is the perfection of our knowledg, honeſtly to imploy and improve it, for the information of the ignorant, and the conviction of thoſe who are in errour.

If we have but one Talent of knowledg, yet if we uſe it well, we are perfect in knowledg. They who have digged (as they think to the heart, and dived to the bottom of all Sciences, yea into the heart of the Scriptures too, yet if they keep their knowledg to themſelves, or know only for themſelves, if they have baſe ends and by-reſpects, in vending their knowledg, if they trade with their knowledg for ſelf only, or to do miſchief to others, their knowledg is not only utterly imperfect, but, as to any good account, nothing, or none at all. As he that ſlothfully hides his Talent, ſo he, who either vain-gloriouſly ſhews it, or deceitfully uſeth it, ſhall be numbred among thoſe who have none, (Matth. 25. 29. Luke 8. 18.)

Laſtly, Elihu ſpeaking of himſelf in a third perſon,

Note, Modeſty is a great vertue, and the grace of all our Graces.

He that ſaith, I am perfect in knowledg, knoweth not what is neareſt him, himſelf. We ſhould uſe our knowledg as much as we can, but ſhew it as little as we can, unleſs in the uſing of it. 'Tis beſt for us to take little notice of our own goodneſs, and not to know our own knowledg. Uſually they have but little, who are much in ſhewing (unleſs much called to it) what they have. Empty veſſels ſound moſt, and ſhallow brooks make the loudeſt noiſe in paſſage. Moſes put a veil upon his face, as unwilling to have that Divine beauty ſeen. While we are provoked, and even neceſſitated to diſcover our knowledg, we ſhould cover our ſelves. It is our duty to impart our knowledg, but our folly to proclaim it.

Thus far Elihu hath been preparing his Patient Job, to receive his Medicinal inſtructions; he is now ready to adminiſter them, for the cure and quieting of his diſtempered mind.

VERS. 5, 6.

Behold, God is mighty, and deſpiſeth not any: he is mighty in ſtrength and wiſdom.

He preſerveth not the life of the wicked: but giveth right to the poor.

ELihu having done prefacing, proceeds to the matter of his diſcourſe, wherein he giveth a large deſcription, of the power, wiſdom, and juſtice of God, in his diſpoſure and government of the world; Firſt, In things Civil, which he proſecutes to the 26. verſe of this Chapter. Secondly, In things Natural, which he handles to the 23. verſe of the following Chapter. He begins in theſe two verſes, with an excellent Elogium, or with the high praiſe of God in his divine perfections, into which he leads us with a command of attention, or ſerious conſideration, yea of wonder and admiration.

Verſ. 5. Behold, God is mighty.

אל כביר Magnus, grandis, potens, id eſt potentiſſimus.

I have ſeveral times opened the ſenſe and intendment of this word Behold, and therefore will not ſtay upon it here; But what are we to behold? what is the ſight which Elihu repreſents to our faith? it is God in his might; Behold, God is mighty. God is ſtrong, potent, omnipotent, God is mighty, yea Almighty: The words are a plain aſſertion of that royal Attribute, the Mightineſs or Almightineſs, the Potency or Omnipotency of God. Elihu promiſed to aſcribe righteouſneſs unto God his Maker, yet here he begins with his Mightineſs; and this we find often both aſcribed to God, and aſſerted by him. When God made a Covenant with Abraham, he thus offers himſelf to his faith, though by another word in the Original, (Gen. 17. 1.) I am the Almighty God, walk before me, and be thou perfect, or upright, or ſincere, (as our Margin reads it) The ſame title is again repeated by Iſaac, when he diſpatcht his ſon Jacob with a bleſſing to Padan-Aram, to avoid the fury of his brother Eſau, (Gen. 28. 3.) Thus alſo ſpake the bleſſed Virgin, (Luke 1. 49.) He that is mighty hath done to me great things, and holy is his Name. The holy Scriptures every where exalt the name of God by this glorious Attribute; The mighty God, even the Lord hath ſpoken, (Pſal. 50. 1.) And he ſeems even to delight in this title, The mighty God of Jacob. Jacob was mighty with God in prayer, as a Prince he had power with God and prevailed; and God loved and loves to put forth his might for Jacob, his Church and people, in anſwer of their prayers. But I ſhall not ſtay in general upon this title, only opening it a little, ſhall make ſome inferences from it. God is mighty in a two-fold notion.

Firſt, In authority, or in command; he commands in chief; God is Soveraign and Supream; the Legiſlative power is in his hand, he gives Laws, and he gives the Law to all the world, (Pſal. 62. 11.) Once hath he ſpoken, and I heard it twice, that power (Soveraignty, Law-giving power) belongs to God; He is ſo mighty in this governing power, that he doth not only give Laws to rule Nations, but he diſpoſeth of all the Rulers in Nations, (Daniel Chap. 2. 21. Chap. 4. 17.) And again, (Pſal. 22. 28.) The Kingdom is the Lords, and he is the Governour among the Nations.

Secondly, Beſides this power of Authority, which the Lord exerciſeth paramount over all the world, he hath alſo another power or might; he hath the might of Strength, as well as the might of Authority. Some have a great, a mighty Authority, but they have little or no might to make good that Authority; they cannot effect or carry on what they command, how much right ſoever they have to command, yea how juſt and right ſoever that is which they command: they have Authoritative might, yet want Executive might, they cannot bring about, nor iſſue what they determine. But when Elihu aſſerts, Behold, God is mighty, we are to take it under both notions, he is mighty, as he hath the whole Legiſlative power in his hand, and he is mighty, as having alſo the whole Executive power in his hand. The ſons of men are jealous about theſe two Powers, and labour to keep them in diſtinct hands, that they who have the Legiſlative power, may not have the Executive power alſo, as fearing what they would do were they veſted with both: But God (beyond all diſpute) hath both powers in himſelf, and it is impoſſible they ſhould be taken from him, or devolved upon any others, otherwiſe than himſelf pleaſeth, or permitteth: behold and wonder, God is mighty, (and O how mighty is God!) in the union of theſe two powers; and to ſet forth yet further the wonder of his might, I ſhall give you ſeven brief propoſitions or aſſertions, concerning the might of God, as it is twiſted and made up of theſe two mights or powers.

Firſt, He is ſo mighty both in ſtrength and power, that all the might which is in the creature, all the Legiſlative might, and all the Executive might, all the Authority, and all the ability which is in any man, is from him, and by him; that's it which is ſaid (Prov. 8. 15.) By me Kings reign, and Princes decree Juſtice; they have both their Authority, and their power to execute that Authority from me; every kind and degree of might (whatſoever it is) is but a derivation, a rivolet, from the Might and Power of God, that's the fountain, the ſpring of all.

Secondly, Behold the mightineſs of God, as in giving, ſo in taking away power, whether the power of authority or of ſtrength, from the ſons of men; He taketh away might from the mighty. Sometimes ſuch power, ſuch authority, ſuch command is put into the hands of others, that they who put it there, know not how to get it out again, but are maſtered and over-power'd with the very power which they truſt others with; but ſuch is the might of God, that whatever might of authority or ſtrength he hath truſted or cloathed any of the Princes or Powers of this world with; he can preſently take it out of their hands again (Pſal. 75. 7.) God is the Judg, he putteth down one, and ſetteth up another, and it is as eaſie with him to put down, as it is to ſet up; as he can make the weak ſtrong, ſo he can preſently make the ſtrong weak; this is the glory of the might of God, he can take away power, as well as give it.

Thirdly, Behold, God is mighty, for, he can do whatſoever pleaſeth him; Certainly, he is Almighty that can do ſo; He whoſe power runs parallel with his will, he who can act as far as he deſires, how mighty is he! none of the mighty ones of this world can do this. Oh, what work would ſome men make in the world, if they could do as much as they deſire, if their power ſhould always extend as far as or be commenſurate with their Will; yet thus it is with God. The Scriptures of truth are clear in it (Pſal. 115. 3.) where, when ſome prophane wretches had ſcoffed and jeered the people of God, with where is your God? they preſently anſwer, Our God is in heaven, and he hath done whatſoever pleaſeth him. It is not what this man pleaſeth, or what that man pleaſeth, or what this ſort or gang of men pleaſe, but what the Lord pleaſeth, that is done (and that he doth well, how ill ſoever men do it) both in heaven and in earth. The Lord will not do all that he can, for he could by his power reduce this world to its firſt principles, a Chaos, or into a nothing, as it was before that, but he can do whatſoever he will; all things are poſſible to God, yea all things are eaſie, nothing hard or difficult to God: And we may very well put a behold of admiration upon his might (and ſuch is the might of God) who can do whatſoever he willeth.

Fourthly, The Lord is ſo mighty, that he can do all, without the help of any. Some men are very mighty, but it is with other mens hands, with other mens ſtrength; let them alone, let them ſtand by themſelves, do but deſert and leave them, and what can they do? juſt nothing. But ſuch is the mightineſs of God, the Almightineſs of God, that if all ſecond cauſes, if all perſons, powers and Nations ſhould leave him, in that which he intends ſhould be done, he can do it himſelf without them. The Prophet ſetting forth the victory of Chriſt over his enemies, repreſents him ſpeaking thus, (Iſa. 63. 3.) I have trodden the wine-preſs alone, and of the people there was none with me. Which though many interpret of his paſſive conqueſt by ſuffering as a Prieſt, yet moſt, of his active conqueſt as a King, which he uſually atchieveth by himſelf alone, without any appearance of help from man. And though Deborah in her Song (Judg. 5.) pronounceth a curſe upon thoſe that came not out to help the Lord againſt the Mighty, yet it was not becauſe the mighty God needed their help or ſervice, but becauſe they did owe it him, and in duty ſhould have given it him. For, that the Lord wants no help, is further clear from the Prophet, (Iſa. 59. 16.) He ſaw that there was no man, and wondered that there was no Interceſſor, (none ſo much as to ſpeak a word) therefore his arm wrought ſalvation, and his righteouſneſs it ſuſtained him. Not only, no arm was put forth to help, but no tongue ſo much as move or intercede for help to do it, yet his own arm did it. Thus the Prophet, (Iſa. 44. 24.) He ſtretcheth forth the Heavens alone, and laid the Foundations of the Earth by himſelf. Now as it was with the Lord in the work of Creation, he had no helper, no aſſiſtant, he did it alone by himſelf; ſo it is as true, as to all works of providence. Let all men forſake him (as the Apoſtle Paul complained they did him, 2 Tim. 4. 16.) and no man ſtand by him, yet the Lord (what his purpoſe and counſel is) can bring to paſs alone: O behold this might! he can do all things without the help of any; and not only ſo, but Fifthly, God is ſo mighty, that he can bring all things to paſs, or do what he pleaſeth, though all creatures ſhould be diſpleaſed, though all men and Angels, though all ſecond cauſes ſtand up to hinder and to ſtop him. The Lord can work his will againſt every will, againſt all contradictions and oppoſitions. Thus the Prophet extols the power of God, (Iſa. 14. 27.) The Lord of Hoſts hath purpoſed, and who ſhall diſanul it? His hand is ſtretched out, and who ſhall turn it back? Where we have, firſt, the purpoſe of God, none can diſanul that; Secondly, the execution of that purpoſe, He ſtretched out his hand (to do ſuch or ſuch a thing) who ſhall turn it back? Let all men and Devils joyn forces and counſels, let them ſtrive to do it, they ſhall not be able to do it. We have a like confeſſion, (Dan. 4. 35.) He doth according to his will in the Armies of Heaven, and among the Inhabitants of the Earth, and none can ſtay his hand, or ſay to him, what doſt thou? Such is the mightineſs of God, that he can work, not only when the creature doth not help him, or when they apoſtatize from and deſert him or his intereſt, but though they ſet their hearts and heads, their hands, and their all againſt him, they cannot ſtay him, nor hinder his work; I (ſaith the Lord, Iſa. 43. 13.) will work, and who ſhall let it?

Sixthly, Behold, how mighty the Lord is, he is ſo mighty, that he can do all theſe things, and never trouble himſelf in doing of them; he can do all things, and not be weary. We ſee the mightieſt among men, the Powers of this world, how they are toyled and moyled, how they are worn out, how they ſweat and labour, and are ready to faint and tire, in bringing ſome poor buſineſs, ſome petty project about, or to its iſſue. But the greateſt deſigns which the Lord hath in his heart to do, he can do them, without any wearisomneſs or trouble at all, (Iſa. 40. 28.) Doſt not thou know that the Lord is not weary, neither doth he faint? and when the Prophet ſaith, the Lord is not weary, neither doth he faint; the meaning is not this, the Lord is ſomewhat weary, only he doth not faint, but the meaning is this, he hath not the leaſt weariſomneſs upon him, no more than a man hath in turning his hand; not only are all things poſſible to God, or ſuch as he can do, if he put forth the utmoſt of his power and ſtrength, if he make (as we ſay) much ado, if he lay himſelf out to the full; not only are things thus poſſible to God, (which yet argueth wonderful might) but behold, the Lord is ſo mighty, that there is nothing difficult unto him. Not only can he poſſibly do great things, but he can eaſily do them, he can do them without the leaſt trouble to himſelf: There is nothing hard to him, who can do every thing. Mighty men have done great things, but they will tell you they could hardly do them, they were forced to turn every ſtone, to ſtrain every vein of their hearts to do them; whereas the mighty God can do his work with as much eaſe, as deſire to have it done.

Seventhly, Behold, God is mighty, ſo mighty that he can do any thing, but that which will argue that he is not Almighty. The Scripture ſpeaks of ſomething which the Lord cannot do, (Tit. 1. 2.) In hope of eternal life, which God who cannot lye hath promiſed. And again, the Apoſtle ſaith of God, not only making promiſe but oath to Abraham, (Heb. 6. 18.) That by two Immutable things, in which it is impoſſible for God to lye, the heirs of promiſe might have ſtrong conſolation, Once more, (2 Tim. 2. 13.) If we believe not, yet he abideth faithful, he cannot deny himſelf. We have theſe and ſuch like negative Propoſitions concerning God, telling us what he cannot do. Now the only reaſon why it is ſaid, the Mighty God cannot do theſe things, is becauſe the doing of them would argue him not to be Almighty. To lye is to be weak; to deny himſelf would affirm his impotency, therefore he cannot do theſe things; the Lord is ſo mighty, ſo ſtrong, that it is impoſſible for him to do any thing, which ſhould declare any weakneſs or impotency in him. Thus I have given you ſeven aſſertions concerning the might of God, all which may very well call for a behold of admiration and aſtoniſhment at the mightineſs of God. Take a few Inferences from this grand Aſſertion.

Firſt, For Comfort.

Secondly, For Terror. Behold, the Lord is Mighty, Almighty; this ſpeaks comfort to the people of God.

Firſt, Surely then he can do whatſoever he hath promiſed to do, and if ſo, then look through the promiſes and ſee, whether God hath not promiſed, to do good things for his people in general, and for every believer in particular; Behold, the Lord is mighty, theſe are not vain words, he can fill up, and fulfil all his promiſes. As he hath made promiſes, ſo he can create performances. Abraham was fully perſwaded that what he had promiſed he was able to perform, (Rom. 4. 21.)

Secondly, If the Lord be mighty in all thoſe notions foreſhewed, then certainly he can do whatſoever we deſire him to do according to his will. As God hath not out-promiſed his power, ſo we cannot out-pray the power, nor out-ask the arm of God; we may quickly out-pray the power of man, and ask what he cannot do; he may ſay, I cannot do this for you, it is not in my power; but here is our comfort, if what we pray and ask be good for us to have, if it be juſt and righteous for him to do, let it be what it will, it is within the compaſs of the power of God, who is alſo ready to perform it for us. The Apoſtle aſſureth us of this, (Eph. 3. 20.) He is able to do for us abundantly, above what we ask or think; he cannot only do what we ask, but he can do above what we ask, yea, abundantly above what we ask. How narrow, and ſhort, and poor, are our words and prayers, compared with the power of God! He can do abundantly for us above what we ask, and not only ſo, but above what we think. If a man ſhould have ſomewhat in his mind, that he is not able to expreſs, (as the mind is far larger than the tongue,) if a man think what he cannot ſpeak or utter, yet the Lord is of ſuch power, that he can do not only what we think, but abundantly above what we are able to think. How many requeſts do we put up daily to God in prayer for our perſons, for our families, for the Church of God, and about the Kingdoms of men, our own Kingdom eſpecially, is it not matter of ſingular comfort, that all theſe requeſts are before a Mighty God, a God who can quickly ſend down all our prayers in performances, and give us the fruit of all our askings? 'Tis an everlaſting Spring of comfort and encouragement unto the people of God, both in prayer and unto prayer; they pray to him who is mighty, mighty to do what they pray for.

Thirdly, If God be ſo mighty in himſelf that he can do all things, then he is able to give us might to do what he requireth of us; if he be mighty enough to do what we ask, then he is mighty enough to enable us to do what he commands. We ask many things of God, God commands many things at our hands; when we ask, God is mighty to help us to what we ask; and if what we ask be what he commands us, he will ſurely help us to do what we ask, even whatſoever he commands us to do; he ſtrengthens his people with might by his Spirit in the inner man, (Eph. 3. 16.) Paul could ſay, (Phil. 4. 18.) I can do all things, through Chriſt ſtrengthening me; Chriſt hath ſtrength to do all things, and Chriſt can make me ſtrong (ſaith the Apoſtle) to do all things; Chriſt hath ſtrength to do all things that he hath a mind to do, and he is ſtrong to ſtrengthen us in and for the doing of all things, that are according to his mind.

Fourthly, If God be thus mighty to do all things, if he hath all ſtrength, both commanding and executing ſtrength, then as he can give us ſtrength to do all things that he calls us to do, ſo he hath ſtrength enough to reward us for all we do for him; this is comfortable. Sometimes we work and labour for men who are not able, they have little power, or if power enough, yet no will at all to reward us for it. Bnt as the Lord is not unrighteous, to forget our labour, (Heb. 6. 10.) ſo he is not unable, that is, he is infinitely able to reward us. We find the ſtrength of God ſpoken of to this point, (Jer. 32. 18, 19.) Thou ſheweſt loving kindneſs unto thouſands, &c. The great the mighty God, the Lord of Hoſts is his Name; Great in counſel, and mighty in working, for thine eyes are open upon all the ways of the ſons of men, to give every one according to his ways, and according to the fruit of his doings. When the Prophet had aſſerted, God is mighty in working, he brings it down to this, he is mighty in rewarding us for all our works. Do not think (what labour ſoever you have taken for the Lord) that you ſhall want a reward, for the Lord hath treaſure and ſtore, ſtrength and power enough, to give you a ſufficient recompence for all your labours.

Fifthly, This truth is matter of comfort and encouragement in doing good, not only as 'tis a ſervice to God, but as it is a kindneſs to men, eſpecially to the poor, and more eſpecially to God's poor. The mightineſs of God ſhould move us to be charitable, yea, liberal and bountiful in our charity. The Apoſtle uſeth this argument, (2 Cor. 9. 8.) for having ſaid, God loveth a chearful giver, he preſently adds, God is able to make all grace abound towards you, that ye always having All-ſufficiency in all things, may abound in every good work. As if he had ſaid, Be not afraid to give, nor ſparing in giving, for God (to whom you lend, when you give to the poor) is a good debter, a ſufficient pay-maſter, and he will pay you, not only in your own, but in better coin, than you lent: he will pny you in Spirituals for your Temporals, in Grace for your Gold, and that abundantly, both in the grace of his favour ſhining upon you, as alſo in the graces of his Spirit working in you; yea, ye ſhall have, not only an All-ſufficiency in ſpiritual things, but in all things, which muſt needs include temporal things; even your Gold and Silver will multiply as Seed, by ſowing and ſcattering it abroad (as he alludes in the 9. verſe) ſo that ye ſhall (through this ability of God) be enabled to abound in every good work, that is, every good work of Grace, in general; and if you are called to that ſpecial good work of Charity again and again, you ſhall be able to abound in every one of them. Some are doubtful, if they ſhould give freely and liberally, they ſhould loſe by it, and be ſtraitned themſelves: No, ſaith the Apoſtle, I avouch and engage the Almightineſs of God for it, if you be chearful givers, God will ſhew his All-ſufficiency in giving you an All-ſufficiency in all things. Here are three or four Alls, promiſed to thoſe, who give but ſomewhat in a due manner. Here is, Firſt, all grace; Secondly, All-ſufficiency; Thirdly, in all things; and, Fourthly, always; and all theſe grounded upon the mightineſs of God: God is able.

Sixthly, God is mighty: Then he can protect us from, ſupport us under, or deliver us out of all thoſe dangers, which we incur for his Names ſake, (Dan. 3. 17.)

Secondly, Hence we may infer matter of terrour to the wicked world, the ſons of Belial, the mightieſt enemies of God. What is the might of ſinful man, to the mightineſs of God! The weakneſs of God is ſtronger than man; what then is his mightineſs! We read (Rev. 6. 15.) how, the (Heathen) Kings of the earth, and the great men, and the rich men, and the chief Captains, and (which may be the recapitulation of all theſe) the mighty men, hid themſelves in Dens, and ſaid to the Mountains fall on us, and hide us from the face of him that ſitteth upon the Throne, and from the wrath of the Lamb. The Apoſtle checks the madneſs of the Corinthians in ſinning, by an intimation of the mightineſs of God, againſt whom they ſinned (1 Cor. 10. 22.) Do we provoke the Lord to jealouſie? Are we ſtronger than he? As if he had ſaid, What do ye mean? (he ſpeaks to thoſe that would venture to go to the Table of Devils, that is, who cared not how they mingled themſelves, and held Communion, in the things of God, with thoſe who worſhipped Devil-gods, or (as all Idolaters do) Devils rather than God; what mean you (ſaith he to theſe) conſider your ſelves, Will you provoke the Lord? are you ſtronger than he? are you his match? are you able to grapple with him? not ſo well as a Child with a mighty Giant, or a Lamb with a Lion. The mightineſs of the Lord, his Almightineſs ſhould make ſinners tremble, and fear to provoke him; he can cruſh them as a Moth, and break the[illegible] pieces like a Potter's Veſſel. As 'tis the joy of all true [illegible]ievers, that God hath laid help for them (as 'tis ſaid, Pſal. 89. 19.) upon one that is mighty, that is, Chriſt, of whom David was but a ſhadow; and as 'tis the comfort of the Fatherleſs, (how weak ſoever) that their Redeemer is mighty (Prov. 23. 11.) So it may fill the faces of the wicked and preſumptuous with confuſion, and their hearts with deſpairing ſorrow, to hear, that God, who is ready to take vengeance on them, is mighty. Behold, God is mighty; that's a glorious ſight; and yet behold a ſight more glorious, if more glorious may be,

And deſpiſeth not any.

What a temperament is here? God is ſo mighty that he feareth none, no, not the mightieſt, yet ſo meek, that he deſpiſeth not any, no, not the meaneſt. Elihu having aſſerted the mightineſs of God, amplifieth it, Firſt, by his gracious condeſcenſion and moderation in the uſe of his mightineſs; he is mighty, yet he doth not exerciſe his might in a proud vaunting or contemning way, he deſpiſeth not any; that's the firſt thing, in which he amplifies the excellency of God in his mightineſs. Secondly, As God is thus mighty, and moderate in the exerciſe of his might, not deſpiſing any; ſo behold another excellency of this might of God, He is mighty, not only in ſtrength of arm and authority, but (as the laſt words of the verſe ſet him forth)

In ſtrength and wiſdom;] Or, he is as wiſe as he is ſtrong. Some men have a great deal of might, and they preſently ſwell proudly, this ſpoils all; others have a great deal of might, but not a bit of wit, or wiſdom, or underſtanding, how to diſpoſe or make the beſt of it: But what a mighty God have we to do with! who is mighty and deſpiſeth no man; who hath not only might of ſtrength, but might of wiſdom too. Thus we ſee how Elihu, in this latter part of the verſe, advanceth or extolleth the mightineſs of God, in theſe two things, the infinite Moderation and Wiſdom, that go along with it and act it. I ſhall a little open both. Firſt, his wonderful moderation in the exerciſe of his mightineſs; He is mighty,

And deſpiſeth not any.] To deſpiſe is an act of Pride; Pride is a bad Mother of many bad Children, theſe three eſpecially. Firſt, boaſting of our ſelves. Secondly, contending with others. Thirdly, deſpiſing of others. The word here uſed ſignifies to deſpiſe with abhorrence or loathing, as the Stomach doth meat which is offenſive to it; ill ſavoured meat is loathſom, and any thing which the mind nauſeates, is an abhorrence to us. The Lord deſpiſeth not, he doth not nauſeate any. The word any is not expreſt in the Original Text, that ſaith only, The Lord is mighty, and deſpiſeth not; we put that ſupplement in our Tranſlation, any; He is mighty, and deſpiſeth not any. Others render more ſtrictly, thus, Behold, God is mighty, and deſpiſeth not his own people. The Chaldee Paraphraſe ſpeaks exegetically, The Lord is mighty, and deſpiſeth not the righteous man. The Greek Verſion hath a fourth ſupplement, to the ſame purpoſe, God is mighty, and deſpiſeth not the innocent perſon, the man free from evil or wickedneſs; a man of integrity, a man of ſimplicity, the Lord will not deſpiſe: ſuch are often afflicted, but never deſpiſed, eſpecially not as ſuch. Laſtly, thus, God is mighty, and deſpiſeth not the mean, the afflicted, the poor, or thoſe of low eſtate, (Pſal. 22. 24.) He hath not deſpiſed, nor abhorred the affliction of the afflicted, neither hath he hid his face from him, but when he cryed unto him, he heard. And this ſeems moſt proper to the ſcope and meaning of Elihu here; God is mighty, and deſpiſeth not thoſe who have no might. Thus the words reflect chiefly upon Job, who at leaſt ſeem'd to charge God, that he did not conſider him in his affliction, or in his low eſtate, when he complained and cryed to him. We have two Texts in this Book of Job, which might very well move Elihu to ſpeak thus unto him; though God be mighty, yet he deſpiſeth not the afflicted, or the poor. Job ſaid (Chap. 10. 3.) Is it good to thee that thou ſhouldſt oppreſs, that thou ſhouldſt deſpiſe the work of thy hands, and ſhine upon the counſel of the wicked? As if he had ſaid to God, Thou ſeemeſt to deſpiſe me, the work of thy hand, now that I am poor, low, and reduced as it were to duſt. Again (Chap. 19. 7.) we have near the ſame language, Behold, I cry out of wrong, but I am not heard, I cry aloud, but there is no Judgment.

ment. As [illegible] as to ſay, I am deſpiſed and neglected, I am not [illegible] when I cry. This Elihu takes off in the preſent Text, Behold, God is mighty, and deſpiſeth not any; he deſpiſeth not the afflicted, nor the poor, when they cry unto, and call upon him; and therefore in this, O Job, thou haſt misbehaved thy ſelf, or ſpoken amiſs.

But whichſoever of theſe ſupplements we take, the ſenſe is good, and the Propoſition true, he deſpiſeth not; what will he not deſpiſe? we ſay, not any; a ſecond, his own; a third, the juſt; a fourth, the innocent; a fifth, the afflicted (there is a ſixth, which I ſhall offer before I part with theſe words) All theſe are true, God deſpiſeth not.

> Hence note, Firſt, Though the Lord be infinitely more mighty than the mightieſt of men, yet he doth not deſpiſe any man;

He doth not deſpiſe man in general, who is the work of his hand; yea, Job ſaid once (Chap. 14. 15.) Thou wilt have a deſire to the work of thy hand. The Lord doth not deſpiſe any of his works, as they are his works, or as they come out of his hand; and therefore when Jonah ſeemed to ſet ſo low a rate upon the Ninevites, who were the work of his hand, his Creatures, the Lord reproved him for it, by the Gourd, which when the Lord ſmote, Jonah was angry; but ſaid the Lord, Doſt thou well to be angry for thy Gourd? Haſt thou mercy upon a Gourd, and ſhould not I ſpare this City, wherein are more than ſix ſcore thouſand perſons, that know not their right hand from their left, and alſo much Cattle? The Lord did not deſpiſe, but pity them. Go through all the ſorts of men, the Lord deſpiſeth none; the Lord deſpiſeth not great men, becauſe great (which will come to a further conſideration, upon another Tranſlation of the Text) nor mean men, becauſe mean; he deſpiſeth not men in proſperity, becauſe they are rich and proſperous, nor doth he deſpiſe men in adverſity, becauſe poor and unproſperous. He deſpiſeth not any upon any of theſe accounts; the Lord deſpiſeth none but the wicked, and the ungodly, the unbeliever, and the impenitent, and all them he deſpiſeth, and them he ever will deſpiſe, how great, how high, how mighty, how rich ſoever they are; the Lord deſpiſeth them, and he will always deſpiſe them. He doth not deſpiſe any man becauſe a great man, if he be not a wicked great man; and let men be never ſo poor or low, the Lord looks not diſdainfully upon them becauſe they are ſo; God doth not deſpiſe any man becauſe he is in a bad caſe, he only deſpiſeth men, becauſe their caſe or cauſe is bad, and then he will deſpiſe them, let them be who or what they will. Such is the goodneſs of God, and this goodneſs is his glory, That although the higheſt and greateſt of men, are but as worms to him, or not ſo much to him as the duſt of the ballance, or the drop of the bucket, yet he deſpiſeth not any, no, not the loweſt and leaſt of men.

Secondly, When the Text ſaith, he deſpiſeth not, there is more in it than is expreſt. We may take it affirmatively, God gives all ſorts of men due regard and favour, he takes care of them, and beſtows ſuitable mercies upon them, even upon the meaneſt and pooreſt of them: if they be his, if they be faithful and godly, how doth the Lord own them! how doth the Lord honour them! how doth the Lord embrace and lay them in his boſom, though they lye upon the Dunghil, as Job did! As when we are warned not to deſpiſe the chaſtnings of the Lord (Heb. 12. 5.) we are taught to take them in good part; and as when the Apoſtle admoniſheth us (1 Theſſ. 5. 20.) not to deſpiſe Propheſie, his meaning is not only this, that he would not have us ſlight it, and throw it at our heels, but he would have us give it due eſteem, and honour it as one of our choiceſt mercies, he would have us ſet a great price upon it, and bleſs God heartily for it. So here, when Elihu ſaith, The Lord deſpiſeth not any, his purpoſe is to ſhew, that he reſpects and favours men according to their condition, but moſt his own faithful and obedient Servants. This Interpretation may give us another Inſtruction:

> God hath a due regard and reſpect to all ſorts and conditions of men.

Having made all men, he doth not throw them up to the wide world, much leſs trample upon them himſelf; but owns them, preſerveth them, watcheth over them all. And as for his ſpecial people, he tends them as a Nurſe her infant, or as a Father tenders his children; he counſels them, he guides them, he directs and leads them, he ſupports and comforts them, he carries them through this world, as it were in his own arms, as the Eagle carries her young ones upon her wings. The Lord is a conſuming fire to burn up the wicked, thoſe that are unlike him, and like him not; but he is a warm Sun, to cheriſh, and a ſafe-guarding Shield, to protect thoſe that fear him and truſt in his Name: He indeed will be as a refining fire, to fetch out and conſume the droſs that he ſees in his people, and as a trying fire (by affliction) to their graces (as Job's caſe was) But when he is ſo, and doth ſo, he is ſo far from deſpiſing them, that he honours them, and makes them more honourable. And therefore having made Promiſe of being with his people when they ſhould be called to walk through the fire (Iſa. 43. 2.) he preſently ſubjoins, (verſ. 4.) Since thou waſt precious in my ſight, thou haſt been honourable. As if he had ſaid, Since thou haſt given a proof that thou art good Metal, and that thou haſt loſt and left nothing in the fire of affliction, but thy droſs, I both honour thee my ſelf, and will cauſe others to honour thee alſo.

Dicitur Deus ignis conſumens, quoniam univerſa ſibi diſſimilia devoret ac conſumat; ſed ſibi ſimilia complectitur. Brent.

Again, He deſpiſeth not any. Elihu in this ſets out the honour of God, he puts this as a Crown of Glory upon the head of his Power. God is mighty, yet he deſpiſeth not any.

> Hence Note, To be mighty in Power, and meek in Spirit, ſhews an excellent God-like Spirit.

As God is great, ſo good; both are equally eſſential to him: goodneſs, gentleneſs, and meekneſs, meet together and are matcht with greatneſs and mightineſs in God, (Nahum 1. 8.) The Lord is great in Power, and ſlow to anger; he is not preſently in a flame with ſinners, but waiteth to be gracious. Fury is not in me, (ſaith the Lord, Iſa. 27. 4, 5.) I do not preſently execute my power, becauſe great in power. Who would ſet the Bryars and Thorns againſt me in battel? I would go through them, and burn them together; or let him take hold of my ſtrength, and make peace with me, and he ſhall make peace with me. As if he had ſaid, If ſinners, of one ſort or other, who are to me, or to my people, like briars and thorns, vexing and troubling both me and them, ſhould take the boldneſs to contend with me, I could quickly rid my hands of them, even as ſoon as fire can conſume briars and thorns fully dry; yet I rather adviſe them to humble themſelves, and humbly make ſuit for peace, and they ſhall not find me inexorable, though I am invincible; they may have Peace for the asking, though I fear not at all the iſſue of the War. O that the mighty men of the world, would ſtrive to imitate this overture of the mighty God: But O how unlike are the moſt of the mighty men of this world to God!

Firſt, Some mighty men of this world rather pride themſelves that they can do hurt, than pleaſe themſelves, that they may do good with their might. (Pſal. 52. 1.) Why boaſteſt thou, O mighty man, that thou canſt do miſchief? that thou canſt tread and trample upon others? this thy boaſt ſhould be thy ſhame. Mighty men are apt to deſpiſe all men (upon the matter) that are below them, that are their underlings; but why doſt thou boaſt, O thou mighty man, ſeeing (as it followeth in the Pſalm) the goodneſs of God (who is mightier than thou) endureth continually.

Secondly, How unlike are they to God, who having might and power in their hand, deſpiſe the mean, and the oppreſſed, who come to them for Juſtice! Such are not like God, the Judg of all men, but like that Judg, whoſe Character was (Luke 18. 2.) He feared not God, nor regarded man; he deſpiſed all; what cared he for them, or their tears, ſo he might ſerve his own turn, and carry on his own ends? Wo to the mighty, who deſpiſe the cauſe, much more who deſpiſe the crys of the oppreſſed.

Thirdly, The mighty men of the earth uſually deſpiſe thoſe whom God honoureth moſt. God deſpiſeth not any, but he highly eſteemeth his own; whereas the mighty men of the world are apt to deſpiſe all, eſpecially his, that is, the generation of the righteous; they that are neareſt to God's heart, are fartheſt from theirs. The affections and eſtimations of the mighty, ſeldom fall in with, but run croſs to Gods, (Pſal. 10. 3.) He bleſſeth the covetous, whom God abhors; that is, he hath a high eſteem of thoſe, whom God cannot abide; and he that doth ſo, will never abide thoſe whom God highly eſteems, and thoſe leaſt whom

God eſteems moſt highly; away (ſaith he) with thoſe that are ſo ſtrict in their way, away with them (ſaith he) that walk in the narrow way. O let ſuch mighty ones as deſpiſe theſe, conſider how unlike they are to the mighty God, who deſpiſeth not any, who greatly honoureth theſe. Michal, David's Wife, Saul's Daughter, had a piece of this ſpirit in her; though David was a mighty King, ſhe deſpiſed him, only becauſe he was a holy and a zealous King: When ſhe ſaw how he danced before the Ark, when ſhe ſaw how he was taken with the things of God, ſhe deſpiſed him in her heart, and for that was puniſhed with a barren womb, as long as ſhe lived (2 Sam. 6. 23.) They who act higheſt in holineſs, are always loweſt in the thoughts of the unholy.

Fourthly, They that are mighty in Parts and Gifts of ſpeech and knowledg, they who are got a Form higher than their Brethren, how apt are they to deſpiſe all that are below them! Nor is this the ſin of carnal vain men only, but of many (for the main) good men alſo, who taking too much notice of their own great Abilities, will ſcarce take any notice of them who have but little. This dead Fly hath corrupted many a Box of precious Ointment; this Weed hath been found growing in the richeſt grounds; and the richer any ground is, the more apt it is to bring forth this Weed, unleſs the Lord, with thoſe other Gifts, give alſo that which is more excellent than all Gifts, even than the tongue, yea head of Men and Angels, an humble and ſelf-denying heart. St. Paul himſelf was in danger to be lifted up (and certainly had, if God had not given him preventing Phyſick) with this diſtemper, through the abundance of Revelations; now, he that is lifted up in himſelf, is within a ſtep of deſpiſing others. And O how unlike are theſe in this alſo to God, who is mighty, not only in ſtrength, but in wiſdom, yet deſpiſeth not any! And, that God who is mighty and deſpiſeth not any, is mighty, not only in ſtrength, but in wiſdom, is Elihu's aſſertion alſo concerning God, in the cloſe of this verſe, and comes next to be opened and handled.

He is mighty in ſtrength and wiſdom.

The Original may be thus rendred ſtrictly; He is mighty, the ſtrength of heart: Now, the ſtrength of the heart conſiſts, firſt, in courage; ſecondly, in wiſdom; and hence we tranſlate diſtinctly, He is mighty in ſtrength and wiſdom. Here are two points of God's might according to our reading: He is mighty, Firſt, in ſtrength; Secondly, in wiſdom. As before we had that noble combination of mightineſs and meekneſs in God, he is mighty and deſpiſeth not any; ſo here we have another noble combination, in his mightineſs, of ſtrength and wiſdom; He is mighty in ſtrength and in wiſdom. Some men are mighty in ſtrength, who are weak in wiſdom; others are mighty in wiſdom, but not in ſtrength; both meet and are joyned in God (in whom all things are but one, he being but an infinite ſimplicity, though they are acted diverſly towards man, both theſe (I ſay) meet in God) and he equally excels in both.

Yet becauſe, if theſe two be taken diſtinctly, we can underſtand nothing in God by ſtrength, but what was comprehended in mightineſs before ſpoken of, therefore I conceive, theſe words, He is mighty in ſtrength and wiſdom, ſignifie no more in this place than this, That God is mighty in the ſtrength of wiſdom, or that he is mighty ſtrong in wiſdom. And ſo I ſhall proceed with the Text.

This ſtrength of the wiſdom of God, or his ſtrong wiſdom, is of two ſorts, or conſiſts in a twofold wiſdom. Firſt, there is his knowing and diſcerning wiſdom. Secondly, there is his governing and diſpoſing wiſdom.

Firſt, There is a ſtrength of wiſdom in knowing and diſcerning: God is mighty ſtrong in this wiſdom, in this knowing, this diſcerning wiſdom, (1 Sam. 2. 3.) The Lord is a God of knowledg, by him actions are weighed; He knoweth our actions exactly, and he will weigh them to a grain, he knoweth our actions to the utmoſt. And as he knoweth our actions, ſo our intentions; he knoweth our inſide as well as our outſide, (Heb. 4. 13.) All things are naked and manifeſt before him, with whom we have to do; and they are not only naked to the skin, but unbowelled, and anatomized to every vein and bone, (Acts 15. 18.) Known to God are all his works from the beginning of the world; he knoweth all his own works, much more ours. Thus God is ſtrong in wiſdom, as wiſdom conſiſts in knowledg; and thus ſtrong he is, he knoweth all things; Firſt, the leaſt things, as well as the greateſt; 'tis no burden, no diſtraction to God, to take notice of the ſmalleſt matters, even to the numbering of the hairs of our head. That's true greatneſs of knowledg, to know the leaſt things and motions of the meaneſt creature. Secondly, he knoweth the moſt ſecret things; Secret things belong to God, (Deut. 29. 29.) that is, God hath ſecrets which he reſerves to himſelf, man cannot know them, man muſt not attempt to know them, ſuch an attempt were inſufferable intruſion. Now as God hath ſecrets of his own, which no man muſt meddle with, ſo he meddles with all our ſecrets, our ſecrets belong to God as well as his own; he knows the ſecrets of our hearts, he hath a key to that Cabinet, and can unlock it, and look into it; we may lock men, one and other, out of our hearts, but we cannot lock out God, he ſeeth what's there, ſuch is the ſtrength of his knowing wiſdom. Thirdly, He knows things future, or what ſhall be; he knoweth what as yet is not, as clearly as what is; He declareth the end from the beginning, (Iſa. 46. 10.) Upon this ground the Prophet challengeth all the Idols of the world, (Iſa. 41. 23.) Shew the things that are to come hereafter, that we may know that ye are Gods; tell us what ſhall be next, tell us what will be to morrow; that will be a demonſtration of your Divinity; the Lord declareth things to come, and he only declares them. We know little of that which is, he, and he only, knoweth that which will be. All futures unrevealed, are ſecrets, and among them our thoughts are the greateſt ſecrets, yet them the Lord knoweth, (Pſal. 139. 2.) Thou (ſaith David) underſtandeſt my thoughts afar off, that is, before I think them; Is not this ſtrength of knowing wiſdom? Fourthly, God knoweth all things always, or everlaſtingly, there is not one of them ſlips out of his knowledg, they are at all times alike, that is, perfectly before him; Is not this alſo ſtrength of knowing wiſdom? Fifthly, The Lord knoweth all theſe things as diſtinctly as if he had but one thing to know. Sixthly, He knoweth all things by one act of ſingle and ſimple intuition, he doth not know (as we) by report from others, nor by comparing one thing with another, nor by inferring one thing from another, that is, he doth not know by diſcourſe, argument, or demonſtration, but all things are before the eye of his knowledg nakedly and immediately, as they are. Theſe two laſt as well as any of, or all the former, are a clear proof, not only, that God is knowing and wiſe, but that he is mighty in ſtrength of knowing wiſdom.

Secondly, Conſider wiſdom, as it is applied in working. Some have much of that wiſdom which we call Theoretical, knowing, diſcerning wiſdom; but as for practical, working wiſdom, how to put things together, how to order them as to the buſineſſes and affairs of this life, they are very far to ſeek. We ſay, Great Scholars are not always the wiſeſt men: many are knowing, they know almoſt all things, they will diſpute (de omni ſcibili) of all things knowable, yet are very weak when they come to lay things together for practice or government; if it be but the government of a family, or of their private eſtate, they know not how to mannage it, much leſs can they mannage the government of great Societies or Corporations, leaſt of all of Kingdoms and Nations. But as for the Lord, he hath not only a knowing wiſdom, but a diſpoſing, a governing, a working, practical wiſdom, in ordering all affairs, which we properly call prudence or diſcretion, (Pſal. 112. 5.) We have ſeen knowing learned men do things very fooliſhly, imprudently, indiſcreetly. But all the works of the Lord are contrived and model'd, as alſo effected and perfected with infinite wiſdom. Hence that holy exclamation, (Pſal. 104. 24.) O Lord, how manifold are thy works, in wiſdom haſt thou made them all? Which as it is true of all the works of Creation, ſo likewiſe of the works of Providence, the former of which are ſpoken of in the beginning of the Pſalm, and the latter in the following parts of it. The Lord in wiſdom made the world, He made the heavens by his wiſdom, (Pſal. 136. 5.) and by wiſdom hath he founded the earth, (Prov. 3. 19.) If in both thoſe places we underſtand Chriſt by wiſdom, it doth not hinder, but advance this truth; now as the Lord made the world both heaven and earth in wiſdom, ſo in and by the ſame wiſdom he governs heaven and earth, and all his works in both are full of wiſdom. Thus it appears that the Lord is mighty in ſtrength of wiſdom, both as to the knowing and ordering of all things: yea, the Lord is ſo mighty in both theſe kinds of wiſdom, that there is indeed none wiſe but he. And therefore the Scripture not only calls him, The wiſe God, but God only wiſe, (Rom. 16. 27. Jude verſ. 25.) And ſurely he is mighty ſtrong in wiſdom, who hath all the wiſdom, or is only wiſe. Some may ſay, How are we to underſtand that? is not wiſdom one of thoſe communicable attributes of God? ſo we diſtinguiſh the divine attributes, ſome are communicable, others are incommunicable. The infiniteneſs, the omniſcience, the unchangeableneſs, the ſimplicity of God are incommunicable, but the holineſs, the juſtice, the mercy and wiſdom of God, are communicable; that is, God doth communicate unto man his holineſs, his juſtice and wiſdom. Why then is it ſaid, That God is only wiſe, ſeeing God hath endowed many with a ſpirit of wiſdom, or hath made many wiſe men in the world?

I anſwer, Firſt, God is ſaid to be only wiſe, becauſe there is none ſo wiſe as he; his wiſdom is ſo much beyond the wiſdom of all men, that no man may be called wiſe but God. Thus alſo God is called the only Potentate, (1 Tim. 6. 15.) becauſe though there are many Potentates in the world, yet God's potency is beyond them all. His life alſo is ſuch, that at the 16. verſe of the ſame Chapter it is ſaid, He only hath immortality, yet both the Angels and the ſouls of men are immortal; but God hath immortality in a way of ſuch eminency, that the very Angels and ſouls of men are mortal in compariſon of him. David ſaid of his life, (Pſal. 39. 5.) My age is nothing to thee; I ſcarce live at all, when I conſider the life of God; ſo the wiſeſt man in the world may ſay of his wiſdom, my wiſdom is nothing unto thee, I have no wiſdom when I conſider how wiſe God is.

Secondly, God is ſaid to be only wiſe, becauſe there are none originally wiſe but he; his wiſdom is of himſelf, yea his wiſdom is himſelf; the wiſdom of God is not a ſeparable quality from him, as the wiſdom of a man is. Many are men, but not wiſe men; but it is impoſſible for God to be God, and not to be wiſe; his wiſdom is eſſential to him. The wiſdom of man is like gilding upon an earthen veſſel; but the wiſdom of God is like a golden veſſel. The wiſeſt men are gilded over with wiſdom, they are adorned and beautified with it, but no man, how wiſe ſoever is wiſdom, only God is. God is (if I may ſo ſpeak) an immenſe and immeaſurable veſſel of gold, he is all gold, you cannot diſtinguiſh the gold from the veſſel, 'tis gold quite through, he is maſſy gold, maſſy wiſdom. The wiſdom of man is another thing from himſelf. The wiſdom of God is himſelf; and thus God alone is wiſe.

Thirdly, God is only wiſe, becauſe all wiſdom is from him; as he hath his wiſdom from himſelf, ſo all others have wiſdom from him; all the wiſdom of men and Angels, is but a ray from his light, but a ſtream, yea, but a drop from his Ocean. Bezaleel's artificial wiſdom was from the Lord, Solomon's political wiſdom was from the Lord; Solomon asked wiſdom from the Lord to govern. And not only is the wiſdom of Princes, Stateſmen and Politicians, but the very Ploughman's wiſdom is from the Lord, (Iſa. 28. 26.) where the Prophet having ſhewed how the Ploughman tills the ground, how he harrows and caſts in the ſeed, how he threſheth and gets out the grain, he addeth (verſ. 29.) This comes from the Lord, who is wonderful in counſel, and excellent in working. The Ploughman knoweth not how to till his ground, to ſow his ſeed, to harrow his land, to threſh his corn, if the Lord did not give him wiſdom for it. Thus common wiſdom as well as political and ſpiritual wiſdom is of God, as Daniel confeſſed when the ſecret was revealed to him, (Dan. 2. 21.) He giveth wiſdom unto the wiſe, and knowledg to them that know underſtanding. Seeing then all wiſdom is from God, we muſt confeſs, He is only wiſe.

Fourthly, The Lord may be ſaid to be only wiſe, becauſe he is victoriouſly wiſe, his wiſdom is a conquering wiſdom, he conquers by his wiſdom as well as by his power; his wiſdom overthrows the wiſe men of the world, (Prov. 21. 30.) There is no wiſdom, nor underſtanding, nor counſel againſt the Lord. Many men will be taking and giving counſel againſt the Lord, but it ſhall not ſtand (Iſa. 8. 9.) He is only wiſe, who deſtroyeth the wiſdom of the wiſe, (1 Cor. 1. 19. 1 Cor. 3. 19, 20.) Thus the Lord is mighty in ſtrength of wiſdom, in knowing and diſpoſing wiſdom, diſcerning all things moſt clearly, and ordering all things moſt wiſely, according to the pleaſure of his holy and righteous will: and he is ſo wiſe in all theſe things, that he ought to be acknowledged and reverenced, as the only wiſe God, or as God only wiſe. Hence take theſe Inferences.

Firſt, If the Lord be mighty in ſtrength of wiſdom as well as in ſtrength of power, then fear to do any thing amiſs before him; he will ſpy out every fault; and the more you cover the faults, cracks and flaws in what you do, the more the Lord ſets himſelf to find them out; you cannot hide what you do from him, therefore take heed what you do.

Secondly, Is God mighty in ſtrength of wiſdom? then do not find fault with any thing he doth, for he can do nothing amiſs. The works of providence, whether they regard perſons or Nations, are done with as much exactneſs as the works of Creation were. In what beauty and order was the fabrick of this world ſet up at firſt in ſix days! It is called Coſmos in Greek, from the beautiful order viſible quite through it; and certainly, the works of providence are as orderly and perfect as the work of Creation, and ſo will appear at laſt, though now we ſee ſo many appearing confuſions, diſturbances, and toſſings up and down: The Lord keeps order, how diſorderly ſoever men are. The Lord doth all things in number, weight and meaſure. There is not one, the leaſt, ſlip, error or miſtake in what himſelf doth, nor in what he ſuffers men to do as to his own ends, how many errors and miſtakes ſoever there are in the ways of men, or in the means which they uſe. Then take heed of picking holes in God's work, much more of picking quarrels with his work. We are apt to find fault (where there is none) with what God doth, but how ſlow are we to find faults (where there are many) in our own doings!

Thirdly, Is the Lord mighty in ſtrength of wiſdom? then never be troubled, though you have mighty wiſe men againſt you; be not afraid, only labour to aſſure the mighty wiſe God for you. If you can but aſſure God, who is mighty in wiſdom for you, you need not be troubled, though mighty wiſe men are againſt you, though Achitophels, though Machiavels, though the Conclave of Babylon be againſt you: if the wiſdom of God be with us and for us, we are well enough, and ſhall do well enough, notwithſtanding the wiſdom of the world againſt us.

Fourthly, If God be mighty in ſtrength of wiſdom, then, when we want wiſdom, and know not what to do, or how to ſuffer, let us go to God; if we want wiſdom to mannage a proſperous eſtate, or to bear an afflicted eſtate, let us go to God. The Apoſtle gives this direction (James 1. 5.) If any man lack wiſdom, (he ſpeaks of a man in a troublous condition, in a time of temptation) let him ask of God, who giveth to all men liberally, and upbraideth not. God hath wiſdom enough for us, and can make us wiſe enough; apply to him, and you may be ſupplied for all occaſions.

Fifthly, If God be mighty in ſtrength of wiſdom, then confidently caſt your care on him, put your all into his hand, (Pſal. 37. 5.) Commit thy way to the Lord, truſt alſo in him, and he ſhall bring it to paſs. (Prov. 16. 3.) Commit thy works unto the Lord, and thy thoughts ſhall be eſtabliſhed; that is, thy thoughts about thy works, and uſually our thoughts are more unſetled than our works. When we have left a matter in the hand of a wiſe man, how confident are we, and how compoſed are our thoughts, as to the well-iſſuing of it! how much more may we be confident, and compoſed, when we have believingly left our matters in the hand of the only wiſe God!

Sixthly, If the Lord be ſo mighty in wiſdom, that he only is wiſe, then beware of truſting to your own wiſdom, or of being wiſe in your own eyes. That's the counſel of Solomon the wiſe, (Prov. 3. 5.) Lean not to thy own underſtanding. We are apt to lean too much to the underſtanding of others; if we have ſuch a wiſe man to counſel us, we think all's ſafe, we are Cock-ſure (as we ſay) the work cannot miſcarry. 'Tis dangerous to lean to the underſtanding of others, but much more to lean to our own. Remember God is only wiſe, and we never ſhew our ſelves more fools, than when we lean to our own wiſdom, or think to carry it by our own wit, and ſo depart from the wiſdom of God. Therefore be fools, be nothing in your own wiſdom, and you ſhall be wiſe with the wiſdom of God.

Thus I have proſecuted the Text according to our Tranſlation.

There is yet another reading as to both the parts of this 5. verſe, which I ſhall touch a little, becauſe they are much inſiſted upon by Learned Interpreters.

The former part of this verſe, which we render Behold God is mighty, and deſpiſeth not any, is thus rendred, Behold God is mighty, and deſpiſeth not the mighty. The vulgar Latine, thus, God doth not caſt away the mighty, ſeeing he himſelf alſo is mighty. The ſcope of this Tranſlation, is thus conceived. Job in the 29. Chapter of this Book, having ſet forth his own mightineſs or greatneſs, complained in the 30. that notwithſtanding all his former power and might, yet God had caſt him down, and laid him in the duſt. Here Elihu tells him, though God be mighty, yet he doth not deſpiſe the mighty; he doth not reject any man how high ſoever, becauſe he is high, nor the great, how great ſoever, becauſe great. God himſelf is great and mighty, and they that are like, (uſually) rejoyce in thoſe that are like them. Therefore God being mighty himſelf, doth not deſpiſe or reject thoſe that are mighty, becauſe they are ſo; there muſt be ſome other reaſon (it is not their mightineſs) why God deſpiſes and caſts down the mighty. God is mighty, and deſpiſeth not the mighty.

Ecce Deus potens, & non faſtidit potentes, robore cordis. Scult. Deus potentes non abjicit, cum & ipſe ſit potens. Vulg. Ut hæc explicatio verbis Hebræis conveniat, vau, quod ſæpe fit, redundante verti poteſt. Ecce deus potentem non faſtidit, vel Ecce Deus potens non faſtidit. ſc. potentem. Cum enim verbo illo accuſativus addendus ſit, ſatius eſt ex præcedenti. רביר Potentem repetere, quam objectum ex mente fingere. Scult. Non potentia juſta ſed actio prava damnatur. Greg. l. 26. c. 24.

Hence Note, The great God is no enemy to greatneſs.

God doth not deſpiſe the mighty, the Kings and Princes of the Earth, as they are ſuch; he hath no antipathy in him againſt greatneſs, nor doth he reject any man becauſe he is great; if he doth at any time reject a great man, it is becauſe of the abuſe of his greatneſs: God diſlikes no mans juſt power, but the unjuſt exerciſe of that power. The Authority and Power of man over man is of God, therefore God doth not deſpiſe men becauſe they are in power. He ordaineth Powers, There is no Power but of God, the Powers that be, are ordained (or as our Margin hath it, ordered) of God. He puts power into the hands of men, and diſpoſeth of their power. God cannot deſpiſe his own Ordination. 'Tis the abuſe of Power, and not the Power it ſelf, which the Lord ſets himſelf againſt, and that indeed he doth ſet himſelf againſt; he deſpiſeth the moſt mighty and powerful Princes of the World, when they inſtead of governing, are only vexing others with their Power: This cauſeth him to pour contempt upon Princes (Pſal. 107. 40.) and renders him terrible to the Kings of the Earth (Pſal. 76. 12.) Yet the Lord is never ſo angry with, nor doth he ſo aggravate the faults of thoſe that are in Power, as to make Power it ſelf faulty. Indeed, when great and mighty men turn their Power into oppreſſion, then the Lord ſpeaks as if he had conceived a diſpleaſure againſt all great and mighty men, yet he is not diſpleaſed with their greatneſs, but with the miſ-improvement of their greatneſs, and mal-adminiſtration of their Power. The Prophet puts the Queſtion (Hab. 3. 8.) Was the Lord diſpleaſed againſt the Rivers? was thine anger againſt the Rivers? was thy wrath againſt the Sea? What was the reaſon why God turned the River of Nilus in Egypt, into blood? What was the reaſon why God divided the Red Sea? Was he wroth with the River, or with the Sea? No, he was wroth with the great Ones of Egypt, his wrath was againſt Pharaoh and the Egyptians. Such an expreſſion we have (Nahum 1. 4.) He rebuketh the Sea, and maketh it dry, and dryeth up all the Rivers: Baſhan languiſheth, and Carmel, and the Flower of Lebanon languiſheth. What was the meaning of all this? it only ſignified that the Lord was highly diſpleaſed with the great and mighty Ones of the world, who were to others, as the Sea is to a River, and as Carmel and Lebanon were to the Plains and low Valleys of the Earth, exceeding them in height and greatneſs; I ſay, he was highly diſpleaſed with them, becauſe theſe carried it amiſs in the exerciſe of their high Power; it was not becauſe they were high and great, but becauſe they had not exalted God in their highneſs, nor acted towards man as became thoſe who were advanced above, and over other men. Thus all along the Lord ſpeaks againſt, and rebukes the high and mighty, upon no other account but the unrighteous adminiſtration of their might and highneſs. God quarrels with no man meerly for his might.

The Hiſtories of all Ages have reported the great and mighty men of the World, oppoſing the mighty, purely becauſe they were ſo. Some ſay they did it out of Reaſon of State, but the true Reaſon of it, uſually was their own pride, or envy, becauſe they could not bear thoſe that were equal with them, as Pompey, much leſs a Superiour, as Cæſar could not. Or it was out of fear that the great would undermine their greatneſs, or bring them down. Thus mighty men oppoſe the mighty, as mighty; but the Lord is infinitely above theſe thoughts, He is mighty, and he deſpiſeth not the mighty, nor doth he ſet himſelf againſt them, becauſe they are mighty. The liberal (Iſa. 32. 8.) deviſeth liberal things, and by liberal things ſhall he ſtand. David a great Prince, prayed (Pſal. 51. 12.) that God would eſtabliſh him by his free (or Princely) Spirit, that being a mighty King, he might never any more entertain low and unworthy thoughts of any man, nor do any thing unworthy of God, or of himſelf.

Superbia parem non fert.

Magnificus magnificentias cogitabit. Heb.

Again, Our Tranſlation diſtributes the latter part of the verſe into two Branches of the mightineſs of God. He is mighty, firſt, in ſtrength; and ſecondly, In wiſdom. This, by others, is rendred a ſingle Propoſition. He is mighty in ſtrength of heart. Strength of heart may be taken three ways: Firſt, For courage in dangers. Secondly, For patience in troubles. Thirdly, For nobleneſs and greatneſs of mind, in all we do. In this third or laſt ſenſe, we are to underſtand it here; as if Elihu had ſaid, The Reaſon why the Lord being mighty, doth not deſpiſe the mighty, is this, Becauſe he excels all others, not only in mightineſs and power, but in the nobleneſs of his Spirit. The Lord hath ſuch an heroical Spirit, that he can do nothing below or unbecoming himſelf. This is an excellent reading of the words. Take two Notes from it. Firſt, By way of Aſſertion. Secondly, By way of Illation. By way of Aſſertion, thus,

Maximus virtute cordis. Coc. כביר כחלב Potens eſt robore cordis, (i. e.) valet animi præſtantia, eſt magni animi, ergo opera manuum ſuarum non contemnit. Merc.

The Lord hath a wonderful noble heart, and magnificent Spirit.

He hath not only an outward power (as many have) but an inward power; he is not only Maſter of others, but, as I may ſay, he is Maſter of himſelf. Many are Maſters of others, who are not at all Maſters of themſelves; they are mighty in the ſtrength of hand, yet weak as to ſtrength of heart. The inward excellency and mightineſs of the heart of God, may be ſeen eminently in a threefold reſpect.

Firſt, The Lord is mighty of heart, as to patience and long-ſufferance, in bearing with thoſe that are evil. The Lord is infinitely above that patience which conſiſts in the bearing of evil, (though that as was toucht before, ſhews much ſtrength of heart) but he is continually in the exerciſe of that patience, which conſiſts in bearing with thoſe that are evil. And O how great is the ſtrength and might of Gods heart in this! Some of the Rabbies tranſlate the Original Text, long-ſuffering. The Prophet Nahum ſpeaks of God, as ſlow to anger, and great in power, (Chap. 1. 3.) It argueth ſtrength of heart indeed, when we can ſtop and bridle our boiſterous and angry paſſions, towards thoſe that have offended us. The Lord ſaith unto, or concerning Pharaoh (Exod. 9. 16.) And in very deed, for this cauſe have I raiſed thee up, for to ſhew in thee my power, &c. What power? The Lord ſhewed forth a twofold power in the raiſing up of Pharaoh: Firſt, the power of his Arm, that he was able to caſt down ſuch a mighty Prince. Secondly, The power of his Patience, that he ſpared him from ruin till he had ſent ten meſſages to him, and poured ten Plagues upon him. The Lord was ſo provoked by Pharaoh, that he might have cruſhed him upon the firſt denial, but he forbare him long; the Lord might well ſay, I have ſet thee up that I might ſhew forth my power, my power in forbearing thee long, as well as in deſtroying thee at laſt. The Apoſtle ſpeaks of this power (Rom. 9. 22.) What if God willing to ſhew his wrath, and make his power known (the Lord will not only ſhew his wrath hereafter in breaking thoſe veſſels of deſtruction, but he ſhews his power now in ſuffering them long, and therefore he to make his power known) endured with much long-ſuffering the Veſſels of wrath fitted to deſtruction. Here's the ſtrength of the Lords heart, he bears long with wicked men.

Secondly, There is a mighty power or ſtrength of heart in God, as in long-ſuffering towards impenitent ſinners, ſo in pardoning ſinners who repent. Who, but the Lord hath ſuch a ſtrength of Spirit, to pardon and paſs by offences! After the people of Iſrael had mutined, and murmured, and ſo provoked rhe Lord to the height, Moſes begs and beſpeaks the power of the Lords pardoning mercy (Numb. 14. 17.) And now I beſeech thee, let the power of my Lord be great, according as thou haſt ſpoken, ſaying, The Lord is long-ſuffering, and of great mercy, forgiving iniquity, &c. As if Moſes had ſaid, Lord, thou muſt put forth as much power in pardoning the ſins of this People, as ever thou didſt in delivering them from their bondage-ſufferings in Egypt. Or thus, O Lord, thou mighteſt magnifie the power of thine anger in puniſhing this rebellious People, but rather magnifie the power of thy patience and long-ſufferance in ſparing and pardoning them. O what ſtrength of heart is in God, who paſſeth by the great tranſgreſſions of his People!

Magni animi eſt ignoſcere. Sola ſublimis & excelſa virtus eſt, nec quicquam magnum, niſi quod ſimul placidum. Sen.

Thirdly, The Lord hath a mightineſs of heart in executing his wrath upon his incorrigible enemies, (Pſal. 90. 11) Who knoweth the power of thine anger? The anger of God is ſuch a thing as no man can go to the bottom of it in his thoughts. The Lords wrath is powerful, beyond all imagination and apprehenſion; his anger, as well as his love, paſſeth knowledge. In all theſe reſpects the Lord hath ſtrength of heart, or he is mighty in ſtrength of heart, as well as in hand or arm. The greateſt diſcoveries of Gods power, are in the ways of his mercy. His Judgments are called his ſtrange work, but his mercy in his ſtrength, as the Prophet calls it, (Iſa. 27. 5.) where warning the Bryars and Thorns to take heed of warring with God, he gives a ſinner this counſel, Let him take hold of my ſtrength, that he may make peace with me, and he ſhall make peace with me. But what is meant by the ſtrength of God? Some render, Let him take hold of my Tower. A Tower is a place of ſtrength, but here put for that which God glories in moſt, as his chiefeſt ſtrength, even his goodneſs, mercy, patience, and long-ſufferance, yea Chriſt himſelf; as if he had ſaid, Let not the ſinner ſtruggle with my ſtrength, let him not think by ſtrong hand to overcome my ſtrength, but let him take hold of my Chriſt, through whom all thoſe glorious perfections of mine, my Goodneſs, Mercy, Patience, &c. are given out to the children of men, and he ſhall make peace with me. This is the true ſtrength of God; nor doth any thing more ſet forth the ſtrength of man, than this, that he is ready to pardon, to forgive, and paſs by; only impotent ſpirits are much for revenge. 'Tis our weakneſs not to paſs by wrongs and injuries done to us. To bear wrongs is to be like the high and mighty God, to bear them in mind, is to be like the loweſt and weakeſt ſpirited men. He is ſtrong indeed, who is ſtrong in patience againſt Offenders, and as ſtrong in mercy to pardon humble ones, as in power to puniſh ſtubborn and rebellious ones.

Apprehendet arcem meam, i.e. Chriſtum. Coc.

Secondly, By way of Illation,

Note, 'Tis the greatneſs of Gods Spirit, or the ſtrength of his heart and mind, which moderates him towards ſinful man.

That which keeps men in a moderate frame towards men, is true greatneſs of ſpirit: They that are of ſuch a ſpirit, will neither deſpiſe thoſe that are below them, nor envy thoſe that are above them, nor willingly oppoſe thoſe that are equal to them. The envy and oppoſition of others greatneſs, ariſeth from the meanneſs and weakneſs of our own ſpirits. The reaſon why one man is afraid that another ſhould be high, is becauſe himſelf hath not a real highneſs of ſpirit; or the reaſon why moſt oppoſe the greatneſs of others, is the littleneſs of their own ſpirits. Whence ſpring contentions and ſtrifes, envyings at, and underminings of one another? come they not from the narrowneſs of our hearts, that we cannot rejoyce in the good of others, or from the impotent jealouſies of our hearts, that we fear others will do us hurt? If ſuch a one get up, he will pull me down: if ſuch a one be high, 'tis dangerous to me, therefore I muſt pull him down, if I can; whence comes this, but from lowneſs and poorneſs of ſpirit, from that pitiful thing in man, called Puſillanimity. The Lord hath ſo great a Spirit, that as he envieth no mans greatneſs, ſo he feareth no mans greatneſs, and therefore doth that which is juſt and equal to all ſorts of men, bad and good, as is further ſhewed in the next verſe.

Verſ. 6. He preſerveth not the life of the wicked, but giveth right to the poor.

As if Elihu had ſaid, Though the Lord doth not deſpiſe any that are great, yet he doth not reſpect any thus art bad; he preſerveth not the life of the wicked. And as the Lord will not do any wrong to the rich, ſo, to be ſure, he will give right to the poor. What Elihu had affirmed of God, he now proveth by inſtances or particulars, and that both in reſpect of the wicked and the godly. That the Lord is moſt juſt and righteous he proveth thus,

He preſerveth not the life of the wicked.] That's the firſt inſtance, and he expreſſeth it negatively, He preſerveth not the life of the wicked, he maketh not, or ſuffereth not the wicked to live. The Hebrew ſtrictly is, He doth not enliven the wicked: So the word is uſed concerning the Midwives that feared God, (Exod. 1. 17.) They did not obey the word of the King, but ſaved the Male Children alive, or, they enlivened the Male Children. They who preſerve, do, upon the matter, give a new life. The like expreſſion we have (Exod. 18. 22.) Thou ſhall not ſuffer a Witch to live: The Hebrew is, thou ſhalt not vivifie or enliven a Witch. They who have commerce with the Devil, the Prince of the Air, they who Trade with Hell, to ſatisfie the luſts and curioſities of evil men on Earth, are not worthy to breath in the Air, or live upon the face of the Earth. He preſerved not the life of the wicked. There are two things in this negative ſpeech of Elihu.

Firſt, God doth not ſhew any favour to, nor indulge wicked men in their evil ways. He that will not ſo much as preſerve their lives, doth not give them favour while they live. Life and favour are two diſtinct things, (Job 10. 12.) Thou haſt granted me life and favour. Favour with life is the priviledge of the living; favour is better than life. The Lord doth but ſeldom reprieve, much leſs doth he at any time favour or pardon impenitently wicked men.

Non vivificat λιτότης, pro interficit, & omni vita ſpoliat. Coc.

Secondly, When Elihu ſaith, he preſerveth not the life of the wicked, we are to underſtand it by an ordinary Figure, wherein leſs is expreſſed, then is to be underſtood; He preſerveth not, that is, firſt, he is not ſolicitous about their preſervation, he cares not much what becomes of them; and not only ſo, but Secondly, he deſtroyeth the life of the wicked; the Lord will certainly ruin and utterly undo them, one time or other, one way or other; he will do it either immediately, by his own Arm, by ſome notable ſtroke of vengeance from himſelf: or he will do it by means, he will find out, and impower inſtruments, that ſhall deſtroy the very life of the wicked, And I conceive Elihu brings in this Propoſition concerning God, in anſwer to what Job had obſerved and complainingly alledged about the Proſperity of the wicked, (Chap. 21. 7.) Wherefore doth the wicked live, become old, yea are mighty in power? As if Job had intimated, that the Lord ſurely did ſhew, not only ſome, but much reſpect unto wicked men; they did not only live, but they lived a long time, and not only a long time a bare life, but were mighty in power, and overpowered, yea, oppreſſed many with their might. Elihu replyeth here, notwithſtanding this Allegation (which ſeemed to reflect upon the Juſtice of God) that the Lord preſerveth not the Life of the wicked. Mark, firſt, he doth not ſay, he preſerveth not the Life of a man that ſinneth, for then whoſe life ſhould be preſerved? but, he preſerveth not the life of the wicked; that is, of a man who ſinneth preſumptuouſly, and goeth on impenitently, who is incorrigible. Secondly, he doth not ſay, God ſuffereth not a wicked man to live, for then (moſt men being wicked in all Ages of the world) the world would be very thin, and almoſt naked, of Inhabitants: Bnt he preſerveth not (ſaith he) the life of the wicked; that is, he ſet no ſtore by them, as we do of thoſe things, which we carefully preſerve. We may compare this verſe with that of Job (Chap. 34. 26, 27, 28.) where 'tis ſaid of mighty oppreſſors, the Lord ſtriketh them wicked men (that is, as he uſeth to ſtrike wicked men) in the open ſight of others; becauſe they turned back from him, and would not conſider any of his ways: So that they cauſe the cry of the poor to come up to him, and he heareth the cry of the afflicted. Now, as there Elihu ſpeaks affirmatively, he ſtriketh wicked men, ſo here he ſpeaks negatively (which is the ſame in effect) God doth not preſerve the life of the wicked; and as there he ſaid, God heareth the cry of the afflicted, or poor, ſo here, he giveth right to the poor. Theſe Texts are of the ſame ſence, and expound each other. From the former part part of this ſixth verſe already opened, he preſerveth not the life of the wicked,

Obſerve Firſt, Wicked men are out of Gods Protection, they can expect no favour from him;

They are out-lawed. Some perſons are out-lawed by men, and then if any man injure them, or kill them, they can have no remedy by the Law; they have their amends (as we ſay) in their own hands, the Law gives them none. Wicked men are out of Gods love, and therefore out of his care; he turns them up (as we ſay) to the wide World to ſhift for themſelves: whether they ſink or ſwim, 'tis all one to him. He is neither Sun nor Shield to the wicked, he is both to the godly, (Pſal. 84. 11.) The Lord is a Sun and a Shield, the Lord will give Grace and Glory; no good thing will he with-hold from them that walk uprightly. As a Sun he giveth out the warm Beams of his favour, to refreſh and revive them, when the World leaves them cold and comfortleſs: And as a Shield he defends and ſaves them, when the World ſtrikes at them and vexes them; he will keep them ſafe from evil, as with a Shield. The wicked have no ſhare in this, nor in any ſuch like promiſe; the Lord is rather Fire and Sword, than Sun or Shield to them; he neither comforts them while they live, nor preſerves their lives from death.

But ſome may ſay, Doth not God preſerve the lives of the wicked? Is it not ſaid (Job. 7. 20.) He is the preſerver of men? Which indefinite ſeems to carry it for all men: And (Pſal. 36. 6.) Thou preſerveſt man and beaſt. Yea, wicked men not only live, but proſper and flouriſh in the World, as Job complained, (Chap. 21. 7.) Wherefore do the wicked live, become old, yea, are mighty in power? Sure then they are preſerved, as if God do not preſerve them, who doth? Man hath no more power to preſerve his own life, than to give himſelf life; how is it then that the Text ſaith, God doth not preſerve them? or that they are out of Gods Protection?

I anſwer, Firſt, It cannot be denyed, but that the wicked hold their lives, and all the good things they have (poſſibly they have many good things) of God. But the wicked, and their lives, or the lives of the wicked, are preſerved only by that common Providence of God, which extends even to the Beaſts of the field; they are not preſerved by any ſpecial Providence or Promiſe of preſervation made to them: their Souls are not bound in the bundle of life with the Lord their God, as Abigail aſſured David his ſhould be (1 Sam. 25. 29.) nor are they, as one very well expreſſeth it in the Language of the Prophet Iſaiah (Chap. 4. 3.) written (or reckoned) among the living in Jeruſalem. Neither their life, nor their death, is precious in the Lords ſight, as both of the meaneſt Saints are (Pſal. 116. 15.) The ſpecial Promiſes of preſervation are made to the godly; the common Providences of preſervation extend to the wicked. God preſerves many wicked men, but not one of them can plead a Promiſe for his preſervation, or ſay, Lord, thou haſt undertaken to preſerve me, I have thy Word or Warrant for my preſervation. So then, the Lord doth not preſerve the life of any wicked man upon a word of Promiſe.

Secondly, I anſwer, When the lives of the wicked are preſerved, they are not preſerved for any love which God bears to their perſons as ſuch, but either, Firſt, to bring them into a better ſtate, that is, to turn from their wickedneſs, that being converted, they may be ſaved at laſt, according to his purpoſe: Or, Secondly, they are preſerved, to ſerve ſome ends and purpoſes of his in this World. For though God hath no pleaſure in them, yet he makes ſome uſe of them, and doth his pleaſure by them; Or, I may ſay, they are preſerved to be Executioners of his diſpleaſure, in chaſtening and correcting his own people. The King of Aſſyria was preſerved in great Power; and to what end? I will ſend him againſt an hypocritical Nation, (Iſa. 10. 6.) He muſt go on my errand, though he meaneth not ſo, nor doth his heart think ſo, (as the Lord ſpake, ver. 7.) He hath other matters and deſign in his head, but I have this uſe of him, and of his power, even to puniſh the people of my wrath. The Lord made uſe alſo of Nebuchadnezar, and his Army, to ſerve him in the deſtroying of Tyrus, and of him and his Army he ſaith, They wrought for me, (Ezek. 29. 20.) Thus the Lord doth ſome of his work, his ſtrange work eſpecially, his work of Judgment, by the hands of wicked men; and therefore he preſerves their lives. Yea, he preſerve them many a time to be a help and a defence to his people. A Thorn Hedge keeps the Paſture, that ſtrange Cattle break not in, and eat it up. Wicked men are as Bryars and Thorns, and they are ſuffered to live, becauſe the Lord can make uſe of them as a Fence to his people. When the Serpent caſt out of his mouth water as a Flood after the woman (the Church) that he might cauſe her to be carryed away of the Flood, then the Earth (that is, earthly, carnal men) helped the Woman (Rev. 12. 15, 16.) The Lord uſed bad men to do that good work, the preſervation of his diſtreſſed and perſecuted Church.

Thirdly, As the Lord ſuffers many wicked men to live, that they may be brought out of their ſins, ſo he ſuffers others to live that they may fill up the meaſure of their ſins. Why did the Lord preſerve the Amorites? was it becauſe he loved or liked them? no, but becauſe they were not then ripe for Judgment, (Gen. 15. 16.) The Iniquity of the Amorites is not yet full. Some wicked men are to fill up their days, that they may fill up the meaſure of their Fathers ſins, by their own, as Chriſt threatned the Scribes and Phariſees, (Matth. 23. 32.) Such a grant of life, though for a thouſand years, is worſe than a thouſand Deaths.

Fourthly, we may anſwer, The wicked are not ſo much preſerved from, as reſerved unto further wrath, (2 Pet. 2. 9.) The Lord knoweth how to deliver the godly out of temptations, and to reſerve the unjuſt unto the day of Judgment, to be puniſhed. God doth not preſently puniſh all the wicked, nor take away their lives; there is a day of Judgment coming, and till that day come, their lives are preſerved, as perſons reſerved unto Judgment.

Fifthly, When wicked men are ſaid to be out of the Lords Protection, conſider, There is a twofold Protection; Firſt, ordinary; Secondly, extraordinary. The Lord doth preſerve and protect wicked men in an ordinary, not in an extraordinary way; he doth not work wonders, much leſs miracles, to preſerve them, as he often doth for the preſervation of his own people. God will not be at ſuch coſt in preſerving of wicked men, as he is at in the preſerving the lives and liberties of his eminent Servants; rather than they ſhall periſh, or not be preſerved, he will ſometimes work a miracle and put Nature out of its courſe, to ſave their lives. When thoſe three Worthies were caſt into the midſt of the burning fiery Furnace, God ſtopt the rage of that furious Element, that the Fire had no power upon their bodies, nor was an hair of their head ſinged, neither were their Coats changed, nor the ſmell of fire had paſſed on them, (Dan. 3. 27.) Did we ever hear that the Lord reſtrained the power of the fire, to preſerve wicked men? When Daniel, a man precious in the ſight of God, was caſt into the Lions Den, the Lord preſerved his life alſo, by ſtopping the Mouths of the Lyons, (Dan. 6. 22.) Did we ever hear that God preſerved the lives of wicked men in ſuch a way? No ſooner were Daniels accuſers caſt into the Lyons Den, but the Lyons had the Maſtery of them, and brake all their bones in pieces, e're ever they came to the bottom of the Den, (ver. 24.) The Lord doth not preſerve the lives of the wicked, by miraculous manifeſtations of his Power and Glory.

Sixthly, I anſwer, Though ſome wicked men are commonly preſerved, as other men, yet many by their wickedneſs, haſten their ruin, and ſhorten the number of their days. We may diſtinguiſh of wicked men; Firſt, wicked men may be taken in a general notion, for all that are unconverted, and unregenerate. Many perſons paſs for honeſt and good men in the world, who yet are wicked, being carnal, and abiding in a ſtate of nature: wicked men of this ſort, are ordinarily preſerved. Secondly, Take wicked men (and ſuch I conceive the Text eſpecially intends) for notorious wicked men, ſuch as are murderers, blaſphemers, &c. the Lord doth not preſerve the lives of ſuch, but lets mans Juſtice ſeize upon them, or divine vengeance overtake them (Pſal. 55. 23.) The blood-thirſty and deceitful man ſhall not live out half his days; that is, he ſhall not live half ſo long as he might, according to the courſe of Nature, becauſe of his nefarious ſinful courſes. Hiſtories are full of dreadful Tragedies, ſealing to this Truth, with the blood and untimely death of groſs offenders. How often have we ſeen or heard of the Vengeance of God following and falling upon thoſe that were (ſignanter) notoriouſly wicked; and of theſe we are eſpecially to underſtand the Point and Text, He preſerveth not the life of the wicked. Take this Inference from all that hath been ſaid about this awakening Obſervation,

How ſad is the life of a wicked man ! indeed of any man on this ſide the Line of grace, but eſpecially of any very wicked man ! He can ſcarce be ſaid to live, whoſe life is not preſerved by God ; a wicked man is always in death, ſeeing God doth not preſerve his life. The Apoſtle Paul ſaid he was in Deaths often, but God had as often preſerved his life ; but they are in Deaths always, whoſe life God never preſerveth. What preſervation of life can he have, who hath not God for his preſerver ? God in Creation or Propagation giveth us our life as to being ; but Preſervation gives us our life as to well-being. Can it be well with them that are not under the preſervation of God ? To be redeemed by Chriſt would be but a ſmall comfort, unleſs we were alſo preſerved by him. (Jude 1.) To them that are ſanctified by God the Father, and preſerved in Jeſus Chriſt, and called. If we were only redeemed from death, and not preſerved in life, what were our ſpiritual life to us ? So I may ſay in reſpect of the life of the body ; to be meerly created or propagated, what is it, if we are not preſerved ? 'Tis a high Priviledge, when a man can, not only ſay, he hath received life from God, but his life is preſerved by God. That's the firſt point. He preſerveth not the Life of the wicked.

Again, From that other Interpretation of the words, as not to preſerve is as much as to deſtroy and ruine,

> Note, As God utterly diſowneth, ſo he will at laſt utterly ruine all wicked men.

He not only doth not favour them, but pours out fury upon them, (Jer. 10. 25.) Pour out thy fury upon the Heathen that know thee not, and upon the Families that call not on thy Name. The Propheſie of Iſaiah ſpeaks no better concerning them than that prayer of Jeremy. (Iſa. 3. 11.) Wo unto the wicked, it ſhall be ill with him, for the reward of his hand ſhall be given him. And what can the hand of a wicked man earn ? the wages of ſin is death ; he can get nothing but wrath, and death, nothing but tribulation and anguiſh here, and eternal miſery hereafter, by the work of his hands. Wo to the wicked, for the reward of his hands ſhall be given him, that is, eternal deſtruction and ſorrow ſhall be given him, according to the iniquity of his hand. A godly man is rewarded according to the cleanneſs of his hands (Pſal. 18. 20, 24.) He labours to keep his hands, (much more his heart clean, whatever the World judge of him) But wo to the wicked men ! God giveth them the reward of their hands, of their unclean, foul and filthy hands ; for what can ſuch hands get or procure by all their labour, but their own miſchief and ſorrow ? There is no peace, ſaith my God, to the wicked, (Iſa. 57. 21.) No peace is to them becauſe no good is done by them : their portion lies in promiſes, who keep Commandments, ſo theirs muſt needs lie in threatnings, who do nothing but break them, or break them in all they do. My meditation of him ſhall be ſweet, I will be glad in the Lord, (ſaid David, Pſal. 104. 34.) As if he had ſaid, I know that I and every godly man, ſhall receive ſo much good from the Lord, that it doth me good at the heart to think of it: But as for the wicked, I can fore-ſee (as we ſay) with half an eye, how ill it will be with them, and ſo let it be ; I muſt ſubſcribe to, and vote with the righteous judgment of the Lord againſt them (ver. 35.) Let the ſinners be conſumed out of the Earth, and let the wicked be no more.

Laſtly, Conſider theſe words, He preſerveth not the life of the wicked, with reſpect to the wicked, ſpecially intended and treated of in this Context, The Lord is mighty, and deſpiſeth not the mighty (becauſe they are mighty) he preſerveth not the wicked.

> Hence Note, Wicked men, how mighty ſoever, cannot preſerve themſelves, nor doth the Lord undertake for their preſervation.

The ſtrongeſt of wicked men, cannot ſtand by their own ſtrength, they cannot protect nor preſerve themſelves, and the Lord will not put forth his ſtrength to preſerve them from falling. As no mightineſs, no power can bear man up, or maintain him againſt the Lord, ſo not without the Lord ; if he preſerveth not the life of the wicked, they cannot eſcape death and deſtruction, though high as Cedars, and ſtrong as Oaks. They cannot but periſh, whom God preſerveth not. He preſerveth not the life of the wicked,

But giveth right to the poor.

Or to the afflicted. Poverty it ſelf is a great affliction, and uſually the poor are afflicted by others. Here is a ſecond inſtance of Gods goodneſs in the exerciſe of his power and might. As He preſerveth not the life of the wicked, So he giveth right to the poor ; as he deſtroyeth wrong-doers, ſo he will do right to thoſe that ſuffer wrong. Every word is conſiderable, Firſt, He giveth ; that's an act of bounty. Secondly, He giveth right ; that's an act of equity. And that Thirdly, To the poor ; that's an act of pity and charity.

Further, When 'tis ſaid, He giveth, that implies, Firſt, a preſent or ſpeedy act : Secondly, a conſtant and ſetled courſe of acting. As the word giveth imports, that the Lord doth it now, and doth not put it off to hereafter only ; ſo it likewiſe importeth that the Lord will do it hereafter, as well as now. He giveth

Right to the poor.] The poor ſuffer wrong, but the Lord comes, and gives them right, or rights them, and that in a twofold notion. Firſt, He gives them that right which is due to them, according to his own righteous Laws, or the righteous Laws of men. That's right done, which is done according to a righteous Law. Secondly, He giveth them that right which is due to them according to the integrity of their own hearts and ways. We may ſay, Thirdly, The Lord giveth them right, not according to the ſtrictneſs of the Law, but according to the integrity of their hearts. Thus David prayed (Pſal. 7. 3.) Judge me, O Lord, according to my righteouſneſs, and according to mine integrity that is in me ; that is, according to my honeſt meaning, and the ſimplicity of my Soul. As if he had ſaid, O Lord, do me right ; men have done me wrong, they have falſe and wrong apprehenſions of me, they raiſe falſe reports concerning me ; but thou, O Lord, who knoweſt my integrity wilt judge me accordingly, and 'tis my humble and earneſt Prayer that thou wouldeſt. He giveth right

To the poor.] The poor in Scripture are taken two ways ; Firſt, as they ſtand in oppoſition to the rich ; Secondly, as they are oppoſed to the proud ; thus here, he giveth right to the poor, as well as to the rich ; and he will eſpecially give right to the humble poor, to the righteous poor, to the poor in ſpirit. Such the Prophet ſpeaks of (Iſa. 66. 2.) To this man will I look, even to him that is poor. He means not the poor in purſe (as ſuch) he means not thoſe (as ſuch) who wear poor cloaths, the Lord doth not always look to, or reſpect ſuch poor, for many ſuch are both proud and wicked ; but he looks to him that is poor in ſpirit, or of a contrite ſpirit ; let ſuch be in Rags, and lie upon the Dunghil, the Lord will look to them ; and he hath a threefold look for them. Firſt, A look of honour, as reſpecting their Perſons. Secondly, A look of care, to ſupply their wants. Thirdly, A look of juſtice, to deliver them from wrong. And if they that are poor in ſpirit, be rich alſo in the world, they ſhall not fail to receive right from the hand of the Lord. The Lord giveth right to all ſorts of men againſt their wicked oppreſſors ; but his poor, the godly poor, believing poor, thoſe that are poor not only in purſe, but in ſpirit, are more peculiarly under this priviledge, of being righted by the Lord. And uſually in Scripture, the word poor is taken in a good ſence, for good men, as the word rich, in an ill ſence for evil men (Jam. 5. 1.) Go to now ye rich men, weep and howl for the miſeries that ſhall come upon you. The Apoſtle ſpeaks as if that were the caſe of all rich, or as if he called all rich men to weeping and howling, &c. Yet ſome poor men are wicked, and ſome rich men are righteous ; and therefore I conceive the word poor may be taken here for any wronged or oppreſſed poor, yet eſpecially for the godly poor. For though God giveth right to all men, even the worſt of men, yet here the ſcope of Elihu is to ſhew that God takes moſt care of thoſe whom the wicked do moſt, not only neglect, but injure and oppreſs, He giveth right to the poor.

Nomen pauperis in bonum ſumitur, pauperes ſunt populus Dei.

> Hence Note, The poor, eſpecially the godly poor, are often wronged, and go by the worſt in the world. Or thus : The poor, as poor, uſually ſuffer from, and by the world.

As the world is apt to oppreſs any poor, ſo moſtly the Godly poor, (*Pſal.*12.5.) For the oppreſſion of the poor I will ariſe. 'Tis poſſible a rich man may be oppreſſed, a mighty man may be oppreſſed by one mightier than he; but uſually the poor are oppreſſed, and they trampled on, who are already underfoot. And therefore the Lord ſaith, For the oppreſſion of the poor, for the ſighing of the needy, now will I ariſe, and ſet him at ſafety from him that puffeth at him. This is not excluſive, the Lord will ariſe for the help of the rich and great, when any ſuch are wronged; but he is ſaid to ariſe for the help of the poor, as intimating that the poor ſeldom come by their right, or find help in the world, unleſs God ariſe to help them, or help them to it; and becauſe he hath ſaid he will help them to their right, we may be ſure he will. David's Faith was ſtrong upon this promiſe, (Pſal. 18.27.) Thou wilt ſave the afflicted people. (Pſal. 72. 4.) He ſhall judge the poor of the People. (Pſal. 140. 12.) I know that the Lord will maintain the cauſe of the afflicted. And his Experience was as clear, as his Faith was ſtrong. (Pſal. 37.25.) I have been young, and now am old, yet have I not ſeen the righteous forſaken; that is, I have often, yea always ſeen him helped one way or other; and ſometimes ſet on high from affliction, (Pſal. 107.41.) The Lord careth ſo for the poor, as if he cared for none elſe; and the beſt of the poor are little cared for by any, but the Lord. (Zeph. 3.12.) I will alſo leave in the midſt of thee an afflicted and poor people, and they ſhall truſt in the Name of the Lord. The rich of this world truſt to creature helps, but as the Lord's poor know they ought not to truſt in creature help, ſo they have it not to truſt to, and therefore they truſt in the Name of the Lord, not only out of choice (which is their grace and duty) but out of neceſſity. And what will the Lord do for them that truſt in him, not only out of neceſſity but choice? he will ſurely take care of them, and do them right.

Secondly, Note; God rights the poor freely.

He giveth them right, he doth not ſell it. What freer than gift? They need not bribe for it. As he freely giveth them the Righteouſneſs of his Son to juſtifie them, ſo they have common right of free gift to relieve them.

Note Thirdly, The Lord relieves, or rights the poor ſpeedily.

He giveth, implyeth a preſent act, and that doubles the mercy.

Note Fourthly, God will always right the wronged poor.

He giveth, imports even a continued act; as he did it in former times, in the days of old, ſo he doth it at this day, and will do it always. As the Lord giveth right ſpeedily, ſo conſtantly, with him is no variableneſs or ſhadow of turning. Moſt men do right only by fits, but the Lord is ever giving right.

Laſtly, He giveth right to the poor, not to this, or to that poor man, but to the poor.

Hence Note, The Lord diſtributes right to all that are wronged.

As his Mercy, ſo his Juſtice is not confined to a few, but floweth out to all.

But it may be objected, Why then are ſo many poor without their right? If the Lord giveth right, and giveth it continually, and impartially, why do the poor cry, and ſigh, and groan, and mourn? why ſee we ſo many tears of the poor? If they have right, why do they complain?

I anſwer, Firſt, The Lord giveth right to the poor, ſometimes, when the poor perceive it not. (Pſal. 97.2.) Clouds and darkneſs are round about him, Righteouſneſs and Judgment are the habitation of his Throne. When a man cannot ſee the Lord doing right, yet the Lord doth right. The Sun ſhineth when eclipſed or covered with a Cloud. The Lord never ceaſeth to right the poor, though neither poor nor rich perceive how, or which way he doth it.

Secondly, I anſwer, He giveth right to the poor, even when they want right, or when they are under the ſoreſt oppreſſions, by ſupporting their hearts in this perſwaſion, that he will give them right. The poor have right when their minds are ſatisfied that they ſhall have right. There is no true Godly poor man in the world, how much ſoever afflicted, but his heart is, or may be ſatisfied, that he ſhall have right. That's a ſure word (Pſal. 9. 18.) The needy ſhall not always be forgotten, the expectation of the poor ſhall not periſh for ever. And therefore we may pray with confidence, Forget not, O Lord, the Congregation of thy poor for ever, (Pſal. 74.19.) The poor may reſt in this aſſurance, while their troubles reſt upon them, that God will bring forth their Righteouſneſs as the Light, and their Judgment as the Noon-day, (Pſal. 37.6.) He hath right, who believes he ſhall have it; as he that believeth, hath everlaſting life in hope, long before he attains the poſſeſſion of it, (John 3.36.)

Thirdly, Though we ſay, The Lord giveth right to the poor, both ſpeedily and conſtantly, yet he reſerveth to himſelf a liberty as to time, and means, and manner; as in all his outward Adminiſtrations, ſo in miniſtring or giving out this right; the Lord waits to be gracious, till we are ready for his grace, and he waits (in the ſame ſence) to be righteous, till the poor are ready for their right; they ſhall not ſtay for it, when once they are ready for it; and it would be a wrong to them to have their right, before they are ready for it.

Laſtly, There is a day ſpoken of, wherein the Lord will do all his poor right in the view of all the world (Acts 17. 31.) He hath appointed a day in the which he will judge the World in righteouſneſs, by that man whom he hath ordained. The day approacheth, wherein the Lord will judge the world in righteouſneſs. Right is prepared and deſigned for them. The time till right ſhall be done to all, as is deſired, or to the utmoſt of their deſires, maketh haſt: He that ſhall come, will come, and will not tarry; Behold (ſaith he) I come quickly, and my reward is with me, to give every man according as his works ſhall be, (Rev. 22. 12.) And if the Lord come with a reward in his hand for thoſe who have done well, he will undoubtedly come with right in his hand to give all thoſe who have ſuffered wrongfully.

VERS. 7.

He withdraweth not his eyes from the righteous: but with Kings are they on the throne, yea, he doth eſtabliſh them for ever, and they are exalted.

THis verſe contains a further confirmation of Gods righteous and gracious dealing with the righteous and gracious poor, yea, with all that are righteous and gracious. The words may be taken, either in a ſtricter or in a larger ſenſe.

Firſt, Strictly, as an Expoſition of the latter part of the former verſe, He giveth right to the poor, that is, He withdraweth not his eyes from the righteous: We may put both together, He is ſo ſet to give right to the righteous poor, he takes ſuch care of them, that he cannot take his eye off from them.

Secondly, In a larger and more general ſenſe, as a Concluſion upon the whole matter, that, God will not deſert any righteous perſon, whether poor or rich, high or low, God will take notice of piety and godlineſs, whereſoever he finds it.

He withdraweth not his eyes from the righteous.

The word which we tranſlate withdraweth, and is here uſed negatively, He withdraweth not, ſignifies, ſtrictly in the Noun, any kind of abatement or diminution, and in the Verb, to diminiſh, or abate, or take ſhort in any kind that which was before. When Pharaoh (Exod. 5.8.) gave out a freſh Charge for burdening, or indeed oppreſſing the Children of Iſrael in their bondage, the Order ran in this ſtile; The tale of bricks which they did make heretofore you ſhall lay upon them, you ſhall not diminiſh or withdraw any, you ſhall not abate them a brick. And Moſes ſhewing how ſacred a thing the Word of God is, (Deut. 9.2.) gives a double check or prohibition to all medlers with it: Firſt, to medlers by way of addition, Ye ſhall not add unto the Word: Secondly, by way of abatement, or abſtraction, Ye ſhall not diminiſh, or withdraw from it: it is this word; As if the Lord had ſaid, Every tittle of my word ſhall ſtand by it ſelf, and every Iota be eſtabliſht; be ſure that ye put nothing to it, that you withdraw nothing from it. Further, this word which we tranſlate withdraw, is rendred alſo to clip, as the hair of the head or beard is clipt, (Jer. 48. 37.) It is indeed high Treaſon againſt the King of Heaven, to clip his coyn, his word which bears the royal ſtamp and ſuperſcription of his truth and holineſs. Thus here, he withdraweth not, that is, the Lord doth not abate, leſſen, diminiſh, or take off his eyes from the righteous, his eyes are fixed on them for good always, and they are always fixed in the ſame ſtrength and vertue; He withdraweth not

His eyes.] God is a Spirit without parts and paſſions, yet often in Scripture parts and paſſions are aſcribed to him in alluſion to man, here eyes, He withdraweth not his eyes, that is, his ſight, or his providence. And we may take notice, that in Scripture, where this expreſſion is uſed without any further addition, it is always taken in a good ſenſe. When we read either of Gods keeping his eyes upon his people, or of his not withdrawing his eyes from his people, it always reſpects their priviledge, benefit and comfort; He withdraweth not his eyes

Oculos domini eſſe ſuper aliquem, niſi aliquid additur ſemper in bonum ſumitur & peculiarem ejus favorem & curam importat. Lorin.

From the righteous.] He doth not ſay, from this or that righteous man, but from the righteous, implying the whole kind or generation of the righteous, The indefinite is univerſal; we may render it thus; he withdraweth not his eyes from any that are righteous. The righteous here may be taken in a twofold notion, Firſt, for the righteous, as to their ſtate, or who are in a ſtate of righteouſneſs. Man wanting a righteouſneſs of his own, hath the righteouſneſs of another aſſigned and imputed to him. Juſtified perſons through faith in our Lord Jeſus Chriſt, are righteous perſons, as hath been ſhewed heretofore. Secondly, We may take righteous here, with reſpect to the righteouſneſs of their ways and actions: They who do righteouſneſs are righteous, ſaith the Apoſtle John. To a righteous ſtate, there belongs a righteous way, a righteous walk, righteous acting; not that the righteous do not ſin, but they would not, nor do they ſin at all as the unrighteous. It is a high blemiſh or ſtain to the Goſpel, when any that pretend to a righteous ſtate, or to righteouſneſs by Jeſus Chriſt, are not righteous as to their ways and courſe, as to their walkings and workings, whether towards God or man. 'Tis true, in a ſtrict legal ſenſe, none are righteous, no not one; but in a Goſpel ſenſe all juſtified and ſanctified perſons are righteous; and they are called ſo, not only poſitively as to what themſelves are, but comparatively, as to what the men of the world are, who live in a ſtate or walk in a courſe of ſin and unrighteouſneſs. The Lord withdraweth not his eyes from the righteous.

But ſome may here object or queſtion, Is this true only of the righteous? Doth the Lord at any time withdraw his eyes from the unrighteous? truly that would be very good news to many unrighteous perſons, they would be glad that they and their way might be hid from God, or that God would not look upon them.

I anſwer, This Scripture is not to be ſo underſtood, as if God did behold the righteous and not the wicked, for (Prov. 15. 3.) The eyes of the Lord are every where, beholding the evil and the good, whether things done or perſons doing them. The Lord doth not withdraw his eyes from the moſt unrighteous perſons, nor from any of their acts or ways of unrighteouſneſs. And when it is ſaid here, The Lord withdraweth not his eyes from the righteous, it is meant of a peculiar eye, which the Lord hath upon the righteous; he beholds both the righteous and the unrighteous, yet he doth not behold the unrighteous, as he beholds the righteous; which I ſhall clear further by giving in a five-fold diſcovery, what that eye of the Lord is which is upon the righteous, four of which are diſtinct and totally differing from that eye with which he beholdeth unrighteous men, and from every one of them I ſhall give you an obſervation for our further profiting by this general aſſertion, that the Lord withdraweth not his eyes from the righteous. There is a five-fold eye of God ſpoken of in Scripture.

Firſt, There is a diſcerning eye, that eye by which he unerringly knoweth what every man is, and what every man doth.

Hence note, The Lord taketh exact and full notice of, he clearly diſcerns the righteous in every condition.

This is true alſo of the unrighteous; therefore David puts it univerſally, (Pſal. 11. 4.) His eyes behold, his eyelids try the children of men, that is, his ſight diſcovers and diſcerns what they are, of what ſort ſoever they are. We may ſee many men, yet not diſcover what they are, they may have a fair outſide to our view, whileſt within they are foul and full of rottenneſs; they may appear in Sheepscloathing, yet inwardly be ravening Wolves. But the Lords eye is a trying eye, he doth not only know who men are, but he knows what they are. Such is the importance of that Scripture, (Heb. 4. 13.) All things are naked and manifeſt to his eyes, with whom we have to do; that is, the Lord doth ſo behold things and perſons, that he hath a clear underſtanding of them. And though the Lords eye be thus upon all men, yet this is ſpecially affirmed of righteous men, (Pſal. 33. 18.) Behold, the eye of the Lord is upon them that fear him, and hope in his mercy. Again, (Pſal. 34. 15.) His eye is over the righteous. Both Texts teach us, that God conſiders not only what they do, but as I may ſay, how they do, whether it be peace with them, or whether it be trouble with them, or whether it be joy with them, or whether it be ſorrow with them, the Lords eye is over them, to diſcern, not only whether, and how they go, but how things go with them.

Secondly, The Lord hath a directing or a counſelling eye.

This eye of the Lord, as it denotes favour, is peculiar to the righteous. We have that expreſly, (Pſal. 32. 8.) I will inſtruct thee, and teach thee, (how?) I will guide thee with mine eye. We put in the Margin, I will counſel thee, that is, thee a godly man, a David, ſpoken of (verſ. 6. 7.) mine eye ſhall give thee counſel. Men can give direction by the eye, and they that are acquainted with them, underſtand what they mean when they look this way or that way, thus or ſo. Solomon ſaith, A naughty perſon winketh with his eyes, he ſpeaketh with his feet, he teacheth with his fingers, (Prov. 6. 12, 13.) that is, all the poſtures and geſtures of his body, ſhew what he is, ſtark naught, and ſilently teach others to be naught. The holy God alſo teacheth by his feet and fingers, his goings and doings, his works and ways teach us the work which we ſhould do, and the way wherein we ſhould go; he hath a providential eye; the looks of providence give counſel to thoſe who know how to look upon them, and interpret them. The Lord hath a providential eye upon the righteous, not only to foreſee their dangers, but to direct their courſe; he ſheweth them their way, and their work by this eye; he tells them what pleaſeth him, and what diſpleaſeth him, by this eye; this eye the Lord doth not withdraw from the righteous; He will guide the feet of his Saints, (1 Sam. 2. 9.) 'Tis poſſible for a righteous man ſometime to be without counſel, he may neither know what counſel to give himſelf, nor what to take from others; as Jehoſhaphat ſaid in his ſtreight (2 Chron. 20. 12.) He knoweth not what to do; yet (as Jehoſhaphat ſaid then) his eyes are towards the Lord, and the Lords eyes are towards him. When he is thus counſelleſs, there is a counſelling, a directing eye of God upon him; though he at that preſent know not his way, yea, be out of his way, yet he is not out of Gods eye, and that will in due time ſhew him his way, or bring him into his way again: though God ſuffer him to go out of the way, yet the eye of God is upon him, even when he is out of his way, and that eye will reduce and bring him back to his right way. There is a directing a counſelling eye of God.

Thirdly, The Scripture ſpeaks of a pitying and a compaſſionating eye of God. It is ordinary with us to hear thoſe that are in diſtreſs cry out to thoſe who paſs by, caſt an eye upon us, look upon us, and that is as much as to ſay, pity us, have compaſſion upon us; this eye of pity the Lord doth not withdraw from the righteous.

Hence note. The righteous are under the compaſſionating, the pitying eye of God.

When the people of Iſrael were in Egypt, the Lord ſaid to Moſes, (Exod. 3. 7.) I have ſurely ſeen the affliction of my people; and what kind of ſight was that? what eye of God was it which was upon them? The words following, and the whole ſeries of Gods dealings alſo clear it, that it was an eye of compaſſion; I have ſurely ſeen, or ſeeing I have ſeen the affliction of my people that are in Egypt, &c. and I am come down to deliver them. We read in that notable place, (Gen. 16. 14.) when Hagar was in a very ſad and diſtreſſed condition, being caſt out of Abrahams family, God had compaſſion on her, and ſhewed her a Well, where ſhe might have water for her ſelf and child, and the Text ſaith, She called the name of the Well Beer-la-hai-roi, that is, the Well of him that liveth and ſeeth me: As if ſhe had ſaid, God hath ſeen me in my afflicted condition, and he hath alſo had compaſſion on me. That's another great priviledge, the righteous are under this pitying and compaſſionating eye of God; and from thence follows,

The fourth eye of God, his providing eye, his caring eye.

Hence note, The Lord doth ſo eye the righteous in their ſtraits and afflictions with compaſſion, that he alſo provides to deliver them out of their affliction, out of their ſtraits.

There is a providing eye of God continually beholding his people: Of this providing eye Abraham ſpake, (Gen. 22. 14.) when he was put upon that hard task, the ſacrificing of his own ſon, his Iſaac, the Lord had compaſſion on him, and provided another ſacrifice, and therefore he called the name of that place, Jehovah Jireh, the Lord will ſee or provide; that is, as the Lord hath ſeen and provided for me, ſo he will ſee and provide for all his in their greateſt exigents and extremities. What Abraham ſaid, all the ſeed of Abraham may ſay in the day of their diſtreſs, Jehovah Jireh, the Lord will ſee and provide. And as the Lord hath a ſeeing and a providing eye for his in times of diſtreſs, ſo at all times. Moſes ſaid of the Land of Iſrael, (Deut. 11. 12.) It is a Land of hills and of vallies, a Land which the Lord thy God careth for: The eyes of the Lord thy God are always upon it, from the beginning of the year, even unto the end of the year. The eyes of the Lord are upon that land, that is, upon the people of the land, or upon the land for the peoples ſake who dwell in it: What to do? the Text anſwers, to care for it, that is, to provide all things for their good, to give rain in ſeaſon, and the fruits of the earth, not only for the ſupport, but comfort of his people. We read of the ſame eye promiſed to the people of Iſrael in the Land of their captivity, (Jer. 29. 6.) I will ſet mine eyes upon them for good, and I will bring them again into this Land; I will not only give them a look, or a glance, but fix or ſet mine eyes upon them for good, that is, to do them good. It is a proverbial ſaying amongſt us, The Maſters eye fattens the Horſe: The Maſters eye is a caring, a providing eye, he will take care that the Horſe ſhall be well fed. Certainly, Gods eye is a fattening eye; they ſhall be fat and flouriſh, from whom God will not withdraw his providing eye, at leaſt they ſhall have neceſſaries, or food convenient, both for ſoul and body.

Fifthly, The Scripture ſpeaks of a delighting eye, or of an eye of complacency; and thus alſo the Lords eye is upon the righteous, he beholdeth them with high content, he is, as I may ſay, taken with them, Iſa. 66. 1.) To him will I look that is poor. Among all objects, none ſo pleaſant or pleaſing to God as the poor. What poor doth he mean? ſurely the righteous poor, or the poor in ſpirit, (as was ſhewed upon the former verſe) let ſuch a one be whom he will, to him will I look, mine eye is greatly pleaſed to behold ſuch a one. The word uſed by Elihu in this Text, doth further clear it, while he ſaith, He withdraweth not his eyes from the righteous. How pleaſant is any object to our eyes from which we cannot withdraw or take them off, but muſt be continually feeding them upon it! Some cannot take off their eyes from unlawful wanton objects, becauſe they are ſo delighted in them, they have as the Apoſtle Peter ſpeaks, eyes full of adultery, and ſuch can never glut their eyes with adulterous objects. Now certainly the Lord is exceedingly taken with the beauty, the ſpiritual beauty of a righteous perſon, with the comlineſs, the ſpiritual comlineſs of thoſe that are godly, when the Text ſaith, He withdraweth not his eyes from them, but carries them (as it were) always in his eye. Among the Latines, to carry one in our eye is an expreſſion of ſingular high content, delight and pleaſure taken in ſuch a perſon. We may ſay of all the righteous, the Lord carrieth them in his eye, and therefore he is highly pleaſed and delighted with them.

In oculis aliquem geſtare, eſt eum vehementer amplecti & diligere.

Thus you have this five-fold eye, which the Lord doth not withdraw from the righteous; and in that the Text ſaith, he doth not withdraw or abate or diminiſh his eye from them, but looks fully upon them, it give us this ſixth note;

The inſpection of God upon, his compaſſion towards, his care of, his delight in the righteous is perpetual.

Though God doth afflict, yet he never ceaſeth to love or care for his people. Elihu was much upon that, induſtriouſly to remove the ſcandal of the Croſs, which 'tis like then did and ſtill doth offend many, and cauſeth them to ſtumble, when they ſee the righteous afflicted; therefore he would aſſure us, that God never withdraweth his eye from them: but his care of, and pity to, yea pleaſure in them is everlaſting. That eye of his which carries all this in it, is never ſhut towards them. The Lord ſaith of the Church, (Iſa. 49. 16. Thy walls are continually before me. As the walls of Sion, ſo the walls of every righteous perſon in Zion, or of every true Sioniſt, are continually before the Lord, he withdraweth not his eyes from the righteous; He that keepeth Iſrael ſhall neither ſlumber nor ſleep, (Pſal. 121. 4.) he that neither ſlumbers nor ſleeps, needs not withdraw his eyes from us, and he that hath a render regard to us, will not. The Prophet (Iſa. 27. 3.) ſpeaking of the Church under the Allegory of a Vineyard, brings in the Lord giving this aſſurance, I will water it every moment, I will keep it night and day. He that waters a Vineyard every moment, never withdraws his eyes from it; now by watering is meant the ſupply of whatſoever good the Vineyard or Church of God ſtood in need of; to be ſo ſupplyed is to be well watered. The providence of God, as to our ſpiritual and temporal eſtate, watcheth over us continually to water us.

Non ſolum ſatagentem attentamque curam denotat hæc phraſis, ſed perſerverantim, continuam minimeque deflectentem. Bold.

But ſome may queſtion here, Doth not the Lord withdraw his eyes from the righteous? are his eyes continually upon them? what then is the meaning of that Scripture, (Pſal. 44. 23.) and of ſeveral others of like importance; Awake Lord; why ſleepeſt thou? That was at once the voice of the Church, and her complaint; ſurely the Lords eyes were withdrawn from the Church when he was aſleep. I anſwer, The Lord ſleeps, with reſpect to his Church, as the Church ſleeps with reſpect to the Lord, (Cant. 5. 2.) I ſleep (ſaith the Spouſe) but my heart waketh. Indeed the Lord doth act ſometimes ſo towards the righteous, or lets things go ſo with the righteous, as if he were aſleep, as if he took no notice of them, yet ſtill his heart waketh towards them: So that his ſleeping doth not imply an intermiſſion of his care, but only a ſuſpenſion of the effects of his care. For while the Lord lets things go ſo as if he were aſleep, he then wakes and watches as much over the righteous, over his Church and people, as at any other time, when they have the higheſt actings of his providence for their outward peace and preſervation.

And if that other ſort of Scriptures ſhould be objected againſt his perpetual watching over the righteous, or that he never withdraws his eyes, which ſay, he hideth his face, and turns himſelf away from them. I anſwer, Thoſe Scriptures are all of them to be underſtood according to the former interpretation, the Lord hideth himſelf, as to ſenſe and preſent appearance, but he never hideth himſelf, as to the real continuance of his love and care towards his Church or People. This Objection ſome made to one of the Ancients; the Lord (ſaid they) may ſeem to withdraw his eyes from the righteous, becauſe he ſuffers them to fall under the oppreſſed of the unrighteous. No, ſaith he, Famulos ſuos nunc magis reſpicit, nam jam prævidet, quid eis miſericorditer recompenſet. Greg. in loc.

The Lord beholds the righteous, though they periſh by the hand of the unrighteous; yea, when it is worſt with them, the Lords Eye is upon them for good, both to ſee how they carry it, or behave themſelves in their Sufferings, and likewiſe to provide a full reward and recompence for them after all their ſufferings.

Before I paſs from this part of the verſe, let me make theſe two Inferences.

Firſt, If the Lord never withdraweth his Eyes from the righteous, then let the righteous know their own Priviledge and Mercy. How happy are they upon whom the eyes of the Lord abide always for good! The Lord cannot endure to have good men out of his Eye, as Parents ſay of their darlings, and Princes of their Favourites. If we were aſſured, that the Eye of a great man, who loveth us, were always upon us, if he ſhould promiſe to have an eye to us, (That's an ordinary Promiſe among men, I will have an Eye to you, that is, I will take care of you; if we have (I ſay) but ſuch a word from a man in Power, we think we have got a great revenue; ſuch a great Lord will have an eye to us, we have his word, he will not take off his care from us. How much then ſhould we boaſt and rejoyce in ſpirit, that the Lord hath ſaid, I will always have a care of you, I will never withdraw mine eyes from you, I will never leave you, nor forſake you (Heb. 13.5.) As it will be the eternal happineſs of Believers in Glory, always to behold, or ſee God, Bleſſed are the pure in heart for they ſhall ſee God; they have ſome ſight of him here in a Glaſs, but they ſhall ſee him face to face; that is, they ſhall ſee him clearly, as clearly as the creature is capable of ſeeing or enjoying him; now (I ſay) as it is the happineſs of the Saints in Heaven always to behold God, ſo it is the happineſs of Saints here on earth, that the Lord doth always behold them, that his eye is never withdrawn from them.

Conſider therefore, you that are in a righteous ſtate, whoſe acts and words, and walkings, are alſo righteous, conſider your Priviledge, conſider what it is to have the Lord Jeſus always ſetting his eye upon you, to have the Lords directing and counſelling eye always upon you, to have the Lords pitying and compaſſionating eye always upon you, to have the Lords providing and caring eye always upon you, to have the Lords delighting and well-pleaſed eye always upon you; to have the eyes of the Lord thus upon you, and to have them always upon you, what can ye deſire more! Thus 'tis promiſed, (2 Chron. 16.9.) The eyes of the Lord run to and fro throughout the whole earth, to ſhew himſelf ſtrong in the behalf of them, whoſe heart is perfect with him. And whoſe hearts are perfect with him, but the hearts of the righteous? this is their priviledge. Jeſus Chriſt (Zech. 3.9.) is called, The ſtone, and ſaith the Text, upon one ſtone ſhall be ſeven eyes. There are two interpretations given of that Propheſie, Firſt, thus, upon one ſtone ſhall be ſeven eyes, that is, the eyes of all men ſhall be upon that ſtone, upon Chriſt. Seven is a perfect definite Number, put for all numbers; the eyes of all ſhall be upon the ſtone, upon Chriſt; although he be to the wicked, or to them that believe not, a ſtumbling ſtone, and a rock of offence, (1 Pet. 2.8.) yet to them that believe he is a moſt precious ſtone; and as they are always beholding the beauty of that precious ſtone, ſo Jeſus Chriſt doth indeed invite all eyes to behold him (Iſa. 65.1.) Behold me, behold me; he would have us take off our eyes from all others, and look ſteddily on him. Let all eyes be upon the ſtone; that's a good interpretation. There is a ſecond, which ſuits the preſent point I am upon fully; Seven eyes ſhall be upon one ſtone; that is, the eyes of God ſhall be upon Jeſus Chriſt. This is a promiſe made unto him as Mediator, when he came in the fleſh, or in our nature, to do that great work for us; Then, ſaith the Prophet, upon one ſtone ſhall be ſeven eyes; which ſeven eyes note the perfect knowledge of God, and ſo the perfect care that God would have of Chriſt, to bear him up through that work of our Redemption: Upon one ſtone ſhall be ſeven eyes; I will take care of him, I will provide for him, and I will delight in him. As Jeſus Chriſt is all eye, and Jeſus Chriſt doth enlighten all eyes, that is, all that ſee, are enlightened by Jeſus Chriſt; ſo the eyes of God, the eyes of the Father were always upon him, in favour, in love, in care, when he was here in this world about that great work of our ſalvation, and he had abundant experience of the eyes of his Father upon him. Now, mark it, this was the great promiſe made to Chriſt, the Stone, that upon him ſhould be ſeven eyes, the eyes of the Lord ſhould be alway and fully upon him. And this is the priviledge of every one that hath part and intereſt in this ſtone Jeſus Chriſt, every righteous perſon hath ſeven eyes upon him, the Lord God beholds him exactly, perfectly, and always; He withdraweth not his eyes from the righteous.

A ſecond inference is this; If the Lord never withdraweth his eyes from the righteous, Then let the righteous know their duty; What's that? Never to withdraw their eyes from the Lord. There is a threefold eye which a righteous man ſhould never withdraw from God. Firſt, An eye of faith: Secondly, An eye of hope: Thirdly, An eye of dependance: and that, Firſt, for direction in all his ways; Secondly, for protection in all his danger. I will lift up mine eyes (ſaith David, Pſa. 121.1.) unto the hills, from whence cometh my help. And again, (Pſal. 123.1,2.) Unto thee lift I up mine eyes, O thou that dwelleſt in the heavens. Behold, as the eyes of ſervants look unto the hand of their Maſters, and as the eyes of a Maiden unto the hand of her Miſtreſs, ſo our eyes wait upon the Lord our God, until he have mercy on us; that is, we never withdraw our eyes from him, while we have need of his mercy, and that is always. Walk before me, that is, with an eye of faith, hope, and dependance, was the Lords charge to the father of the faithful, (Gen. 17.1.) I have ſet the Lord always before me, that is, I keep a conſtant eye upon the Lord, was the profeſſion of David, as the type of Chriſt, (Pſal. 16.8.) And as to keep an eye on God is beſt and ſafeſt for us, ſo 'tis extreamly pleaſing and contentful to Chriſt, as he tells the Church, (Cant. 9.9.) Thou haſt raviſhed my heart, my Siſter, my Spouſe, thou haſt raviſhed my heart with one of thine eyes, that is, with a believing, a hoping, a depending look on me for all that good which thou wanteſt and wouldſt have, or with a delighting look on me as thy chiefeſt good. Let not the righteous withdraw their eyes from God, for he withdraweth not his eyes from the righteous.

But (which is yet more) with Kings are they on the Throne.

Theſe words fully clear up the ſenſe, which I have given of that negative promiſe, he withdraweth not his eyes from the righteous, namely, that the eyes of the Lord are upon the righteous for good. His is not a bare beholding of them, favours flow from his eyes. When the eyes of God are upon the righteous, they find the ſweet and benefit of it. In the former verſe Elihu ſaid, God will give the poor right, here he ſaith more, he will give the poor, the righteous poor, a reward, and that no ſmall one, With Kings are they on the Throne.

Et reges in ſolio collocat in perpetuum. Vulg.

The Latine tranſlation reads this part of the verſe, not of the righteous poor, but of righteous Kings; He withdraweth not his eyes from the righteous, and he placeth Kings upon the Throne for ever. That's a truth, the Lord placeth Kings upon their Thrones, and eſtabliſheth them there; but that is not the meaning or truth of this place; nor will the Hebrew (with any tolerable convenience) bear ſuch a tranſlation.

Quaſi מלאכים ſcriberetur pro מלכים Merc.

Secondly, There are others, who, a little miſtaking the word which we tranſlate Kings, render it Angels, They are with Angels on the Throne. There is but very little difference in the Hebrew between thoſe two words that ſignifie Kings and Angels, (the former is Melachim, the latter Maleachim) which hath given occaſion for this reading, He placeth them with Angels on the Throne; and ſo the words are interpreted of the glorious exaltation of the righteous in Heaven, (when indeed they ſhall be like Angels, Angels Fellows, (Mat. 22.30.) and walk hand in hand with Angels.) Mr. Broughton though he tranſlate (with Kings) yet ſeems to carry it in that ſenſe, giving his gloſs in the Margin, thus; They ſhall be made fit for light with the living, with the Angels of God, his ſervants, in their degree, and be placed for ever in honour, and be high in honour and dignity: ſo ye ſhall ſit upon twelve Thrones, judging the twelve Tribes of Iſrael. But this Text will not ſerve that purpoſe neither; and therefore I ſhall take it plainly as we render it, They ſhall be with Kings upon the Throne. There is a two-fold interpretation of the words according to this tranſlation.

Firſt,

Cum regibus tantum valet, ac ſi eſſent reges. Bold. Ut את ſit עם cum; ut numerus mutetur, ut paſſim fit in hoc libro. Merc. את articulus accuſativi caſus quem verba tranſitiva ſive activa regunt; accipitur tamen non raro pro à, ex, de, & cum præpoſitionibus. Druſ. Obſer. ſacræ l.9.c.7.

Firſt, The Lord will exalt the righteous to great dignity, they ſhall be like Kings and Princes in this world, or they ſhall be in great favour with Kings, even Kings Favourites.

Secondly, They ſhall be with Kings upon the Throne, that is, they themſelves ſhall be Kings. The Hebrew ſtrictly read, is, and Kings on the Throne; they ſhall not only be like Kings, but they themſelves ſhall be Kings, and ſit upon Thrones: either of theſe interpretations reach the ſcope of Elihu fully. As if he had ſaid, The righteous ſhall be greatly advanced or exalted by Kings, whoſe priviledge it is to ſit on Thrones, or they ſhall be Kings upon the Throne. Some experiences and examples have confirmed this. The Lord hath not only given righteous perſons great advancement, and great favour with Kings, who ſit on Thrones, but hath even advanced them to Kingly dignity, and given them Thrones to ſit upon.

A Throne is a Seat Royal, the Seat of Majeſty; A Throne is a ſeat exalted above other ſeats, as the perſon ſitting upon it is exalted above other perſons. Solomon made him a great Throne of Ivory, and the Throne had ſix ſteps, (1 Kings 10.18.) God is repreſented ſitting upon a Throne, and there receiving honour from all that were before him, (Rev. 4.2,9) The whole Heaven is called the Throne of God, and the earth his footſtool, (Iſa. 66.1.) becauſe as Heaven is high above all, ſo there are the fulleſt manifeſtations of the greatneſs and glory of God. And becauſe Thrones note power and dignity, therefore the Angels (who among all meer creatures excell in power and dignity,) are called Thrones, (Col. 1.16.) So then, to be with Kings on the Throne, that is, to be near them, and much accepted by them is a very great honour; and that is the leaſt here intended. But to be Kings on the Throne, is the greateſt worldly honour; and poſſibly ſo much is here intended the righteous, while Elihu ſaith, But with Kings are they upon the Throne.

In that the righteous are ſaid here to be with Kings upon the Throne, we learn,

Righteous perſons are in high eſteem with God:

He would not thus, in love, ſet them high, if he did not highly eſteem them; he would not thus prefer them, if he did not know their worth. The world uſually judges righteous perſons, as if they were fit only for the dunghill, as if they were the filth of the world, and the off-ſcouring of all things, (1 Cor. 4.13.) but God hath another opinion of them, he thinks them fit to ſerve Princes, and ſo to be near the Throne. Take heed of judging them unworthy to be at the footſtool, whom God thinks worthy to be with Kings on the Throne.

Secondly, Note, God hath exalted, and will exalt righteous perſons.

Whom he highly eſteems, he ſometimes advanceth highly in this world, they ſhall be with Kings on the Throne, (Pſal. 107.40,41.) He poureth contempt upon Princes, that is, upon unrighteous Princes; yet (as it followeth) He ſetteth the poor on high from affliction, ſo we tranſlate and put in the Margin, He ſetteth the poor on high after affliction. He afflicts the righteous to purge them, and ſo to prepare and fit them for greateſt enjoyments. We have a like affirmation, (Pſal. 113.7,8.) He raiſeth up the poor out of the duſt, and lifteth up the needy out of the dunghill, that he may ſet them with Princes, even the Princes of his people. Thus ſpake Hannah in her Song, (1 Sam. 2.8.) and thus, in effect, ſpake the bleſſed Virgin in hers, (Luke 1.52.) He hath brought down the mighty from their ſeats, and hath exalted the lowly and meek. We have ſome Scripture-inſtances of ſuch exaltations, Joſeph, a righteous perſon, was caſt into bonds, yet God ſets him, not only at liberty, but on high, he was with the King on the Throne, Only in the Throne, (ſaid Pharaoh, Gen. 42.40.) will I be greater than thou; and all were commanded to bow the knee to him. David, a righteous perſon, followed the Ewes great with young, and the Lord ſet him upon the Throne, upon the Throne of Iſrael. Valentinian was committed to priſon by the command of Julian the Apoſtate, becauſe he ſtruck an Idolatrous Prieſt, that would have ſprinkled him (aqua luſtrali) with their unholy holy water, as he ſtood in the gate of the Temple, where Julian was ſacrificing to his Idol-gods; yet he eſcaped that danger, and afterwards aſcended the Throne of that Great Empire. The Lord knows both how to deliver the righteous out of trouble, and to bring them to honour.

Laſtly, We may hence infer, If the righteous are with Kings on the Throne, then righteouſneſs hath a reward. Them that honour me (ſaith the Lord, 1 Sam. 2.30.) I will honour. It is no vain thing to ſerve the Lord; to be righteous, and to do righteouſly, cannot but iſſue well. The Lord hath all promotions at his diſpoſe, (Pſal. 75.6,7.) And therefore he ſaith, Say ye to the righteous, that it ſhall be well with him; for they ſhall eat the fruit of their doings, (Iſa. 3.10.) With Kings are they on the Throne.

Yet, let me add, by way of Caution, that neither this Text, nor the notes given from it, are ſo to be underſtood, as if all righteous perſons might hence expect great advancements in this world, or to be the ſpecial Favourites of Kings and Princes: The word of God doth not feed ſuch humours, but mortifies them; nor doth it cheriſh any ſuch aſpiring expectations in righteous men, but teaches them quiet ſubmiſſion in their own private ſtations and callings, to thoſe who are upon the Throne. So that while Elihu ſaith of the righteous, With Kings they are on the Throne, his meaning muſt be taken ſoberly, and may be taken diſtinctly, thus;

Firſt, That God hath great reſpect to, and high favours for righteous men.

Secondly, That he brings ſome of them (as it is ſaid of Daniel with the Prince of the Eunuchs, Chap. 1.9.) into favour and tender love with Kings and Princes.

Etiamſi id externè non fiat ſemper, tamen omnium fides & pietas quorundam piorum exaltatione honoratur. Coc.

Thirdly, That the Lord hath often advanced righteous perſons to Thrones and Kingly Dignities. And when ever the Lord advanceth any of the righteous, he makes good this promiſe, becauſe in the exaltation of one, the faith and piety of all righteous perſons, or the whole kind of them, is honoured and exalted.

Fourthly, To be ſure, all the righteous ſhall be with Kings on the Throne hereafter. Chriſt hath purchaſed, and is gone to prepare a Kingdom for the righteous, and will give them a better Crown, than any this world affords, an incorruptible one. As now the righteous are ſpiritual Kings, or Kings in a ſpiritual ſenſe, (Rev. 1.6.) that is, they rule over and keep in ſubjection, their own luſts and corruptions, pride, ambition, love of the world, wrath, envy, and whatever elſe in them doth rebell and exalt it ſelf againſt the knowledge of God; yea, they as Kings (in this world) conquer the world by faith, (1 John 5.4.) and the Prince of this world, the devil, through the power of Jeſus Chriſt (as I ſay all the righteous are now ſpiritual Kings (in the ſenſe given) through grace here on earth) ſo they ſhall be glorious Kings and reign with Chriſt for ever in Heaven; and then ſhall this word of God by Elihu, be fulfilled to the utmoſt, With Kings are they upon the Throne.

Yea, he doth eſtabliſh them for ever, and they are exalted.

Elihu proceeds to ſhew the happineſs of the righteous yet further; The Lord doth not only advance them, but eſtabliſh them; nor doth he only eſtabliſh them for a while, but even perpetuateth their eſtabliſhment, He eſtabliſheth them for ever. The word is, He makes them ſit. We render fully to the ſenſe, He eſtabliſheth them. The Lord ſets them up on high, and then ſettles them on high. Some get on high, but they cannot keep on high, they find no eſtabliſhment there; but God can eſtabliſh וישיבם a radice ישב ſedere, & in hoc conjugatione, ſedere fecit.

For ever.] The for ever of this world is a long time. The Lord ſaith of Sion, (Pſal. 132.14.) Here will I dwell for ever, that is, long. Thus in the text, He will eſtabliſh them for ever, that is, they ſhall have long eſtabliſhment. And if we take it as to their exaltation in the other world, there God will eſtabliſh them to the utmoſt latitude of for ever, that is, to eternity. The Septuagint tranſlate, He will eſtabliſh them to victory. The ſame word in the Hebrew, ſignifies eternity, and alſo victory, becauſe eternity overcomes and triumphs over all: The Lord ſhall ſettle them to victory; and that may have a good interpretation, with reſpect to the power of God in ſetling them; He ſhall ſettle them to victory, that is, they ſhall (in his power) overcome all difficulties that ſtand in the way of their eſtabliſhment.

Εἰς νῖκος in victoriam. Sept. Sic 2 Sam. 2.26. Μὴ εἰς νῖκος καταφάγεται ἡ ῥομφαία.

Hence note, As preferment, ſo eſtabliſhment is from God.

Firſt, He eſtabliſheth all things, whether they be, Firſt, natural things, the heavens and the earth, times and ſeaſons, (Gen 8.22.) or Secondly, Civil things, States and Nations; or Thirdly, Spiritual things; Firſt, the Goſpel, and the Church of the Goſpel, that he eſtabliſheth as a Rock, againſt which the Gates of hell ſhall not prevail, (*Mat.*16.18. ſo *Iſa.*44.28. *Pſal.*87.5.) Secondly, Grace in the hearts of his people, (1 *Pet.*5.10.) and them in the ways of grace, (2 Theſ. 2. 17. Chap. 3. 3.) Thus God eſtabliſheth all things.

Secondly, He eſtabliſheth, counſels and actions, (Iſa. 44. 26.) He confirmeth the word of his ſervants, and performeth the counſel of his Meſſengers; that is, he makes good, and brings to effect that word which they have given in counſel. And as for actions, Moſes prayeth (Pſal. 90. 17.) Eſtabliſh thou the work of our hands upon us, yea the work of our hands eſtabliſh thou it. Whatever is in our hands quickly molders away, and (as the enemies ſaid when the Jews built the walls of Jeruſalem, Neh.4.3.) If a Fox go up upon it, it will fall, unleſs the Lord eſtabliſh it; but neither the Foxes with their ſubtilty, nor the Lyons with their power and cruelty, ſhall be able to overthrow that wall, or thoſe actions, which the Lord is pleaſed to eſtabliſh; for he doth eſtabliſh them for ever.

Hence Note, The Lord can eſtabliſh, not only for a time, but for always; he can give a perpetuity of eſtabliſhment, not only a laſting, but an everlaſting eſtabliſhment; he can give an eternity of eſtabliſhment.

Here is compleat happineſs. What can we deſire more, than, Firſt, to be in a great and good eſtate; Secondly, to be eſtabliſhed there; Thirdly, to be eſtabliſhed for ever? They that are ſet high are ſet in ſlippery places, unleſs the Lord be with them; how much more if the Lord be againſt them? (Pſal 73.18.) But the Lord can ſet us as high as the higheſt Rock, and yet make us as firm as the firmeſt Rock. He doth eſtabliſh them for ever,

And they are exalted.] Some read thus, He eſtabliſheth them for ever, when they are exalted, which makes a very clear ſenſe; when they are got high, the Lord doth eſtabliſh them fully and finally. We render it as a diſtinct act of God, They are eſtabliſhed for ever, and they are exalted; probably intending thus much; that the Lord when he will do a thing, can do it, notwithſtanding all oppoſition, that either is or can be made againſt it; he ſets them with Kings on the Throne, and doth eſtabliſh them for ever, yea, they riſe in power and dignity more and more, They are exalted.

Hence Note, What God will do, ſhall be done:

If he ſaith to a perſon, be exalted, he ſhall be exalted; if he ſaith to Jeruſalem, thou ſhalt be built, and to the Temple, thy foundation ſhall be laid, (*Iſa.*44. 28.) it is done; if he ſaith, pull down Babylon, down it muſt come, even to the very foundation. Ephraim ſaid, (Jer. 30. 18.) Thou haſt chaſtiſed me, and I was chaſtiſed; I found the effects of thy chaſtiſement, it came home to me. What God will work, no man can lett or put a ſtop to.

Further, From the other reading, Note;

Whom God ſets up, no man can pull down, till himſelf pleaſeth;

He doth eſtabliſh them for ever, when they are exalted. God is able to maintain his own acts, whether in caſting any down, or exalting them. When God laid the mountains and heritage of Eſau waſt for the Dragons of the Wilderneſs, (Mal. 1. 3.) Edom ſaid at the next verſe, (well, I ſee) we are impoveriſhed, but we will return, and build the deſolate places. As if Edom had ſaid, Though the Lord hath brought us thus low, yet we doubt not to recover our former glory. But what ſaith the Lord? hear what in the next line; Thus ſaith the Lord of Hoſts, They ſhall build, (or let them build) but I will throw down. Now (I ſay) as when the Lord pulls down, none can build without his leave, ſo whom the Lord exalteth, none can pull down; He eſtabliſheth them for ever, when they are exalted. Thus Elihu ſets forth the exceeding kindneſs of God to, and his care over the righteous, not only his provident care as to their preſent condition, but as to the abiding of their exaltation and the eſtabliſhment of it for ever.

VERS. 8, 9, 10.

And if they be bound in fetters, and be holden in cords of affliction:
Then he ſheweth them their work, and their tranſgreſſions, that they have exceeded:
He openeth alſo their ear to diſcipline, and commandeth that they return from iniquity.

These three verſes hold forth three things in particular, all which concern the righteous, of whom Elihu ſaid in the former verſe, not only, that God doth not withdraw his eyes from them, but eſtabliſh them on high, or advanceth them highly in this world.

Firſt, That poſſibly they may be caſt into ſore afflictions, even after their exaltation, and the newly promiſed laſtingneſs of it, (verſ. 8.)

Secondly, That the procuring cauſe of theſe afflictions, is their own ſin; for we find mention of their tranſgreſſion in the ninth verſe, and of their iniquity in the tenth.

Thirdly, That the purpoſe and deſign of God towards them, when they have brought themſelves into ſtreights, and are caſt into an afflicted condition, is very gracious, and tends to their everlaſting good. And this deſign is threefold.

Firſt, To diſcover their ſin to them; that's laid down at the ninth verſe, Then he ſheweth them their work, and their tranſgreſſions.

Secondly, To prepare them for a better receiving of faithful counſel and inſtruction, at the tenth verſe, He openeth alſo their ear to diſcipline.

Thirdly, To bring them quite off from their ſin; that's expreſſed in the cloſe of the tenth verſe, and commandeth that they return from iniquity. Theſe are the parts, this the purpoſe of the Context under hand;

Verſ. 8. And if they be bound in fetters.

There is ſome queſtion who are to be underſtood as the as the Antecedent to this, they, if they, who are they? Some, becauſe the words following ſpeak of tranſgreſſion and iniquity, conceive, that ſurely it muſt be meant of wicked men, or of the ungodly; but Elihu comes not upon that ſubject till the 13 verſe; there he turns his ſpeech to ſuch, but the hypocrites in heart heap up wrath, &c. Therefore here he doth not ſpeak of, or to, wicked, but righteous men, falling into trouble and affliction; they, that is, the righteous, &c.

Again, Taking righteous men to be the Antecedent (as the text plainly carries it) yet there is a difference in opinion, whether we are to underſtand Elihu ſpeaking of righteous men in that ſpecial dignity deſcribed at the 7 verſe, ſuch as are with Kings on the Throne, or of righteous men in general: I conceive we may underſtand the text of either. And therefore,

Firſt, When Elihu ſaith, If they be bound in fetters, he may intend thoſe righteous men who were ſo highly exalted in the former verſe, ſuch a change may come upon them; even they who were with Kings on the Throne, may come to be bound in fetters, and holden in the cords of affliction.

Secondly, He may intend it of righteous men in any other condition; for Elihu having ſhewed how graciouſly God dealeth in exalting ſome righteous men, ſheweth that God is gracious alſo unto thoſe that are not exalted, even unto thoſe that are greatly afflicted, and brought very low. Briefly, as in the former verſe he ſpake of righteous men lifted up, ſo here of righteous men caſt down: As if he had ſaid, If any of the righteous are at any time ſo far from being exalted with Kings on the Throne, that they are caſt upon the dunghill, and are brought into great ſtreights, yet it is not becauſe God takes no care of them, or becauſe he hath caſt them out of his favour; but it is thus with righteous men for many bleſſed ends and purpoſes, which God hath upon them, or towards them, to ſhew them their ſin, to fit them for inſtruction, and to bring them off from their iniquity. Thus the words prevent an objection; for Elihu having ſaid, he withdraweth not his eyes from the righteous, but with Kings are they on the Throne, ſome might ſay, You can ſhew us very few ſuch ſights, you can ſhew us few righteous men with Kings on the Throne, or exalted highly in this world; and we can ſhew you many righteous men in great trouble, in fetters and cords of affliction. Well, ſaith Elihu, ſuppoſe it be ſo, ſuppoſe you find many righteous men in ſuch a low condition, yet God withdraweth not his eyes from them, no not then; yea, he is doing them good by all the evils that they ſuffer. So then, if this relative they refer to righteous men in either capacity, either to ſuch as were before exalted, and are now afflicted, or to ſuch righteous men as were never ſo exalted, yea as are depreſſed and caſt into an afflicted condition, yet God withdraweth not his eyes from them, but ſtill continues his care of them, and tenderneſs towards them.

If they be bound in fetters, and holden by the cords of affliction.

Here are two hard words, bound and holden, bound as captives, bound as priſoners, bound in fetters, yea, and holden in cords, holden or caught as a poor bird in a net or ſnare, or as a wild beaſt in a toyl. Bound in fetters, and holden in cords. Theſe fetters and cords may be underſtood two ways.

Firſt, Literally and properly, it is poſſible for a righteous man to be bound in fetters, and holden in cords, plainly ſo called. Joſeph was caſt into priſon, and the Iron entred into his ſoul, and his feet were hurt in the Stocks, in material Stocks.

Secondly, We may expound theſe fetters and cords figuratively, or metaphorically, and ſo any trouble or ſtreight is as a fetter, and as a cord: Thus to be bound in fetters, and holden in cords, is but an expreſſion ſignifying any afflicted condition. Fetters and cords are Emblems of ſlavery and captivity. The Prophet foreſhewing the willing contribution of divers ſtrange Nations towards the help of the Jews in their return from the Babyloniſh captivity, as alſo, beyond that, their ſubjection to Chriſt and the power of the Goſpel, gives it under this ſhadow, (Iſa. 45. 14.) Thus ſaith the Lord, the labour of Egypt, and merchandiſe of Ethiopia, and of the Sabeans, men of ſtature ſhall come over unto thee, and they ſhall be thine, (that is, they ſhall yield themſelves to thee as thy ſubjects, and more) they ſhall come after thee in chains, they ſhall come over; that is, they ſhall follow thee as captives do a conquering enemy, in chains. In what chains? the meaning is not, that they ſhall come with chains of Iron upon their bodies; but even the ſtouteſt, greateſt, and richeſt of them ſhall humbly ſubmit, they ſhall come even as priſoners, with their chains about them, ſupplicating and intreating thy favour. We read in the holy Hiſtory of the Kings, that the ſervants of Benhadad came with ropes about their necks to Ahab, they came with material ropes about their necks in token of their abaſement and readineſs to ſubmit unto what ſentence ſoever the King of Iſrael ſhould lay upon them. To come with ropes and chains, is, in Scripture Language, to come in deepeſt humiliation; and to be bound in chains and fetters, is to be in greateſt affliction. That's the ſenſe of the Prophet (Iſa. 28. 22.) Now therefore be ye not mockers (there were ſome that derided him, threatning judgment in the name of the Lord, take heed of that) leſt your bands be made ſtrong; that is, leſt God bring you into ſuch great afflictions, that you ſhall find and feel your ſelves (as it were) in bands, or (as Elihu expreſſeth it in the Text) bound in fetters, and holden in the cords of affliction. So then, this notes in general any ſtate of trouble or ſorrow, of miſery or calamity that befalls us here below, (Pſal. 107. 10.) They that ſit in darkneſs, and in the ſhadow of death, being bound in affliction and iron; that is, as faſt bound in affliction, as if they were bound in iron. Thus here

Vincula ſunt ſervitutis Symbola.

Holden in cords of affliction.] Some tranſlate, cords of poverty; the ſame word ſignifying both affliction and poverty, becauſe poverty is ſo great an affliction. Here's the caſe, this is the condition in which Elihu ſuppoſeth righteous men may fall; They may be bound in fetters, and holden in cords of affliction. Taking the words as they refer to the righteous men in general, obſerve, חבל עני Funibus paupertatis. Vulg.

The beſt of men may fall into the worſt outward condition;

They may be in a condition of captivity, they may be in real fetters and cords, or they may be in a ſtate of affliction, as bad to them as fetters and cords. I have heretofore, more than once, ſpoken of the afflictions of the righteous in the opening of this Book, therefore I ſhall not ſtay upon it here. Only take notice that the righteous may come into fetters, &c. not only for trial of their graces, but for the puniſhment of their iniquities; they poſſibly have not kept cloſe to the bands of duty, and therefore God brings them into the bands of calamity. As wicked men ſay in the pride and ſtoutneſs of their heart, (Pſal. 2. 3.) Come, let us break their bands, and caſt their cords from us; that is, thoſe bands of duty and cords of obedience which the Goſpel layeth upon them; So, in a degree, good men, righteous men, may throw off the cords of obedience, and the bands of duty, through the violence of corruption and temptation, walking looſely and vainly for a ſeaſon, they may break the bands of the Goſpel Covenant, and the cords of the Commandment, and when they do ſo, God will not ſpare them, but will throw them even into the bands of trouble and into the cords of affliction; they ſhall know the fetters and bands of affliction, threatned in the Law, when they have not carefully kept to the rule of the Law.

Secondly, Taking the righteous in that ſpecial capacity, for ſuch as were once exalted, and in high place, or as 'tis ſaid in the former verſe, With Kings on the Throne, and finding them here in fetters and bands, Note,

The worldly ſtate of good, of righteous men, as well as others, is ſubject to change.

For though that Text ſaith, He eſtabliſheth them, yet it is not to be underſtood that God ſo eſtabliſh righteous men in their places, that they can never be put out of them, or ſo exalt them, that they ſhall never be pulled down; that text ſheweth what God can do, he can exalt them ſo, that they ſhall not be removed for ever, and he often exalts them ſo, but he doth not ſo always; for the outward eſtates of good men may have as great changes, as the outward eſtate of wicked men have: they may come from thrones to priſons, and from chains of gold to fetters of Iron. There have been many ſuch changes as to the things of the world, even to thoſe that are not of the world: And as Heathen Princes and Kings have often found ſuch changes, ſo alſo did ſeveral of the Kings of Judah, they were brought from the throne to the priſon. Zedekiah and Jechoniah and Manaſſeh, had ſuch ſad changes; when they highly provoked God, they came from their Thrones to the priſon, from a Crown to the cords of affliction; yea this hath been the lot of many other righteous men exalted, they have been brought to the priſon, and laid very low in this world. Solomon ſaith of one, (Eccleſ. 4. 14.) Out of priſon he cometh to reign, and of another he ſaith in the ſame verſe, He alſo that is born in his Kingdom becometh poor; ſuch viciſſitudes and revolutions come over the heads of the children of men, yea good men are not exempted from ſuch changes and revolutions. Therefore be not offended if at any time you ſee good men in chains and fetters, in a condition of great affliction.

Thirdly, From the manner of expreſſion, When they are bound in fetters, and holden in cords. Affliction is ſet forth and deſcribed by cords and fetters.

Hence Note, Afflictions are grievous to the fleſh.

Are not fetters ſo? are not cords ſo? The word here tranſlated cords, is ſeveral times in Scripture applied to ſignifie the pains of a woman in travel, thoſe are moſt dolorous pains; ſuch are ſome afflictions. The Apoſtle ſpeaking of affliction in general, (Heb. 12. 11.) ſaith, No chaſtning for the preſent ſeemeth to be joyous, but grievous. 'Tis no eaſie thing to be in fetters and cords, to be bound in chains. Afflictions ſtreighten, and preſs, pinch and gall like fetters, they burthen the fleſh, they are no light matters. Though the Apoſtle, comparatively to the weight of glory, calleth the heavieſt outward afflictions light; (2 Cor. 14. 17.) yet firſt, in themſelves; and ſecondly, to our fleſh, they are very heavy. Therefore we ſhould pity thoſe that are in affliction, as thoſe that are in fetters and cords, and we ſhould pray for thoſe that are in affliction, as for thoſe that are bound. Every affliction is a kind of captivity: If they be bound in fetters, and holden in cords of affliction; thus it may be with the righteous. But is not this an argument that God hates them? ſurely no; we read the mind of God towards them notwithſtanding this in the next verſe.

Verſ. 9. Then he ſheweth them their work;

That is, when they are in cords and fetters. But did he never ſhew them their work before? yes, doubtleſs he did; but then eſpecially and effectually, then he ſheweth, he declareth, he makes manifeſt to them, or he cauſeth them to ſee and know their work. The word in that conjugation ſignifieth, not barely to ſhew, but to make them ſee, underſtand and conſider their work; he brings them to a review of what they have done, and to ſee that they have done amiſs. Then he ſheweth; it is a ſhewing with power, an efficacious ſhewing, he ſheweth them their work. What work? this their work may be conſidered two ways.

Firſt, As to the matter of it, what they had done. Till we ſee what we have done, we repent not of what we have done, how much ſoever it ought to be repented of; as the Lord complained of Iſrael by the Prophet (Jer. 8.6.) No man repented of his wickedneſs, ſaying, What have I done?

Secondly, As to the vitiouſneſs or falſeneſs of it, He ſheweth them their work, that is, either what they had done which was evil in the matter of it, or what they had done in an evil manner, though in it ſelf good; he ſheweth them the evil of their work, the irregularity, the crookedneſs, and ſinfulneſs of their work. That this is the meaning, appeareth plainly in the words that follow, Then he ſheweth them their work, and their tranſgreſſion; that is, that there is ſome tranſgreſſion or fault, poſſibly many faults and tranſgreſſions, in their work. Then he ſheweth them their work.

Hence Note, Firſt, Sin is properly the work of man;

That is, of the fleſh in man (Gal. 5. 19.) The works of the fleſh are manifeſt, which are theſe, Adultery, &c. Good is Gods work in us, evil is our work againſt the mind of God. Sin is often called the work of our hands, (Pſal. 28. 4.) Give them after the work of their hands, render to them their deſert; that is, what they have deſerved by their ſins. Moſes declared his fear and holy jealouſie concerning the children of Iſrael in this Language, (Deut. 31. 29.) I know that after my departure, ye will utterly corrupt your ſelves, becauſe ye will do evil in the ſight of the Lord, to provoke him to anger by the work of your hands. Idolatry is ſpecially called the work of mans hands, becauſe Idolaters either worſhip that as a god, or God by that, which their hands have wrought (Rev. 9. 20.) They repented not of the work of their hands, that they ſhould not worſhip Devils, and Idol of Gold, and Silver, and Braſs, &c. Yet Idolatry is much more the work of the heart, than of the hand. And as Idolatry, ſo any other ſin, whether of heart or tongue, may be called the work of our hand, it being that which is moſt properly our work, though originally the Devils work. As to pardon ſin, is properly the work of God, ſo to commit ſin, is properly the work of man. There is no work ſo much ours, as that; no work properly ours, but bad work; all the good we do, is the work of God in us, or by us.

Secondly, Note, Man doth not ſee the falſeneſs and faultineſs of his own work, till God ſheweth it him.

There may be many cracks and flaws in our good works, which we perceive not, we are ready to think and ſay, All's well, we have done very well, until God lets us ſee our work in his light, in the light of his Word and Spirit; and then we ſhall ſee cauſe to be humbled for thoſe works which we were proud of, and ſometimes boaſted in. The Prophet (Haggai 1. 5.) called the Jews to conſider their ways; they ſaw their ways, but they conſidered not their ways, and therefore they ſaw not the evil and error of their ways. As we ſee many of the works of God, yet ſee not the excellency or admirable contrivance of them, till himſelf ſheweth it; ſo we ſee many of our own works, yet we ſee not the ſinfulneſs, vanity, and folly that is in them, till God ſhew it unto us; he maketh us ſee our work as it is.

Thirdly, From the circumſtance of time, when it is that the Lord ſheweth unto man his work, the falſeneſs of his work; the Text ſaith, Then he ſheweth them their work, that is, when they are bound in fetters, and holden in cords of affliction.

Hence Note, The badneſs or fulneſs of our works, is moſt uſually, and moſt clearly diſcovered to us in times of affliction; then ſheweth he them their work.

Joſephs Brethren did a very ill work in ſelling him into Egypt, and in putting off their Father with a lie; yet they took little notice of this work for many years; but when they were bound in fetters, and holden in the cords of affliction, when they came down to Egypt for Corn, and were in great ſtreights, through the policy of their Brother to diſcover them, not out of any deſign to hurt them, Then they ſaid one to another, we are verily guilty concerning our Brother (Gen. 42. 21.) And (verſ. 22.) Reuben anſwered them, ſaying, Spake I not unto you, ſaying, Do not ſin againſt the child, and ye would not hear? therefore behold alſo his blood is required: Then their ſin appeared to them in bloudy colours, then that ſinfulneſs of their work appeared to them, which they ſaw not before. Affliction is a dark condition, yet it brings much light into the ſoul: Affliction brings light to diſcover our works of darkneſs, that is, the ſinfulneſs of our works; troubles make Comments upon our works, afflictions expound our actions, and ſhew where the error of them is. We are uſually very blind to ſee or diſcern a fault in our ſelves, or in what we have done, until God openeth our eyes, by laying a croſs upon our backs; Then he ſheweth them their work.

And their tranſgreſſions that they have exceeded.

Here we ſee (as was toucht before) what kind of works they are which God ſheweth them in affliction; works of tranſgreſſion, or the tranſgreſſion of their works. The Vulgar Latine renders the Text by a harder word, Their wickedneſs, or villanies. Others by a word of no leſs, if not of a more hard and harſh ſignification, He ſheweth them their prevarication; as if they had dealt cunningly and treacherouſly with God, not plainly, clearly, and above board, as if they had uſed tricks and policies very much unbecoming righteous perſons. Moſt give it a more eaſie title (as we) tranſlating by a word that will comply with any ſin, tranſgreſſion; every ſin, the leaſt ſin is a tranſgreſſion. Sin is a tranſgreſſion of the Law in the very nature of it; and taking the word in this loweſt, and moſt favourable notion,

Scelera eorum. Vulg.

Nomen hoc uſurpatur etiam de levioribus vitiis. Druſ.

Obſerve, God will not ſpare, he will not ſpare the righteous for their tranſgreſſions, or leſſer faults, if they do not judge and humble themſelves;

If their ſins be but ſlips, the Lord will make them know what they have done.

But there ſeemeth to be a great aggravation in the Text, upon theſe tranſgreſſions, which more than intimates that they are no ſmall ones; for 'tis added, And their tranſgreſſions,

That they exceeded.] Some read the words in the Preſent Tenſe, or time, He ſheweth them their tranſgreſſions, when they exceed or prevail: As if the meaning were, God doth not ſuffer the ſins of righteous perſons to grow too potent and prevalent upon them, but takes them in time, and nips their ſins in the bud, when he ſees they begin to grow ſtrong upon them, leſt if let alone, they might be foyled by them, and ſo fall into open ſcandal, or be hardly withdrawn from them. It is no eaſie thing to maſter and mortifie a luſt, when once it hath got head, and therefore it is a very gracious work of God, to ſhew a man his ſin convincingly, and humble him for it, when he perceives it riſing in ſtrength. This is a pious ſenſe and profitable.

We read it in the paſt time, When they have exceeded. That is, when theſe righteous perſons have exceeded much in their tranſgreſſions. As much as to ſay, when they have ſinned exceedingly, or when their ſins are many and great, when (according to the Hebrew) they are waxen mighty, then the Lord ſees it high time to deal with them.

The word which we render exceeded, comes from a root that ſignifieth a ſtrong, or mighty man, and in the Verb, to act ſtrongly and mightily; as if Elihu had ſaid, He ſheweth them that they have ſinned like Giants and mighty men, they have ſinned greatly, grievouſly. And 'tis poſſible for thoſe that are righteous in their ſtate to ſin greatly; not only to tranſgreſs, but to exceed in their tranſgreſſions, that they have exceeded.

Hence Note, Firſt, There is an exceſſiveneſs, or an exceedingneſs in ſome ſins.

All men ſin, but the ſins of all men, at leaſt all the ſins of all good men, do not exceed; they are not all of a high ſtature, they are not all ſtrong and mighty ſins, as the Lord by his Prophet called thoſe of Iſrael (Amos 5. 12.) We uſually diſtinguiſh of ſins; ſome are ſins in the exceſs, and ſome in the defect; Prodigality is a ſin in the exceſs, and Parſimony is a ſin in the defect; Superſtition is a ſin in the exceſs, when men will worſhip God more than he requires, or in what he requires not; Prophaneneſs, or neglect of Worſhip, as alſo negligence in Worſhip, are ſins in defect. Thus ſome ſins are in the exceſs, others in the defect, yet every tranſgreſſion hath a kind of exceſs in it, and ſome are exceedingly exceſſive. And becauſe when any exceedingly exceed in ſinning, their ſins may be ſaid to reign; therefore (I ſuppoſe) Mr. Broughton tranſlates this Text ſo, And that their treſpaſſes reigned. For, though as to a courſe of ſin, it is inconſiſtent with the ſtate of a righteous man, that ſin ſhould reign in him, yet as to this or that act it may reign; ſin may reign over, and bring under a godly man by the violence of a preſent temptation, though it cannot reign over him (as it doth over the wicked) by a willing ſubmiſſion. As the beſt ſin always, ſo ſometimes they have ſinned greatly, they have exceeded. Davids ſin exceeded, his ſin, as to that act, maſter'd and reigned over him. Solomons ſin exceeded, when in his old age his wives turned away his heart to other gods, (1 Kings 11.4.) And Peters ſin exceeded, when he denied his Maſter. The righteous are not exempt from a particular reign of ſin, though through grace, they are delivered from the reign of any the leaſt particular ſin. As there is no kind, ſo no degree of ſin, but a godly man may fall into it, except that againſt the holy Ghoſt, and total Apoſtaſie from his profeſſion.

Secondly, God ſheweth them that they have exceeded, that's it which God ſheweth them in their affliction.

> Hence Obſerve; Many ſee their ſin, that do not ſee the exceedingneſs of their ſin, or that they have exceeded in ſin.

Not only natural and carnal men, who ſee that they have ſinned, do not at all ſee the exceedingneſs of their ſin, but ſome good men ſee that they have ſinned, but ſee not preſently the exceeding, no nor half, the evil of their ſin; therefore, ſaith Elihu, He ſheweth them their tranſgreſſion, that they have exceeded. Paul before his converſion, knew that he had ſinned, but he knew not the ſinfulneſs of his ſin, which yet afterwards was to him exceeding ſinful, (*Rom.*7. 13.) As it is the height of our corruption to commit ſins exceeding ſinful, ſo it is a very high point of grace, to ſee the exceeding ſinfulneſs of our ſin.

You will ſay, how is it that ſin doth exceed, or wherein conſiſts the exceedingneſs of it? I anſwer, Firſt, There is an exceedingneſs of ſin, in the ſtrength that it hath over us, when it doth eaſily command and prevail, then we ſin exceedingly, or then ſin is exceeding ſinful, it hath got a mighty hand over us. O how ſadly do the ſins of many exceed thus! They are held down by their corruptions as ſlaves and captives, they cannot get themſelves out from under the power of a baſe luſt. As the Devil leads ſome, ſo luſts and corruptions lead others captive at their will, they are at the beck and command of ſin. Thus ſin exceeds in the wicked, who either know not God, or who walk daily contrary to their knowledg.

Secondly, That man doth exceed in his tranſgreſſion, or his tranſgreſſion doth exceed, who ſins with, or hath a very ill frame of heart in ſinning. Many a good man falls into ſin, and yet he hath not, as I may ſay, a baſe or wicked frame of heart in ſinning, but his very ſinning is, upon the matter, againſt his own heart, and the bent of his ſpirit, his heart goeth not with it. The more of the heart or will is mingled with any ſin, the more exceeding ſinful it is. I may ſay of ſome men (I would not be miſtaken) That they do evil with a better frame of heart, than others do good; there are ſome that do good with very bad, yea with baſe hearts; The ſacrifice of the wicked is an abomination; how much more when he brings it with a wicked mind, or (as we put in the Margin) with wickedneſs, (Pro. 21.27.) That is, either for applauſe, to be ſeen of men, or for profit, to gain by men, or in malice, the better to compaſs revenge upon any man, or ſort of men; under all which covers, wicked men have brought their ſacrifices, that is, have appeared in the outward worſhip of God, or have taken up the form of godlineſs. And whoſoever doth thus, hath a far worſe frame of heart in doing good, than a good man hath in doing evil: who though he doth evil, yet he delights not in it, and cloſes not with it. By how much any mans heart is more taken with ſin, by ſo much the more ſinful it is.

Thirdly, The exceedingneſs of a ſin may be meaſured by the circumſtances of ſinning; then a man may be ſaid to tranſgreſs, and exceed in tranſgreſſion, when he ſinneth, Firſt, againſt light, againſt the checks of his own conſcience within; as alſo, Secondly, when he ſins againſt reproofs, warnings, and admonitions from without; that man exceeds in ſin, who hath been told of it, and yet goeth on. Thirdly, that man exceeds in ſin, who ſins in the midſt of much mercy, and daily received or renewed favours; as alſo he, Fourthly, who ſins in the midſt of many afflictions and judgments, whether upon his perſon and family, or upon the Nation where he liveth: ſuch as theſe not only ſin or tranſgreſs, but exceed in tranſgreſſion. Now the Lord in times of affliction ſheweth men theſe and the like exceedings of their tranſgreſſion, and cauſeth them to confeſs, not only that they are ſinners, and have tranſgreſſed, but they are brought upon their knees to confeſs, that they have exceeded in tranſgreſſion. And when this is done, the Lord goeth on yet further to perfect the work of humiliation and repentance, while they are bound in fetters, and holden in the cords of affliction for then, as it followeth, Verſ. 10. He openeth alſo their ear to diſcipline, and commandeth that they return from iniquity.

Still 'tis Gods work, he ſheweth before, and here, he openeth: as in the former verſe he openeth their eyes to ſee, ſo in this he openeth their ear to hear.

He openeth their ear.] This latter is more than the former, this opening the ear to diſcipline, is more than a ſhewing of ſin, and the exceeding ſinfulneſs of it: Opening the ear, imports a cloſe and home-diſcovery of a mans condition to him, (Pſal. 51.6.) David, after his great ſin, perceived the Lord ſhewing him, or making him to underſtand wiſdom ſecretly.

גלה Revelavit occulta & abſcondita: revelatio auris notat intimam inſinuationem.

He openeth alſo their ear.] The word which we tranſlate, to open, properly ſignifieth to reveal; and, in Scripture phraſe, the ear is ſaid to be revealed, or uncovered, when a ſecret is brought to us, (1*Sam.* 20. 2.) Jonathan ſaid to David, God forbid, thou ſhalt not die; behold my Father will do nothing, either great or ſmall, but that he will ſhew it me,(or uncover my ear)and why ſhould my Father hide this thing from me? Saul alſo uſed the ſame Hebraiſm, or form of ſpeech, when he upbraided his ſervants with their unfaithfulneſs to him; What, ſaith he, hath the ſon of Jeſſe ſuch preferments for you? And are you all ſo corrupted in your loyalty to me, that all of you have conſpired againſt me, and there is none that ſheweth me, (or uncovereth my ear) that my ſon hath made a League with the ſon of Jeſſe, (Sam. 22. 8.) Will none of you uncover my ear? That is, diſcover the plot that is contrived for my ruin? Then the ear is ſaid to be opened or uncovered, when any ſecret is made known to the mind; as was further ſhewed at the 16. verſe of the 33. Chapter, where Elihu uſed this expreſſion; and therefore I ſhall not return to that matter, but refer the Reader thither. Only conſider to what, or for what the Lord is ſaid to open the ear. In the 33. Chapter Elihu told us, that when the eyes of men are ſhut (deep ſleep being fallen upon them) he openeth the ears of men, and ſealeth their inſtruction. Here Elihu ſaith, God having men under the rod, he openeth alſo their ear, Loquitur de aure cordis & mentis. Scitum illud; Mens audit, mens vidit, cætera ſurda & cæca ſunt. Druſ.

To diſcipline.] The Hebrew word is of the ſame extraction in both places; Inſtruction is for diſcipline, and diſcipline tends unto inſtruction. It is often rendred, chaſtiſement, and generally ſignifies any ſeverer courſe of inſtruction or education, whereby we are drawn off from evil and unto good. When Elihu ſaith, He openeth their ear to diſcipline, we may underſtand it two ways.

למוסר Ad caſtigationem, i. e. Ne caſtigatio ſit eis abſq; fructu, vel ut iſta diſciplina ſeu correctione emendentur. Piſc.

Firſt, To fit them for inſtruction, and counſel; they heard (poſſibly) before, but not with an open, that is, a ready and obedient ear. The ear is ſhut, though we hear much, unleſs we ſubmit and conform to what we hear. The ear ſeldom opens fully till the Lord ſmites, as well as ſpeaks, and gives us both a word and a blow.

Secondly, He openeth their ear to diſcipline, That is, to hearken what Gods chaſtening or correction ſpeaks, or what he ſpeaks by his chaſtning. The Lord would not have his chaſtnings unprofitable, nor his rods without fruit to us, and therefore he openeth the ear to diſcipline, and ſheweth us the meaning of ſuch a croſs or ſickneſs, of ſuch a loſs or affliction; He openeth their ear to diſcipline.

Hence Note; Firſt, It is a ſpecial power of God which helps us to underſtand his mind, either in his Word or in his Works.

We neither underſtand the dealings nor ſayings of God, if left to our ſelves: the heart of man is ſhut, his ear is deaf, the ear of his heart (that's the ear here intended) till God ſay (as in the Goſpel to the bodily ear) Ephatha, Be thou opened, (Pro. 20. 12.) The hearing ear, and the ſeeing eye, the Lord is the maker of them both: That's a great truth; Firſt, of the ſenſitive ear and eye; 'tis the Lord who hath made the one to hear, and the other to ſee, as he told Moſes (Exod. 4. 11.) and as 'tis ſaid, (Pſal. 94. 19.) Secondly, 'tis as true if underſtood of the intellectual eye and ear; the hearing ear and ſeeing eye, that is, the ear that heareth obediently and practically, that ear is of Gods forming and making; ſuch an ear did God create (Acts 16. 14.) where it is ſaid, A certain woman named Lydia, a ſeller of purple of the City of Thyatira, which worſhipped God, heard us, whoſe heart the Lord opened, that ſhe attended to the things that were ſpoken by Paul.

Further, what was the ſeaſon of opening the ear? It was a day of affliction, when they were bound in fetters, and holden in cords of affliction.

Hence Learn; God uſeth afflictions as medicines or means to reſtore ſpiritual hearing.

Man is often cured of his ſpiritual deafneſs, both as to the voice of the word and works of God, by ſickneſs. A good man in health, peace, and proſperity, may have his ears ſo ſtopped that the Lord ſees it needful to ſend ſome ſharp correction to get out the ear-wax and unlock them. Proſperity (ſaith one of the Ancients) is the gift of God comforting us; adverſity is the gift of God admoniſhing us; why then doſt thou complain that thou ſuffereſt, thy ſuffering is a medicament, not a puniſhment; 'tis for thy bettering, not for thy undoing. 'Tis a favour to feel God ſtriking, when we have not heard him ſpeaking, and he therefore ſtrikes that we may attend what he ſpeaks; When words do not prevail to open the ear, fetters and cords ſhall. That's the ſecond deſign of God when he brings the righteous into ſtreights, Then he openeth their ear to diſcipline: The third is given in the cloſe of this Verſe;

Res proſpera donum eſt Dei conſolantis. res adverſa eſt donum Dei admonentis; quid igitur pateris, unde plangis; medicina eſt, non pœna; caſtigatio non damnatio. Auguſt. in Pſal. 102.

And commandeth that they return from iniquity.

Here's the iſſue of the former two: The ſhewing them their tranſgreſſions, the opening their ear, are that they may return from iniquity; and here is a command that they muſt; And commandeth that they return, &c. The Hebrew Text may be rendred, He ſpeaketh, or ſaith, that they return from iniquity; and this ſpeaking may be expounded two ways; Firſt, by perſwading; He ſpeaks perſwadingly. The Lords afflictions are perſwaſions, his ſtroaks are intreaties, he beſeecheth us by our ſorrows, and ſickneſſes, and weakneſſes, and pains, that we would return from our iniquity. Secondly, we take ſpeaking or ſaying in the higheſt ſtrain, He ſpeaks by commanding, he ſpeaks authoritatively; Thus we render, He commandeth. The command of God is twofold; Firſt, formal or expreſs, when God gives the rule in ſo many words. Secondly, vertual. The command of God (I conceive) is here to be underſtood in this latter ſenſe. When the Lord afflicteth the righteous, he vertually commands, or ſends out his Edict, that they return from their iniquity. The word return, implies them formerly following ſome iniquity, and gone far from the Lord: This returning is repenting all the Scripture over. I need ſay no more of that. As by ſin we turn from God, ſo by repentance, we return from iniquity; and as the Lord at all times commands the righteous by his word, ſo they even force him ſometimes to command them by his rod, which is called diſcipline in the former part of the verſe, becauſe ſinners feel pain, and find matter to learn, all at once. He commandeth that they return

Qui jubentis verba non audiunt, ferientis verberibus admonentur; ut ad bona æterna pœnæ trahant, quos præmia non invitant. Greg. l. 26. Mor. c. 26.

From iniquity.] The word rendred iniquity, ſignifies a vain, empty thing, a thing of nought: ſo the Chaldee paraphraſeth it here, He commands that they return from their evil works, which are like to vanity, and a thing of nought. What is ſin, but a kind of nothing? We look for great matters from ſin, but it is a vanity, it is (like an Idol) nothing in the world, that is, it is not ſuch a thing as it doth import, or as it promiſeth, or as the opinion of men make it to be; Iniquity is no ſuch thing as it pretendeth, or as is pretended. The Lord commandeth that they return from iniquity; That is, from doing that which will profit them nothing at all, or no more than a vain thing, a thing of nothing can. And yet though iniquity be nothing good or profitable, yet 'tis all things evil and hurtful, nor had any thing ever hurt us or been evil to us, had it not been for iniquity. He commandeth that they return from iniquity.

און Habet ſignificationem nihili. --Ab operibus ſuis malis, quæ ſimilia ſunt vanitati & nihilo. Chald.

Hence Note; Firſt, Affliction hath a voice; God ſpeaks loudly to us by affliction;

He ſpeaks to us as loud in his works, as he doth in his word; he trumpets to us, he thunders to us in his works: God ſpeaks aloud, but ſweetly, to us in his works of mercy, he ſpeaks aloud, but terribly, to us in his works of judgment.

Secondly, Seeing, as was touched in opening the words, this command is not to be taken for a ſtanding Law, for ſo God always commands men to return from iniquity, but the command here is a renewed act or a ſpecial diſpenſation, there is, as it were, a freſh command iſſued, when a man is under the afflicting hand of God.

Hence Note; God reinforceth or reneweth his command to return from ſin, as often as he reneweth our afflictions.

That we return from iniquity, is a ſtanding, an everlaſting Law, but when we are in affliction, then there is, as it were, a freſh Edition of the command, 'tis, as I may ſay, new Printed and proclaimed, the fetters Print this command upon our heels, and the cords upon our hands, that we return from iniquity.

Thirdly, Note; Iniquity is a vain thing, it is a nothing.

Shall we not then return from it? One would think a little perſwaſion might ſerve the turn to haſten our return from a nothing, and ſhall not a command do it? When I ſay a nothing, remember, (as was ſhewed) ſin is no ſuch thing as you look upon it to be: where are the profits that you have reaped by ſin? Where are the contents and pleaſures that you have taken by ſin? The profit, the pleaſure, and content of ſin are nothing, there is no advantage to be had by ſin. Sin is ſomething in the ill effects of it; if you would have pain, and diſhonour, and reproach, you may have enough of it in ſin, and you will find ſin a ſomething in that ſenſe; but ſin is a nothing, that is, no ſuch thing as you expect and look for, and therefore be perſwaded to return from it.

Laſtly, From the whole Text take notice of the purpoſe of God, what he hath in his heart, when he afflicteth his people, the righteous, for their iniquities and faylings, for their faults and uneven walkings. The ſcope of God in all this, is not their hurt; but good; it is not to deſtroy them for their ſin, but to deſtroy their ſin; it is not to withdraw himſelf from them, but to draw them nearer to himſelf; all the hurt that the Lord intends us by any affliction, is but to get out our droſs, and to fetch out our filth, to bring us off from thoſe things that will undo and ruin us for ever. And how great an argument of the goodneſs of God is it, that he deſigneth the evils which we ſuffer in theſe dying bodies, to heal the evils, and help on the good of our immortal Souls! That's all the hurt that the Lord means us. And the Lords heart is ſo much in this deſign (the return of thoſe he afflicts from their iniquity) that he ſeems confident of it, that when any are in affliction, ſurely they will return, (Hoſea 5.15.) In their affliction they will ſeek me early, ſurely they will. And therefore the Prophet ſpeaks of the Lord as defeated and diſappointed of his purpoſe, when he ſeeth ſuch as he hath afflicted continuing in their ſin, (Iſa. 9.13.) The people turneth not unto him that ſmiteth them, neither do they ſeek the Lord of Hoſts: As if he had ſaid, 'Tis a wonder, that being ſmitten they have not returned; what a ſtrange, what a croſs-grain'd people are theſe! What? Doth the Lord ſmite you that you ſhould run farther from him, and follow your iniquity cloſer, or hold it faſter? You may be aſhamed that you turn not unto him that ſpeaks to you; but when you are ſmitten will you not return from iniquity? Remember, the Lord therefore ſuffers you to be bound in fetters, that you may be looſed from your ſins; he therefore ſuffers you to be holden in the cords of affliction, that you might let go your tranſgreſſions. Take heed you be not found diſappointing him of his purpoſe. How well it will be with thoſe who do not diſappoint him, and how ill 'tis like to be with ſuch as do, will appear further and fully in the two next verſes.

VERS. 11, 12.

If they obey and ſerve him, they ſhall ſpend their days in proſperity, and their years in pleaſures.

But if they obey not, they ſhall periſh by the ſword, and they ſhall die without knowledg.

IN the former Context we heard, what the bleſſed deſigns of God are upon the righteous, when they are bound in fetters, and holden in the Cords of affliction, namely, to convince them of their ſin, to fit them for the receiving of Inſtruction, and to bring them clear off from iniquity.

In theſe two verſes Elihu proceedeth to ſhew what the iſſue of thoſe afflictions will be, in a double reſpect or caſe.

Firſt, In caſe the afflicted come up to and anſwer the forementioned deſigns of God; that is, if they take knowledg of their ſin, if their ears be opened to Inſtruction, if they return from iniquity; what then? He tells us (Verſ. 11.) If they obey and ſerve him, they ſhall ſpend their days in proſperity, and their years in pleaſures; that ſhall be the iſſue, the bleſſed iſſue of all the afflictions with which they were exerciſed.

Secondly, He ſhews us how thoſe afflictions will iſſue in caſe the afflicted come not up to thoſe deſigns of God, in caſe they are not brought to a knowledg of ſin, nor receive inſtruction, nor return from iniquity; what then? He tells us that (Verſ. 12.) If they obey not (this will be the conſequent of their obſtinacy) they ſhall periſh by the ſword, and they ſhall die without knowledg. We have a parallel Scripture to this almoſt in terms, (Iſa. 19.20.) If ye hear and obey, ye ſhall eat the good of the Land, but if ye refuſe and rebell, ye ſhall be devoured with the ſword. This Text not only carries the ſenſe, but almoſt the words, by which Elihu expreſſeth both the Lords pleaſure and diſpleaſure in this place to Job.

Verſ. 11. If they obey, or hear,

That is, take out the leſſon taught them; if they do that which the affliction teacheth them, or which God teacheth by their affliction, by their cords and fetters, then, &c. The ſame word is frequently in Scripture uſed for obeying and hearing, (Pſal. 81.8,11.13.. Pſal. 95.7.) To what purpoſe is our hearing the will of God without obedience to it? When young Samuel ſaid at the Lord's call, Speak, for thy ſervant heareth, (1Sam.3.10.) his meaning was, Lord, I am ready to do what thou ſpeakeſt. We hear no more than we obey, and therefore obeying and hearing may well be expreſt by the ſame word. The Text is plain, I ſhall only give this Note, and paſs on;

It is our duty to hear and obey when-ever God calls or ſpeaks, either in his word or in his works.

That which this Text holds out ſpecially is the voice of God in his works, what God ſpeaks by Fetters, what he ſpeaks by Cords. If ever we hear and obey the voice of the Lord, it ſhould be when he teacheth us (as Gideon taught the men of Succoth, Judg. 8.16.) with thorns and briars of the wilderneſs. O let us take care of hearing and obeying this voice. For Firſt, God is the Lord, and therefore to be obeyed. Secondly, God is a Soveraign Lord, and therefore much more to be obeyed. Thirdly, As all the Commands, ſo all the Chaſtiſements of God are juſt and righteous, therefore they are moſt of all to be obeyed. Fourthly, To obey the Commands of God, whether taught us in his Word or by his Rod, is good, yea beſt for us, therefore we ſhould obey for our own good.
If they obey

And ſerve him, or worſhip him.] The word which here we render to ſerve, is very often in Scripture rendred to worſhip, and ſometimes worſhipping is expounded by ſerving, (Matth. 4.10.) Thou ſhalt worſhip the Lord thy God, and him only ſhalt thou ſerve; that alſo is the mind of the Text, If they obey and ſerve him.

עבד Religio & numinis cultus eſt ſervitus quædam.

Hence Note; The Lord expects our ſervice, and then eſpecially, when we ſuffer.

Religion and the Worſhip of God, in the whole compaſs of it, is nothing elſe but ſervice, a bleſſed ſervice, a free ſervice, a ſervice infinitely more free than any thing the world calls freedom. (Exod. 4.23.) Let my Son go that he may ſerve me, that is, worſhip me. All the Sons of God are his Servants, and they have moſt of the Son in them who have moſt of the Servant in them. If any deny him ſervice they deny their ſonſhip, or rather (as the Apoſtle ſpeaks of Non-ſufferers in one kind or other, *Heb.*12.8.) They are baſtards, not ſons; Yea, God expects whole and all ſervice from us, or that we ſhould ſerve him with our all, (*Deut.*10.12.) Thou ſhalt ſerve the Lord thy God with all thy heart. We muſt ſerve the Lord, not only with the beſt we have, but with all the beſt, with the heart, and all the heart. We ſerve God no further than we obey him, and we worſhip him no further than we ſerve him, and that heartily.

To ſerve God, (as to love God) is a very comprehenſive word, 'tis the ſum of all the duty of Man. To ſerve God is to ſubmit both to what he commands us, and to what he layeth upon us. To ſerve God is to ſubmit to what he would have us do, and to whatſoever he is pleaſed to do with us? and ſo we ſerve him particularly under ſufferings: We ſhould always ſerve him actively, and we are called ſometimes to ſerve him paſſively. All Believers are free, and yet they muſt ſerve; and they are made free on purpoſe to ſerve: We are purchaſed by the blood of Chriſt, that we might ſerve him. Becauſe we are bought with a price, we muſt not be the ſervants of men, ſaith the Apoſtle, (1Cor. 7.23.) Whoſe ſervants then? Surely the ſervants of God. We are conquered that we might ſerve. The Latines ſay, that a Servant is one that is ſaved in War, taken and ſaved. So it is with all the people of God, they are taken in the holy war, they are taken priſoners, and ſo made ſervants to Jeſus Chriſt. Yet Believers are ſervants, not only by conqueſt, but compact and covenant; every godly man hath, as it were, ſealed Indentures with God, he hath (upon the matter) put his ear to the Lords poſt to be boared thorow, (as you read, Exod. 21.6.) that he may be his ſervant for ever. The Lord expects ſervice.

Servus tanquam in bello ſervatus.

But what is it to ſerve him?

Firſt, To ſerve him is to do his Will.

Secondly, To ſerve him is to do his whole Will. It is not the doing of this or that piece of the Will of God, or this or that patch of the Will of God, which renders us his ſervants; but the doing his whole Will.

Thirdly, To ſerve him is to do his Will only; ſo ſaith the Scripture, Him only ſhalt thou ſerve. If it may be ſuppoſed, that we could do the whole Will of God, and yet do the will of any other, or do our own will too, in any thing contrary to his, we were not his ſervants; if we ſerve him not alone, or if we ſerve him not only, that is, if in ſerving man we aim not chiefly at the ſerving of him, or if all our ſervices to men are not ſubſervient, or not in ſubordination to the ſervice of God, we ſerve him not at all.

Fourthly, I may add this alſo, To ſerve God is to do every thing under this contemplation, that, what we do is the Will of God. 'Tis very poſſible for a man to do that which is the Will of God, and yet not to ſerve him in doing it; which we never do till we do it becauſe it is the Will of God. His Will muſt be not only the Rule of what we do, but the very Reaſon why we do it, elſe our doings are not his ſervings. They that do not attend this, ſerve God but as a beaſt may ſerve him, a beaſt may do that which is the Will of God; the inanimate creatures ſerve him ſo; We hear of ſtormy winds and tempeſts fulfilling his Will, (Pſal. 148.) All living, yea liveleſs creatures do that which is his Will, but they do not attend this, that it is his Will which they do. So that, I ſay, to do his Will, not conſidering that it is his Will, is to ſerve him no otherwiſe then beaſts, or than the winds or ſtorms ſerve him: And to do his Will, aiming, at our own wills or ends, is to ſerve him but as a hypocrite ſerves him. A hypocrite doth not ſerve God in what he doth, though he doth many things which are materially the Will of God, becauſe in all he minds his own Will more then the Will of God.

Laſtly, We muſt ſerve God as Sons, (Mal. 3.17.) A Son ſerveth no leſs then a Servant, yea much more, though not as a ſervant; for he knoweth more of his Fathers mind then a meer ſervant doth (Joh. 15.15.) and he knoweth, that he ſhall have alſo, though not Wages at the end of every day, yet the inheritance in the end. Obadiah was the proper name of one good man, and it is a name common to all good men; they are (as that word imports) Servants of the Lord. It is a common Theam to urge men to ſerve God, but it is a rare thing to be indeed a ſervant of God. To ſerve God is the Sum and Marrow of all knowledg in divinity, and the great end why we came into this World and for which we are here detained. Nor is it an eaſie matter to come up to, or attain the holy skill of ſerving ſuch a Lord and Maſter as he: There muſt be a doing of his Will, and of his whole Will, and of his Will only, and that under this preciſe contemplation, that it is his Will, to denominate us his ſervants, or to make a proof that we ſerve him.

Now whether God teacheth us by his Word, or by his Rod (which is the teaching of this context) O how readily ſhould we obey and ſerve him! To ſerve him is not only the deſign of our being made free, that is, we were not only made free to ſerve him, but to ſerve him is our freedom (as was toucht before) yea, to ſerve him is not only to be free, but to ſerve him is to reign and rule. They that ſerve God to purpoſe reign over the luſts of the evil World without, and over their own luſts within; nor can any reign over the luſts of the world without, or their own within, but only they who ſerve him, and only ſo far as they ſerve him. Every gracious act of ſervice to God is the ſubjugation or bringing under of ſome luſt or other in man.

Now if any ſhould ſay, ſurely this is a very ſad Life, to be always ſerving, or to lead only the life of a ſervant.

I anſwer, To ſerve God, or the ſervice of God is ſweet, pleaſant and eaſie in a twofold reſpect. Firſt, comparatively, to the ſervice of ſin and the world, of luſt and the Devil; that's a wearineſs indeed as well as a baſeneſs. Secondly, It is eaſie alſo if we conſider the help we have in it. The people of God ſerve him in a Covenant of Grace, which, as it calls them to work, ſo it gives them help to work. The New Covenant doth not call us (as Pharaoh did the children of Iſrael) to make brick and deny us ſtraw; yea, under that Covenant, we have not only ſtraw afforded us to make our brick, but we have ſtrength afforded us to make our brick; that is, the very power by which we ſerve our Maſter is given in by our Maſter. The Maſters of this world ſet us a work, but they give us no ſtrength, but what work ſoever God ſets his Covenant-ſervants about, he gives them ſtrength to do it. Then, O how ſweet is it to ſerve him, and how readily ſhould our hearts come off in his ſervice! Let me add one thing more (which brings us to the next words) ſerve him, for his is not a lean ſervice, not an unprofitable ſervice, there is a reward promiſed to thoſe who ſerve him; yea, his very ſervice is a reward, his work is wages. Therefore what calls ſoever we have from him let us anſwer and ſerve him. There are two things which ſhould be the daily meditation of Saints, or they ſhould be continually acquainting themſelves with them. Firſt, The Croſs of Chriſt, that they may know how, and be willing to ſuffer for him. Secondly, The Yoak of Chriſt, that they may know how, and be willing to ſerve him. If they obey and ſerve him, What then? Even that which was the laſt conſideration provoking us to his ſervice, there is a reward in it, If they obey and ſerve him,

They ſhall ſpend their days in proſperity, and their years in pleaſures.

Here's good wages; who would not ſerve that Maſter who will pay him for his work in that deſireable coin, Pleaſure and Proſperity! They ſhall ſpend their days in proſperity, that is, they ſhall run out their days in proſperity, their days and their proſperity ſhall be like two parallel lines, one as long as the other. The word which we tranſlate to ſpend, ſignifies to finiſh, and that in a double reſpect; Firſt, in a way of Conſumption: Secondly, in a way of Perfection or Conſummation. That which is conſumed is finiſhed, or ended. So the word is uſed (Pſal. 90. 7. Num. 16. 45.) The Lord ſaith to Moſes, Go you up from this Congregation, that I may conſume them in a moment; I will diſpatch them and make an end of them preſently. The Lord can ſoon rid his hand of ſinners. And as it notes a conſuming by ſuddain judgments, by diſeaſes or age, ſo by longing or deſire, (2 Sam. 23. 15.) And David longed ('tis this word, he was even ſpent and conſumed with a longing deſire) and ſaid, O that one would give me drink of the water of the well of Bethlehem, which is by the gate. Now as that which is conſumed or ſpent, ſo that which is perfected is finiſhed. Thus, Moſes having ſet down the particulars of the whole work of Creation ſums all up in this word, (Gen. 2.1,2.) Thus the Heavens and the Earth were finiſhed, and all the hoſt of them; That is, God compleated or brought that great work of Creation to its utmoſt perfection, he put (as we may ſpeak) his laſt hand to it, there was nothing more to be added. Here in the Text we are to take this word ſpend not only as it often ſignifies, to ſpend in a way of Conſumption, but alſo to ſpend in a way of Perfection, they ſhall perfect, not barely wear out their days. A godly man hath not ſo much conſumed as perfected the days of his life, when he is come to and hath ended the laſt day of his life. They ſhall ſpend their days

In proſperity, or in good (ſaith the Original)

Proſperity is a good thing, a good bleſſing of God. They ſhall ſpend their days in good, we tranſlate it in the 21. Chapter Verſ. 15. in wealth. Wealth alſo is a good bleſſing of God to thoſe that are good, and proſperity takes that in; proſperity is a large word comprehending all good, health and wealth, honour and peace: what-ever we can imagin to render our lives comfortable comes under the name of Proſperity, They ſhall ſpend their days in proſperity, or in good; this reward they ſhall have from the Lord who ſerve him. Is not this good wages? The carnal rich man pleaſed himſelf and ſaid, (Luke 12. 19.) Soul, take thine eaſe thou haſt goods laid up for many years. The godly do not pleaſe themſelves, that they have goods laid up for many years in their own Stock, in their Lands, in their Houſes, in their Purſes, in their Shops, but they pleaſe themſelves that they have good laid up for many years, yea, for eternity, in the Promiſes of God. They who ſerve him, they ſhall ſpend their days in good, they ſhall have good for every day, and ſo finiſh their days with good; yet this is not all, They ſhall ſpend their days in proſperity, בטוב In bono, i. e. in omni jucunditate.

And their years in Pleaſures.] In the former words he promiſed days of good, here years of Pleaſure; as if he had ſaid, they ſhall enjoy their proſperity long, they ſhall not only have Days but Years filled up with it. One year contains many days, how many days of pleaſure are there in years of pleaſure! Our life is meaſured by days to ſhew the ſhortneſs of it; the longeſt meaſure of it is by years; They ſhall ſpend their years

In Pleaſures, or (as we may read it) in ſweetneſſes, in pleaſantneſſes, in deliciousneſſes, in beauties.

The word is uſed (2 Sam. 1. 23.) to ſhew the lovelineſs of Jonathan and Saul, they were a pleaſant pair, a couple of goodly perſons. They ſhall ſpend their days in pleaſantneſs, or in pleaſures.

ἐν εὐπρεπείαις, Sept. in delectationibus. Pag.

Further, Take notice, the word is plural; he doth not ſay, they ſhall ſpend their days in pleaſure, but in pleaſures. implying all ſorts and varieties of pleaſure; in Songs, ſaith one; in Marriage Songs, ſaith a ſecond; in graceful Beauties, ſaith a third; and, which may be all or any of theſe; in delights, ſaith a fourth.

But here are two Queſtions that I muſt give anſwer to, for the clearing of this Scripture.

Firſt, The Queſtion may be, Is this a mercy much to be reckoned upon, to ſpend our years in pleaſure? ſaith not the Apoſtle (1 Tim. 5. 6.) The widow that lives in pleaſure is dead while ſhe lives? If it be a dead life to live in pleaſure, how then is it here promiſed as a favour, as a mercy, to them that obey and ſerve God, that they ſhall ſpend their years in pleaſures?

I anſwer by diſtinguiſhing of pleaſure; pleaſures are of two ſorts. Firſt, lawful and honeſt delights; of ſuch we read (Gen. 49. 20.) where dying Jacob bleſſing of Aſher ſaith, He ſhall yield royal dainties, or pleaſures for a King; meaning, he ſhall give, not only honeſt, but honourable pleaſures and contentments, ſuch as befit Kings. Secondly, There are unlawful and diſhoneſt pleaſures, which the Apoſtle calleth (Heb. 11. 25.) the pleaſures of ſin for a ſeaſon. A wo will be their portion who live in ſuch pleaſures. Go to now ye rich men, weep and howl (ſaith the Apoſtle James, Chap. 5. 1.) why ſo? Among other Reaſons this is given for one (Verſ 5.) Ye have lived in pleaſure, wantonizing, and gluttonizing, and Epicurizing: in ſuch baſe pleaſures you have lived, therefore wo to you. To live in ſinful or unlawful pleaſures is death and miſery, or a life worſe then death; but to live a life of lawful and honeſt pleaſure is a mercy, the mercy here promiſed, and the very life of our lives.

Dabit delicias regis. Heb. Mont.

Secondly, We may diſtinguiſh of pleaſures thus; they are either, firſt, Corporal pleaſures, pleaſures of the body, of which we read (Job 21. 25.) One dieth in his full ſtrength, and another dieth in the bitterneſs of his Soul, and never eateth in pleaſure; That is, he hath had no contentment in the body, or no bodily contentment, but was always ſickly, crazy, pining, languiſhing, and ill at eaſe, his life was tedious, even a burden to him, for he could never eat in pleaſure, ſcarce taſt what he did eat. Secondly, There are Spiritual pleaſures (Pſal. 36. 8.) They ſhall drink of the Rivers of thy pleaſures. David ſpeaks there of Saints, what enjoyments and Joys they have in the Church or Houſe of, God, attending upon him in holy Ordinances. Thirdly, There are eternal pleaſures (Pſal. 16. 11.) In thy preſence is fulneſs of joy, and at thy right hand are pleaſures for evermore. Such are all the joys of Heaven, or of a glorified ſtate. Now when Elihu ſaith, they ſhall ſpend their years in pleaſures, we are not to take it meerly for honeſt corporal pleaſures, for ſuch a life, at beſt, is but the life of a Beaſt; but we are to take theſe corporal pleaſures, either as heightned by better, that is, as ſpiritualiz'd by the ſenſe of the love of God, and mixed with ſpiritual pleaſures; or, for thoſe purely ſpiritual pleaſures which the Soul finds in communion with God alone (having nothing to do, or no intercourſe with creatures) drinking at the River of his pleaſures in Prayer, in Hearing, in Meditation, in breaking Bread, in Singing. Now to ſpend our days, either in theſe purely ſpiritual pleaſures, taking in alſo thoſe corporal pleaſures ſo qualified as before, and duly circumſtantiated, is a high, a very high bleſſing and mercy indeed. So then, here is nothing to feed the fancy of Epicures, here is no promiſe of ſenſual, though of ſenſitive pleaſures, theſe only are pleaſures fit for the Servants of God, theſe pleaſures only become Saints; as for thoſe other pleaſures, Chriſt ſaith of them in the Parable of the Sower (Luke 8. 14.) They choak the Word of God; and God will not feed his people with ſuch pleaſures, as a reward of ſerving him, as ſhall choak the Word, and unfit them for his ſervice. No, we are to watch againſt, and deny our ſelves ſuch pleaſures, as our Lord Jeſus caution'd his Diſciples (Luke 21. 34.) Take heed, leaſt at any time your hearts be overcharged with ſurfetting, drunkenneſs, and the cares of this life, and ſo that day come upon you unawares. As if he had ſaid, Take heed of carnal pleaſures, as much as of worldly cares, for as they are alike deſtructive to the preſent purity of the Soul, ſo they alike indanger our future peace, and lay us open to the ſurprize of Judgment. And as ſuch pleaſures ruin the ſtate of the Soul, ſo of the body too, with which they have neareſt cognation. Hence that of Solomon (Prov. 21. 17.) He that loveth pleaſure ſhall be a poor man. There, pleaſure is oppoſed to work or labour: He that is all for taking his pleaſure, and will not follow his Calling, this man comes quickly to poverty, and will die a Beggar. Suppoſe the pleaſure be lawful, yet if he loves pleaſure, and is at his pleaſure when he ſhould be at his labour, he will ſoon be reduced to a morſel of bread, and become a poor man: But he that loveth unlawful pleaſures, ſhall not only be a poor man, but will prove a wicked man. Thou that art given to pleaſures (Iſa. 47. 8.) is the Character of Babylon. God gives good men pleaſure, but 'tis the mark of an evil man to be given to pleaſure. They that love pleaſure, are lovers of pleaſure more then lovers of God (2 Tim. 3. 4.) and ſuch muſt needs be the worſt of men.

And therefore we are not to underſtand this Text of any ſinful pleaſure, nor of a life meerly led in lawful pleaſure, that a man ſhould be all upon his pleaſure, and lay aſide his Calling; Elihu doth not oppoſe pleaſure to work, labour or buſineſs, but to trouble, ſorrow, and affliction. They that obey and ſerve the Lord ſhall ſpend their years in pleaſures, in honeſt pleaſures, that is, they ſhall live, not only contentedly, but joyfully. The Lord alloweth us to take any honeſt pleaſure while we live, but not to live in pleaſure; he alloweth us to take our delights, but our delights muſt not take us.

There is yet another Query, for it may be ſaid, Is this a truth, that they who obey and ſerve the Lord ſhall ſpend their days in proſperity, and their years in pleaſures? I anſwer to that,

Firſt, If we take it abſolutely and univerſally, we cannot affirm that every one who ſerveth and obeyeth God, ſhall always have pleaſure, that is, outward comforts and contentments in this world; many of the Lords faithful ſervants have lived in pain and ſorrow; ſo that if (as David ſpake in this caſe, Pſal. 73. 5.) we ſhould ſpeak thus, we ſhould offend againſt the generation of his ſervants. Some flouriſh in grace, who wither in worldly comforts. There is no certain connexion between theſe two, Grace and outward peace or pleaſure; the providences of God vary in this point as himſelf pleaſeth. Neither is it true, that the true ſervants of God do uninterruptedly or always injoy inward pleaſures, comforts and contentments; for he that feareth the Lord, and obeyeth the voice of his ſervants, may walk in darkneſs, and trouble of ſpirit, and ſee no light, (Iſa. 50. 10.) We are therefore to underſtand this Scripture as others of like nature, of that which is commonly done, or of that which we may upon good ground expect from God, and in faith wait for, that if we ſerve and obey him, he will make our lives comfortable to us. I anſwer,

Secondly, This promiſe, or promiſes of a like nature were fitted to the time wherein Elihu ſpake; he ſpake of the times long before Chriſts appearing in the fleſh, when the Lord did, as it were, lead on his people very much by promiſes, of temporal and outward proſperity, of which the Scripture is more ſparing in the new Teſtament, where we are come to the fulneſs of Chriſt, and the riches of the grace of God to us in him; of which there is but little (comparatively) ſpoken in the old Teſtament: And therefore under that darker diſpenſation of ſpirituals, the Lord ſaw it good to incourage that people to obedience by a multitude of very particular outward promiſes, as we may read (Deut. 28.) He would bleſs their basket and their ſtore, the fruit of the field, &c. Theſe promiſes were ſuted to the ſtate of that under-age people, who were led on and inticed by viſible and ſenſible bleſſings, as we do children with toyes and gaudies; and indeed all viſible injoyments are but ſuch in compariſon of ſpirituals. Believers under the Goſpel being come to a higher ſtate, to fuller attainments, the promiſes made to them run not much in that channel; yet it cannot be denied, that the Goſpel alſo holds out promiſes for temporals, as well as the Law; and this latter diſpenſation of the Covenant as well as the former, hath provided ſufficiently for our outward comforts.

Thirdly, For anſwer, let us conſider the drift of the Spirit of God in this promiſe of pleaſure. Job had often complained of his own ſorrowful condition, and concluded himſelf a man of ſorrow for all the remainder of his days: though his faith was ſtrong for the reſurrection of his body after death, yet he had little, if any faith at all, that he ſhould be raiſed out of that miſerable eſtate wherein he was in this life. He alſo had ſpoken ſomewhat raſhly and amiſs concerning the dealings of God with his ſervants in general, as if nothing but trouble and ſorrow, did attend them, and that the wicked went away with all the ſweet and good of this world. Now Elihu to take him off from theſe ſad, and almoſt deſpairing thoughts, as to the return of his own comforts, and to rectifie his judgment in the general point, as to the dealings of God with others; he aſſureth Job, that if righteous men being bound in fetters, &c. Hear and obey, God will break thoſe bonds, and cut the cords of their affliction, and they ſhall ſpend (the remainder of) their days in proſperity, and (the reſt of) their years in pleaſures. So that Elihu in holding out this promiſe to Job, would rather clear his judgment from an error concerning the laſtingneſs or continuance of his pains and ſorrows, than heat his affections in the expectation of joys and pleaſures in this world.

Fourthly, I anſwer, Though the people of God have not always days of ſuch outward proſperity, nor years of ſuch ſenſitive pleaſures, yet they have that which is better, and if they have no pleaſures, they do not want them. The Apoſtle could ſay (*Phil.*4.11.) I have learned in what ſtate ſoever I am, therewith to be content. What is pleaſure if content be not? We may have outward pleaſures, yet no content, but he that hath content within, cannot miſs of pleaſure. A man may have riches, but no contentment, but he that hath contentment is very rich, (1 Tim. 6. 6.) Godlineſs with contentment is great gain, and great gain is proſperity: this great gain, this heart-pleaſure, or ſoul-reſt, contentment, is the aſſured portion of thoſe who obey and ſerve the Lord, what ever their outward portion be in this world. And he may be ſaid to ſpend his days in good, and his years in pleaſure, who hath theſe pure gains of gracious contentment, reſting the Soul in God in all conditions. The life of man (that is, the comfort of his life) doth not conſiſt in the abundance of that which he poſſeſſeth, (Luke 12.15.) or in ſenſe-pleaſures; but in that ſweet compoſure and ſedateneſs of his Soul, reſting by faith in the promiſes of God, or rather in the God of the promiſes, and ſo ſucking ſweetneſs from them.

Laſtly, As though a ſervant of God ſhould be exerciſed with ſorrows all the days of his life, yet he cannot be ſaid to ſpend his days in ſorrow, becauſe he meets with many refreſhing intervals and ſhines of favour from the face of God in the midſt of thoſe clouds; ſo he may be ſaid to ſpend his days in pleaſure, becauſe at leaſt, when his days here are ſpent, he conſummates his days (which is one ſignification of the word) by an intrance into everlaſting pleaſures.

So much for the anſwer of theſe queſtions, concerning this promiſe, They ſhall ſpend their days in proſperity, and their years in pleaſure.

From the promiſe it ſelf, Note; Firſt, Obedience to God is profitable to man.

God hath no profit by our Obedience, but we have. God doth not call us to ſerve him in his work, as we call ſervants to do our work, to get his living by us, or better himſelf; no, the Lord calls us to ſerve him and obey him, for our own good. They conſult their own good beſt, who do moſt good. I may ſay theſe three things of thoſe who do good (and what is ſerving God, but doing of good? Or what is doing good but ſerving God?) Firſt, they ſhall receive true good; Secondly, they ſhall for ever hold the beſt good, the chief good, they ſhall not only ſpend their days and years in good, but when their days and years are ſpent, they ſhall have good, and a greater good than any they had, in ſpending the days and years of this life; they ſhall have good in death, they ſhall come to a fuller injoyment of God, the chief Good, when they have left and let fall the poſſeſſion of all earthly goods. Thirdly, they that do good ſhall find all things working together for their good; if they have a loſs, they ſhall receive good by it; if they bear a Croſs, that ſhall bear good. Outward troubles cannot diſturb, much leſs pollute our ſpiritual good; for, All things work together for good to them that love God, who are the called according to his purpoſe (Rom. 8.28.) Surely then the ſervice of God is a gainful ſervice, a profitable ſervice; though the work may be hard, and the way painful, yet the wages will be ſweet, and the end pleaſant. The contemplation of this put David upon putting that queſtion (Pſal. 34. 12, 13.) What man is he that deſireth life, and loveth many days, that he may ſee good (That is, that he may enjoy good) keep thy tongue from evil, and thy mouth, that it ſpeak no guile; depart from evil, and do good. The Pſalmiſt makes Proclamation, What man is he that would have good? Let him do good, let him obey and ſerve God, and he ſhall have good.

Again, Conſider the Promiſe in relation to the Perſons deſcribed, (Verſ. 8, 9, 10.) They were bound in Fetters, and holden in Cords of affliction: Now ſaith Elihu here, they ſhall ſpend their days in proſperity, and their years in pleaſures.

Hence Note; There is no condition ſo low and forlorn, but the Lord is able to bring us out of it, and into the enjoyments of fulleſt comforts;

He can change our Iron Fetters, and Cords, into Rings of Gold, and Bracelets; he can Tranſlate our days of trouble, and our years of pain, into days of proſperity, and years of pleaſure; it was ſo with Job in the iſſue, and he was the man that Elihu here intended. Job was long bound in fetters, and holden in the cords of affliction, yet as Elihu told him he ſhould, ſo he did afterwards, ſpend his days in proſperity, and his years in pleaſure; the Lord doubled his Cattel to him, his friends fill'd his Coffers, and his Cabinets, Every man gave him a piece of mony, and every one an Ear-ring of Gold; his children alſo were the ſame for number, his daughters the faireſt in the Land; himſelf alſo lived in the fulneſs of this outward Proſperity, till he was full of days, and he fed upon the delicious fruits of this Promiſe all his after-days. Manaſſeh having run a courſe of unparallel'd wickedneſs, was at laſt taken by the Captains of the hoſt of the King of Aſſyria, among the Thorns, and they bound him with fetters, and carryed him to Babylon (2 Chron.33.11.) yet when in his affliction he beſought the Lord his God, and humbled himſelf greatly before the God of his Fathers, he was intreated of him, and brought again to Jeruſalem, where he ſpent his days in proſperity, and his years in pleaſure. If we turn to the Lord in affliction, the Lord is ready to turn away our affliction, or (as the Church prayed in the half-turn of her affliction, *Pſal.*126.4.) to turn our captivity, as the ſtreams in the South; That is, to make both a moſt admirable and a moſt comfortable turn of our condition. Streams in the hot Southern Countries are rare; the Rain of thoſe Lands uſually is duſt. Streams in the South are alſo very welcome: How glad are they of a cooling Shower from a Cloud, who daily feel, and are fainted with the ſcorching Beams of the Sun! Such a turn ſhall they have (ſaith Elihu) who being holden in the cords of affliction, turn from iniquity, obey and ſerve the Lord.

Thirdly, From the matter of the Promiſe,

Note; A comfortable paſſage through this life, is a very great mercy, as well as the hope of happineſs for ever in the other life.

'Tis proſperity and pleaſure in this world, though not meer worldly proſperity and pleaſure, which is here promiſed; and we are not to ſlight any thing that comes by promiſe, yea, we ſhould highly eſteem thoſe things, which, conſidered in themſelves, are little worth, as they come to us through the Promiſe. We may quickly over-rate and over-reckon outward things in themſelves, and we ever do ſo, if we rate or reckon them any better than vanity; but as they are promiſed and beſtowed in a way of favour from God, and as they are a part of the purchaſe of Chriſt, and handed to us by him (ſo are even outward things to believers) thus they are very valuable. Upon theſe terms to live and ſpend our days in good, and our years in honeſt lawful pleaſures, is a great mercy.

From the whole take two Corollaries.

Firſt, How blaſphemous then is their Opinion, who ſay it is a vain thing to ſerve the Lord, or, that there is no profit in calling upon him! which blaſphemy was refuted *Ch.*21.14.

Secondly, Would we have a good end of, or out-gate from our afflictions, then let us hear and obey. Thus much of the firſt caſe, what the iſſue of their afflictions ſhall be, who obey: The Second iſſue upon the contrary caſe, followeth in the 12. Verſe.

Verſ. 12. But if they obey not, they ſhall periſh by the Sword, and die without knowledg.

Here contraries are ſet one over againſt another, for their fuller illuſtration. If they obey not; that is, if thoſe righteous men ſpoken of before (Verſ. 7.) obey not. What it is not to obey, is clear by what I ſaid was to obey, in opening the former verſe. I ſhall only take notice, that in this latter part it is not ſaid, If they obey not, and ſerve him not, but only, if they obey not; and I conceive, Elihu ſaith no more, or proceeds no further, becauſe they who deny obedience, will certainly deny ſervice; therefore he ſtops at that.

If they obey not.] They who are good in their ſtate, may often fail in doing that which is good; for of thoſe this Text yet ſpeaks, and is generally interpreted. The Hypocrite in heart is ſpoken of in the next verſe, but here Elihu is ſpeaking of the righteous, and becauſe he is ſo, therefore by this diſobedience cannot be meant an obſtinate rebellion, but a ſloth or careleſneſs in attending to the Call of God, for the amendment of ſome evil in their lives. If they obey not:

> Hence Note; The calls and commands of God are not always obeyed, no not by good men, not by the righteous.

The call and command of God is not at all obeyed by the wicked, and it is not always obeyed by the righteous. The righteous ſometimes hear the word, but do not anſwer it, and ſometimes they feel the rod, and do not attend it; they cry out of the ſmart of the rod, and of the ſores which the laſhes of the rod have made upon them, they weep over, or becauſe of their ſores, yet they do not preſently give glory to God by obeying him, and leaving their ſins, I mean as to that ſpecial point of duty in which God would have them obey him, and as to thoſe ſpecial ſins which God by that affliction calls upon them to leave. Many good men do not preſently underſtand the purpoſe of God in this or that affliction; and while it is ſo with them, they muſt needs fail in anſwerableneſs to it. I know every godly man hath a general bent to obey God and ſerve him. It is not with the godly in their afflictions as with the wicked under theirs, of whom the Prophet ſpeaks, (Iſa. 9. 13.) They did not turn to him that ſmote them; yet even ſuch Scriptures are in a degree applicable to many of the people of God, they do not always turn to him that ſmiteth them; when they are exerciſed with variety of calamities, they mind not the Lord as they ought. And hence it is (I ſay) that though the righteous have a general bent to obedience, yet they ſometimes come ſhort of that obedience which a ſpecial affliction or correction calleth them to; yea, they may be ſo ſhort in anſwering it, that the Lord may proceed to lay heavier and greater afflictions upon them, even to the taking of them out of the world, as it followeth in this Verſe, If they obey not,

They ſhall periſh by the Sword.

De carcere educentur ad occiſionem gladii. Aquin. Per gladium tranſire dicitur qui gladio occiditur, Druſ.

Before they were bound in fetters and held in cords, but now the ſword ſhall overtake them, and they ſhall periſh or be taken away by the ſword: The Hebrew is, they ſhall paſs away by the ſword, That is, they ſhall die. Man is ſaid to paſs away by the ſword, when the ſword doth not paſs by him, but ſmites and kills him, which is a temporal periſhing. It is ſaid (Iſa. 57. 1.) The righteous periſh, &c. As the righteous periſh by a natural death, ſo they may periſh by a violent death, and poſſibly that may fall upon them when they attend not the providential diſpenſations of God.

They ſhall periſh by the ſword, or by the drawn weapon. The word notes any weapon that is drawn or caſt forth, hence ſome tranſlate it a Dart or Javelin, which is ſhot out of the hand; but it may alſo be applied to the Sword, which being drawn forth out of the ſheath is often ſent upon deadly meſſages, and may be numbered among miſſive weapons: Now when Elihu ſaith, they ſhall periſh by the ſword, we may take the word ſword properly or tropically. Properly two ways; Firſt, for the ſword of the Warrier; Secondly, for the ſword of the Magiſtrate, either juſtly puniſhing or grievouſly afflicting. Some good men have acknowledged in great trials and ſufferings under the hand of man, that God hath met with them for their neglect or non-attendance to more immediate afflictions under his own hand. Again, take the ſword tropically or improperly, and ſo any ſore affliction that greatly annoyeth, eſpecally if to death, is called a Sword in Scripture; They ſhall periſh by the Sword, (under one notion or other) if they do not obey.

> Hence Learn; God will not ſpare, no not his own People, if they do not obey him.

God is full of ſparing mercy, but the righteous may provoke him ſo, that he will not ſpare, no not them. Judgment begins often at the houſe of God (1 *Pet.*4.17.) And if Judgment begin at the houſe of God, what ſhall the end be of thoſe that obey not the Goſpel? This is a terrible word. The righteous may periſh by the ſword; how dreadfully then ſhall the unrighteous, the wicked, the ſcorners of godlineſs, periſh! If God will make his own people ſmart in his anger, when they provoke him, how will he ſpeak to his enemies in his wrath, and vex them in his ſore diſpleaſure (Pſal.2.5.)

Secondly, From the gradation of their troubles; Firſt, they were bound in fetters and holden in cords, but now here's a Sword, a devouring ſword, a killing deadly weapon.

> Hence Learn; They who give not glory to God in leſſer or in lighter afflictions draw greater upon themſelves;

They may come from a cord to a ſword, from being bound to be ſlain. God hath ſeveral ſorts of Inſtruments to chaſten his people with, and as the beſt of outward good things may be the portion of evil wicked men, ſo the worſt of outward evils may be the portion of good men; they may at any time, and ſometimes ſhall periſh by the Sword, and as it followes,

They ſhall die without knowledg.

בבליעת

The Sword is death, a deadly Sword; they ſhall die,

Without knowledg, or, as the Text may be Read, becauſe they were without knowledg.

ב

But is any righteous man without knowledg? That the Soul be without knowledg is not good, (ſaith Solomon, Prov. 19. 2.) How then can he be good whoſe Soul is without knowledg? And ſeeing we interpret this Text of the righteous, how can it be ſaid, they die without knowledg?

I anſwer, Knowledg may be taken in a more general ſenſe, and ſo no righteous man either lives or dies without knowledg? He neither lives nor dies without the knowledg of God in Jeſus Chriſt, whom to know is eternal life, (John 17.3.) and without the knowledg of whom, all (who are actually capable of ſuch knowledg) muſt die eternally; he neither lives nor dies without the knowledg of himſelf as a ſinner, and of Chriſt who ſaveth him from his ſins. Such ignorances are inconſiſtent with the ſtate of a godly man; he may do fooliſhly, but he is not a fool; he may be wanting in ſome kind of knowledg, but he doth not want knowledg; he cannot be without ſaving knowledg, though he may periſh (temporally) without knowledg. The firſt thing that God makes in the new creation is light, the light of knowledg, there he begins his work; therefore we cannot take knowledg generally, ſimply and abſolutely, in this Text; but as knowledg may be taken reſtrictively, for knowledg in or about this or that particular, ſo a good man may want knowledg, there may be ſomewhat which the Lord would acquaint the righteous with, and teach them by their fetters and afflictions, which they do not learn; and therefore they die without knowledg, or, becauſe they are without knowledg; yet that want of knowledg, together with all their other wants and ignorances, are pardoned to them.

Dei monita per caſtigationes ſcire & intelligere noluerunt. Druſ.

Further we may expound the words thus; They ſhall die without knowledg, that is, without the knowledg or conſideration of that ſpecial affliction or judgment which is coming upon them, they ſhall die unawares, not thinking, nor ſo much as dreaming of ſuch a judgment, or that ſuch a hand of God was ſo near them. According to this interpretation, Elihu intends either their inadvertency of that approaching ſcourge or calamity with which they are overtaken, or their not underſtanding the reaſon of it. Chriſt ſaith in the Goſpel (Luke 12.46.) The maſter of that ſervant (the evil ſervant) ſhall come in a day which he knows not of, and in a time when he looked not for him. Now, as the laſt Judgment, the great Judgment ſhall come upon the wicked in a time when they look not for it, ſo the Lord may bring a ſpecial particular Judgment upon ſome one or more of his own people, when they do not think of it, or never ſuſpected that they ſhould fall under it. Good men are ſometimes ſurprized; and ſo, they ſhall die without knowledg, is no more then this, they ſhall be taken unawares by a ſuddain unexpected judgment. Though every godly man hath a preparation for the general judgment, yet as to a particular one, he may be much unprepared.

Non eſt oratio affirmativa ſtultitiæ vel negativa ſcientiæ, ſed ſimpliciter negat advertentiam. Bold.

Laſtly, Some expound the words of more than inadvertency, or bare neſcience, even of folly, and ſome degree of affected ignorance, which poſſibly may prevail upon a righteous man in ſome caſes and for a time; but I rather adhere to the former interpretation, becauſe (as was ſhewed before) the whole context ſeems to intend a more ordinary caſe of a righteous man. So then, this Scripture holds out the ſad iſſues which the neglect of giving God the glory of his corrections and chaſtenings may bring upon the righteous.

Hence Note; Diſobedience, or neglect of duty, is dangerous, whereſoever it is found.

The Church of Corinth felt this; many of them died (in the ſenſe given) without knowledg, or not having a due ſpiritual knowledg of Chriſt in the holy ſupper, which the Apoſtle calls, their not diſcerning the Lords body, (1 Cor.11.29.) and preſently tells them (Verſ. 30.) For this cauſe many are weak and ſickly among you, and many ſleep; That is, are taken away by death. Any kind or degree of ſin is dangerous; not to obey a hint of providence, not to obey an intimation of the mind of God in an affliction, may be very dangerous; afflictions may end in deſtructions, and fetters in death, if the purpoſe of God in them be not attended and anſwered by us.

Secondly, Note; Not to obey when God calls and commands, is folly and ignorance.

Such do as if they had no knowledg at all what or how to do.

Laſtly in that he ſaith, they ſhall die without knowledg, we may learn this from it;

The ignorance and heedleſneſs of men undo them, and bring deſtruction upon them.

Many die becauſe they have no knowledg, others not heeding or minding what they know. Holy David confeſſed that in one point he was ignorant and fooliſh, even as a beaſt, (Pſal. 73.22.) and when good men act like beaſts, without a due improvement of reaſon and underſtanding, they may periſh (as to this temporal life) like beaſts, (Iſa. 5.13.) Therefore my people are gone into captivity, becauſe they have no knowledg. The Prophet (I conceive) is to be underſtood (as this Text) not that they had no knowledg at all, or were utterly ignorant, but they had no knowledg as to that ſpecial diſpenſation of God, how to make uſe of it or improve it, at leaſt they took no heed, no care to uſe or improve it; and (ſaith he) they therefore are gone into captivity, they are brought under bondage to their enemies, they are ſcattered, ruin'd, and (as to this world) quite loſt and undone. Wicked men are undone by acting againſt their knowledg; good men may be undone by acting below their knowledg, or by not acting according to what they know or ſhould have known and ſo (through their ignorance or heedleſneſs) they die without knowledg.

VERS. 13, 14.

But the hypocrites in heart heap up wrath, they cry not when he bindeth them.

They die in Youth, and their Life is among the unclean.

ELihu having put the caſe of the righteous in theſe two conditional propoſitions laſt opened, as ſomewhat doubtful, what at leaſt ſome of them may do, as to a right improvement of outward afflictions; he proceeds in theſe two verſes to ſhew the caſe of the wicked wholly deſperate, in their affliction. There is an If put upon the righteous, but he is concluſive upon the hypocrite; to be ſure he will neither hear nor obey, neither ſubmit nor conform to the voice of the rod.

So that in theſe words he ſets forth the common yea conſtant iſſue of the hand of God upon hypocrites in heart. Poſſibly good men, righteous men may not always anſwer the expectation of God, when affliction is upon them; but as for hypocrites, they (always) heap up wrath. And in this we may conceive Elihu hath a reſpect to Job; For though he did not conclude him to be an hypocrite in heart, yet he put it home upon him to conſider the matter, whether he himſelf had not, at leaſt, acted and carried it like an hypocrite in heart, under the afflicting hand of God, foraſmuch as he was no more humbled and ſubdued under it. And indeed Elihu turns every ſtone, and tryeth every way, to bring down the ſpirit of Job. And therefore as he had ſhewed, what the uſual effects of the hand of God upon the righteous are, ſo he tells him how it is with the wicked in that caſe, thereby to put him upon the trial, whether he had not reaſon to ſuſpect himſelf to be an hypocrite, becauſe his carriage, was ſo like theirs.

Verſ. 13. But the hypocrites in heart, &c.

חנפי לב

That adverſative particle ſhews that he is dealing upon another ſubject: hypocrites in heart are far from righteouſneſs. I have diſcourſed ſomewhat largely concerning the hypocrite in Chap. 34. Verſ. 30. upon theſe words, That the hypocrite reign not, leſt the people be ſnared; Therefore I intend not here to revive that ſubject, but ſhall only a little open the additional term or amplification which is here put upon the hypocrite. Elihu doth not ſay barely, hypocrites heap up wrath, but, The hypocrites in heart heap up wrath; as implying ſome ſpecial Character and brand of hypocriſie upon the perſons here aimed at. An hypocrite in heart is no more but this, nor is it any thing leſs than an hearty hypocrite; he is one that is not to the halves, but wholly hypocritical; he that is but half with God (ſuch is the hypocrite) is wholly profane, wholly wicked. The ſame word which ſignifyeth an hypocrite ſignifyeth a profane perſon, and ſo we put it in the margin of this Text, The hypocrite, or the profane in heart. This expreſſion is very parallel with that of the Apoſtle Paul (Col. 1.21.) Ye that were ſometimes alienated and enemies in your mind, by wicked works. yet now hath he reconciled. He doth not only call natural men enemies to God, as indeed they all are, (the wiſdom of the fleſh is enmity againſt God) But he calls them enemies in their minds, that is, ſuch as have a mind to be enemies, or ſuch as have a good will to do evil. So here, an hypocrite in heart is a man heartily hypocritical; whoſoever is an hypocrite is an hypocrite in heart; Hypocriſie is that which lieth at the bottom, it is an heart-ſin: though hypocriſie act and vent it ſelf at the tongue, and by the hand, yet all hypocriſie lieth at the heart; nevertheleſs, every hypocrite is not (ſtrictly taken) an hypocrite in heart. The hypocrite in heart is oppoſed to the upright in heart, (Pſal. 92.11.) The hypocrite in heart hath a heart as full of hypocriſie, as the upright in heart would have hearts full of uprightneſs. Yet further to characterize the hypocrite in heart,

Take theſe three conſiderations to clear it;

Data opera impius eſt.

Firſt, an hypocrite in heart is one who doth evil, not out of miſtake, but out of deſign; not becauſe he cannot do otherwiſe, but becauſe he will not, and is reſolved on it; ſuch a ſinful piece or ſuch a piece of ſinfulneſs is the hypocrite in heart; he ſins as he ſhould love and ſerve and obey God, with all his heart.

Secondly, as this hypocrite doth evil upon deſign, ſo alſo he doth good with a wicked mind. It is poſſible for a man to do good unſincerely, or not to be ſincere in the doing of it, and yet not to do it with a wicked mind and purpoſe, or with a baſe deſign. There are many who do good, who come to duty, whether in family or congregation, who mind not what they do, nor have any love to it, or zeal for it; here is hypocritical attendance, in that they ſet not themſelves to meet with God or find God in the duty; yet poſſibly ſuch come not with a wicked purpoſe, nor with a plot in their heads in doing theſe duties, that's proper to the hypocrite in heart. Thus we may underſtand that of Solomon, lately opened upon another occaſion, (Prov. 21. 27.) The ſacrifice of the wicked is an abomination to the Lord; how much more when he bringeth it with a wicked mind! A man may be wicked as to his ſtate, yet not do a thing with a wicked mind, not bring a ſacrifice (which includeth all holy ſervices) with an unholy purpoſe: but the hypocrite in heart when-ever he doth any good, hath a plot in it; as he always ſerves God with a reſerve, he hath ſomewhat that he doth with-hold, he cometh by halves, ſo he always ſerves God with a deſign. He may make a fair ſhew, and a great noiſe in profeſſion, but ever he hath ſome end of his own in it. Jehu ſaid, Come ſee my zeal for God. He was about a good work, the deſtroying of Ahabs Houſe, and Baals Prieſts, this he called zeal for the Lord; but he did all this with a wicked mind; for the great thing upon his heart was to get into the Throne, to be a King, he made uſe of all thoſe ſpecious acts of zeal only as a ſtirrup to raiſe himſelf into the ſaddle, the matter he aimed at was to eſtabliſh the Kingdom of Iſrael to himſelf and his poſterity. That's a ſecond thing; as the hypocrite doth evil purpoſely, ſo when he doth good he hath a purpoſe, a plot in it, more than is good; he doth it not, either for the honour of God, or for the injoyment of God, which are the beſt ends of every good action, and without a pure eye, without which no action, how good ſoever in it ſelf, is good to, or turns to the good of the actor.

Thirdly, The hypocrite in heart, I conceive, is ſuch a one as knows himſelf to be an hypocrite. There are many hypocrites, who little think that they are hypocrites, yea, they may think themſelves very upright and honeſt in what they do; ignorant deluded ſouls, underſtand not their own caſe. Laodicea was wretched and miſerable, theſe are falſe and hypocritical, but know it not. As ſome judg, or rather miſ-judg themſelves hypocrites, who are upright in the main with God, and honeſt at heart, (How frequent are ſuch complaints, and ſelf-wronging accuſations?) So many are hypocrites, or rotten at heart, who know it not. The heart is deceitful above all things, (ſaith the Prophet Jer. 17. 9.) and deſperately wicked, who can know it? And among all men, common hypocrites know leaſt of their own hearts. But the hypocrites in heart know their hearts are rotten and falſe, to what they profeſs. The politick hypocrite knoweth that all he doth is but in ſhew, and that he doth but act a part in Religion, as a Player upon the Stage, when he is moſt religious; he doth but take a colour, or die, or paint himſelf with Religion, (which is the ſignification of the word here uſed in the Hebrew) but is not religious, he doth but put a fair gloſs, or diſguiſe upon himſelf, that he may appear what he is not, or what he knows himſelf not to be; He knoweth in himſelf that he is naught, while he would be known by and to others as good. The Apoſtle ſpeaking of the grievous ſufferings of ſome primitive Chriſtians, ſaith (Heb. 10. 34.) They took joyfully the ſpoyling of their goods, knowing in themſelves that they have a better and a more induring ſubſtance; That is, they knew they were in a preſent gracious ſtate, and that there remained for them an eternal happy ſtate. Thus alſo an hypocrite in heart, is one that knoweth in himſelf, or in his heart, that he doth but pretend to be good, and that whatſoever good he doth, it is only in pretence, and is therefore (as the Apoſtle ſpeaks of the Heretick, Tit. 3. 11.) condemned of himſelf, while he acquits or commends himſelf never ſo well to others. Thus it appears how bad, how baſe the hypocrite in heart is in his beſt appearances, and how much he excels and bears away the Bell for baſeneſs and badneſs, I may ſay, for madneſs too, from all common hypocrites. Now as they exceed in ſin, ſo they ſhall in miſery, the next words aſſure us of that; But the hypocrites in heart

Induunt pallium pietatis & colorem ſanctitatis; hæc enim eſt proprietas radicis חנף, ſc. inficere rem alieno colore, vel obnubere & velare alieno pallio.

Heap up wrath.] Elihu having deſcribed the perſons that he dealeth with, or about, he alſo ſets forth both their woful and ſinful condition: And he doth it three ways:

Firſt, By what they do; They heap up wrath. For a man to be labouring continually only to make heaps of wrath for himſelf, in what a woful condition is that man!

Secondly, He ſhews their bad, both ſinful and woful condition, by what they will not do; that we have at the latter end of the 13. verſe, They cry not when he bindeth them. They heap up wrath, that they do: They cry not when he bindeth them; That they do not.

Thirdly, He ſets forth their woful condition by that which is an inevitable conſequent and fruit of ſuch doing, and not doing, the evil which they ſuffer; that we have (Verſ. 14.) They die in youth, and their life is among the unclean. Theſe are the parts of the woful condition of hypocrites in heart. I ſhall give a touch upon each of them.

First, Conſider what they are doing: If you would know their trade, 'tis this; They are heaping up wrath; they add wrath to wrath, till they make a mighty maſs or heap of it. There is a difference among ſome interpreters what wrath is here intended. They heap up wrath.

Firſt, Some conceive that Elihu meaneth their own wrath. Hypocrites in heart heap up wrath, that is, when God doth at any time bind them in fetters, and holdeth them in the cords of affliction, as he ſpake in the former context, theſe hypocrites in heart, what do they? Do they obey? Do they turn from iniquity? Do they amend their hearts or lives? No; They heap up wrath, they grow angry, they vex and rage inſtead of repenting; that's all theſe hypocrites do; when the Lord hath bound them in fetters, and holds them in the cords of affliction, they are all in a flame, they are mad with rage and fury. Some both of the Ancients and Moderns, inſiſt upon this opinion, and it is a very great truth, that when the hypocrite in heart is under the hand of God, when God hath him faſt in his fetters, his wrath doth boil, his fury comes up in his face, as it is ſaid (Ezek. 38. 18.) concerning the wrath of God towards his enemies: this fully anſwers that aſſertion of Eliphaz, (Job 5. 2.) Wrath killeth the fooliſh man. What wrath? His own wrath; he kills himſelf with vexing and fretting. The hypocrite in heart is a wrathful man, when things go not right with him. Some have ſo expounded that (Eph. 2. 3.) Ye were by nature children of wrath, even as others. Children of wrath, that is, wrathful children; we are full of wrath, full of anger by nature. Though I do not take that to be the ſenſe of the Apoſtle; but that by Children of wrath, he means all men as born under the wrath of God, nor do I conceive this the proper meaning here, though not unuſeful. They heap up wrath; That is, they grow angry, vexed, and troubled; But Aliqui, ponunt iram, intelligunt, excandeſcunt in Deum. Merc.

Secondly, Rather the wrath heaped up, is the wrath of God, which is the moſt dreadful thing in the world; and ſo theſe words may be expounded by thoſe of the Apoſtle to an impenitent ſinner (Rom. 2. 4, 5.) Deſpiſeſt thou the riches of his goodneſs, and forbearance, and long-ſuffering, not knowing that the goodneſs of God leadeth thee to repentance: But after thy hardneſs and impenitent heart treaſureſt up unto thy ſelf wrath againſt the day of wrath, and revelation of the righteous judgment of God. To heap up wrath, and, to treaſure up wrath, are the ſame. The abuſers of the patience and long-ſuffering of God, are treaſuring up wrath againſt themſelves from day to day; and ſo do the hypocrites in heart, They heap up wrath.

Hence Note, Firſt, The wicked or hypocrites in heart, grow more wicked while the hand of God, his afflicting hand, is upon them.

The more they are under the rod, the more they rebel. I ground it upon this; If they did not heap up ſin, they ſhould not heap up wrath; were they not more vile and wicked under their affliction, there would not be more anger againſt them. It was ſaid of thoſe that would have brought in the captives (which was a very oppreſſing purpoſe, 2 Chro. 28. 13.) ye ſhall not; for Whereas we have offended againſt the Lord already, ye intend to add more to our ſins and to our treſpaſs. Then preſently followeth, For our treſpaſs is great, and there is fierce wrath againſt Iſrael. As if it had been ſaid, If ye do this thing ye will increaſe the wrath of God (which is very fierce already) and blow it up into a conſuming flame. While men grow more and more wicked and vile, God groweth (as to the manifeſtations of wrath) more wrathful. When we hear of the increaſe of wrath, we may be ſure there hath been a proportionable increaſe of ſin. It is ſaid of Ahaz, who was a hypocrite in heart, a very prophane perſon, (2 Chron. 28. 22.) that in the time of his diſtreſs he treſpaſſed yet more againſt the Lord, and treſpaſſing more againſt the Lord, he heaped up more of the Lords wrath againſt himſelf: For 'tis added, (Verſ. 23.) He ſacrificed to the gods of Damaſcus which ſmote him; he got nothing but blows, for his pains, or impious piety in ſerving them: And he ſaid, becauſe the gods of the Kings of Syria help them, therefore will I ſacrifice to them, that they may help me. But what got he by this increaſe of his ſin? Surely nothing, but an increaſe of wrath; for, it followeth in the ſame verſe, They were the ruin of him and of all Iſrael. God makes new rods, when men make new ſins; and he multiplyeth ſwords, while men multiply tranſgreſſions. The more men draw iniquity with cords of vanity, the more they draw miſery upon themſelves, and are held the faſter in the cords of affliction.

Secondly, When 'tis ſaid, The hypocrites in heart heap up wrath. We know hypocrites are cunning gameſters, they hope to ſin ſo cloſely and artificially, that no hurt ſhall ever come to them by it, yet The hypocrites in heart heap up wrath.

Hence Note; The wiles and policies of hypocrites will avail them nothing;

They ſhall not avoid wrath, do what they can; the Lord will find them out. The Apoſtle ſaith (Gal. 6 7.) God is not mocked; for whatſoever a man ſoweth, that ſhall he alſo reap; for he that ſoweth to his fleſh, ſhall of the fleſh reap corruption; but he that ſoweth to the Spirit, ſhall of the Spirit reap life everlaſting. Let hypocrites in heart ſow as cunningly as they can, though they ſeem to ſow only good ſeed, yet they ſhall reap bad fruit, becauſe they ſowed with a bad heart. Hypocrites may deceive men, and heap up their favours to themſelves, but they cannot deceive God, who knows their hearts, and will therefore conſume them in his wrath, which they have heaped up to themſelves.

Thirdly, Elihu puts it upon hypocrites in heart to be at this work of heaping up wrath. All impenitent ſinners do it, but he puts it upon them eſpecially. All ſinners, open profeſſed ſinners, that ſin and hide it not, that throw up even the very name and profeſſion of Religion, theſe all heap up wrath; yet they heap up moſt, and are here ſpoken of, as the only heapers up of wrath, who are hypocrites in heart.

Hence Note; God is extreamly angry with hypocrites, or the wrath of God doth burn extreamly hot againſt hypocrites;

He heats the Furnace of his wrath ſeven times hotter for hypocrites in heart, than for ordinary ſinners. The Lord (Iſa. 10. 5.) ſpeaking of the Aſſyrian ſaith, The ſtaff in their hand is mine indignation: I will ſend him againſt an hypocritical Nation, and againſt the people of my wrath will I give him a charge, to take the ſpoil, and to take the prey, and to tread them down, like the mire in the ſtreets. The Lord put a ſtaff in the hand of that great King of Aſſyria, and he called it his indignation; it was the Lords indignation which was a ſtaff in the Aſſyrians hand. But againſt whom will he ſend it? That Text anſwers againſt an hypocritical Nation; Who are they? The people of his wrath. God hath wrath for all ſinners, but the generation of hypocrites are the people of his wrath beyond all other people. None abuſe God like hypocrites: For, firſt, hypocrites carry it towards God, as if he were like the Idols of the Heathen, that have eyes and ſee not, ears, and hear not, hands, and handle not; feet, and cannot walk: That is, they carry it towards God as if he were but an Idol, ſatisfied with meer outward ſhews and ſervices. An Idol finds no fault, nor troubles any for their hypocriſie and falſeheartedneſs: All that is required in the Idols ſervice, is but outſide and bodily exerciſe. Thus the hypocrites deal with God, as if he alſo would be ſatisfied and taken up with a little outſide ſervice; or as if ſacrifice would pleaſe him, when his word is diſobeyed, (1 Sam. 15. 23.) Hath the Lord as great delight in burnt offerings and Sacrifices, as in obeying the voice of the Lord? Saul had been very careful to bring home ſacrifices; He had not obeyed the command of God, yet hoped to put him off with a ſacrifice. But what were heards and flocks of cattle to be ſacrificed, when Saul rebelled againſt God? Nothing provokes God more then outward ſervices of worſhip, when they are not accompanied with inward, and univerſal ſubmiſſion to his will; for that's no better a ſacrifice, no purer worſhip, then a Heathen pays to his Idol-god. Hypocrites offer God only the blind, and the lame, (Mal. 1. 14.) that is, maimed and imperfect ſervices: there is imperfection in the ſervices of the beſt, but theirs are imperfect ſervices, ſo imperfect, blind and lame, that they are fit only for the blind, and the lame; ſo Idol-gods are called, (2 Sam. 5. 8.) And do not they heap the wrath of the true God, who ſerve him no better then falſe gods are ſerved, by their Idolatrous Devotioniſts!

Secondly, There muſt needs be a continual heaping up of wrath by Hypocrites; for, if not to ſet the heart right provokes God to wrath, (Pſal. 78. 8.) The Lord was exceedingly diſpleaſed with the Iſraelites, becauſe they ſet not their heart aright. Now if the Lord be ſo angry when the heart is not ſet aright, much more muſt it provoke the Lord, when men do purpoſely ſet their hearts wrong, when they do evil knowingly, adviſedly, when, as it were, they ſtudy to do evil. To do good only in ſhew, doth more diſpleaſe the Lord, then the doing of that which in ſhew is evil, or which is evil above-board, known to be ſo by all beholders. As Hypocrites often deceive men, ſo they attempt to deceive God himſelf. This cannot but heap up wrath, being it ſelf ſo great a heap of ſin. They who think God will be pleaſ'd with outward Services alone, or have no care to give him inward, are alike diſpleaſing to him. Therefore, among all ſorts of ſinners, the Lord declares his wrath, and thunders wo upon wo, in the Goſpel, againſt Hypocrites: They have heaped up wrath, and it ſhall be heaped upon them, They ſhall have their Portion in the Lake that burneth with fire and brimſtone. That's the firſt thing, what they do, They heap up wrath. When the hand of God is upon them, they are ſo far from coming forth humbly and penitentially to turn away his wrath, or to ſeek his face, that they provoke him more and more, and dreadfully inflame the reckoning againſt themſelves; They heap up wrath.

Secondly, Elihu tells us what the Hypocrite in heart do not;

They cry not when he bindeth them.

But is it a fault, or ſo great a fault, not to cry when God bindeth us? Are we commanded or bound to cry, when we are bound in fetters, and holden in cords of affliction? wherein lyeth this ſin? That will appear while I ſhew what crying is here intended.

אסר Vincire pro caſtigare, ſpecies pro genere. Licet hanc doctrinam in communi Elihu proponat, veriſimile tamen eſt Jobum dicendo pungere.

To cry, is, Firſt, to complain and make a noiſe; this is the cry of impatience. Secondly, to mourn and be ſorrowful; this is the cry of Repentance. Thirdly, to pray, to ſupplicate, yea, to pray mightily, to pray ſtrongly; and this is the cry of Faith. (Luke 18. 7.) Shall not God avenge his own Elect, which cry day and night unto him? That is, which pray mightily to him night and day. The hypocrite in heart often makes the firſt cry when God bindeth him, the cry of impatience, but never the two latter; he makes not, either the cry of Repentance, or the cry of Faith in Prayer, when God bindeth him. This lets us ſee the ſecond Part of the wickedneſs of theſe Hypocrites, 'tis the omiſſion of a moſt neceſſary duty, yea of two: They act very ſinfully, for they heap up wrath; they act not holily, for they do not cry when God binds them; That is, they neither repent nor pray, or they repent not heartily, they pray not earneſtly, in the day of their affliction.

Hence Note; Firſt, Hypocrites humble not themſelves, when God humbleth them;

When he binds them as it were hand and foot, they are tongue-tyed and heart-tyed. The Lord ſaid of ſuch (Hoſ. 7.14.) They cryed not unto me with their heart, when they howled upon their beds; they aſſemble themſelves for Corn and Wine, and rebel againſt me. They howled and made a noiſe, but (ſaith the Lord) all the while they cryed not to me. There was no Repentance, no Prayer in their cry, they cryed not with their heart. Hypocrites will, firſt, complain much when God binds them; Secondly, they murmure much when God binds them; Thirdly, they will vex themſelves like a Bull in a Net, when God binds them; Fourthly, they will rail and curſe when God binds them: but repent, or pray they do not. (*Iſa.*8.21.) They ſhall paſs through it hardly beſted and hungry; and it ſhall come to paſs, that when they ſhall be hungry, they ſhall fret themſelves, and curſe their King and their God, and look upward. Here was blaſpheming, but no crying, no repenting, no praying, no deprecating the hand of God, or the Judgment felt, in an humble and ſpiritual way. Hypocrites cry not to the Lord. though he makes them cry; they are readier to find fault with God, than with themſelves, in the day of adverſity: they neither cry the cry of godly ſorrow for their ſin, nor the cry of godly Prayers, for help out of their affliction. They who are falſe with God in times of Peace, ſeldom, if at all, repent, or duly apply themſelves to God for help in times of trouble; the reaſon is, The Conſcience of the hypocrite in heart, tells him, he hath dealt baſely with God; and therefore, when he is in ſtreights or bound, what face, what faith, what liberty of ſpirit, can he have to cry to God? Such hypocrites often cry out deſpairingly, but O how rarely are they brought to cry, either believingly or repentingly, when God bindeth them.

Anteactæ turpis vitæ memoria animum enervat.

* Secondly, Conſider this cry a little further, as a Prayer-cry. Hypocrites in heart may be much for prayer in time of proſperity, they were not hypocrites elſe; if they did not pray, they were openly prophane, not hypocrites. Chriſt ſpeaking of hypocrites, (Matth. 6.) tells us, they pray much, and (*Matth.*7.) they cry Lord, Lord. Hypocrites are much in praying, eſpecially in times of proſperity, yet here he ſaith, They cry not when he bindeth them, that is, in the day of adverſity.

Hence Obſerve, That which is not done uprightly, will not be done conſtantly.

Hypocrites cry to God only in ſhew at beſt, and when 'tis beſt with them; but when they fall into a troubled condition, they cry not, they even lay down their ſhew; they throw up their duties, when they miſs their deſires. They who have prayed often in a time of proſperity, not throwing away their ſins, coming into affliction they throw away their prayers. Prayer will forſake them, who forſake God while they pray. Such as want Faith, will not have a heart to pray in their wants. If holy duties cauſe us not to leave our ſins, ſinning will at laſt cauſe us to throw off our holy Duties. Will, or doth, the hypocrite pray always? Was Job's denying queſtion, at the 27. Chapter of this Book. They who do not love prayer, cannot hold out in prayer: They who do not find a ſweetneſs in drawing near to God in good Times, will ſoon withdraw from him in evil Times.

Thirdly, They cry not when he binds them.

Note; Hypocrites, when they have moſt need of prayer, are leaſt in the uſe of it.

When more need of Prayer, than in time of affliction? Yet the hypocrite bound in affliction is bound in ſpirit from ſupplication.

Fourthly, They are ſaid not to cry, though (in ſome ſenſe, as hath been ſhewed) they do cry when God bindeth them.

Hence Note; That holy Duty, which is not rightly and holily done, is reckoned by God as not done at all.

What almoſt is more common among hypocrites, Yea, among ſome prophane ones, than to pray, and deſire others to pray for them in time of affliction? Pharaoh will needs have Moſes pray for him; and when Ahab was threatned with a binding he humbled himſelf; yet this goes for nothing, and gets nothing, at moſt, but what Ahab got a reprieve from ſome preſent or temporal puniſhment.

Fifthly, Thoſe words are brought in as an aggravation of the ſinfulneſs of the hypocrite; he doth not cry when God binds him, he prayeth not when God afflicts him.

Hence Note; It is an heightning of our ſin to neglect prayer in time of affliction.

It is a ſin to neglect prayer at any time, but their ſin is exceeding ſinful, who neglect it then, who cry not to God, when God binds them. Is it not extreamly evil, that they ſhould not pray at all, or but little, when they ſhould be all and always in prayer? Affliction doth, as it were, naturally draw us, yea, forcibly drive us to God. In their affliction they will ſeek me early (Hoſ. 5.14.) As if the Lord had ſaid, If ever they will ſeek me, ſurely they will ſeek me then, and then they will ſeek me early, that is, earneſtly, and with all their hearts. Therefore how unnaturally ſinful are they, who in their affliction will not ſeek God! The Prophet ſaith (Iſa. 26.16.) Lord, in trouble have they viſited thee, they poured out a prayer when thy chaſtening was upon them: Yet the hypocrite will not pray when chaſtened. How ſinful it is, not to pray when God binds us, appears upon many accounts.

Firſt, To neglect prayer in time of affliction, is very ſinful, becauſe then we have moſt occaſion for it.

Secondly, In time of affliction God eſpecially calls us to prayer; he commands us at all times, but chiefly then. Is any among you afflicted? (Is that any mans caſe?) Let him pray (Jam. 5. 14.) What ſhould an afflicted man do elſe? What is he ſo much ingag'd to do by his own neceſſity, what ſo much by the will of God, as to pray? Affliction, which takes us off from many other works, ſets us upon and about this.

Thirdly, Prayer in time of affliction is under moſt promiſes to be heard: Now not to pray, not to cry to God, when we have ſo many promiſes to aſſure us of hearing, increaſeth our ſin in the neglect of prayer. Though I do not ſay, the hypocrites prayer is under theſe promiſes of hearing, yet it ſhall be reckoned as a ſin that he hath not prayed in affliction, becauſe there are ſo many promiſes of hearing prayer in affliction. The Lord is very gracious to thoſe that cry in affliction, and the hypocrite hath often heard that he will be ſo; how wretchedly ſinful is he then againſt God, as well as regardleſs of his own good, if God hear not of him, or from him, in his affliction! (*Pſal.*102. 17.) He will regard the prayer of the deſtitute, and not deſpiſe their prayer, that is, graciouſly accept and anſwer it. Again (*Pſal.*69.33.) The Lord heareth the poor, and deſpiſeth not his Priſoners; That is, any who are bound in affliction: For I ſuppoſe that Text is not to be reſtrained to thoſe only, who are ſhut up in priſons, but takes in all thoſe that are bound in any trouble. In which ſenſe the word is uſed (*Lam.*3.34.) The Lord doth not afflict willingly, nor grieve the children of men, to cruſh under his feet all the Priſoners of the earth: The Hebrew is, All the bound of the earth; by whom, he means, as chiefly the Jews gone into Captivity, who were more properly bound, ſo any detained under any calamity whatſoever; to all, or any of them, that Scripture is applyable, The Lord doth not willingly afflict. Seeing then there are ſo many promiſes made to thoſe that cry in affliction, this will be urged upon the hypocrite as an heightning of his neglect, that he hath not cryed when God bound him. Thus we ſee the ſecond part of theſe hypocrites miſery, by what they do not, They cry not when he bindeth them.

The third thing by which the woful miſery of hypocrites in heart is ſet forth, is by what they ſuffer.

Verſ. 14. They dye in youth, and their life is among the unclean.

They dye in Youth.] The Hebrew is, their Soul dyeth. The Soul, ſtrictly taken, is immortal, and dyeth not; yet 'tis often ſaid in Scripture, the Soul dyeth; the Soul being taken, either, Firſt, for the Life; Or, Secondly, for the Perſon. To ſay, their Soul dyeth in youth, is no more than to ſay (as we tranſlate) they dye in youth. The word rendred Youth, ſignifies in the Root of it, to ſhake and trouble, or to make ſome great concuſſion; hence ſome render the Text, They die in a Tempeſt, or in a Storm.

One

One of the Jewiſh Doctors gives it thus, They ſhall die with a ſtroak or ſhaking; that is, they ſhall periſh by the force and violence of that affliction, which hath arreſted and taken hold of them.

But I conceive our reading is clear, They die in Youth, becauſe Youth is the moſt ſtirring time of our life, or that time of life, wherein we uſe the moſt violent motions without, and are ſubject to the moſt violent paſſions within; therefore the Hebrew expreſſeth both by one word. Now when we ſay, They die in Youth, the meaning is, they die in the prime, in the beſt, in the moſt flouriſhing time of their life, in the ſpring of their days.

But is it true, that all hypocrites in heart die in youth? Do not many, who diſcover themſelves to be but hypocrites, die in old age?

I anſwer, Such-like Scriptures do not intend an univerſality, as to every individual; but only ſhew that 'tis ſo for the moſt part, or often ſo. Hypocrites in heart, men of prophane ſpirits, uſually die in their youth, and are cut off in the Flower of their Age. They who multiply their ſins, ſubtract from their days; and they have leaſt ground of hope to live long, who live ill. As bloody, ſo deceitful men (ſuch are hypocrites in heart) ſhall not live out half their days. They who live not out half their days, die in youth. That alſo is the meaning of Eliphaz (Chap. 15. 32.) where he ſaith, The wicked man ſhall have his recompence before his time; as alſo when he ſaith (Chap. 22. 16.) They were cut down out of time; that is, before the ordinary time of cutting man down by Death was come. And therefore, I anſwer,

Secondly, they die in youth, needs not be taken in that ſtrictneſs, as importing that they die before they come to mens eſtate, but only that they die before the common time of dying. To die in youth ſignifieth any immature death; or when death cometh ſuddainly upon any, they may be ſaid to die in youth. Thus here; they die in youth, that is, ſome immature or ſuddain death overtakes them, they come to an haſty or untimely end, they prolong not their days on earth.

Thirdly, this dying in youth may refer to the hypocrites unpreparedneſs or unfitneſs to die. Unprepared perſons may be ſaid to die in youth, becauſe youths or younger men are uſually unprepared to die. Hence that ſerious Memento or warning given them (Eccleſ. 12. 1.) Remember now thy Creator in the days of thy youth. Young men are commonly ſo unprepared to die, that whoſoever die unprepared, may be ſaid to die in youth; Yea, though they die in old age, they die infants. I may ſay at leaſt in alluſion to that of the Prophet (poſſibly it may be a proof of what I ſay (Iſa. 65.20.) An old man that hath not filled his days (by being good and doing good) dieth a Child. As a Child may be ſaid to die an hundred years old, when he dies full of grace, ſo a man of an hundred years old, may be ſaid to die a child, an infant, when he hath no grace; for though he hath been long in the world, yet he can hardly be ſaid to have lived at all. So then, how long ſoever the hypocrite in heart hath had a being on the earth, and a breathing in the air, he always dieth in youth, or before his time, becauſe he hath not yet learned the way to eternal life.

Moritur cum Juventa. Jun. Ponitur ב pro עם ut Cap. 9. 26. Pſal. 143. 7. Piſc. Æque morientur & pari judicio Dei conterentur atque juveniles illi animi qui proterve obnituntur Deo, & palam ad omne flagitium projecti ſunt Jun.

There is yet another reading of the words; we ſay, they die in youth, that ſaith, they die with youth, or young men; that is, as diſſolute, deboiſt, vitious and riotous young men die, ſo hypocrites die. The hypocrite is oppoſed to the outwardly profane in his life, but he ſhall be like him in his death: As if Elihu had ſaid, look as vain voluptuous youths, carnal youths, or young men, who give themſelves up to their pleaſures, look as or how they die, look what wrath is upon them when they die, even ſo ſhall the hypocrites in heart die, they die with the youth. I ſhall touch this further upon the laſt clauſe, where Elihu gives us this ſenſe in other words, and in words that more full[illegible]each this ſenſe; for having ſaid, they die in (or with) youth, he thus concludes,

And their life is among the unclean.

Here it may be Queried; foraſmuch as he ſaid before, they die in youth, how doth he here ſay, Their life is among the unclean? What life have they when dead? I anſwer, By their life, we may underſtand that life which hypocrites in heart ſhall have after death; which may be taken two ways. Firſt, for the life of the Soul, while the body remains a conſuming or conſumed carkaſs in the grave, that life (after death) the life of their Souls is among the unclean. Secondly, for the life which they ſhall have after the reſurrection of their bodies, that will be among the unclean too. Some tranſlate the words thus, Their life is taken away among the unclean; we ſay, their life is among the unclean. The word (is) is not in the original Text, and we may make the ſupply by a word ſignifying to take away; Their life, is taken away among the unclean, that is, they ſhall die like the worſt of ſinners, they ſhall make no better an end, than the unclean and profane, no better than the moſt foul and filthy Sodomites, as the original imports. For Ut hic vita mori dicitur, ſic Authores Latini dicunt vita vivere & vitam vivere; vita moritur, cum homo vitam cum morte commutat. Druſ. Vita eorum (ſuppleo) aufertur. Piſc. Cum meritoriis. Piſc. Latini vocant cinædos & pathicos qui in concubitu libidinoſo vice mulieris funguntur. Id.

The word which we render unclean, hath a double, yea, a contrary ſignification, holy and unholy, clean and unclean. They who are holy only in name, are moſt unholy in heart and life. The Scripture often by the ſame word expreſſeth things of utmoſt oppoſition; ſo here he calleth thoſe who are moſt unholy, by a word which ſignifieth holineſs; the Hebrew ſaith, their life is among the Sodomites. Mr. Broughton Tranſlates, and their life with fornicators. Sodomites, who are the moſt unclean and filthy ſinners, worſe then fornicators, are expreſſed by a word, by this word which alſo ſignifieth holy, or holy ones (Deut. 23. 17.) There ſhall not be a Sodomite, or, an holy one among you; and therefore as we read of Sodomites in the land, who are ſinners againſt the law of nature, (1 Kings 14. 24.) ſo according to that law of Moſes, we Read, 1 Kings 15. 12. and Chapter 22. 46. as alſo 2 Kings 23. 7. of the deſtroying of the houſes of the Sodomites, and of the removing of Sodomites out of the land. Sodomites being the moſt abominable of all unclean ones, how unclean are they whoſe life is among them, or whoſe life is taken away with them! The Spirit of God doth rightly compare hypocrites to Sodomites and filthy perſons, becauſe it proceeds from the heat of ſome baſe luſt or other that any are hypocrites. 'Tis proper to thoſe who are magnanimous, or of noble ſpirits, to be open, clear-hearted and ingenuous.

Their life is with the unclean.] Hypocrites have a great affectation to be numbered among the clean and holy, and poſſibly they have been, or may be, high in the opinion of men, for holineſs, for very Saints; But their life ſhall be among the Sodomites, or the unclean. It being a ſhame to expreſs the abomination of that ſort of ſinners by a word proper to them, the Scripture (by an Euphemiſm) calls them holy; we Tranſlate the Scripture ſenſe, and call them unholy or unclean; Their life is among the unclean, among Sodomites. Thus as the death of the hypocrite here is fully expreſſed in the former words, He ſhall die with the youth, that is, like thoſe ſinful Sodomitiſh youths, like thoſe youths who live in the heat of abominable luſts, though he ſeemed to have an heat of holineſs; ſo their life hereafter is fully expreſſed in theſe latter words, Their life is with the unclean. This clearly ſets forth hypocrites, they are ſpiritual adulterers, they pretend love to Chriſt as their husband, but their hearts go a whoring after the world. And therefore as their life was really in this world, though they pretended otherwiſe, ſo it ſhall be viſible in the world to come, among the unclean.

Hence Note; Firſt, They who are like the unclean in this life, ſhall be wrapped up with them in the next life after death, or in the ſecond death.

They who live like the wicked ſhall die like the wicked, and live with them, if theirs may be called a life, for evermore. The hypocrite, with all his varniſh and fair colours, ſhall not die like a godly man, nor live with him after death; though he hath lived the life of a godly man, as to appearance, yet he ſhall not die ſo, nor live ſo when the dead riſe: he ſhall die and live like and among his own company, the unclean. He was ſecretly unclean in his life, and he ſhall openly live among the unclean, when he dies. Balaam a Sorcerer, a witch, a falſe-Prophet, how did he beg, that he might die the death of the righteous, and that his laſt end end might be like his! (*Numb.*23.14.) The hypocrite would fain die like thoſe whom he hath imitated and made a ſhew of all the days of his life; but did Balaam die like the righteous? No, he died, as he lived, like one that had loved the wages of unrighteouſneſs. Though hypocrites have lived in reputation with godly and good men, yea, have been reputed godly and good men, yet when they die they ſhall go down among the unclean, even among the debauched and filthy Sodomites, they ſhall go to their own place and to their own company. It is ſaid of Judas when he hanged himſelf (Acts 1.25.) He went to his own place, his proper place. All things naturally tend to that which is congenial or like to them; heavy things downward, light things upward. What place is congenial to, what place is the center of wicked men? Surely Hell, the bottomleſs pit is their own place, and that's the meaning of the Text there. Judas was a great while among the Apoſtles in an high place, in a very excellent place, he went like an Apoſtle, or for an Apoſtle; but that was not his own place; he was an hypocrite, and when he died then he went to his own place, to that place which was proper to him. In this life good and bad are mingled together in the ſame place; the hypocrites and the ſincere may be in one Houſe, in one Congregation, in one Church, in the pureſt Church on Earth there may be hypocrites in heart as well as ſincere; but when hypocrites die they ſhall be divided from all thoſe with whom they were never truly, or in heart, united. If it were poſſible, all the godly or ſincere ſhould be in one place as to ſpirituals here (that's moſt comely and deſirable, though not attainable) yet we cannot make the ſeparation perfect in this life; but at death it will be done perfectly; death will not leave one hypocrite among the ſincere, not a weed among the herbs, nor a chaff in the floor; death will make perfect ſeparation; after death all the holy ſhall be gathered together into one ſociety, and all the unholy into another ſociety by themſelves. It is ſaid of Abraham he was gathered to his people (*Gen.*25.8.) Not only to his kindred, in the fleſh, but to all thoſe that were of his faith. Death will gather all to their proper place and company. Godly Joſiah was gathered to his fathers (2*Chron.*34.28.) and the wicked are ſaid (*Pſ.*49.19.) to go to the generations of their fathers, where they ſhall never ſee light. Death will ſend every one to his own. The hypocrite ſhall no more ſhuffle himſelf among the righteous, nor Satan himſelf, nor any of his Sons, among the Sons of God; every man ſhall be for ever among his like.

Further Note, The ſmootheſt-faced and cloſeſt hypocrite in the World ſhall fare as bad and no better then the fouleſt and deboyſteſt ſinner.

They ſhall die with the vile, and be taken away among the unclean. The faireſt hypocrite, ſhall have no more eſteem with God, then the fouleſt Sodomite that ever was in the World. Chriſt ſaith, if any refuſe to receive the Goſpel, it ſhall be worſe with them then with Sodom, the cry of whoſe ſins went up to Heaven; nor ſhall it be any whit better, but rather worſe, with them who receive the Goſpel of Chriſt only in ſhew, their hearts not being right with him. How woful is their preſent condition, who daily heap up wrath, who (in the ſenſe opened) die in or with youth, and whoſe life (after death) is among the unclean!

VERS. 15, 16, 17.

He delivereth the poor in his affliction, and openeth their ear in oppreſſion.

Even ſo would he have removed thee out of the ſtrait into a broad place, where there is no ſtraitneſs, and that which ſhould be ſet on thy Table, ſhould be full of fatneſs.

But thou haſt fulfilled the Judgment of the wicked: Judgment and Juſtice take hold on thee.

Elihu having ſhewed how terrible God will be, how dreadfully he will deal with ſubtile hypocrites; The hypocrites in heart heap up wrath; proceeds in this context to do two things.

Firſt, That he might raiſe ſome hope in Job, if he did at laſt humble himſelf, he repeats the gracious dealings of God with humble and upright-hearted ones at verſe 15. I ſay he repeats it, becauſe he had ſpoken of it before (*verſ.*6,7.) and this is a very uſeful and profitable repetition, by which Job is doubly admoniſhed to raiſe himſelf from his deſpair of a better condition; foraſmuch as God doth not afflict with a purpoſe to deſtroy, but that he may heal and help the afflicted. The greateſt deſign of God in chaſtening us ſhould be always remembred, that he intends only our good, eſpecially to make us thereby better or more partakers of his holineſs.

Secondly, He makes application of the whole doctrine to Job; and that two ways; Firſt, by way of conſolation, aſſuring him he had been delivered in caſe he had humbled himſelf duly and deeply before the Lord (*verſ.*16.) Even ſo would he have removed thee out of the ſtrait into a large place, &c. Secondly, he applies it by way of conviction, that as yet ſurely he was unhumbled, becauſe ſtill under the afflicting hand of God, *verſ.*17. But thou haſt fulfilled the Judgment of the wicked, Judgment and Juſtice take hold on thee. So much concerning the ſtate of theſe three verſes in general; I ſhall now go on to open them in order.

Verſe 15. He delivereth the poor in his affliction, or he pulls the poor out of affliction.

That is the ſenſe of the word, and the work of God. We find the word uſed to ſignifie the pulling or drawing off of the ſhoo, (*Deut.*25.19.) As the ſhoo is tied or buckled to the foot, and muſt be looſed before it can with any eaſe be drawn off; ſo afflictions are tied to us, till the Lord unlooſeth and draweth them off from us, or us from them. To draw out of trouble, or to draw us out of trouble, is deliverance. David expreſſeth himſelf by that word (*Pſ.*6.4.) Return, O Lord, deliver (or draw) my Soul (that is me) out of the enemies hand, or out of the trouble which compaſſeth me about and is ready, like deep waters, to ſwallow me up. He delivereth

The poor in his affliction.] Who are meant by the poor, hath been ſhewed before, I ſhall not ſtay upon it here, only conſider, there are poor as to their outward ſtate, and poor as to their inward ſtate, that is, firſt, poor in Spirit, which is a bleſſed poverty; and ſecondly, poor in Spirituals, which is a miſerable poverty. The two former ſorts of poor eſpecially, when joined in one, are here intended; He delivereth the poor

In his affliction, or, in his poverty.] There is a great elegancy in the Hebrew Text; 'tis a word of the ſame root which ſignifieth the poor who are delivered, and the affliction in which or out of which he or they are delivered. We may tranſlate the Text thus; he delivereth the poor in his poverty; that is, when he is in his poverty or affliction, the Lord delivereth him out of his poverty, or affliction; if poverty be his affliction, or whatſoever affliction comes under the name of poverty, the Lord delivereth him out of it. I have upon other paſſages of this Book ſpoken of this deliverance, yet ſhall touch it here again, becauſe we ought always to remember it; we are often in affliction, often in trouble, and therefore we have need often to be put in mind, and continually to bear in mind, that God is a deliverer, the deliverer of his people from, or out of afflictions; He delivereth the poor in his affliction.

Hence Note, Deliverance is the work of God.

As the poor cannot deliver themſelves in affliction, ſo neither can the rich deliver the poor by his riches, nor the ſtrong by his power, nor the wiſe man by his wiſdom, craft or policy. The Lord often uſeth the help of man. Creature help, in delivering the poor out of afflictions; yet the whole effect is here, and every where in Scripture attributed to God, He delivereth the poor. Deliverance of any ſort is of God, yet more eſpecially ſome ſorts of deliverances are; as Nebuchadnezzar confeſſed (Dan. 3.29.) who, when thoſe three Worthies were delivered out of the fiery furnace, made a decree, that every People, Nation and Language which ſpake any thing amiſs, againſt the God of Shadrach, Meſhach and Abednego, ſhould be cut in pieces, &c. and he did it upon this ground, becauſe (ſaith he) there is no other God that can deliver after this ſort. He had an opinion that his god could deliver, but he appropriated the glory of that deliverance to their God; there is no god can deliver after this ſort; no god but the God of Shadrach, Meſhach and Abednego can check and ſtop the rage of fire, and bring out thoſe unburnt, who are caſt into the burning. That's the firſt thing, Deliverance is of the Lord.

Secondly, Note, The loweſt and meaneſt are the objects of deliverance.

When it's worſt with us, then uſually God cometh in. He will be ſeen in the Mount, and provide at a pinch; he loves to do for us when we can do nothing for our ſelves. Take the poor in any notion, but eſpecially for ſuch as being deſtitute of all help and means of deliverance, are alſo poor in Spirit, not truſting to any help or humane arm, theſe, theſe are the perſons whom the Lord delights to deliver; and therefore God is ſo often ſpoken of in Scripture, as eſpouſing the cauſe and quarrel of the Widow and the Fatherleſs.

Thirdly, From the manner of expreſſion, He delivereth the poor in affliction,

Note, They who are not delivered from affliction, may yet be delivered in affliction.

God doth not always deliver his people from affliction (either ther not ſuffering affliction to fall upon them, or preſently bringing them out of affliction) but he is engaged (by promiſe) to deliver them in affliction; and this he doth ſometimes by checking the affliction, that it ſhall not hurt them; ſometimes by enabling them to bear, yea, to conquer the affliction, how much ſoever it hurts them. He delivered thoſe in the third of Daniel, in the fiery furnace, by checking the fire that it ſhould not hurt them; and Daniel in the Lions den, by checking the hungry Lions that they did not devour him. He delivered Job, and David, and Jeremie, and the Apoſtles, and all the Martyrs, who loved not their lives to the death for the teſtimony of Jeſus, by cauſing them to glory in, and triumph over all their tribulations. He delivereth the poor in his affliction,

And openeth their ears in oppreſſion.] What's meant by opening the ear, was ſhewed at the 10. verſe of this Chapter, and at the 16. verſe of the thirty third; yet conſider ſomewhat in the words anew.

And openeth their ear.] The Hebrew copulative particle, which we render, and, is often in that language uſed to denote a ſeaſon, or ſpecial time, and then it is rendred by when; thus here he delivereth the poor in affliction, when he hath opened their ears, by or in oppreſſion. Thus alſo (*Pſ.*139.16.) Thine eyes did ſee my ſubſtance, yet being imperfect, and in thy Book all my members were written, which in continuance were faſhioned, when as yet there was none of them. The Hebrew is, and not one in them; as if he had ſaid, God had a full Idea or platform of David's Body before it was framed; ſo here, he delivereth the poor in affliction, and openeth; or when he hath opened their ears in oppreſſion; that is, taught them effectually to make a good uſe of their afflictions. We may alſo render it, after; ſo the copulative (Vau) is expounded (*Lev.*17.15. *Jer.*10.13.) Thus here; He delivereth the poor in affliction after he hath opened their ears; that is, after he hath made them underſtand that ſin hath cauſed their ſufferings, and hath alſo made them obedient and ready to receive counſel from him, as that phraſe of opening the ear hath been opened. He openeth, or when or after he hath opened their ears

Faciet eum intelligere quod pro peccatis punitur. Aquin.

In oppreſſion, or by oppreſſion,] The word notes extream oppreſſion; we read it (*Numb.*22.25.) in the ſtory of Balaam, where 'tis ſaid, his Aſs cruſhed (or preſſed, or oppreſſed) his foot againſt the wall, while he was going to curſe the people of Iſrael, that ſo Balack might oppreſs them. This word is uſed alſo *Judg.*4.3. 1*Sam.*10.18. and by it Eliſha ſhewed how he would have Jehoram's meſſenger handled (2*Kings* 6.32.) Oppreſſion takes faſt hold. The Lord takes faſt hold of ſinners by oppreſſion, and will not let them go till he hath opened their ears; but as ſoon as he hath opened their ears in or by their oppreſſions, then (out of hand) he delivereth them in, if not out of their afflictions. From the connection of this with the former part of the verſe, בלחצ à radice לחצ Coarctavit, preſſit, compreſſit, vim intulit Præpoſitio in ſæpe valet, per.

Obſerve, The evil of oppreſſion or trouble is preparatory to, or a uſual means to fit us for our receiving of good.

He delivereth them in affliction, when he hath opened their ears in or by oppreſſion. When once the Soul by hearing the cry of the oppreſſor is made obedient to the call of God, then God comes and works deliverance. Good men, while free from evil, are oftentimes like the wild Aſs deſcribed in the 39. Chapter of this Book, ſuch as will not hear nor regard the crying of the driver, though he be not an exactor, (as the word there ſignifies and we put in the Margin) but a fair and gentle driver. Few hear when ſpoken to, till they feel as well as hear; and therefore the Lord firſt ſends them into trouble, that they may hear, and having by that means opened their ears to hear, he brings them out of trouble. When we are truly humbled by affliction, we are near deliverance from affliction. The plaiſter muſt be kept on till the wound be healed. The Lord will not leave off ſcourging or correcting his people till he hath brought them to ſuch a poſture, that they are fit for mercy. The Lord helps and heals thoſe who ſubmit; and if they whom he hath bound with the cords of affliction, call humbly for releaſe and relief, he will not forſake them, but reſtore them in due time to their former felicity; He delivereth the poor in affliction, when he hath opened their ears in or by oppreſſion.

Elihu having laid down this general Doctrine, makes Application of it in the two verſes following.

Verſe 16. Even ſo would he have removed thee out of the ſtrait into a broad place.

Thus Elihu proceeds from the general Theſis or aſſertion of Gods deliverance, to the Hypotheſis, accommodating the Doctrine to Job's Caſe and Perſon, Even ſo he would have removed thee, &c.

This verſe 16. contains the firſt part of the Application made to Job, where Elihu informs him what the iſſue would undoubtedly have been, if he had ſubmitted (which he did not) as he ought, to the afflicting hand of God, and hath not (which he did and ought not) filled his mouth and the ear of God with bitter complaints, nor ſtood ſo ſtiffly upon his own defence and vindication. This Elihu doth by a double alluſion.

Firſt, To the bringing of a man out of cloſe priſon into a ſtate of freedom, or into an open air. This he gives us in the part of the verſe, Even ſo would he have removed thee out of the ſtrait into a broad place.

Secondly, He doth it by alluding to the furniſhing of a mans Table with ſtore, not only of wholeſome but of delicious meats, who before fared very hardly. This he doth in the cloſe of the verſe, And that which ſhould be ſet on thy Table, ſhould be full of fatneſs. As if he had ſaid, if thou had'ſt hearkned to the voice of God, thou ſhould'ſt have had both liberty, and plenty, had'ſt thou been bettered by thy troubles, it had been better for thee, and much better with thee; thou hadſt been enlarged fully, thou hadſt been ſupplied abundantly with all manner of good things deſirable, even to the utmoſt of thy deſire: That's the general ſcope of this verſe; more particularly.

Even ſo would he have removed thee out of a ſtrait into a broad place.

Some read the verſe with a retro-reſpect, or as looking back to the time paſt; as if Elihu had bid Job remember his former experiences, whether God heretofore dealt not bountifully with him. To this ſenſe (beſides others) Mr. Broughton tranſlates, which hath turned thee from diſtreſſes mouth, to largeneſs, where there is no ſtraitneſs, and that which was laid upon thy Table was full of fatneſs: And he gives the gloſs upon his own tranſlation thus; God once made the wealthy, and would again; thou haſt had experience how good a Maſter, and how liberal the Lord is to thoſe that ſerve him, thou thy ſelf didſt enjoy proſperity a long time far from all trouble, or touch of affliction. Thus (I ſay) ſome refer the words to the time paſt; but I rather keep to our own tranſlation, which expreſſes the Original Text, as an aſſurance of what Job ſhould have had, and might have expected in time, had he complied as he ought, with the purpoſe of God in his afflictions.

Sic etiam averterat te ab ore anguſtiæ in latitudinem, cui non ſuberat preſſura & ferculum menſæ tuæ plenum erat pinguedine. Jun.

Even ſo would he have removed thee out of a ſtrait into a broad place. As if he had ſaid, God who uſeth and loveth to deliver the poor out of affliction, which alſo have delivered thee out of thy affliction had'ſt thou been humbled under thy affliction, had'ſt thou fallen down before him, hadſt thou ſubmitted the matter to him, and not diſputed it with him as thou haſt done, hadſt thou confeſſed his Juſtice, and not accuſed it or complained complained about it, even ſo would he have removed thee, &c. The word which we tranſlate to remove, ſignifieth alſo,

הסא Eſt proprie incitare, ferre ad malum, à radice סות

Ex eadem radice variæ lectiones & interpretationes pullularant Pined.

To move or to perſwade; becauſe he that perſwades another, moveth or removeth him from his opinion or intendment, or from what his practice was before, and brings him to be or do ſomewhat that he did not, or was not, before. To be perſwaded is to be inwardly moved, to be moved in mind: And therefore they who perſwade or entice others to evil, are ſaid to turn them from the Lord, and to thruſt them out of the way which the Lord commandeth them to walk in (Deut. 13. 5.) To perſwade in any degree, is to move (Joſh. 15. 18.) and ſome perſwade ſo ſtrongly, that they make in others great removes.

Further, It ſignifies to deceive, as will appear if you compare Text and Margin; 2 Kings 18. 32. and thoſe Texts, 2 Chron. 32. 11, 15. all concerning one matter. He that is deceived, is uſually deceived by perſwaſion, and is drawn away by ſome enticements.

Now, becauſe he that perſwadeth or deceiveth another, endeavoureth to turn or remove him from what he holdeth or intendeth, to the contrary, therefore (as we render) this word ſignifies alſo to remove, to bring from one place to another, or from one ſtate to another. He would have removed, or tranſlated thee

Out of a ſtreight into a broad place.

צר Anguſtia & adverſarius. Hinc Septuaginta reddunt,

Gehenna eſt ampla ad recipiendum, & anguſta ad emittendum. De puteo peccati & pravæ conſuetudinis cujus ingreſſus facilis, exitus præ anguſtus Gregor.

Os anguſtiæ eſt ingens calamitas, abyſſus malorum, in quam demerſus homo, neque ſubſiſtere, neque emergere poteſt.

Here are two ſorts of places, a ſtreight, and a broad place: What a ſtreight place, properly taken, is, all know. The Hebrew is, He would have removed thee out of the mouth of the ſtreight. The Septuagint render, He would have removed thee out of the mouth of the enemy. An enemy puts us to ſtreights; and therefore the ſame word ſignifies a ſtreight and an enemy: He would have removed thee out of a ſtreight place; the hand of an enemy is ſo. But more generally, by the ſtreight place, we are to underſtand any kind of tribulation or trouble whatſoever. Troubles of any ſort are juſtly called ſtreights, for they incloſe and impriſon us, they abridge us of our liberty, they tie us ſhort up, where we can ſcarce ſtir or breath. A man in trouble, is a man in ſtreights. Some expound theſe words allegorically, taking the mouth of the ſtreight for Hells mouth; they that deſcend thither, are indeed in everlaſting ſtreights; for, though Tophet be deep and large, as the Prophet ſpeaks (Iſa. 30. 33.) yet all that are there, are in ſtreights. Hell is large to take in, but ſtreight to let out, ſo ſtreight, that it will not let one out for ever. Others expound it tropologically, or with reſpect to manners; He would have delivered thee out of the mouth of the ſtreight, that is, from the power of thy ſins and corruptions, for they indeed are ſtreights; and though we eaſily fall into them, yet we hardly get out, or free of them again. But we need not take up, either Allegories, or Tropologies; the words are plain. That which Elihu here intends by ſtreights, is great trouble, deep miſery, into which a man being caſt, knows neither how to ſubſiſt, nor how to eſcape: Yet out of that ſtreight place he promiſeth deliverance; He would have removed thee out of a ſtreight

Into a broad place.] That is, to liberty and proſperity, which are in Scripture compared to a broad place, where a man hath room enough. Thou haſt known my Soul in adverſity (ſaith David, Pſal. 31. 7, 8.) and haſt not ſhut me up in the hand of the enemy; thou haſt ſet my feet in a large Room, that is, in a proſperous condition. Thus Elihu here promiſeth on Gods behalf, He would have removed thee out of a ſtreight, into a large place,

Spatium latum eſt, uno latiſſimum, ubi nulla anguſtia eſt.

Where no ſtreightneſs is.] That's a broad place indeed. No ſtreightneſs implyeth greateſt enlargement, or enlargement to the uttermoſt, not only of need, but deſire. A broad place, where there is no ſtreightneſs, is full liberty, or full of liberty. A man may be in a very good, in a very free condition, and yet have ſome ſtreights. To be in ſo good a condition, as to have no ſtreights at all, is the top and perfection of freedom. And ſurely, The full attainment of ſuch an enlargedneſs, is the reward of the next life, not the enjoyment of this life. The way of the wicked, in this life, is moſt ſtreightly broad; the way of the righteous, in this life, is broadly ſtreight, and endeth in a broadneſs of everlaſting bleſſedneſs. God at laſt will remove all his out of a ſtreight, into a broad place, where there is no ſtreightneſs. Hence,

Via impiorum eſt lata anguſtiſſima; via juſtorum eſt anguſta latiſſimo, & deſinit in latitudinem jucundiſſimam.

Firſt, See, the Author of our deliverance is again here remembred, He would have removed &c. As before, he delivereth the poor in afflictions, ſo here again, He would have removed thee out of a ſtreight, into a broad place. As all our mercies are of the Lord, ſo let us acknowledg him in all.

Secondly, From the Alluſion,

Note, Troubles are ſtreights,

He is in a ſtreight, that knows not what to do; thus 'tis often with us in our troubles. It was ſo with good Jehoſhaphat (2 Chron. 20. 12.) when a mighty Enemy came up againſt him, Lord (ſaid he) we know not what to do, but our eyes are towards thee; he was in a ſtreight, what to do here on Earth, but he had a broad place to look to, even to Heaven, to the Lord of Heaven and Earth, our eyes are towards thee. As if he had ſaid, Lord we are in a ſtreight, but thou art never in ſtreights; Lord counſel us what to do, Lord help us to do it. The afflicted, many a time, know not what to do, and many times, they cannot do what they know; they know this thing would do them good, but they cannot do it, they know that might be helpful to them, but they cannot reach it.

He is in a ſtreight that doubts what good to chuſe, much more is he in a ſtreight who ſeeth that what-ever he chuſeth, he muſt chuſe ſome evil. Paul was in the former ſtreight, and David in the latter; Paul was in a ſtreight, it was a trouble to him, being doubtful, which good to chuſe, (Phil. 1. 23.) I am in a ſtreight betwixt two; betwixt what two? Betwixt two very good things, namely, living here in doing good, and going to Heaven to receive his reward; he was in a ſtreight whether to live here to do more work, or to go to Heaven to receive the reward of his work. 'Tis ſome trouble, but a bleſſed trouble, when we are in a doubt which good to chuſe. But they are in very great trouble, who are in ſuch a ſtreight, that whatſoever they chuſe, they muſt chuſe evil: That was David's ſtreight, (2 Sam. 24. 14.) the Lord gave him a choice, and a very ſad one, of three evils, either of famine, or of peſtilence, or of flying and falling before his Enemies; hereupon David ſaid, I am in a great ſtreight; ſomewhat he muſt chuſe, and what-ever he choſe, it was evil, that is, penal evil; but ſeeing it was ſo, and could not be otherwiſe, (e malis [illegible]nimum) he would chuſe the leaſt, he choſe to fall into the hand of God, rather than into the hands of men. Into ſuch kind of ſtreights are the people of God ſometimes caſt, they have ſomewhat before them to chuſe, but what-ever they chuſe it is very hard, and troubleſome; troubleſome to ſtay, and troubleſome to go, troubleſome to abide by it, and troubleſome to flie from it, every way it is a trouble; and how many of the precious people of God have been brought into theſe troubles! Only this is their comfort as well as their duty, that though they may be in ſuch ſtreights as neceſſitate them to chuſe a leſs good, or a penal evil, yet as God will not, ſo man cannot bring them into any ſuch ſtreights as neceſſitate them to chuſe a moral or ſinful evil. Troubles are ſtreights. He would have removed thee out of a ſtreight into a broad place.

Hence Note, Thirdly, What-ever ſtreights we are in, God is able to inlarge us.

The hand of the Lord is not ſhortned that it cannot ſave? (Iſa. 59. 1.) There is no ſtreight ſo ſtrict, but the Lord can open it, and remove us out of it, or it from us. When the Children of Iſrael were in that great ſtreight, having the Sea before them, and Pharaoh with his Hoſt behind them, the Lord removed them out of that ſtreight, and brought them into a large place. There are a Thouſand inſtances and experiences of this. David ſaith, (Pſal. 130. 1.) Out of the depths have I cryed unto thee O Lord: The depth there, and ſtreight here, are the ſame under ſeveral Alluſions. David cryed out of the depth of miſery: When he was at the bottom of the pit, he cryed unto God, and was delivered. We can be in no depth, but the power and mercy of God can reach a hand to us, and draw us out; we can be in no ſtreight, but the power of God can, and his love will make room for us, that we may eſcape. Seeing then (as one of the Ancients ſpeaks fully to this point) God will help becauſe he is ſo merciful, and can becauſe he is ſo powerful, that man ſhuts the door of hope againſt himſelf, who thinks, or through unbelief fears, that either God will not or cannot help him. And therefore when at any time we are in a ſtreight, let the greatneſs of our ſtreights, be the exerciſe of our faith, not a diſcouragement to it. Some make their ſtreights a ſtop to their faith, they cannot believe they ſhall be delivered out of great ſtreights; but the greatneſs of our ſtreights, ſhould quicken, not deaden our faith, it ſhould increaſe our faith, not weaken it; and ſo it will, if we conſider who it is that undertakes to remove his people out of their ſtreights; it is the great God; and the more their ſtreights are, the greater their difficulties are, the greater is his glory in removing any of them into a large place. 'Tis ſaid in the Pſalm, The Lord makes a way for his anger; he doth ſo ſometimes, he makes a broad way for his anger; yet remember he makes a way for his love and mercy too, that his great power may be ſeen in opening our greateſt ſtreights.

Dum Deus velit miſereri qui bonus eſt, & poſſit quia omni-

Fourthly, Whereas, 'tis not only ſaid, He would remove thee into a large place, but, into a large place, where there is no ſtreightneſs.

Obſerve, God can bring his afflicted people perfectly out of ſtreights, and ſet them out of the reach of danger.

Our comforts in this World are uſually mixed with ſorrows, our enlargements with ſtreights; yet the Lord is able to give us ſorrowleſs comforts, and ſuch enlargements as ſhall not have the leaſt ſhadow of a ſtreight in them. As Jeſus Chriſt ſaveth us to the uttermoſt of Soul-ſtreights, or we are ſaved through Chriſt to the uttermoſt of our ſins, that is, of our guilt and danger of condemnation by ſin; ſo he can ſave us alſo to the uttermoſt of outward troubles, he can give a perfect temporal ſalvation, ſuch a ſalvation as ſhall have nothing of fear or danger in this life: Elihu ſpeaks of ſuch a ſalvation. The Lord can ſave us to the uttermoſt of preſent perils, and ſet us beyond the reach of peril, even in ſuch a place, where there ſhall be no fear, no ſuſpicion of annoiance. 'Tis ſaid (Prov. 10.22.) The bleſſing of the Lord maketh rich, and he giveth no ſorrow with it. The Lord makes ſome men rich, or gives them a great eſtate, yet they find ſorrow enough with it; but the Lord, through his bleſſing, can give riches, and add no ſorrow with it, put no gravel in our bread, nor gall in our cup, but all ſhall be ſweet to us; that's bringing us into a large place, where there is no preſent ſtreightneſs, no, nor appearing cauſe to fear any. Thus the Nations are brought in rejoycing at the fall of Babylon, (Iſa. 14.7,8.) The whole Earth is at reſt, and is quiet, they break forth into ſinging, yea the Fir-Trees rejoyce at thee, and the Cedars of Lebanon, ſaying, ſince thou art laid down, no feller is come up againſt us. The Lord will work full deliverance for his people by Babylons fall; when that falls, Sion ſhall not fear the coming of any more fellers, Chriſt will then give his faithful people ſuch enlargement as ſhall know no ſtreights.

Poſitio vel requies. Heb. à radice נוח quod eſt requieſcere Metonymia adjuncti. Piſc.

This is the firſt alluſion; He would have removed thee out of the ſtreight into a broad place, where there is no ſtreightneſs; it followeth, Eſt abſtractum pro concreto, poſitio & requies, pro iis quæ ſuper menſam deponuntur à fercularis; Quemadmodum jumenta vocantur, ſervitus hominum, quia hominibus ſerviunt. Bold.

And that which ſhould be ſet on thy Table, ſhould be full of fatneſs.

Here's the ſecond mercy. As if he had ſaid, The Lord would not have given thee a bare deliverance out of evil, but thou ſhould'ſt have received abundance of good; thou ſhouldſt not only have room enough, but comfort enough;

That which ſhould be ſet on thy Table, ſhould be full of fatneſs.

Some render, That which reſteth, or abideth on thy Table; that is, thy meat, and thy drink, thy wine, and thy oyl, that which thou feedeſt upon, ſhould be of the beſt and moſt nouriſhing, not bare commons, not ordinary fare, but Vicinæ ſunt radices נוח quievit & ינח poſuit; quod enim ponitur in aliquo loco, ponitur ut requieſcat. Merc.

Full of fatneſs.] Fatneſs is put in Scripture to expreſs the beſt of things; it often ſignifieth the beſt of ſpiritual things, (Pſ. 36 8.) They ſhall be abundantly ſatisfied with the fatneſs of thy Houſe. The Houſe of God is the Church of God, and, God keeps a good Houſe, there are fat things, and they who worſhip and wait upon him, they ſhall have abundance of them, their full ſatisfaction: The fatneſs of Gods Houſe, is the riches of Grace, the beſt of Goſpel-Ordinances and promiſes, the beſt of Goſpel comforts and mercies, theſe are the fatneſs of the Houſe of God; theſe are the things which the Apoſtle intended while he told the Gentiles, (Rom. 11.17.) That they were partakers of the root and fatneſs of the Olive Tree. Thus alſo ſpake the Prophet, (Iſa. 25 6.) In this Mountain ſhall the Lord of Hoſts make a feaſt of fat things: What, of ſuch fat things as the Epicures of the World ſurfet upon, Sheep, and Oxen, &c? No; the feaſt of fat things which the Lord will make to his people is, of ſpiritual things, they ſhall have much of Chriſt, much of grace here, and an aſſurance of glory for hereafter; This is the feaſt of fat things. And though the Lord give to any of his ſervants the bread of adverſity, and the water of affliction; though the fig-tree ſhould not bloſſom to them; though they ſhould have neither Sheep in the fold, nor Calves in the ſtall, yet they may daily ſit at this feaſt of fat things, and be filled with joy in the Lord, (Hab. 3.17, &c.)

And as fatneſs is uſed in Scripture to expreſs the beſt of ſpiritual things, ſo fatneſs expreſſeth the beſt of natural and outward good things, (Pſal. 65.11.) Thou crowneſt the Year with thy goodneſs, and thy paths drop fatneſs; that is, plenty, and plenty of the beſt things, which grow out of the Earth by the bleſſing and benign influences of Heaven. I conceive ſpiritual good things, the beſt of them, are alſo ſhadowed under thoſe expreſſions of Temporal.

Lautiſſimè ſuaviſſiméq; vives.

Further, Elihu doth not only ſay, That which ſhall be ſet upon thy Table ſhall be fat, but, full of fatneſs; which implyeth thus much. Thou ſhalt have whatſoever may make thy life comfortable, and happy; for as by bread, our daily bread, we are to underſtand all the neceſſaries of this life (though bread be the meaneſt part of our ſuſtenance, yet it is called the ſtaff of life, becauſe the moſt neceſſary part of it) ſo by fatneſs, we are to underſtand all things delicate and delicious; and thoſe things which are moſt delicate and delicious, are ſaid to be full of fatneſs.

Hence Note, Firſt, God, who delivereth his people from trouble, or out of ſtreights, can alſo fill and furniſh them with comforts.

The mercy of God doth not only take away evil, and ſo leave us, it doth not only bring us out of our ſtreights, and there ſet us down: but mercy proceeds to the beſtowing of good upon us. As we in obedience ſhould not put off the Lord with abſtaining from evil, but ought to do good, even abundance of good, and not only bring forth good, but much good fruit; that's our duty; ſo the Lords mercy ſtayeth not in delivering us from evil, but beſtoweth good things, the beſt things upon us, and them in abundance.

Secondly, In that thoſe good things are expreſt by fatneſs, or by being full of fatneſs,

When once a people, or a perſon are accepted of God, he ſpares no coſt, nor thinks any too coſtly for them, the moſt delicious things in the World are not too good for them, (Pſ. 81.16.) He would have fed them alſo with the fineſt of the wheat, and with honey out of the Rocks ſhould I have ſatisfied thee. I would not have fed them with wheat only, that's good, but with the fineſt wheat, that's the beſt; we put in the Margin, with the fat of wheat; they ſhould not have had the bran, but the flour and the fineſt of the flour! They ſhould have had not only honey, but honey out of the Rock, which, as Naturaliſts obſerve, is the beſt and pureſt honey. Surely God cannot think any thing of this World too good for them; certainly God cannot think any of theſe outward enjoyments too good for his people, who hath not thought his Son too good for his people; that's the Apoſtles argument, (Rom. 8.32.) He that ſpared not his own Son, but delivered him up for us all, how ſhall he not with him alſo freely give us all things? Even the beſt of outward good things, when he ſeeth it good for us.

In this ſee the difference of the ſpirit of the World, and of God, to his people. The World thinks nothing bad enough for thoſe that are the choiceſt ſervants of God, they are ſorry to ſee that they have any thing that is good; that they have a morſel of bread, or a penny in their purſes, is thought too much for them by the World; and if any trouble befall them, it's good enough for them, will the World ſay. The World thinks any thing too good for the choiceſt ſervants of God, how much more the choiceſt things! But God hath other thoughts towards them, he thinks nothing too good for them, they ſhall be filled with fatneſs.

Thirdly, In that Elihu makes promiſe of theſe outward things, to the choyce ſervants of God, whoſe ears are open to attend unto him;

Note, Even outward mercies, and a full portion of outward mercies, fall ſometimes to the ſhare of the faithful ſervants of God in this World.

Though ſuch are not of this World, much leſs are ſervants to the World, yet God can make the World ſerve them with its beſt, and give them a full portion of the World, though the World be not their portion. The ſervants of God would not take all the World, if it were offered them, for their portion, no not a thouſand Worlds, conſidering what a periſhing thing this World is, and that at beſt it is but a finite thing; I ſay, a ſervant of God would not take all the World, at the hand of God, for his portion, though he is thankful for any thing, for a little of it, and unworthy of any, the leaſt part of it. Howbeit, many times God gives a large portion of this World to his people, and that which he ſets upon their Table, that is, outward good, is full of fatneſs. Indeed ſome of the choice ſervants of God have been afraid when they have ſeen much of the World come in, leſt God ſhould put them off with ſuch worldly things; when their Table hath been full of fatneſs and dainties, when they have had Houſes and Lands, Gold and Silver plenty, they have been troubled, leſt God ſhould ſay to them, There is your All. It is ſaid of Luther, when he had a conſiderable preſent ſent him from a great Prince (the Duke of Saxony, as I remember) this came upon his heart, I hope God will not put me off with theſe things, with gifts from Princes; I ſhall be hungry as long as I live, if I have nothing to feed upon but what is of the World, and poor as long as I live, if I have no other treaſure, but what is earthly; and thereupon proteſted he would not be ſatisfied with the beſt things of this World, though content with any thing. Thus, I ſay, God deals bountifully, with a liberal hand, to ſome of his people eſpecially. This was made good in the former, or Old Teſtament times, when the promiſes went more upon externals (as hath been ſhewed) whereas now they go more upon ſpiritual and heavenly things; yet there wants not examples of Gods dealing bountifully in outwards with his faithful ſervants under the Goſpel, he hath cauſed that which was ſet upon their Table, to be full of fatneſs.

This is the firſt part of the Application, wherein Elihu acquaints Job what God would have done for him, if he had carried it humbly (as he ſhould) under his afflicting hand, he had been out of his fetters and bonds before that time, and ſet in a large place, he had not fed ſo long upon aſhes, his Table had been full of fatneſs.

As in this verſe Elihu applyed the matter to Job, by ſhewing him how it ſhould have fared with him, or how graciouſly and bountifully God would have dealt with him, if he had humbled himſelf, as he ought, and been duly affected with the afflicting hand then upon him, ſo in the following verſe, he applyeth the Doctrine to him, by telling him, that the reaſon why he was at the preſent in ſuch an afflicted condition, was, becauſe he had not ſo humbled himſelf in his affliction.

Verſe 17. But thou haſt fulfilled the Judgment of the wicked, therefore Judgment and Juſtice take hold on thee.

This is a home Application indeed, he ſpeaks to his face, Thou haſt done it; thou haſt fulfilled the Judgment of the wicked; which is, as a home, ſo a very hard and heavy charge. Take a twofold Interpretation of it.

Firſt, Some expound it (I think not rightly) of Job's ill carriage in the time of his proſperity; as if Elihu had reflected upon that: Thou haſt heretofore fulfilled the Judgment of the wicked, and that, firſt, by a general ill courſe of life. As Chriſt ſaith to the Phariſees (Matth. 23. 32.) Fill ye up the meaſure of your fathers; ſome conceive Elihu ſpeaking to Job in that ſence, Thou haſt filled up the meaſure of the wicked, following them in their evil ways. Secondly, That in his Magiſtratical capacity, or that being a Magiſtrate, he had fulfilled the Judgment of the wicked; that is, what wicked men, and their bad Cauſes wanted of weight and truth, of righteouſneſs and goodneſs, that he filled up by favour, by accepting their perſons, and giving countenance to their wickedneſs. Some charge him thus directly, Thou haſt done the part or Office of an unjuſt Judg; when thou hadſt power in thy hand, thou waſt defective, ſhort, or wanting, in diſcharging the duty of an upright Judg, but didſt the work of a corrupt Judg (corrupting Judgment) to the full; therefore now Juſtice and Judgment take hold on thee. But (as I ſaid before) this is not a right Expoſition of the Text; for Elihu never charged Job with a ſinful courſe of life in former times, or before his affliction (as his friends had done) though he charged him with much ſin in his carriage under his afflictions; and it may be conceived, that Job heard Elihu more patiently and equally than he heard his friends, becauſe Elihu dealt more equally and candidly with him, than his friends did; he did not lay it upon him, as if in the foregoing part of his life he had traded in wickedneſs; but only reproved him for his boldneſs, in dealing with, and appealing ſo often unto God, in his ſores and ſickneſs; or, becauſe his ſpirit was not broken enough, notwithſtanding thoſe ſore breakings and ſickneſſes, with which he was afflicted. So then, Elihu in ſaying this, intended not that Job had fulfilled the Judgment of the wicked, either by a wicked converſation, or by perverting Juſtice in favour of the wicked: Such a charge had been utterly inconſiſtent with the Teſtimony which God gave of him in the firſt Chapter of this Book.

Officium impii implevisti, q. d. Optimi & incorrupti judic Officio defuisti, impii munus & partes obiisti. Cajet. Sed receptiſſima vocis Originalis ſententia eſt Judicium, non Officium. Pined.

Therefore Secondly, Thou haſt fulfilled the Judgment of the wicked, may be underſtood, firſt, that Job had gone near, in his behaviour under his affliction, to do even almoſt as Satan boaſted, and preſumed to God he would do, in the ſecond Chapter, that if God did but lay his hand home or cloſer upon him, and touch his bone and his fleſh, then (ſaid Satan) he will curſe thee to thy face. Now, though Job did never, in the height, fulfil his wicked opinion or judgment of the Devil concerning him, yet by his often complaining of, and murmurings about the ſevere dealings of God with him, and his not pitying him in his diſtreſs, he verged upon it, he came ſomewhat towards, and much too near the fulfilling of that Judgment of the wicked one; and Elihu might ſay, Thou haſt fulfilled the Judgment of the wicked, thou haſt done (in a degree or ſhew) as the Devil ſaid thou wouldſt, if the hand of God were heavy upon thy Body.

Secondly, Theſe words. Thou haſt fulfilled the Judgment of the wicked, may have this meaning, Thou haſt rendred thy ſelf guilty of, or obnoxious to, that Judgment which God uſeth to pronounce and execute upon wicked men.

Thirdly, Thou haſt fulfilled the Judgment of the wicked; that is, thou under the hand of God hath carried thy ſelf as wicked men uſually do, thou haſt imitated them in a great meaſure. What do wicked men when the hand of God is upon them? They rage and murmur, they toil themſelves and are full of the fury of the Lord, as a wild Bull in a net; thou ſeemeſt to have fulfilled this Judgment of the wicked, for thou haſt been ſo far from humbling thy ſelf, as thou oughteſt, that thou haſt ſtood it out and ſtouted it with God, and deſired a day of hearing; haſt thou not in all this fulfilled the Judgment of the wicked? In the 34. Chapter of this Book at the 8. verſe, Elihu told Job, that he had gone in company with the wicked, that is, that he had taken the ſame courſe with the wicked, and as they uſe to do in the day of their calamity. And that's the meaning of Elihu's charge here, Thou haſt fulfilled the Judgment of the wicked, that is, thou haſt carried thy ſelf too too like wicked men in the day of thy trouble. Thus Job is here cenſured not ſtrictly, as if he had done like wicked men, but becauſe he did not ſuffer ſo patiently as became a good man; this was in him a fulfilling of the judgment of the wicked.

More impiorum cauſam tuam egiſti impatienter contra Deum murmurando. Sanct.

Hence Note. Not to ſubmit heartily, and humble our ſelves freely, when the afflicting hand of God is upon us, is to do very ſinfully, even like the wicked.

I ſhall not ſtay upon this, having ſpoken of the extream ſinfulneſs of murmuring and impatience under the hand of God heretofore.

Secondly, Note, If we give way to any corruption, or paſſion, it will quickly carry us a very great way in ſin, and from our duty.

They that are good in their ſtate, may ſometimes in their acts, (as Job here) fulfil the judgment of the wicked. As Hypocrites fulfil, in appearance, the judgment of the upright, that is, do like upright men; ſo the upright may, in appearance, do like Hypocrites, and then they alſo fulfil the judgment of the wicked. Job ſaid to his wife, in the ſecond Chapter, Thou ſpeakeſt like a fooliſh woman; and now Elihu tells him, thou haſt ſpoken and done as a wicked man.

Thirdly, Note, They who do like the wicked, muſt not think much if they be numbred with the wicked, and involved in the ſame outward evils and judgments which uſually fall upon wicked men.

Though we may not judg ſuch a mans eternal eſtate like that of the wicked, yet as to this or that act, we may (without breach of charity) number him among the wicked, and he may quickly feel the ſame ſmart which the wicked feel. They that are godly ſhould act like godly men, and not do any thing that repreſents the luſts or practices, the judgment or converſation of the ungodly; leſt it be ſaid (in one ſence or other) of them, as here Elihu of Job, you alſo have fulfilled the judgment of the wicked.

Therefore Juſtice and Judgment take hold of thee.

ומשפט

As if he had ſaid, I told thee before, if thou had'ſt humbled thy ſelf, thou ſhouldeſt have had a large place, and full Table, ſtore of mercies and favours; but now Judgment and Juſtice take hold of thee. Here are two words which ſometimes are uſed diſtinctly, but here they ſignifie the ſame thing, or the one is but an explanation of the other. Juſtice and Judgment; ſome take Juſtice for the habit, and Judgment for the act, exerciſe or decree; as if he had ſaid, Juſtice hath ſent forth Judgment upon thee, and now both take hold of thee; God hath noted thy ſin in thy ſad condition. Yet the Original doth not determine it upon Job's perſon expreſly, it doth not ſay, Juſtice and Judgment take hold of thee, but Juſtice and Judgment take hold; we ſupply they take hold of thee, for that's it which Elihu intends; Juſtice and Judgment take hold of thee, O Job, nor will they let thee go. We find the word ſo uſed in ſeveral places, (Prov. 3.18.) Wiſdom is a Tree of life to them that lay hold upon her. And as the believers cloſing with and hold faſt upon Chriſt is expreſſed by this word, ſo alſo is the hold which ſin takes of an unbeliever (Prov. 5.22.) His own iniquities ſhall take the wicked himſelf, and he ſhall be holden with the cords of his ſin. Judgment and Juſtice take hold of thee.

Hence Note, Firſt, God will not indulge ſin in any, no not in his own ſervants.

If a Job do like wicked men, he ſhall ſmart like the wicked. Though God will not caſt any of his ſervants to Hell for ever, yet they may be caſt into a temporary Hell. The Lord told David as much, in caſe his Children ſhould diſobey him, and break covenant with him, though he would not caſt them off, yet they ſhould pay dearly for it; He would viſit their tranſgreſſions with a rod, and their iniquities with ſtripes, (Pſal. 89. 32.) The Hiſtory of David's Children makes good that Propheſie, and ſo hath the dealings of God with believers in all ages, who are the ſeed, the Children of David myſtical, that is, of Chriſt, whom and whoſe ſpiritual Children the Spirit of God chiefly pointed at in that Pſalm. They that do like evil men, ſhall ſuffer like evil men. Juſtice and Judgment properly and ſtrictly take hold of the wicked and diſobedient only, as the Apoſtle ſaith (1 Tim. 1.9.) The Law is not made for a righteous man, but for the lawleſs and diſobedient, &c. Yet when they that are righteous are found doing like the lawleſs and diſobedient, the Law, that is Juſtice and Judgment will take hold of them.

Tygurina legit intranſitive; Cauſa &

Again, Some read the words intranſitively, Juſtice and Judgment ſhall hold, or hold on ſtill, that is, they will hold on their courſe or way in puniſhing, as long as thou hold'ſt on thy courſe or way in ſinning.

judicium retinebunt, i. e. ſuſtentabunt vigorem ſuum quamdiu impius fuerit.

Hence Note, So long as any man lives in any ſinful way, he ſhall find Juſtice and Judgment taking hold of him. Juſtice will not leave ſinners till they have left their ſins.

Again, Juſtice and Judgment take hold of thee, that is, they hold thee faſt.

Hence Note, There's no getting out of the hand of divine Juſtice.

Men oftentimes get out of the hand of man's Juſtice, they can break Priſon, they can file off their Fetters and caſt their Cords from them; but none can break Gods Priſon, none can get out of the hands of divine Juſtice. As Juſtice and Judgment ſhall take hold of, attach and arreſt ſinners, ſo they will hold them faſt, they cannot make an eſcape, nor can any reſcue them till God ſigns a warrant for their releaſe. We cannot hinder God in the exerciſe or execution of Juſtice, nor turn him aſide from his purpoſe, either by our power or policies. God can eaſily hinder men of their purpoſes, and can undo what-ever they have done, but none can make the Juſtice and Judgment of God let go their hold. Therefore let us take heed, while we hold ſin and iniquity, nothing can deliver us from the hand, or hold off the ſin-chaſtning and avenging hand of God. However men fail, the Juſtice and Judgment of God are everlaſting; they hold on their courſe ſtill though men do not. Though we could pluck the Sun out of the Firmament, yet not Juſtice out of the hand of God. We can neither put God beſides his rule, nor force him from his purpoſe. Theſe are the two great Prerogatives of God, he hath firſt a righteouſneſs which cannot be perverted; ſecondly, a Juſtice which cannot be interrupted.

VERS. 18, 19, 20.

Becauſe there is wrath, beware leſt he take thee away with his ſtroke: Then a great ranſom cannot deliver thee.

Will he eſteem thy riches? No, not Gold, nor all the forces of ſtrength.

Deſire not the night, when people are cut off in their place.

In theſe three verſes Elihu preſſeth the Application of the former Doctrine upon Job, by way of admonition and counſel: Foraſmuch as he had done amiſs before, and carried himſelf unduly under the hand of God, even ſo far as to fulfil the counſel of the wicked, and therefore he would now, and for the time to come, take heed and be more wary.

And leſt Job ſhould ſlight this admonition or counſel, Elihu adds a powerful motive to urge that duty upon him, even the wrath of God; Beware, why?

Becauſe there is wrath.] Beware, and beware leſt (this wrath breaking forth) he take thee away with a ſtroke. And how dreadful the wrath of God is, Elihu ſhews in theſe three verſes by a threefold conſideration.

Firſt, Becauſe if we fall into the Lords hand, when he is in wrath there is no means under Heaven that can deliver or bring us off. This he aſſerteth at the latter end of verſe 18. Then a great ranſom cannot deliver thee. It is dangerous coming under that wrath, from which a ranſom, eſpecially a great ranſom, cannot deliver. What that ranſom is which cannot deliver us is expreſſed in verſe 19. Will he eſteem thy riches? No, not Gold.

A Second motive to beware of this dreadful wrath, is this, becauſe if once the wrath of God be up, as there is no ranſom, ſo no power in the Creature that can deliver. That we have at the latter part of verſe 19. Nor all the forces of ſtrength; though thou haſt Armies, Millions of men in Arms, yea though thou haſt Legions of Angels in pay, yet they cannot prevail, all the forces of ſtrength cannot deliver thee,

There is alſo a third conſideration, to ſhew the unavoidableneſs of the wrath of God, namely, becauſe there is no fleeing no making an eſcape from it. Some indeed are ſo angry that you cannot ſatisfie them with a ranſom, and ſo powerful that no ſtrength can deliver you from their power, yet poſſibly you may make an eſcape and hide from them, you may get out of the way and lie out of ſight; but ſaith Elihu, that will not do neither in this caſe, (verſe 20.) Deſire not the night when people are cut off in their place; the night or darkneſs will be no cover to thee from the wrath of an angry God. Thus you have the ſum and ſubſtance of this admonition to Job, Beware, becauſe there is wrath, and that wrath of God ſo terrible that nothing can deliver from it, no ranſom, no power, nor can we deliver our ſelves by flight, or by darkneſs.

I ſhall now open the words more diſtinctly.

Verſe 18. Becauſe there is wrath, beware, &c.

The word which we tranſlate Wrath, comes from a root that ſignifies heat, or to be hot; and we know they that are angry and in wrath are very hot, their mind and Spirit are enflamed, we uſe to ſay to an angry man, why are you ſo hot: the wrath of man is hot: the wrath of God, is certainly much hotter.

Becauſe there is wrath.] But where is it? I anſwer, Firſt, there is wrath, in the breaſt or heart of God, there his anger is kindled againſt ſinners. Secondly, there is wrath in the decree of God, againſt ſinners (*Zeph.*2. 2.) Thirdly, there is wrath in the threatnings of God, there it firſt appears and breaketh forth (Deut. 29. 20.) So the Apoſtle (*Rom.*1.18.) The wrath of God is revealed from Heaven. How is it revealed? As his love is revealed in promiſes, ſo his wrath in threatnings. Fourthly, there is wrath in the works of God, in his Judgments acted upon the Children of men. As there is wrath hidden in his breaſt and decreed, ſo wrath is heard from his mouth in terrible threatnings, and ſeen in his hand by terrible Judgments executed upon his enemies, We may ſee wrath in the dealings of God; his works tell us he is angry. Therefore fear to perſiſt, leſt in his anger he take thee quite away. We ſhould beware of ſinful works, leſt we provoke and ſtir up the Lords anger to make bloody work. There is wrath, (particularly as to the dealings of God with thee, O Job, ſaith Elihu) therefore,

Beware.] The word Beware, is not expreſly in the Hebrew Text, but it is plainly intended, and ſupplied by Interpreters, in general, to make up and clear the ſence of this verſe. We have a like reading in the 36. of Iſaiah, verſ. 18. Beware leſt Hezekiah perſwade you, &c. The word Beware, is a ſupplement added there in a different character, to ſhew that it is not expreſſed in the Hebrew. As if Rabſhakeh had ſaid, if Hezekiah perſwade you to ſtand out againſt my Maſter Senacherib, you will provoke his wrath to your utter ruine and deſtruction, therefore beware. There, as here, beware, beſpeaks our caution; becauſe there is wrath, take heed what you do or ſay.

Hence Note, Firſt, There is a wrath of God againſt ſin, or, God will appear in wrath againſt ſinners.

The Apoſtle John in his firſt Epiſtle (*Chap.*4 8.) tells us in a direct predication, God is love; and 'tis as true, God is wrath. The wrath of God is a divine perfection, it is the perfection of God, as his love is. God is one and the ſame, he is not divided into ſeveral paſſions, perturbations or affections; but thus the Scripture ſpeaks of him, to denote what we may expect from him, and what he is and will be in his actings towards them who obey him not.

Note, Secondly, The wrath of God appears and is put forth in his works of Judgment.

As the goodneſs of God is his love acted, or as the good things which God doth for us are love-actions, ſo the evils that are upon us are wrath-actions. I do not ſay that every evil which we endure in this World is the acting of wrath upon us, but I ſay, there is wrath in the actings of evil upon us; Moſes ſaid to Aaron, (Numb.16.46.) Go quickly, take a Cenſer (haſt, haſt) and make an atonement, there is wrath gone out. How did he know wrath was gone out? He tells us in the next words, The plague is begun: He ſaw wrath in that diſpenſation of God; the plague begun argued that God was angry. Becauſe there is wrath, beware.

Hence Note, Thirdly, We ſhould by all means take heed and beware of the wrath of God.

The wrath of man is a ſmall matter to the wrath of God, yet we are very careful to beware of the wrath of man, eſpecially of great men. The wrath of the Kings and Princes of the World, is like the roaring of the Lion, ſaith Solomon, and we are ready to tremble at that; but O how ſhould we tremble at, and beware of the wrath of God! Who knoweth the power of thine anger? (*Pſal.*90.11.) We may take ſome ſcantling, ſome meaſure of the wrath of man, and know how far it can go, and what it can do; but we can take no meaſure of the wrath of God, for it is immeaſurable, and therefore we ſhould avoid every thing that procures his wrath. That's the meaning of this caveat; do nothing that blows up or incenſes the wrath of God. But what is it that blows up wrath? It is ſin, every ſin hath that in it which may blow up wrath. The Apoſtle ſaith, The wrath of God is revealed from Heaven, againſt all ungodlineſs and unrighteouſneſs of men, not only againſt this or that ungodlineſs, nor only againſt this or that degree of ungodlineſs, ('tis neither againſt ungodlineſs of ſome ſpecial kind, nor of ſome ſpecial degree) but againſt all ungodlineſs, therefore all ungodlineſs and all unrighteouſneſs is to be avoided.

And as we ſhould do nothing to provoke wrath, ſo we ſhould do every thing which may prevent wrath (Pſal. 2. 12.) Kiſs the Son, why? leſt he be angry, and his wrath kindle. Who is the Son, and what's this kiſſing of the Son which prevents wrath? The Son is Chriſt, he is the Son of God; this kiſſing is a kiſs of homage, and humble ſubmiſſion to Jeſus Chriſt by faith and obedience; it is a Goſpel receiving of Chriſt: to kiſs the Son is to receive Chriſt as our King, as our Prieſt, as our Prophet, to receive Chriſt in the whole maniſeſtation of his Mediatorſhip. Do this to prevent wrath, kiſs the Son. And conſider how terrible he reports that wrath to be; If his wrath be kindled but a little, bleſſed are they that put their truſt in him. O then take heed that you do not provoke the wrath of God, and do your utmoſt to prevent it; which nothing can do but kiſſing the Son, that will and that only can do it; ſubmit to Jeſus Chriſt, receive Jeſus Chriſt, without him it is impoſſible to prevent wrath. He that believes not, the wrath of God abideth on him, (John 3.36.) Jeſus Chriſt alone is he which delivereth us from the wrath to come, (1 *Theſ.*1.10.) And if we further conſider this wrath from the expreſſion, both of the Pſalm and of the Text, it ſhould make us (who are ſo fearful of, and who ſo ſhift from the wrath of men) exceedingly afraid of the wrath of God. The word, as was ſhewed before, comes from a root which ſignifieth the heat of fire, implying that the wrath of God is fire, and (Heb. 10.27.) it is called fiery indignation; yea, God himſelf (*Heb.*12.29.) is called a conſuming fire. Why doth the Scripture expreſs him and his wrath, by fire? Surely becauſe fire is well known to us, and we are well able to conceive how dreadful a thing fire is, when it is in its rage and fury, when it hath got the Maſtery: Fire is a comfortable Servant, but a dreadful Maſter. Now as fire is the moſt dreadful element, ſo wrath is the moſt dreadful attribute of God; yet I may ſay, that elementary fire which (as to our ſence) is ſo dreadful, is but a Sun-ſhine compared to the wrath of God; as will appear if we conſider it in two things.

Firſt, It burns internally. The viſible fire burns but viſible things, outward things, but this fire burns within, ſcorches the Conſcience, burns the Soul, burns that which all the fires in the World cannot reach, cannot touch. God is a Spirit, and the wrath of God is a fire that burns the Spirits, and will for ever afflict and torment the Conſciences of wicked men. The hotteſt fires which the moſt enraged malitious Perſecuters kindle, cannot touch the Spirit; the Conſcience is quiet, the Soul triumphs while the fleſh fries in the fire. 'Tis the fire of divine wrath alone which hath power upon the Soul; and a burning there is ten thouſand times more painful than the burning of our fleſh.

Secondly, The wrath of God burns eternally. Your fires here though they are dreadful, yet they go out, they conſume themſelves by conſuming the matter or fuel caſt into them; they cannot continue always, becauſe they eat up and devour that which maintains them: But the wrath of God burns continually. God is called a conſuming fire, not becauſe the fire of his wrath conſumes, but becauſe he conſumeth ſinners in the fire of wrath; and when we ſay, he conſumeth ſinners in his wrath, or his wrath conſumeth ſinners, we are not to underſtand it of a conſumption as to being, but only as to a well or comfortable being; for not only the Souls, but the very Bodies of ſinners ſhall remain in this fire of the wrath of God for ever unconſumed. The Bodies of the damned ſhall be raiſed again at the great day, and being re-united to their Souls, both ſhall abide unconſumed in the fire of this conſuming wrath eternally. The great dread of ordinary fire is, that it conſumes what it burns, but the greateſt dread of this fire is, that it conſumes not that which it burns. O therefore take heed of the wrath of God, the wrath of God is terrible as to corporal and temporal Judgments, much more as to ſpiritual and eternal Judgments; that is, as the fire of his wrath burns both internally and eternally. Becauſe there is wrath, beware, Leſt he take thee away with his ſtroke.

Here the danger is expreſt. If the Lord be angry, he can ſoon take thee away with a ſtroke, he can remove, yea hurry thee away out of all thy preſent joys and enjoyments, to everlaſting ſorrows. The word imports a violent remove. The ſtroke here ſpoken of is like that (Chap. 34.26.) He ſtriketh them as wicked men, in the open ſight of others; that is, he ſhames them as well as puniſheth them; as he ſtrikes them with his hand to their confuſion, ſo he ſtrikes or claps his own hands together in deriſion, as 'tis ſaid (Chap. 27. 23.) Men ſhall clap their hands at him, and ſhall hiſs him out of his place; we may take it in both theſe ſignifications; Leſt he take thee away with a ſtroke; that is, leſt he ſtrike thee ſo as to make an utter end of thee, or leſt he take thee away with deriſion, clapping his hands at thee, and pouring contempt upon thee. Have we not reaſon to beware of that wrath, which in either ſenſe can take us away with his ſtroke? Yet I conceive a third ſenſe may be given of theſe words, Leſt he take thee away with his ſtroke, that is, leſt he take thee away ſuddenly, even as ſuddenly as a ſtroke can be given.

34.26

Hence Note, Firſt, God can preſently ſtrike to deſtruction.

He can take the ſtrongeſt away with a ſtroke, he can do it with one ſtroke. The Lord needs not ſtand cutting and ſlaſhing, hacking and hewing (as we ſay) all day long; one ſtroke of his will do it. He took away Herod at one ſtroke (Acts 12.23.) He took away Ananias and Saphira at one ſtroke (Acts 5.5.) Nadab and Abihu were taken away with one ſtroke (Lev. 10.1.) All theſe periſhed, and ſo have thouſands more, as with a ſtroke, ſo ſuddenly, at one ſtroke. The Lord can ſtrike home; as Abiſhai ſaid to David in the caſe of Saul, when he found him in the Trench, Let me ſtrike him at once, and I will not ſtrike him a ſecond time. The Lord threatned (Nah. 1.9.) to bring deſtruction upon thoſe at once, when he told them Affliction ſhould not riſe a ſecond time; as if he had ſaid, I will not ſtrike another blow at them, I'le hit them home, and do my work with one blow. We need not fear how many, or how mighty his enemies are, he can rid himſelf of them with one ſtroke. The Lord ſtrikes ſome to take away their ſin; thus he ſtrikes his own people: Others he ſtrikes to take away their perſons; thus he ſtrikes the wicked, eſpecially thoſe who enemy-like, deſignedly ſtrike at him, his Name, his Truth, his Glory. Elihu doth not ſay, Beware leſt he ſtrike thee, but leſt he take thee away with a ſtroke. The Lord often ſtrikes his own faithful Servants, they receive many a ſtroke, many a laſh, many a blow, many a chaſtiſement at his hands, but he doth not take them away with a ſtroke, as he doth the wicked. The Lord ſtrikes his Servants to take away their ſins, and he ſtrikes wicked men to take away their lives, to deſtroy them utterly.

Secondly, As the word ſignifieth taking away with clapping of the hands or with deriſion,

Note, God will even laugh at the ruine of wicked men.

He will clap his hands at their fall. We read (Prov. 1. 26,27.) how Wiſdom called and cried, and none would anſwer, all ſet her calls and counſels at naught; what followed? I (ſaid wiſdom, that is, Chriſt) will laugh at their calamity, and mock when their fear cometh; as much as is ſaid in the Text, I will take them away with a ſtroke, or with clapping my hands, with a kind of deriding plaudite at their going off, or rather at their being thruſt off the Stage of this World. They are in the moſt ſad condition, whom God not only deſtroys, but derides; they have moſt cauſe to mourn in their affliction, at whoſe affliction God laughs. It is ſaid (Job 9.23.) God will laugh at the tryal of the innocent, and why, was ſhewed in opening that place; I only touch it now upon this occaſion: The Lord knows the innocent will come off with honour, will ſtand it out in their tryal bravely, he ſees what Courage and Faith and Patience they will manifeſt in and under their ſufferings. Now as the Lord even claps his hands, and laughs, when his choſen noble ones go forth to the tryal, knowing they will honour him in their tryal; ſo the Lord laughs at the deſtruction of the wicked, knowing that his Juſtice and Righteouſneſs ſhall have a full ſtroke at them, and lay both their ſhame and ſin open to all the World.

That the Lord in his wrath takes away with a ſtroke, ſhould make us all beware, fear and tremble; but that which followeth, may make us wary, fear and tremble much more; for, ſaith Elihu in the cloſe of the verſe,

Then a great Ranſom cannot deliver thee.

The word rendred Ranſom ſignifies that which is paid as a price for the deliverance of a Captive out of bondage: Thus Chriſt gave himſelf a Ranſom for ſinners. But here is a Caſe wherein no Ranſom will be taken, no, though it be, not a ſmall, petty Ranſom, but a great Ranſom, of that (ſaith Elihu) it cannot deliver thee. As if he had ſaid, When once God is ſo far provoked, that the Decree is gone forth to deſtroy thee, then it will be in vain to think of getting off by Ranſom.

Here it may be queried, What is this great Ranſom that will not deliver? There is a twofold Ranſom, by one of which the people of God are ſometimes delivered, and always by the other.

Firſt, The people of God are ſometimes ranſomed or delivered by the deſtruction and ruine of the wicked; that's their Ranſom, and that not ſeldom, proves a great Ranſom. It is ſaid expreſly (Prov. 21.18.) The wicked ſhall be a Ranſom for the righteous; how, a Ranſom for the righteous! will a wicked man pay a Ranſom for the righteous? Or will the wicked man offer himſelf a Ranſom for him, and ſay, I'le die inſtead of the righteous man? Surely there's no ſuch thing to be expected from him. Peradventure for a good man (ſaith the Apoſtle, Rom. 5.7,8.) one would even dare to die; that is, one good man may poſſibly be willing to lay down his life for another good man. Scarcely for a righteous man would one die; that is, for a man, who only gives every man his due, or doth every man right: But for a good man, that is, for a man that hath been very kind and bountiful to others, ſome would even dare to die; yet he that doth ſo, muſt be ſuppoſed to be a righteous and a good man himſelf. For it cannot be thought that a wicked man would give himſelf a Ranſom for the righteous, that he would die for him whom he doth not love, yea, whom he uſually hates to the death. How then is it affirmed by Solomon, that the wicked ſhall be a Ranſom for the righteous? The meaning is, God will deſtroy the wicked, to ſave the righteous, or he will ſave the righteous, even through the blood and deſtruction of the wicked: In that ſence the wicked are many times a Ranſom for the righteous, rather than the righteous ſhall periſh, the Lord will deſtroy the wicked, Thus the Lord ſpake by his Prophet of old (Iſa. 43.3.) I gave Egypt for thy Ranſom, Ethiopia and Sheba for thee. How was Egypt a Ranſom for Iſrael? Had they any mind to deliver the people of God? No; but rather than God would not have Iſrael ſaved, he deſtroyed Pharaoh and the Egyptians in the Red Sea. Thus the Lord makes the wicked a Ranſom for the righteous. Though Egypt were a very goodly Country, yet God deſtroyed it by ten Plagues, that he might deliver Iſrael. Though Pharaoh was a great Prince, he drowned him in the Sea, rather than his people ſhould go back into Captivity. Solomon gives us this ſenſe of the Prophets words fully in his own (Prov. 11.8.) The righteous is delivered out of trouble, and the wicked cometh in his ſtead.

Secondly, There is another, a more excellent Ranſom for the people of God, and that is the Blood of Jeſus Chriſt: We are bought with a price, dearly bought, and that's the Price with which we are bought (1 *Cor.*6.20.) that's a ranſom which ſets ſinners free, and make them free indeed (John 8.36.) free from ſin, and free unto righteouſneſs (Matth. 20.28.) He gave himſelf a ranſom for many; for a great many, for all who believe and take hold of his name. When Elihu ſaith, A great ranſom cannot deliver, 'tis not to be underſtood of the ranſom which Chriſt hath paid; that's a ranſom ſo great, ſo precious, that it hath, and doth, and will for ever deliver the greateſt, the worſt of ſinners, who run to it from the wrath of God.

What then is the ranſom that is invalid and uſeleſs, which will not be accepted, which cannot deliver?

I anſwer, Firſt, in general; it is any thing on this ſide Chriſt, be it what it will. The greateſt ranſom that men can deviſe or heap up together, or that men can make, whatſoever it is, beſides the ranſom of Gods own appointment, will not deliver a ſinner when once wrath hath ſeized upon him.

I anſwer, Secondly, as to particulars: It is not, Firſt, Riches, no not Gold. Secondly, Is it not our own prayers, no not tears. Thirdly, Is it not our own good works, no not our own righteouſneſs. Fourthly, It is not any of the good works or righteouſneſs of any other, the holieſt men on Earth, no not the righteouſneſs of the Saints and holy Angels in Heaven, that can deliver us from the wrath of God. The firſt of theſe particulars Elihu gives for inſtance in verſe 19. (of which I ſhall there ſpeak further) and we may underſtand this verſe of all the reſt. Then a great ranſom cannot deliver thee.

Hence Note, There is nothing but the blood of Chriſt can ranſom ſinners from the wrath of God, nor will that deliver ſome ſinners.

(I ſuppoſe Elihu might have reſpect to that, in urging Job to humble himſelf and repent.) There are Caſes, wherein even the Blood of Chriſt will not deliver; though that hath an intrinſecal vertue, power, and value, to deliver any ſinner, yet, I ſay, there are caſes, wherein even that great ranſom, the Blood of Chriſt, will not deliver ſinners; or thus, there are many ſinners in ſuch a caſe, that Chriſt will not ranſom them by his Blood. But who are they?

Firſt, All that are impenitent, and perſiſt obſtinately in their ſins. If any man reſolve to go on in ſin, the Blood of Chriſt is no ranſom for him. Jeſus Chriſt came to ſave us from our ſins, not to ſave us in our ſins.

Secondly, All that are unbelievers; though they have a great meaſure of ſorrow (ſuch as it is) for ſin, yea, ſuppoſe they have left off the outward practice of thoſe ſins, for which they have ſorrowed, yet if they do not lay hold on Chriſt by faith, his Blood is no ranſom for them. As Chriſt will not ſave preſumptuous ſinners, who believe without repenting, ſo neither will he ſave incredulous ſinners, who repent without believing. Thirdly, That great price of the Blood of Chriſt is not a ranſom for apoſtatizing ſinners, who having pretended to repentance, and made profeſſion of faith, yet go back from Chriſt and his ways, at once building what they ſeemed to have deſtroyed by repentance, and deſtroying what they ſeem'd to be built up in by faith. The Apoſtle declares the doom of all ſuch (Heb. 10.26.) For if we ſin wilfully after we have received the knowledg of the truth, there remains no more Sacrifice for ſin. Wilful ſinners againſt received light caſt off the Sacrifice of Chriſt (which is our ranſom, and) with which they ſeemed to cloſe; and having caſt that off, God will never be at the coſt to provide them another Sacrifice: There remains (ſaith the Text) no more Sacrifice for ſin. They would have no more to do with that Sacrifice for ſin (that's the caſe of thoſe who ſin againſt the Holy Ghoſt) and there is no other Sacrifice for them. Such Apoſtates crucifie to themſelves the Son of God afreſh, and (by their being aſhamed of him, and turning from him, as much as in them lies) put him to open ſhame, as the Apoſtle ſpeaks (Heb. 6.6.) but God will never crucifie his Son afreſh, nor put him again to open ſhame, for the ranſoming of wilful Apoſtates. It is the ground of our hope, that God once gave up his Son to be crucified for us, but they are of all men moſt hopeleſs, who crucifie to themſelves the Son of God afreſh. The Son of God, Jeſus Chriſt, will not ſave thoſe that tread him under foot, nor ſhall the Blood of the Covenant be a ranſom for thoſe who count it an unholy thing; as 'tis ſaid at the 29. verſe. They who refuſe the Goſpel, that is, Goſpel-Grace, ſhall never have any benefit by the Goſpel; theſe Apoſtates do not only refuſe to chuſe the grace of the Goſpel, but refuſe it after a ſeeming choice of it, and are therefore ſaid in the cloſe of that verſe, to have done deſpight to the Spirit of Grace; and ſhall they who deſpiſe, and, which is more, do deſpight to the Spirit of grace, be ranſom'd through Grace? Thus we ſee, that as nothing but the Blood of Chriſt can be a ranſom, ſo ſome ſhall have no ſhare in nor benefit by that great ranſom. They who repent not, they who believe not, they who ſin wilfully after a profeſſion made, both of Faith and Repentance, can have no deliverance by that great ranſom, the Blood of Jeſus Chriſt.

Elihu having told Job in general, that if he provoked God to wrath, then a great ranſom could not deliver him, proceeds to give him one particular inſtance of what cannot; and he gives it in that which is the moſt uſual ranſom, which hath ranſomed Thouſands from the wrath of man, that is, Riches, Gold.

Verſe 19. Will he eſteem thy riches? No, not Gold, nor all the forces of ſtrength.

As if he had ſaid, Poſſibly, O Job, thou having been a great man, a rich man, the richeſt, the greateſt man in all the Eaſt, mayſt think thou couldſt buy off thy offence with Gold, and get out from under his wrath by thy wealth and riches; but ſuppoſe thou wert as great and rich as ever, or greater and richer then any are, or ever were,

Will he eſteem thy riches?

The word rendred Eſteem, ſignifies to put in order, becauſe things which are of eſteem and value, are laid up handſomely and orderly. As no man eſteems traſh, ſo he will not lay it up among his treaſures. Will he eſteem, or lay up thy riches, as ſome precious thing, as his treaſure: ſurely no. The queſtion (as frequently in Scripture) is a ſtrong denial; will he? He will not value thy riches, no more then a ruſh; what doſt tell him of thy riches, he makes no account of all that thou haſt to give, yea, though thou hadſt all the World to give: Men will eſteem thy riches, money anſwers all things among men, but alaſs, it will anſwer nothing with God, will he eſteem

ערך Ordinavit; & quia res æſtimandæ ordinantur aliæ juxta alias, ideo pro æſtimare ſumitur. Merc.

Thy riches?] Some tranſlate the word which we render Riches, by nobleneſs or greatneſs; ſo Mr. Broughton, Will he eſteem thy nobleneſs? The word ſignifies both, and Job was both, he was a great man, and a Nobleman, the chief Magiſtrate, a Prince among the people where he dwelt, as appears fully in Chapter 29. Will he eſteem either thy riches, or thy nobleneſs? Shalt thou be accepted becauſe thou art a great Lord, a mighty man, doſt thou think the Lord will eſteem thee for this? Certainly no. We may take in both ſenſes of the word, Will he eſteem thy riches, or nobleneſs?

Hence Note, Firſt, Greatneſs without goodneſs, is of little or no eſteem with God.

Note, Secondly, God will not be taken off by any outward reſpect whatſoever, from bringing vengeance upon evil men.

God will not be ſtopt in his courſe of Juſtice with riches or great titles, with honour or nobleneſs: The riches of one man cannot ranſom another, (Pſal. 49.7, 8, 9.) They that truſt in their wealth, and boaſt themſelves in the multitude of their riches, none of them can by any means redeem his Brother, nor give to God a ranſom for him. Nor can any mans riches ranſom himſelf, (Prov. 10.2.) Treaſures of wickedneſs (that is, treaſures gotten wickedly) profit nothing. Nor will the treaſures of the wicked (though well gotten) profit them, (Prov. 11.4.) Riches avail not in the day of wrath, (Zeph. 1.7.) Their Gold and Silver ſhall not profit them in the day of my wrath. If you preſent your ſelves before God with Titles of Honour, and Bags of Gold, neither the one nor the other will do it, he will not regard thy Riches, or Nobleneſs. When Iſhmael came treacherouſly upon thoſe Jews, ten of them ſaid, Slay us not, (Jer 4.8.) for we have great treaſures in the Field, of Wheat, and of Barley, and Oil, and of Wine; ſo he forbare, and ſlew them not among their Brethren. But this will not do in the day of the Lords anger.

Will he eſteem thy riches?] Some tranſlate thus, Will he regard thy crying or clamor? As if Elihu had ſaid, Cry as much as thou wilt, the Lord will not regard it. This goes higher. Many poſſibly will not be taken off from the proceſs of juſtice, by greatneſs or riches, who yet by our humble ſupplication and cry may be taken off; But will the Lord regard thy cry? Or as the Septuagint read it, Will he have regard to thy prayer? Wicked men that have rejected the Lords commands, will yet hope, or rather preſume, the Lord will hear their cry, and therefore they will be at their prayers in times of trouble, when the wrath of God breaks out; this is their laſt reſort and refuge. They who never made the Lord their choice in good times, will yet make him their refuge in evil times,, or in days of trouble; they think ſurely to be ſheltered, and ſaved, and ſpared, when they pray: But this will not do neither; Will he eſteem thy prayers? The Hebrew Text, at leaſt, allows, if not clearly holds out this reading, and it can be no hurt to take in as much profitable ſenſe, as the words, without undue ſtraining, may hold out to us. So then, when the Lords wrath appears, neither riches, nor honour, nor prayers, nor tears can give ſinners any relief. The cryes and prayers of the wicked are no more regarded by God, than their riches or greatneſs. Then they ſhall call upon me, (ſaith Wiſdom, Prov.1.28.) that is, When their fear cometh as deſolation, and their deſtruction cometh as a Whirlwind, when diſtreſs and anguiſh cometh upon them, (v. 27.) when 'tis thus with them, then they ſhall call upon me, but I will not anſwer; that is, I will not eſteem their cry. That's a very remarkable Scripture, (*Pſal.*18.41.) where David ſpeaking of his enemies, how the Lord had given him their necks, and a power to deſtroy them that hated him, preſently adds, They cryed, but there was none to ſave them, (but it may be they cryed where they ſhould not for help; no, ſaith the Text, they cryed) even to the Lord, but he anſwered them not: Then did I beat them as ſmall as the duſt before the wind, &c. The Lord having declared how reſolv'd he was to proceed in a way of wrath againſt the Jewiſh Nation, adds (Jer. 14. 12.) When they faſt I will not hear their cry. That people had been very obſtinate and rebellious, they had withſtood the call of God by the Prophet; yet when they ſaw wrath appearing and approaching, then they betook themſelves to faſting and prayer; but ſaith the Lord, it ſhall not advantage them, though they faſt and in their faſting cry, yet I will not regard them, nor be intreated: I know they will be praying to me, but I will take no notice of them. See how dreadful a thing it is to refuſe the offers and tenders of grace, to go on in a way of ſin; for then, no ranſom will do it, riches and honours, yea prayers and crys and tears, ſhall not be regarded. Will he eſteem thy riches?

שוע Clamavit. Septuaginta idin mente habuiſſe videntur, nam vertunt δεήσεως שוע opulentus, dives (Iſa.32.5.) שוע per ſcurec ſignificat opes, cap. 30. 24. cap. 34. 20. Non æſtimabit clamorem tuum, nihil ducit quantumvis clames, non eo movebitur, ſed pro divitiis malo. Merc.

No not Gold.] This is to be joyned (according to our tranſlation) with the former words, and it ſuits fully with our tranſlation of theſe words; Gold being the beſt of worldly riches, and having the greateſt power with and command over men; yet ſaith Elihu, Will he eſteem thy riches, no not Gold. He mentions that, becauſe (I ſay) it is the choiceſt part of riches, the worſt ſort of Gold is of higher eſteem and worth, than any other metal; Gold bears the greateſt price among metals, and hath the greateſt prevalency among men, but none with God. The word rendred Gold, ſignifies defending, but Gold is no defence againſt God. Will he eſteem thy riches? No not Gold. The Note is the ſame in ſubſtance with the former.

The Lord regards not men for their riches, no not for the beſt of riches.

Not only will he not eſteem your Copper, and Braſs, and Iron and Tin, but not your Gold, (1*Pet.*1.18.) Gold doth much with men, but nothing with God. I ſhall not ſtay upon this clauſe, it being only an hightning of the ſame thing before aſſerted. But

There are two other readings of the latter part of this verſe, upon which I ſhall ſtay a little: First, thus;

Will he eſteem thy riches? No not in affliction.

The word which we render as one, ſignifying the beſt Gold, refined Gold, other Interpreters render as two words, which ſignifie to be perplexed or in ſtreights; Will be eſteem thy riches? No though thou art in the greateſt ſtreights, and knoweſt not what to do.

Ne quidem in anguſtia בצר ego nomen בצר *verto in angustia; alii reddunt in ſignificatione auri, in qua reperitur, cap.*22, 24. ſed ibi ſcribitur. כצר in accentu diſtinguente pro בצר Piſc. בצר In piel, contra rapinas munivit, hinc בצר aurum lectiſſimum, quaſi ab igne munitum aut quod ſit hominis munimentum.

Hence Note, The Lord will not regard rich wicked men, when they are in ſtreights.

The Lord who eſteems not the wicked rich at any time, will leaſt eſteem them in an evil time. The Lord who hath an eſteem of, and a regard to the godly at all times, hath it eſpecially in a time of ſtreights and trouble. But as the Lord never regards wicked men, ſo then leaſt when they have moſt need of it. Will he eſteem them? No not in affliction.

There is a third reading of theſe words: Will he eſteem thy riches? No not any defence. As our tranſlation, no not Gold, falls in plainly with the firſt words of the Text; ſo this with the latter. Will he eſteem thy riches, no not Gold, ſay we, anſwering the word riches in the firſt part of the verſe. Will he eſteem thy riches? No not defence, ſay others, which anſwers thoſe words, nor all the forces of ſtrength, in the latter part of the verſe. So then, as our reading complies with the former part of the verſe, ſo this hath as fair a compliance with the latter; No not any defence. The word ſignifies to fortify, to fence, to make ſtrong, and hence, Gold, becauſe Gold is mans ſtrength and defence. Riches are a great ſtrength; to be rich in Gold is a mans ſtrong tower. Will he eſteem thy riches? No, not Gold, or defence,

Nor all the forces of ſtrength] Theſe words, in the cloſe of the verſe, being the ſame with the middle part, as laſt rendred, may very well be drawn up into one, and conceived of, as if Elihu had ſaid, Suppoſe thou art a mighty man and haſt ſtrong forces, he will not eſteem thee for all that; the very weakneſs of God is ſtronger than man (1Cor.1.25.) that is, than the ſtrongeſt man, or than any ſtrength which man can procure, either to oppoſe God, or to protect himſelf againſt him. The Prophet to ſhew the great power of the Caldeans, ſaith (*Hab.*1.10.) They ſhall ſcoff at Kings, and deride every ſtrong hold. Surely the Lord is ſo far from eſteeming the defences and forces of ſtrength, which men make to, and for themſelves, that he ſcoffs at and derides them. The Lord will deride all the ſtrong holds of man, even the forces of ſtrength. Some get internal carnal ſtrong holds, to fortifie themſelves in, of which the Apoſtle ſpeaks (2*Cor.* 10. 4.) The weapons of our warfare are not carnal, but mighty, through God, to the caſting down of ſtrong holds. Moſt ſinners are men of wit, they provide themſelves ſtrong holds to ſave their ſins in, and have their excuſes and reaſonings to defend their ſins or themſelves in their ſins by. Others are men of might, they get external ſtrong holds, they have Armies and Cities of defence, to ſecure themſelves by; but will the Lord regard either? Not the ſtrong holds, ſet up and maintained by force of wit, no, nor all the forces of ſtrength. Though thou haſt Army upon Army, and City upon City, though thou doſt add Caſtle to Caſtle, and Fort to Fort, they are no more than paper walls before the Lord. As neither riches nor nobleneſs, ſo no power of man can ſecure man from the hand of God. Mr. Broughton varieth a little from our reading, yet concurs fully in ſenſe; No Gold, nor any other thing ſhould be able to give ſound ſtrength; which himſelf expounds by this ſhort gloſs. If now thou deſpiſeſt repentance, thou ſhalt utterly be caſt off. As if he had ſaid to Job, it is not thy, or any mans ſtanding out againſt God, that will help you, your only help is in repentance and ſelf-humbling before God. Will he eſteem thy riches? No, not Gold, nor all the forces of ſtrength.

Hence Note, There is no ſtrength againſt the Lord.

As there is no counſel, ſo no force of ſtrength againſt the Lord. Hannah ſang this truth (1*Sam.*2.9.) By ſtrength ſhall no man prevail, that is, againſt man, if God be with him; much more is it true that by ſtrength ſhall no man prevail againſt God (*Iſa.*1.31.) The ſtrong ſhall be tow, and the maker thereof as a ſpark; that is, as ſome expound, their Idols, whom they made their ſtrength, ſhall be as tow, that is, as the moſt combuſtible matter, eaſily conſumed, and the maker of it, that is, the Idol-maker, ſhall be as a ſpark. Do but blow a ſpark among tow, and what will become of it? Such are the ſtrongeſt Idols, in which men truſt, and ſuch are the mightieſt and ſtrongeſt men before the Lord, who truſt in them. Tow or Flax or Hemp (after the dreſſing) is as tinder, that the leaſt ſpark will give fire to. The ſtrong (Idol) ſhall be as tow, and the maker of it as a ſpark; or, which is in effect the ſame, The ſtrong (man) ſhall be tow, and that which he hath made, or (as we put in the Margin) his work, that is, his Idol, ſhall be as a ſpark, and they ſhall both burn, or periſh together. This is the ſentence of the Lord againſt the ſtrong, a ſpark ſhall ſet them on fire and burn them; how then ſhall the ſtrong be able to ſtand before the Lord who is not a ſpark, but a fire, and that a conſuming fire! And therefore I may urge Elihu's counſel to Job, upon all ſorts of men, upon thoſe eſpecially who perſiſt in any ſin, take heed, becauſe there is wrath, beware, &c. Or I may urge them with the Prophets dehortation (*Jer.*9.23.) Let not the wiſe man glory in his wiſdom, nor the mighty man in his ſtrength, nor the rich man in his riches, for, none of theſe can help or deliver from wrath, only Jeſus Chriſt can, and it hath been ſhewed who they are to whom he will not be a delivering ranſom. It may be very uſeful to conſider what negatives Elihu puts upon ſinners as to deliverance from kindled wrath; not riches, not honour, not crying, not praying, not ſtrength, not defence can deliver without turning from ſin to God, and all in Chriſt.

Elihu having urged two arguments to make Job beware of wrath, firſt, becauſe nothing could ranſom him, God regards not riches, no not Gold; ſecondly, becauſe nothing could reſcue him, all the forces of ſtrength could not defend him againſt, nor fetch him out from under the hand of God; Elihu (I ſay) having diſpatched theſe two arguments, he in the 20. verſe gives a further, and that a third argument to move Job to take heed of wrath, becauſe, as he could neither be ranſomed nor reſcued, ſo neither could he be hid or ſheltred from the wrath of God. That is the general ſenſe of the next verſe.

Verſe 20. Deſire not the night; when people are cut off in their place.

The root of that word which we render Deſire, ſignifies a very earneſt breathing or longing after a thing, as conceiving and believing the enjoyment thereof would be an exceeding comfort and refreſhment to us. So 'tis uſed in the ſeventh Chapter of this Book at the ſecond verſe; as the ſervant earneſtly deſireth the ſhadow, &c. When a Labourer is hot and ſweltered almoſt (as we ſay) at his work in the Sun, how earneſtly doth he deſire the ſhadow! We ſay (in the Margin of that place) he gapeth after the ſhadow. A man, when he is hot, gapes to ſuck in freſh Air. Such an intendment and force there is in this word, deſire not, long not for, gape not after שאפ Significat reſpirare, anhelare, ad aliquid vel rei alicujus ſummo deſiderio teneri. Merc.

The night.] The night ſeems not to be a thing, or a ſeaſon ſo deſireable, that we ſhould gape for it or long after it. Solomon ſaith (*Eccl.*11.7.) Surely light is pleaſant, and it is a comfortable thing for the eyes to behold the Sun; but who hath a deſire after the night? What is the beauty or comlineſs of the night that any ſhould ſo much deſire it? why then doth Elihu here forbid Job (as ſuppoſing he did) to deſire it? Deſire not the night.

I anſwer, the night may be taken two ways, or under a twofo'd notion. Firſt properly, as that which caſteth a vail or mantle of darkneſs over both perſons and things, and covers them from our ſight; in alluſion to which, the ſenſe is this; do not hope to hide or conceal thy ſelf from the eye or knowledg of God. As thou canſt be not ranſomed, as thou canſt not be reſcued from his power (which was ſhewed before) ſo deſire not the night, for thou canſt not be obſcured from his knowledg under the covert of it, there is no hiding from God. Though I judg that interpretation too groſs, which ſuppoſeth Elihu counſelling Job not to deſire the night, as Robbers and Adulterers, to cover him while doing wickedly, yet poſſibly he might think Job was not ſo free to confeſs the evils which he had done, and therefore rather deſired the concealment of them.

Secondly, The night in Scripture, as alſo in humane Authors, is put improperly for death. All the dead are wrapt up in a night of darkneſs. Hence that counſel (John 9.4.) Work while you have the day, the night cometh when no man can work. We may work, yea, much work is done in the natural light. It is ſaid of the vertuous woman (Prov. 31. 18.) Her candle goes not out by night; ſhe and her maids are at work in the night; therefore it cannot be ſtrictly meant, that no man can work in the night. The night there is the night of death, or of an extream troublous life; in theſe nights, eſpecially in the former, no man can work, for there is no wiſdom, nor device, nor labour in the grave whither we are going, (*Eccl.*9.10.) According to this Scripture Interpretation, deſire not the night, is deſire not death. Job had put forth ſuch deſires more than once (*Chap.*7.15.) My Soul chooſeth ſtrangling and death rather than life. Mr. Broughton tranſlates, Breath not unto that night: For peoples paſſage to their place: That is, (ſaith he) deſire not death, the common paſſage of all men, as thou haſt done. Therefore Elihu ſeems to call Job off from thoſe deſires; do not thou peeviſhly or impatiently (becauſe of the trouble of thy life) call for death, leſt it come too ſoon, and it do by thee as it hath done by many others, whom it hath cut off in judgment. So it follows here, Deſire not the night, qua abeunt populi ad locum ſuum. Jun. Qua è medio tolluntur populi in loco ipſorum. Piſc.

Ne aſpires ad illam noctem (ſc. mortis)

When people are cut off in their place.

Death is a cutting off. As many die in the night, ſo whenever any die they are cut off from this World, and all the imployments of it. They are cut off from their deareſt friends and relations, Death cuts off the thread of life, and us from the comforts of this life.

The Hebrew is, when people aſcend. The Original Scripture expreſſeth dying by aſcending, though the death of the wicked is rather a deſcending. It is ſaid by a late Writer concerning the Heathen profane and wicked Emperors of Rome, Such a one deſcended (that is, died) in ſuch a Year of his abomination. Now though the wicked deſcend when they die, yet there is a ſenſe alſo wherein all men may be ſaid to aſcend when they die; and there is no doubt but the godly, as to their more noble part, aſcend to God when they die. Thus the word is uſed in the fifth Chapter of this Book, at verſe 16. where Eliphaz ſpeaking of the death of a godly man, ſaith to Job, Thou ſhalt come to thy grave in a full age, like as a ſhock of Corn cometh (or aſcendeth) in his ſeaſon. David deprecated an immature death under this Metaphor (*Pſal.*102.14.) Take me not away in the midſt of mine age. The word is, let me not aſcend in the midſt of mine age, that is, before I have meaſured the uſual courſe of life. Thus to aſcend, is the ſame with to be cut off; death cuts off the beſt from this World, and then they aſcend to a better. This ſenſe of the words ſuits well with the latter expoſition of the night, as taken for the night of death. The word aſcend, is conceived to have in it a double alluſion; firſt, to Corn which is taken up by the hand of the reaper, and then laid down on the ſtubble. Secondly, unto the light of a Candle, which as the Candle ſpends, or as that which is the food of the fire is ſpending, aſcends, and at laſt goes out and vaniſheth.

Tranſlatio à candelis, quarum lumen aſcendit, atque ita paulatim conſumuntur ipſa.

There is yet a further ſenſe of the whole verſe thus; deſire not the night, &c. That is, do not curiouſly enquire the cauſe of that divine judgment by which God ſometimes ſweeps away whole Nations, good and bad together, in the night, or ſuddenly. Or thus, diſquiet not thy mind in the night, but rather reſt in the will of God, when thou ſeeſt or heareſt of thoſe great deſtructions which come upon Perſons or Nations. Deſire not the night, when people are cut off in their place, that is, when they die in, or are removed from the place where they formerly lived and had their abode; in which ſenſe it is ſaid of the dead, their place ſhall know them no more (Pſal.103.16.) How well ſoever any are ſetled, death cuts them off in their place.

תחת Sub, ſubter ſæpe ſignificat in loco.

Firſt, Foraſmuch as Elihu ſpeaking to Job in this diſtreſſed eſtate, wiſhes him not to deſire the night,

> Obſerve, In times of diſtreſs and trouble we are apt to make many ſtrange wiſhes, or to expreſs uncouth requeſts and deſires.

The Prophet Jeremiah quits himſelf from this in one point (*Chap.*17.16.) I have not deſired the woful day (Lord) thou knoweſt. He was ſo far from deſiring it, that he prayed for the peace and proſperity of that people, but though Jeremy did not deſire the evil day to come on others, yet when the evil day was come upon himſelf we find him venting ſtrange and ſtrong deſires of that kind (*Chap.*9.2.) O that my head were a fountain, and mine eyes rivers of tears, that I might weep night and day for the ſlain of the Daughter of my People. He had viſions of ſlaughter, and he did even beg a head melted into water for abundant mourning over that day. But what were his other, what were his further wiſhes, with reſpect to himſelf at that time? We have them in the next verſe. O that I had in the Wilderneſs a lodging place of a wayfaring man, that I might leave my people, and go from them, for they be all Adulterers, a company of treacherous men. What uncomfortable deſires had Jeremiah as to that day of diſtreſs! O how did he covet to have a retiring place, any hole in the Wilderneſs, like a wayfaring man, that he might leave his people and ſee them no more, becauſe they were ſo wicked, and their wickedneſs he foreſaw would bring down ſuch dreadful evils upon them. And as he wiſht this ſad retirement upon the foreſight of evils to come, ſo we find him in another place (*Chap.*20.14,15,16, &c.) wiſhing that he had never been born to ſee ſuch preſent evils. We have the like plain wiſh of David, in the day of his trouble (*Pſal.*55.2.) Attend unto me (O God) and hear me, I mourn in my complaint, and make a noiſe; becauſe the voice of the enemy, becauſe of the oppreſſion of the wicked: For they caſt iniquity upon me, and in wrath they hate me (they charged him with evils that he had not done) my heart is ſore pained within me, the terrors of death are fallen upon me, fearfulneſs and trouble are come upon me, and horror hath overwhelmed me, or covered me. David was at that time in a very ſad day, you ſee; and what was his wiſh that day? We have it in verſe 6. And I ſaid, O that I had wings like a Dove, for then would I flee away and be at reſt; lo then would I wander far off and remain in the Wilderneſs. Holy David could not keep his heart (in thoſe diſtreſſes) from extravagant wiſhes. David had the integrity of a Dove (as he often pleaded before the Lord) and being diſtreſt, he wiſhed alſo for the wings of a Dove, that he might flee away, and get out of the reach of all thoſe impendent calamities. How uſually is it for good men in bad days to breath out ſuch wiſhes? One wiſhes that he had never been born, rather than to ſee ſuch a day; another wiſhes he may die preſently, rather than live in ſuch a day. When the Apoſtle John had given the propheſie of dreadful Judgments to come upon the wicked World, or the World of wicked men, he preſently tells us what their wiſhes or deſires will be (*Rev.*9.6.) And in thoſe days ſhall men ſeek death, and ſhall not find it, and ſhall deſire to die, and death ſhall flee from them. Moſt men flee death, that's a miſery; but death fleeth from ſome men, and that's a greater miſery. They are in the worſt of conditions who would have death when death will not be had. Their lives are worſe than death who only wiſh to die. What non-ſenſe wiſhes and deſires had they alſo in the day of the Lords anger, mentioned in the ſame Book (*Chap.*6.16.) Who ſaid to the Mountains and to the Rocks, fall on us, and hide us from the face of him that ſitteſt on the Throne, and from the wrath of the Lamb. It is poſſible for good men ſometimes to have ſtrange wiſhes; but O how lamentable are the wiſhes of wicked men and unbelievers, who have no part nor intereſt in Jeſus Chriſt, in thoſe times when Conſcience is wounded and awakened, or when a day of the Lords wrath or Judgment from the Lord appeareth! When Chriſt the Lamb ſhall ſit upon the Throne, and call them to give an account, O then they will wiſh for Rocks and Mountains to fall upon them, that they might not appear; how glad will they then be to be hidden with an everlaſting night! They cannot but deſire the night, who have ſinned againſt light. Holy Job could not forbear to deſire the night of death in the day of his diſtreſs; what deſires then muſt the wicked have, who have no hope beyond this life!

Again, as to the vanity of that deſign of ſome in deſiring the night for ſhelter,

Note, There is nothing can cover us from the eye, or ſecure us from the hand of God.

What is darkneſs to God, who is light, and in whom there is no darkneſs at all (1 John 1.5.) Deſire not the night. As Gold and Silver cannot ranſom ſinners, as great forces, (all the Armies on Earth) forces of ſtrength cannot help ſinners, ſo the night cannot hide them; they that are in the groſſeſt darkneſs, are never the more out of Gods ſight; The darkneſs is not darkneſs to him, the darkneſs and the light to him are both alike (Pſal.139.11,12.) and therefore he ſaid before (*verſ.*7.) Whither ſhall I go from thy Spirit? or whither ſhall I flee from thy preſence? If I aſcend up to Heaven thou art there, &c. Whereſoever we are, God is, who is every where; nothing can keep us off from, or keep us out of eye of God.

Laſtly, as the night, is taken for death; Deſire not the night,

Hence Note, It is a vain wiſh to deſire death for our reſcue, or eſcape from the evils of this life.

Death is it ſelf an evil, the worſt of natural evils. How can that help us out of our evils of trouble, which is it ſelf the moſt troubleſom evil? The Lord promiſeth ſome of his people that they ſhould die before the evil day; Joſiah and Hezekiah had ſuch promiſes: 'Tis a favour to die (as they did) in the aſſurance of eternal life, before we feel the evils of this life. But death, conſidered in it ſelf, is no relief againſt evil; and as it is the worſt of natural evils in it ſelf, ſo it carrieth thoſe who are unprepared and unprovided for it; to worſer evils than any they can meet with in this life. Some deſire death to eſcape the evils of this life, when, as ſoon as they die, they go to the evils of another life, which are the ſecond death, ſuch a death as hath no ſecond, and deſcend not only to the grave, but to Hell. And what hath any one got by leaving the troubles of this life, to fall into the dolors of that ſecond ſecondleſs death! They only dream of ſecurity by death, who are unprepared to die. Death is good for none but thoſe that are fitted for, and have by faith laid hold upon eternal life.

VERS. 21.

Take heed, regard not iniquity, for this thou haſt choſen rather than affliction.

IN this verſe Elihu gives Job another ſerious admonition, or re-enforceth the former, warning him to take heed of ſpeaking or uttering any thing raſhly, unduly, or unbecomingly of God, in reſpect of his troubles and ſufferings; and this he urgeth upon him by two ſorts of arguments, as will appear when I come to handle the two following verſes.

Take heed, regard not iniquity.] As if he had ſaid, beware, be well adviſed what thou doſt, and what thou ſayeſt. The word which we render take heed, ſignifies to keep and preſerve, but moſt properly, to prevent and keep off any evil, that it fall not upon us. The noun, from this root, ſignifies a watch tower, upon which a perſon ſtands to obſerve and give warning of any danger, or to deſcry any approaching enemy. 'Tis tranſlated, take heed, as here, ſo (1 Kings 2.4.) where David upon his death-bed, gives counſel to Solomon his Son and Succeſſor what to do, and how to walk in the way of the Lord, that (ſaith he) The Lord may continue his word which he ſpake concerning me, ſaying, if thy Children take heed to their ways, that is, if they are very watchful over their ways, both as to their perſonal and princely walkings, if they walk in my Statutes, then I will do thus and thus for them. Thus ſaith Elihu, take heed, look about you, have your eyes in your head, be careful. Theſe take heeds are frequent in Scripture. From whence (before I come to the matter about which Elihu would have Job take heed)

Obſerve, It is our duty to be heedful.

We cannot be dutiful unleſs we are heedful; a heedleſs perſon cannot be a faultleſs perſon. This duty runs quite through all we have to do; take heed, firſt, to the inward motions of the Soul, take heed how and what you think (*Pro.*4.23.) keep thy heart with all diligence (with all keepings, with all heedings, it is this word in the Text) heed thy heart, that is, thy firſt ſtirrings and motions unto any work. Secondly, take heed, as to the firſt motions of the Soul, ſo to the affections of the Soul, which are Soul-motions formed up and ſtated; take heed of your affections, how and what you deſire, how and what you love, how & what you hate. Thirdly, take heed to the tongue, how you ſpeak, & what you ſpeak, where you ſpeak, and why or for what ends you ſpeak, there is a great deal of take heed belonging to the tongue. Fourthly, take heed to the ear, when you hear others ſpeak, take heed how you hear, and when ye hear, and what you hear; infection may ſoon come in at thoſe ports. Fifthly, take heed to the eyes, what you behold; the eyes are Windows which often let in vanity, yea, I may ſay, venom and poiſon into the Soul. In a word take heed of all your actions, or of your whole converſation; take heed what you do, and how you do it; ſee that ye walk circumſpectly, take heed in and about all theſe things, that ye ſin not, eſpecially, that ye neither have, nor carry on any deſign or work that is ſinful; take heed that ye be not found falling into that error, to avoid which, Elihu calleth or awakeneth Job to this watchfulneſs, take heed.

אל־תפן A verbo פנה quod ſæpe animi intentionem, vel contemplationem valet ad aliquem finem, utpote ad miſerandum, vel interrogandum, vel adjudicandum. Bold.

Regard not iniquity.] Here is the ſpecial matter in the Text, about which Elihu adviſes Job to be heedful, regard not iniquity. The word rendred regard, ſignifies the turning of the face to look upon any object; that which we much regard, we turn about to look upon it, as that which we ſlight, we turn away from it and will not look upon it, we turn our face to a perſon or thing, ſignifying our approbation, and we turn away our face to ſhew our diſlike; and therefore we do well expreſs this word, which ſignifies to turn the face, by regarding; turn not thy face to iniquity, look not to it, give it not any reſpect or countenance, regard not און Iniquitas, vanitas. Ἄτοπα, Abſurda, indecentia. Sept.

Iniquity.] The word ſignifies vanity properly. All iniquity is vanity, ſin is vanity, and ſin hath brought vanity into the whole creation, yea ſin makes all things a vexation to us. The Chaldee ſaith, regard not a lie, the Septuagint, regard not things abſurd or uncomly.

But what iniquity doth Elihu here chiefly intend? I anſwer, It is a truth of iniquity in general, regard not any iniquity; yet here Elihu ſpeaks not in that compaſs; as if he ſhould ſay, regard not robbery, regard not murder, regard not adultery and wantonneſs, regard not any of theſe foul and groſs ſins; but there was a ſpecial ſin which Elihu had an aim at, and which he thought Job gave too much regard unto; regard not iniquity, that is, undue ſpeeches and heart-grudgings, or impatient complainings againſt the proceedings of God with thee; that is, do not ſtand ſo much complaining about what thou ſuffereſt, and juſtifying thy ſelf in what thou haſt done, expoſtulate the matter no more with God, wiſh not for the night of death, &c. This is to regard or turn thy face to iniquity; take heed of theſe things, do not regard theſe evils, this kind of iniquity.

Further, when Elihu ſaith regard not iniquity, we are to expound him by theſe affirmatives; ſlight it, turn from it, abhor it, loath it, deſpiſe it, reject it; all theſe affirmatives are contained in that negative, regard not. Frequently in Scripture, negatives intend their contrary affirmatives. When that Scripture ſaith, deſpiſe not propheſying (1 Theſ. 5.) the meaning is, ye ſhall regard it, love it, follow it, delight in it; ſo on the other hand, when this Scripture ſaith, regard not iniquity, the meaning is, deſpiſe and oppoſe iniquity to the utmoſt; Take heed, regard not iniquity. From this part of the verſe thus opened,

Obſerve, Firſt, It is no eaſie matter to keep our ſelves right when things ſeem to go wrong with us.

It is a hard thing to forbear iniquity when we are pinched with adverſity; not to ſpeak unduely and uncomly, not to ſpeak amiſs of God, not to ſpeak unbecoming our ſelves, require great caution in a day of diſtreſs. We have need to take heed of this iniquity, to be watchful in an evil day, that we neither do nor ſay that which is evil. When things are amiſs with us, we are very apt to ſpeak and do amiſs. As ſoon as ever the hand of God toucheth us, how do we grieve! how do we complain! how do we murmur! how do we repine! O regard not this, 'tis an iniquity to be taken heed of, in a dark day, in a day of trouble, ſuch as was upon Job; as black a day was upon him, as ever upon any in the world, as to his perſonal condition. If ſuch a Cedar failed, have not we, poor ſhrubs, reaſon to look about in ſuch a day? When an affliction is very great, they that are for reputation great and ſtrong in faith, very choice believers, experienced ſoldiers in the wars of Jeſus Chriſt (when an affliction (I ſay) grows very great) how apt are they to be diſmayed, to be out of heart, to deſpond, to look upon themſelves as undone, and all undone! O regard not, turn from this iniquity. It ſhould not ſatisfie any ſervant of God that he avoids groſs iniquities in practice, he muſt make conſcience of an impatient word, and order his ſpeech aright under the rod, as well as his converſation.

Secondly, Foraſmuch as Elihu calls this an iniquity, Obſerve, Impatient ſpeeches render us guilty, let our afflictions and troubles be never ſo great.

Job's affliction was as heavy as the ſand, yet Elihu tells him, your complainings are your iniquity. I have had occaſion ſeveral times in this book to ſpeak of the evil of complaining, under the worſt and soreſt of afflictions, and therefore I only name it here.

Thirdly, taking iniquity in the largeſt notion,

Obſerve, Sin deſerves no reſpect from us.

Sinners deſerve no reſpect, much leſs doth ſin. 'Tis one part of the character which David gives of a Citizen of Sion, (Pſal. 15.4) He is one, in whoſe eyes a vile perſon (that is, a wicked perſon, a perſon given up to his luſts) is contemned. That which makes a perſon vile and contemptible, is worſe than a vile perſon, and therefore ſhould have leſs reſpect, or more contempt from us. Remember, ſin is the only thing which makes any perſon vile; ſhould we then give any reſpect to ſin? ſhould we give reſpect to that which brings utter diſreſpect upon us? have we any reaſon to honour that which brings us to ſhame? to regard that which makes us regardleſs both with God and all good men? However ſome men are regarded with men for their wickedneſs, I mean with wicked men (they regard their like the more, when they are moſt like them) yet (I ſay) ſin makes every man regardleſs with God and every good man: Therefore regard it not, yea, ſlight it, trample upon it. Take that

For a fourth note in the affirmative;

Iniquity is utterly to be diſregarded and abominated;

We ſhould abhor it and caſt it out of our ſouls, we ſhould throw it out of our converſation.

Note, Fifthly, To regard iniquity is the mark of a wicked man.

As 'tis his property to diſregard all good (Pſal. 36.4.) he ſetteth not his heart to that which is good, he abhorreth not evil; that is, he hath no regard to the good of duty, and he hath a great regard to the evil of iniquity. His not abhorring evil is to be interpreted in the affirmative, he regards, reſpects evil, he prizes and values his very baſeſt luſts before the Law and Will of God. David diſclaimeth this baſe ſpirit (Pſal. 66. 18.) If I regard iniquity in my heart, God will not hear my prayers. Now who are they whoſe prayers God will not hear? We have the anſwer made by the blind man (Joh. 9.) God heareth not ſinners: whom will he hear then, ſeeing all are ſinners? His meaning is, he hears not impenitent ſinners, unbelieving ſinners, ſuch as trade on in a way of ſin. Thus David concluded, if I regard iniquity in my heart, God will not hear me; for if I regard iniquity, I am of thoſe ſinners whoſe prayers God will not hear. Though David had done great iniquities, and had much iniquity in his heart, yet he regarded no iniquity in his heart, If I have looked to any iniquity in my heart (ſaith he) as the word is, that is, if iniquity in my heart be ſmiled upon, if I have pleaſed my ſelf with it, if I have given it a good look, I were a wicked man, and God heareth not ſuch.

Laſtly, from theſe words, Elihu ſpeaking thus to Job, a godly man, take heed, regard not iniquity.

Note, A godly man ſhould take heed of doing any thing which may ſignifie the leaſt reſpect or regard unto ſin, the leaſt reſpect to the leaſt ſin.

Indulge not thy ſelf in complainings and impatience, leſt thou be found to regard iniquity, as Job is here charged in the next words.

For this thou haſt choſen rather than affliction.

Here Elihu applieth the matter yet cloſer to Job; I have adviſed thee, to take heed, not to regard iniquity, and my admonition is not without cauſe; I do not ſpeak at random, for I tell thee plainly, thou haſt choſen this rather than affliction; that is, thou haſt regarded iniquity. To chooſe is to regard.

This thou haſt choſen rather than affliction. This, What? This ſin, impatient complaining and expoſtulating with God, this ſin thou haſt choſen. The word which we tranſlate to chooſe, denotes a very ſerious and exact work of the ſoul. Choice is a deliberate act; we chooſe upon diſcuſſion and debate; choice is made upon trial and proof. Thus the word is uſed (*Exod.*17. 9.) Joſhua was to take choſen, approved, experienced men, to go to the war againſt Amalek. David gathered all the choſen men of Iſrael (2 Sam. 6. 1.) And thus the Lord ſpake to the houſe of Jacob by the Prophet (Iſa. 48. 10.) I have choſen thee; Where? I have choſen thee in the fire of affliction. Affliction is a tryer, and either diſcovers who are fit to be choſen, or fits and prepares them to be choſen. This thou haſt choſen

Rather than affliction.] But may we ſay that Job ſat down, and putting his affliction in one ballance and ſin in another, choſe iniquity rather than affliction, or ſin rather than ſuffering? Surely the bent of Job's ſpirit, the frame of his heart was far otherwiſe; nor is it conſiſtent with a gracious ſtate, or a ſtate of grace, to ſit down and make a perfect election of any ſin, upon any terms whatſoever. Therefore the word chooſing may be taken in a milder ſenſe, or in a more moderate intendment; as if Elihu had ſaid, Thou haſt ſpoken and done ſuch things, thou haſt behaved thy ſelf ſo under thine afflictions, as that a man may ſay, ſurely thou haſt choſen iniquity rather than affliction; thou haſt given others great cauſe to judg thus of thee. Elihu did not purpoſe to faſten this upon Job, that he had purpoſely concluded to chooſe ſin rather than affliction; but he had taken liberty (through the violence of his temptations and the extremity of his pains) to uſe ſuch impatient ſpeeches and actings as might be interpreted, in a ſenſe, a chooſing of iniquity (that is, impatience) rather than affliction; that is, a quiet ſufferance of affliction. This thou haſt choſen rather than affliction, or, (as ſome render it) For this cauſe haſt thou choſen any thing rather than affliction, thou haſt choſen what came next rather than affliction; or, thou haſt choſen this becauſe of thine affliction, ſo others read it; that is, thou haſt been ſo preſt with thine affliction and trouble, that thou careſt not what thou chuſeſt.

Præ afflictione. i. e. magis quam afflictionem, hoc eſt tolerantiam afflictionis. Metonymia ſubjecti. Piſc.

Mr. Broughton thus; Beware thou look not to ſorrow, to chooſe that for thy affliction. The ſum of all is, as if Elihu had thus beſpoken Job in this part of the verſe; O Job, whereas God requires of thee to give him glory in the humble ſubmiſſion of thy ſoul unto him, and ſitting patiently under his mighty hand, thou haſt behaved thy ſelf quite otherwiſe, thou haſt carried it ſtoutly, and uttered very bitter complainings of thy condition, thou haſt not given God the glory of his ſoveraignty, of his holineſs, juſtice, purity and goodneſs, in thy affliction, thou haſt not ſet thy ſelf to do this as thou ſhouldſt, but thou haſt run out exceedingly, and overſhot thy ſelf; So that, I may even ſay of thee, thou haſt choſe this iniquity, rather than ſubmitted to thy affliction.

Elihu ſpeaks reprovingly, this thou haſt choſen; Is this a good choice?

Hence note, Firſt, Sin, or that which is ſinful, ought not to be choſen whatſoever we chooſe.

As Solomon counſelleth in the book of Proverbs, With all thy gettings get underſtanding, he means ſpiritual underſtanding: as if he had ſaid, Whatever thou art getting be ſure thou get wiſdom for thy ſoul, wiſdom to ſalvation, wiſdom for eternity; in all thy gettings get underſtanding: So I may ſay in this place, among all your chooſings be ſure you never chooſe ſin; that's not to be choſen, leave that out, or paſs that by in all your elections. This is a point of very large compaſs; it ſuits not my work here, to inſiſt much upon it, yet I ſhall take leave a little; What ever you chooſe, chooſe not ſin. Why?

Firſt, Sin is evil in it ſelf, and that which is (malum in ſe) evil in it ſelf, or evil it ſelf, is not the object of choice; no man is to chooſe evil, nor properly can chooſe it.

Secondly, Chooſe not ſin, for ſin is an evil forbidden, the Law is againſt it, and the Goſpel too.

Thirdly, Chooſe not ſin, for ſin is a diſhonour to God, and we ſhould rather chooſe to die than diſhonour God.

Fourthly, Chooſe not ſin, for it brings deſtruction upon man. Sin ſtrictly and abſtractly conſidered, cannot properly be choſen. A rational creature cannot chooſe ſin properly, becauſe ſin is evil; and election being the office of the Will, whoſe adequate object is good, ſin, ſtrictly taken, cannot be choſen. But ſin is often choſen, and 'tis the choice of moſt men, they chooſe iniquity rather than affliction; iniquity is the choice and the beloved of many a man's ſoul. But how? It is under the pretence of ſomthing that is good; no man can chooſe it as 'tis evil. For though ſome love ſin and chooſe ſin for ſins ſake (ſuch come up higheſt and neareſt to the frame of the devil, as they that do good for goods ſake come neareſt to the holy Angels) yet, I ſay, ſin is always choſen under ſome conſideration or ſhadow of good; and if any man chooſe to ſin without reſpect to profit or gain, yet he hath ſome good in his eye, namely to pleaſe himſelf, he would have his will, and will not let God have his will; and this is good to him who is ſtark naught. But uſually ſin is choſen upon one of theſe three accounts.

Firſt, ſin is very often choſen (by a miſtake) for that which is good. They who (as the Apoſtle ſpeaks, Heb 5.12.) are unskilful in the word of righteouſneſs, they who have not ſenſes exerciſed to diſcern between good and evil, are very apt to chooſe evil in ſtead of good, that is, thinking it to be good. Thus error in opinion is choſen, upon a miſtake, for truth; and iniquity in practice, is choſen upon a miſtake, for duty. Of ſuch the Prophet ſpeaks (Iſa. 5. 20.) They call evil good, and good evil, they put darkneſs for light, and light for darkneſs: which, as ſome do knowingly, out of perverſeneſs of ſpirit; ſo others ignorantly, out of unſoundneſs of judgment, imagining that to be good which is evil, and that to be light which is nothing elſe but darkneſs, that to be ſound doctrine which is error, and that holy worſhip which is ſuperſtition. So did Paul before he was converted, he choſe iniquity, and thought he had done very well; I thought (ſaith he) I ought to do many things againſt the name of Jeſus Chriſt, (Acts 26.) I thought it my duty, I verily thought I ought to perſecute and vex thoſe who believed in Jeſus, whereever I found them. And Jeſus Chriſt himſelf forewarns his Diſciples (John 16. 2.) that the time was coming, that whoſoever killed them would think they did God ſervice. Thus many do not underſtand what is right, and ſo chooſe what is wrong.

Secondly, Others chooſe that which is evil, hoping that ſome good will come of it, that God may have ſome glory by it, and men themſelves and others may have ſome advantage by it. This reproach was caſt upon the Apoſtles and their Doctrine, which St. Paul rejected with higheſt diſdain (Rom. 3. 8.) Not as we are ſlanderouſly reported, and as ſome affirm, that we ſay, let us do evil that good may come thereof, whoſe damnation is juſt. The glory of the free grace of God will be manifeſted in the pardoning of our ſin, come therefore (ſay ſome) let us ſin our fill, that ſo the immeaſurableneſs of the Lord's goodneſs and mercy may appear. Wo to thoſe who make ſuch inferences, their damnation is juſt. To do evil upon any hopes of good by it (though it be the glory of God) ſubjects to the worſt evil of ſuffering, damnation. Others chooſe ſin; Why? They look ſome good will come by it, that is, ſome profit. If we ſtrain our conſciences to do this, we may get or keep favour with men; if we do this evil, it may gain us acceptance in the world. Many chooſe evil, becauſe in doing ſo, they ſwim with the ſtream, and comply with the many, or as the Apoſtle ſpeaks, with the courſe of this world; theſe chooſe evil, becauſe they would be in the faſhion of the moſt, they conſider which way the world is like to go, and ſet themſelves to go that way.

Thirdly, Others do evil hoping to avoid and ſcape danger by it; they chooſe the evil of ſin, that they may eſcape the evil of puniſhment. As many ſin for a little advantage, ſo others to avoid loſs, and that they may ſleep in a whole skin. Some will deny what they have done, to ſave themſelves: No body can prove it againſt us, we will deny it, and ſo avoid trouble, and keep out of the reach of danger. Yea, for this cauſe many deny the truth and renounce the ways of God, in which they have walked. Demas forſook Paul, he left the Church of God, that he might keep in with, and cloſe to the world. Upon theſe pretences and hopes many chooſe evil, not meerly and barely in it ſelf, but as it comes thus clothed: As ſome chooſe it through ignorance, ſo others upon hopes of getting good, and not a few upon hopes of avoiding evil, and keeping out of hazzard and harms-way. But whatever worldly good any gain, or danger they eſcape, by chooſing iniquity, that choice brings them into greater danger, and ſubjects them to the loſs of a greater good.

This thou haſt choſen rather than affliction. The particular iniquity (as hath been ſhewed) was impatience.

> Hence note, He that gives himſelf up to unquietneſs and impatience under the afflicting hand of God, chooſes ſin rather than affliction.

The Lord by Moſes told his People when they ſhould be brought into great tribulation, becauſe of their ſin and uneven walkings, becauſe of their breaking the Lord's Statutes and Commandments (Lev. 26.41.) If they ſhall accept of the puniſhment of their Iniquity, then it ſhall be well with them. If at ſuch a time ye ſtand not complaining and murmuring againſt me, but ſhall well accept or take the puniſhment kindly, and kiſs the Rod, acknowledging how you have provoked me, and walked unworthy of former mercy; then I will ſhew you favour, and renew your mercies: But if in affliction you fall a murmuring, and ſay, ſurely the Lord hath caſt us quite off, there's no hope, you chuſe iniquity rather than affliction.

Thirdly, Elihu in this doth not only reprove Job for doing that which was very evil in it ſelf, but he reproves him for doing that which was very evil to himſelf; this thou haſt choſe rather than affliction. As if he had ſaid, Thou doſt not know thine own good, in making this choice. We ſay, He is a wiſe man that underſtands his own good.

> Hence note, They make a very bad and miſerable choice for themſelves, who chuſe iniquity rather than affliction.

Thus Solomon concludes for Wiſdom (Prov. 8. 36.) He that ſinneth againſt me wrongeth his own ſoul. He that ſinneth, wrongs Chriſt, but Chriſt paſſeth that over, and ſeemeth to ſay, I will bear your wrongs, but pray take heed to your ſelves, will you not love your ſelves? will you not abſtain from ſin out of love to your ſelves? he that ſinneth againſt me wrongs his own ſoul; all that hate me (that is, my ways) they love death: And ſurely there is no great beauty in death, that we ſhould love it and deſire it. They chuſe very ill for themſelves, that chuſe ſin, the wages whereof is death. I grant, to chuſe affliction is but a hard choice (affliction is not good in it ſelf) but affliction, if choſen, may prove good; it may be very good to us, it may bring in much good to us: and therefore there is wiſdom, not only in chuſing any affliction, rather than ſin, but in chuſing ſome one affliction rather than another. But what good doth he chuſe, that chuſes ſin? Happy is the man that endures correction, or affliction, ſaith the Scripture in many places; but doth it ſay any where, Happy is the man that commits iniquity? If you chuſe affliction rather than iniquity, you chuſe a great deal of good First, David could ſay upon tryal (Pſal. 119. 71.) It is good for me that I have been afflicted, that I might learn thy ſtatutes. Did ever David ſay, it is good for me that I have ſinned, which is to unlearn or break Statutes? did he ever pleaſe himſelf in thinking that he had ſinned? he did even pleaſe himſelf that he had been afflicted; that was good, becauſe he learned Commandments by it; he grew a better Scholar, than he was in that beſt learning of all, the knowledg of the Commandments of God.

Again, Secondly, It is good to be afflicted; why? afflictions are the exerciſes of our Graces, the exerciſe of our Faith, the exerciſe of our patience, the exerciſe of our ſelf-denyal. 'Tis a good thing to have our Graces exerciſed, for thereby they are encreaſed. If you chuſe affliction, you ſhall probably have that good by it, the encreaſe of your beſt things, your Graces.

Thirdly, Affliction purgeth out our corruptions, and that is good. Is it not good to have a diſeaſe, or an ill humour, purged out? this good comes by affliction. But doth the committing of ſin purge ſin? doth the Stock of ſin abate by ſinning? does the ill humour ſpend it ſelf? no, the ill humour rather increaſeth. When you chuſe ſin, you weaken your Graces, and cheriſh your corruptions; but when you refuſe ſin, your corruptions weaken or ſpend their ſtrength. Do you think when you have committed one ſin, that the ſoul is made more unable to, or more averſe from the ſame or another ſin? When you have ſatisfied the call of one luſt, will it now let you alone, and call no more? no, not at all; the more you ſin, the more you may; the more you ſin, the more doth the Stock of ſin increaſe and grow in you.

Fourthly, Affliction is a means to take us off or wean us from the world: O what a good is that! we being ſo apt to dote upon it. The ſin of the Age is, falling in love with the world; therefore it may be good for us to be ſoundly afflicted, that we may be weaned from the world, and from all things in the world, and be kept where our true intereſt is, in the boſom of Chriſt, or cloſe to him. But if you chuſe iniquity, will that take you off from the world? no; the more ſin, the more love of the world; for ſin and the world are akin, they are of a Blood; therefore the more you have to do with the one, the more you will have to do with the other.

Fifthly, Affliction brings us nearer to God. That which takes us off from the world, brings us nearer to God: this is an excellent advantage, a great good of affliction. But chuſe ſin, and will that bring us nearer to God? Sin is a departure from God: The Lord ſaith to ſinners, Ye are departed and gone. Sin is ſo far from bringing us nearer to God, that as all in a ſtate of ſin, are far off from God, ſo every act of ſin widens the diſtance, and puts us farther off from God.

Sixthly, Affliction is our conformity to Chriſt. If you chuſe affliction, you chuſe that which makes you look like Chriſt; for he was a man of ſorrows in this world, he was not in the ruff and jollity, in the power and pomp of this world, but low, and of no reputation, acquainted with grief all his days. If then you chuſe affliction rather than ſin, you chuſe conformity to Chriſt; but chuſing iniquity rather than affliction, you take up the utmoſt disformity to Chriſt, who knew no ſin, nor was any guile found in his mouth. He took all our afflictions upon him, but he would not touch our ſin, as a doer of it, only as (in our ſtead) a ſufferer for it.

How great is the good of affliction? But is there any good at all in ſin? Upon all theſe conſiderations the Apoſtle ſaith, When God, the Father of ſpirits afflicts his ſons and daughters, he doth it for their profit, that they may be partakers of his holineſs (Heb. 12. 10, 11.) The Lord afflicts us for our profit, but he doth not ſay I have let you ſin for your profit: For though the Lord is able to, and often doth, bring good out of ſin, yet not inſtrumentally, but occaſionally. Therefore the Scripture attributes no profit to ſin, but ſpeaking of ſin, it ſaith, What fruit have ye of thoſe things whereof ye are now aſhamed (Rom. 6. 21.) ſhew your gain; what are your advantages? what the revenues which your luſts have brought in? what have you got by your malice, by your wrath, by your conformity and compliance with the world? have theſe brought you in any advantage? are you bettered by them? what fruit have you of thoſe things, whereof you are now aſhamed? Let us therefore often conſider Moſes's choice (Heb. 11. 25.) Moſes was a wiſe and a holy man; and what did he? He choſe rather to ſuffer affliction with the people of God, than to enjoy the pleaſures of ſin for a ſeaſon. Herein try your ſpirits. Chriſt ſet two things before Moſes; Come, Moſes, here's affliction, you muſt be afflicted, and afflicted with the people of God (which are the greateſt afflictions, you ſhall be ſure to be laſhed with the ſmarteſt ſoreſt Rod in their Company) or here is Egypt, and all the contentments that ſin can give; which will you have, Moſes? O give me afflictions with the people of God (ſaid Moſes) Let the world ruffle and rant in the pleaſures of ſin for a ſeaſon, for my part I will have affliction. O give me affliction. In this choice Moſes approved himſelf a wiſe man, and underſtood his good. So did the Martyrs. Come, will you have a priſon, or deny Chriſt? a Halter, or forſake the Faith? will you into this fire, or will you commit that iniquity? O ſay they, give us Priſons, Halters, Fires, rather than conform to your wickedneſs. Remember this point, this is a needful point for us at all times. I would add theſe three things further about it. Chuſe affliction rather than ſin; why?

Firſt, Becauſe ſin is worſe than all affliction. Secondly, Becauſe ſin is the ſting of all affliction. If you are in an afflicted condition, and your conſciences tell you you have been baſe, vile, complying with the world, and diſſembling or falſe-hearted with God; if your hearts tell you, you have been rotten at the heart, this will be the ſting of your afflictions. What is the ſting of death? The Apoſtle anſwers (1 Cor. 15.56.) The ſting of death is ſin. Would a man chuſe a ſting ? Surely you chuſe a ſting when you chuſe ſin, and that which will afflict you beyond all your afflictions.

Thirdly, Sin is worſe than affliction, for when God would declare his ſevereſt wrath, and bring the greateſt affliction upon the children of men, when he reſolves to afflict a perſon or a people to the utmoſt, he doth not ſay, I will make this man a poor man, or I will ſend plague, or ſickneſs, or famine among this people, but he ſaith, I will deliver him or them up into the hands of their ſins, or to the power of their luſts. (Pſal. 81. 11.) Iſrael would none of me (ſaith the Lord) they were coy, they had other lovers, they would have the world, they choſe ſin, rather than God, and to go a whoring after the creature, rather than keep cloſe to him. What then ? So I gave them up to their own hearts luſts. As if the Lord had ſaid, Pray take your courſe, you that love your own inventions, take your fill of them, you that love and would have the vanities of the world, take your fill of them. The Lord doth not threaten them with famine and peſtilence, no nor with hell, but he threatens them with ſin, and leaves them to the power of iniquity. Thus he gave up the old Gentile Romans to vile affections, (Rom. 1. 26, 28.) Let them be victorious, let them be rich, let them ſubdue all Nations under their iron hands, let Rome be the Head and Miſtreſs of the world, and command all people, let all ſtoop to their power, but ſaith God, I will give them up to vile affections, they ſhall be baſely Idolatrous, and baſely wanton, and baſely gluttonous, and baſely drunken, and baſely ambitious, and baſely envious : As they were above all people of the world in outward glory and power, ſo God left them under the power of their luſts, and gave them up to glut themſelves with wickedneſs ; He gave them up to a reprobate mind, to do things that are not convenient. 'Tis the moſt terrible of all afflictions, when God makes a ſin an affliction, and gives men up to hardneſs of heart, to pride, to a ſpirit of looſneſs and wantonneſs ; here is a miſchief indeed, the miſchief of ſin.

> Laſtly, obſerve, Our avoidance of, or eſcape from the greateſt affliction in the world, will not bear us out in the choice of any iniquity.

We may underſtand and proſecute this point two ways.

Firſt, As to guilt. It will no way excuſe us before God, to ſay, I forbore to do duty when commanded by God, I did evil becauſe commanded by man, not out of any diſlike of my duty, or liking of iniquity, but only to avoid thoſe afflictions, which I ſaw inevitably falling upon me, in caſe I had either done the one, or not done the other. This plea will not hold before God, for any man's diſcharge from guilt upon either account. And though there may be ſome ſeaſons wherein a duty may be laid by or omitted, yet there is no ſeaſon wherein any iniquity may be choſen or committed.

Secondly, We cannot be excuſed, as to Diſcretion. We are fools, and act below, not only gracious but rational men, if we chuſe iniquity to avoid any affliction, whether that affliction or ſuffering, be, firſt, our own ; or ſecondly, the ſuffering of others. Firſt, though nearly related, and very near to us, wife, children, &c. Secondly, though many, never ſo many, a whole Nation, a whole world, the Church. I believe that aſſertion of St. Auguſtine will be found ſound and Orthodox Divinity ; Better let the world periſh, than attempt to ſave it by telling an officious lye.

The evil of ſin is ſo bad that if any good could come by it (which of it ſelf cannot) it were not worth the having : Some ſaid in the Apoſtles times, and they ſaid it of the Apoſtles, (Rom. 3. 8.) Let us do evil that good may come of it. God by his infinite power, wiſdom, and goodneſs, brought good out of evil, even ſalvation to man out of the fall of the firſt man ; but if any man, or ſort of men, ſhall project the obtainment of good by the doing of evil, the Apoſtle in the ſame place hath given them this doom, Their damnation is juſt ; nothing is more juſt or righteous, than their damnation, who hope to get good for themſelves or others by doing evil, which is it ſelf injuſtice and unrighteouſneſs.

VERS. 22, 23.

Behold, God exalteth by his power : who teacheth like him ? Who hath enjoyned him his way ? or who can ſay, thou haſt wrought iniquity ?

In theſe two verſes Elihu proſecuteth the admonition which he had given Job in the 21. verſe, to take heed of uttering any thing raſhly concerning God's dealings with him, or, of chooſing iniquity rather than affliction : And he preſſeth the admonition by two great arguments.

Firſt, From the power and wiſdom of God, in the 22. verſe ; Behold, God exalteth by his power : who teacheth like him ?

Secondly, He urgeth it by an argument taken from the ſoveraignty of God, as alſo from his moſt exact Juſtice, (verſ. 23.) Who hath enjoyned him his way ? or who can ſay, thou haſt wrought iniquity ? As if he had ſaid, Take heed how thou accuſeſt the juſtice of God in any of his dealings with thee : If God be of ſuch power, of ſuch wiſdom, of ſuch ſoveraignty, of ſuch integrity, then conſider well what thou ſpeakeſt, yea, what thou thinkeſt of God ; beware thou ſpeakeſt not a word, nor conceiveſt a thought amiſs of him. Conſider, I ſay, God himſelf, his ways, and works, throughly, and thou wilt conclude with me, That though many in the world have great power, and have left the marks of it in many places, and upon many perſons ; yet none like God, either, firſt, in doing his own work, or ſecondly, in directing or teaching us how to do ours.

So that Elihu by this report and commendation of the power and wiſdom of God, ſeems to comfort Job in the aſſurance or hope of better things, if he would hearken to and accept his counſel ; for as God had mightily afflicted and broken him, ſo he was as mighty to heal thoſe breaches, and deliver him ; he only waited to ſee him in a better frame, that he might be gracious, (Iſa. 30. 18.) That's the general ſum of the words.

Ecce, deus excelſus in fortitudine ſua. Vulg.

Verſ. 22. Behold, God exalteth by his power.

Some read, God is high in his own power ; that carrieth Elihu's reaſon ſtrongly in it, God is exalted in his power above all others ; and therefore it is no way ſutable or conſentaneous unto reaſon, that the greater power ſhould be queſtioned, much leſs condemned of injuſtice by the leſſer power : There muſt be a parity, a co-ordination, or a coequality at leaſt, if not a ſuperiority, where judgment is given. That's a great truth, God is exalted in his own power.

David (Pſal. 21. 13.) turns it into a prayer, or wiſh, Be thou exalted, O Lord, in thine own ſtrength. He makes a like prayer, (Pſal. 108. 5.) The Lord in other places declareth himſelf peremptorily in it, (Pſal. 46. 10.) Be ſtill, and know that I am God ; I will be exalted among the Heathen, I will be exalted in the Earth. It ſhall be ſo whether men will or will not ; whether men will or no, God will be exalted, becauſe he is exalted in his own power, not in any derived power, or power given him from the creature, Men or Angels. The power which God puts forth in his works exalt him, or ſhew him to be a great, a mighty God. Behold, God is exalted by his own power.

But we tranſlate the Text (and ſo I conceive it more fitly ſutes the ſcope of Elihu) as expreſſing an act of God towards others ; Behold, God exalteth by his power. So Mr. Broughton, Mark, the Omnipotent ſets up by his ſtrength.

Behold] (As hath been ſhewed) is a note both of attention and admiration.

God] The ſtrong God, the potent, the omnipotent God, who is able to overcome all difficulties.

Exalteth ;] The word which we render to exalt, ſignifieth to ſet in an inacceſſible height, or to exalt very high ; and not only ſo, but to eſtabliſh in that exaltation, yea ſo to confirm and corroborate him that is ſet up in ſuch a height, that no power is able to moleſt, trouble, or afflict him ; and therefore a word coming from this root ſignifieth a fortified Caſtle or Tower ; ſuch places, if any, are exalted and lifted up on high. Behold, God exalteth ; As if Elihu had ſaid, God is not only exalted in himſelf, he is not only lifted up beyond the reach of all creature-annoyances, but he is able to lift up others ; and he doth actually exalt his when he pleaſeth, beyond the reach of all danger, beyond the hurtful power of thoſe who hate them, and therefore have a mind to hurt them. God is ſo exalted above others, that he can exalt others alſo. He exalteth by

His Power;] He hath the power in himſelf. The word which we render power, ſignifieth, Firſt, That might and ſtrength which is corporal, the might and ſtrength of the body.

Secondly, Inward might and ſtrength, whether acquired or infuſed, the might of the mind, wiſdom and policy.

Thirdly, Civil might and power, honour and riches. Whatever maketh a man ſtrong, comes under the notion of this word; and every way, in all the notions of power, God is exalted. He exalteth by his power.

But ſeeing 'tis barely aſſerted (He exalteth by his power) nothing being expreſſed, it may be queſtioned, whom doth he exalt? or what doth he exalt? I anſwer, Foraſmuch as the Scripture leaveth it at large, and undetermined, we may apply this aſſertion to any, either thing or perſon. God exalteth whom he pleaſeth, and what he pleaſeth. We may take it diſtinctly theſe five ways.

Firſt, He exalteth Himſelf by his power; that is, he exalteth his own Name and Glory, which is neareſt to him, yea, as himſelf.

Secondly, He exalteth every work which he will undertake and ingage upon: He doth not only lay the foundation of his work, and rear up the walls a little way, but he exalteth by his power till he hath ſet up the Head-ſtone of his work (as the Prophet Zechariah ſpeaketh, Chap. 4. 7.) all that love and fear him ſhouting and crying, Grace, Grace, to it. He exalteth his works of Providence, as once he did his work of Creation, to full perfection.

Thirdly, The Lord exalteth thoſe that fear him, for they are moſt properly his Favourites; and whom ſhould he exalt but thoſe whom he favoureth? All the worldly exaltations of evil men, are but depreſſions and abaſements, compared with thoſe exaltations and advancements which God intendeth for all that fear him; and ſome he exalteth much in this World.

Fourthly, and more ſpecially, He exalteth by his power (ſuch Job then was) thoſe that are caſt down by the oppreſſing power of men, even the poor, and thoſe that have no help. Thou art he (ſaith David, Pſal. 9. 13.) that liftest me up (or exalteſt me) from the gates of death. When I am periſhing, when I am ready to be ſwallowed up with death, when I am at the greateſt loſs, even as to life it ſelf, then thou lifteſt me up, thou lifteſt me up from the very gates of death. Again, (Pſal. 18. 48.) He delivereth me from mine enemies, yea thou lifteſt me up above thoſe that riſe up againſt me: When they are caſting me down, God is exalting and raiſing me up. And if God will raiſe up, who can keep down?

Fifthly, We may take the words in this general ſenſe; Whoſoever is exalted in this world, God exalteth him. The Sparrow cannot fall to the ground, nor the leaſt thing or perſon be lifted from the ground, but by the hand of God. As he exalteth ſome in a way of ſpecial favour, ſo he exalteth the worſt of men in a way of common providence: As none can be exalted if he ſay, no; God is able to put a bar or a ſtop to any mans exaltation; ſo he can exalt whom he will, and none are able to put a bar or a ſtop to their exaltation. Behold, God exalteth by his power.

Hence Note, God is able to exalt any perſon, how low ſoever brought, how much ſoever deſpiſed.

Elihu ſpake this purpoſely to Job, who was in a low condition brought (as it were) to the very gates of death; and he makes this large deſcription of the power of God in exalting thoſe that are caſt down, purpoſely to comfort Job, to erect his ſpirit, and chear his heart, with a bleſſed confidence, that how much ſoever he was at preſent underfoot, or under-hatches, yet he might hope for better things, even to be lifted up, if he humbled himſelf under the mighty hand of God. (Pſal. 9. 9.) The Lord will be a refuge, (the word in the Text anſwers this) or an high place, for the oppreſſed. Places of refuge are uſually high places, and therefore the ſame Hebrew word ſignifieth both an high place, and a place of refuge, (Pſal. 107. 41.) He ſetteth the poor on high from affliction, and maketh him families like a flock. The Prophet (Iſa. 33. 16.) Having ſpoken of the man that walketh in his integrity, tells us how it ſhall be with him, He ſhall dwell on high; The word is, He ſhall dwell in the high places, that is, he ſhall dwell in God, who is moſt high, for evermore, God will exalt him even to as much ſafety, as himſelf is in; his place of defence ſhall be the munition of Rocks; bread ſhall be given him, his water ſhall be ſure; He ſhall be houſed with God, yea houſed in God, he ſhall be fed by God, he ſhall lodg under his roof, and ſit (as it were) at his Table, he ſhall have bread enough, and water enough, and both ſure enough.

Particeps erit divinæ felicitatis, atq; conſors tecti ac menſæ.

And if the Lord exalteth thus by his power, let none be diſcouraged in their afflictions and caſtings down. The Lord alone is ſufficient, yea all-ſufficient; and he exalteth not only by his will, that is, he hath not only a will to exalt, but he exalteth by his power, that is, he hath power enough to exalt whom he will. What power ſoever is in the creature, 'tis the Lord's power; 'tis a ſtream from his Ocean, and when the Lord is pleaſed to remove all power from the creature, he hath a ſufficient reſerve of power in himſelf, or in his own hand, by which he can command deliverance, yea exaltation. Therefore do not ſpeak either deſpondingly or deſpairingly, as if all hope were gone, when at any time all humane power is gone; for God exalteth by his (own) power; and as it followeth in the Text,

Who teacheth like him?

As if Elihu had ſaid, God is not good only at acting, but he is good at inſtructing, and he is beſt at both. He is beſt or beyond all in power; He is beſt or beyond all in wiſdom and underſtanding, and therefore who teacheth like him?

At the 15. verſe of this Chapter, we have the ſubſtance of what is here aſſerted, and ſo upon the matter, 'tis but the ſame thing repeated; there it is, He delivereth the poor; here, He exalteth by his power; There 'tis ſaid, He openeth their ear to inſtruction; here, Who teacheth like him? The words are a divine challenge, Who teacheth like him? Bring forth the man, bring forth the Angel that can. The word which here we render, to teach, in its firſt ſenſe ſignifieth to caſt a Dart, Javelin, or Stone. It ſignifieth alſo to rain, and ſo the rain which falls from heaven, becauſe that is as it were, caſt from the clouds to the earth. Hence by a Metaphor it ſignifieth to teach or inſtruct, becauſe holy doctrine or inſtruction cometh down like rain from heaven upon the minds and hearts of thoſe that are taught. My doctrine ſhall diſtill as the dew, and my ſpeech ſhall drop as the rain, ſaid Moſes (Deut. 32. 1.) And hence the whole Law of God is expreſſed by a word in the Hebrew coming from this root, that being poured down from heaven in ſhowers of doctrine to make men fruitful in every good word and work. In anſwer to which, ſome tranſlate this latter part of the verſe, There is no Law-giver like unto him. Who is a Law-giver like him? or there is no Law-giver like him. To give Law, or to be a Law-giver, is more than barely to be a teacher, though he that teacheth, doth alſo (in a ſenſe) give Laws.

Verbum יורה commune ad pluviam, & ad doctrinam, vel legem, qua perfunditur & excolitur animus ad fructus bonorum operum.

Nullus ei ſimilis in Legiſlatoribus. Vulg.

Here, I conceive, we take the fitteſt and moſt ſuitable ſignification of the word, when we render it by teaching, Who teacheth like him? As if he had ſaid, None can teach like God, and therefore ſurely none can teach him how to govern the world, or to diſpoſe of any man's perſon or condition, as thou, O Job, haſt raſhly or overboldly done; for while thou haſt complained ſo much and ſo often of his dealings with thee, thou haſt (upon the matter) attempted to teach him. But, Who teacheth like him? Where ſhall we find any able to give inſtruction, and apply doctrine like God? God is exalted infinitely in power, and yet he condeſcends to be a teacher, or an inſtructer; God doth not ſtand upon his power only, he ſaith not, I have power to do what I will, I can force all men to my will, or break them if they will not, but he inſtructs and perſwades, he labours to allure the ſoul into a right underſtanding of his will, and ſubmiſſion to it. Who teacheth like him?

Hence note; Firſt, The great goodneſs of God, that he who hath all power to command, ſhould yet vouchſafe to inſtruct; that he who is the Judg, will alſo be the Teacher of his People.

This is the great Promiſe in the Covenant of grace, They ſhall be all taught of God (John 6. 45.) Some things may be known by the light of nature, of which knowledg God is the Author, in the ſame ſenſe, as he is of all natural Powers and faculties. But here Elihu intends a ſpiritual knowledg, both of God and of our ſelves, or a teaching of divine things by divine chaſtenings, both with reſpect to what we ſhould do and deſire, as alſo with reſpect to what we ſhould ſhun and avoid, which is the work of God alone by his grace and Spirit. Thus David ſhews how God is teaching while he is chaſtening (Pſal. 99. 12.) Bleſſed is the man whom thou chaſteneſt, O Lord, and teacheſt out of thy Law. God teacheth, Firſt, by his Word, (that's his ordinary way of teaching) Scondly, he teacheth by his Works; and thoſe both the works of Creation and of Providence, and by thoſe, whether works of Mercy or of Judgment: By all theſe means God teacheth. But that which Elihu chiefly aimeth at in this place (ſpeaking to afflicted Job) is his teaching by affliction, Who teacheth like him? As if he had ſaid, God doth not lay his hand upon thee by affliction, only to make thee ſmart, but to make thee wiſe; he is inſtructing thee while he is afflicting thee. Further, as God teacheth by his Word and by his Works, ſo he teacheth moſt eminently by his Spirit, who alone maketh the teaching both of his Word and of his Works effectual upon the hearts of the hearers and beholders. Many are taught, but none to purpoſe, without the Spirit. Who teacheth like aim?

Note Secondly, God is no ordinary teacher; The teachings of God are above all other teachings; There is no teacher to be compared with God.

Elihu doth not ſay, Who teacheth beſides God: There are many other teachers, but there is not one who teacheth like him. Some may ſay, wherein doth the excellency of divine teaching lye? how hath that the ſupereminence above all other teachings? Take the anſwer briefly in ſeven words.

Firſt, None teacheth ſo plainly and clearly as God. The teachings of men are but dark and obſcure to the teachings of God. Chriſt ſaid (John 16, 26.) I ſhall no more ſpeak unto you in parables, but I ſhall ſhew you plainly of the Father. God ſpeaks by his Word and Spirit to the loweſt and meaneſt underſtanding.

Secondly, None teacheth like God; that is, ſo mildly, ſo moderately, ſo condeſcendingly to the condition and capacity of thoſe with whom he hath to do. Chriſt ſaid (John 16. 12.) I have many things to ſay unto you, but ye cannot bear them now; and therefore I will not ſay them now, I will not burden you beyond your ſtrength. I know what leſſons, what inſtructions you are fit for, and I will give you only theſe and no more, till ye are better prepared to receive them; I will give you only milk becauſe ye are children, and ſo not able to digeſt ſtrong meat.

Thirdly, None teacheth like God, ſo patiently and meekly. There is nothing doth more provoke the paſſion of a teacher, than the untowardneſs and dulneſs of thoſe that are taught. It was a very good Rule given by one of the Ancients, he that will teach children, muſt in a manner be a child; He muſt conſider what they are, and form himſelf to their condition, elſe he will never have the patience to teach them. O with what patience doth the infinite and only wiſe God teach his children! (Iſa. 28. 9, 10.) He giveth line upon line, and precept upon precept, here a little and there a little. Here is the patience of God; He doth not ſay, if ye cannot take it now, I will teach you no more; No, ſaith God, I will give precept upon precept, and line upon line; though former precepts have not been received, yet I will give you more, here a little and there a little, ye ſhall have another little to the former little. God was forty years tutoring and teaching the Iſraelites in the wilderneſs, to fit them for the poſſeſſion of Canaan. Theſe three years, ſaith Chriſt, have I come looking for fruit, and all that while he was teaching them to make them fruitful; nor was he haſty then, but upon the interceſſion of the vineyard-dreſſer, waited one year more. O the patience of God in teaching!

Fourthly, None teacheth like him, that is, ſo conſtantly and continually; He teacheth, and he is always teaching; there is no hour, no moment, but one way or other God is teaching; By every thing we hear, or have to do with, in the ways of his providence, he is teaching us. Beſides, how conſtant is God in teaching us formally, as 'tis ſaid, in the Prophet (Jer. 35. 14, 15.) I have ſent unto you all my ſervants the Prophets, riſing up early, and ſending them: As if the Lord did beſtir himſelf in the morning, to ſend our teachers betimes. He ſoweth his ſeed in the morning, and in the evening he doth not withhold his hand, as he requireth us to do in all ſorts of duty, whether of charity and righteouſneſs towards our neighbour, or of piety and holy worſhip towards himſelf (Eccl. 11. 6.)

Fifthly, None teacheth like him; that is, ſo truly, ſo unerringly. While men teach, they ſometimes miſ-teach, while they lead, they often miſ-lead; they teach error for truth, and unſafe doctrine for ſound; they build wood, hay and ſtubble, in ſtead of gold, ſilver, precious ſtone, upon that ſure foundation Jeſus Chriſt (1 Cor. 3. 12.) The beſt, the wiſeſt, and moſt knowing men may err; only God knoweth the full compaſs of all myſteries, yea, he is Truth; therefore his teachings are moſt true.

Sixthly, None teacheth like him; that is, ſo authoritatively. Men teach in the name and authority of God; but God teacheth in his own name and authority. The Lord giveth Authentity to his own word. If the Lord hath ſaid it, that's warrant enough to receive it and believe it. When Chriſt preached, the people wondered at his doctrine (Mat. 7. 29.) For he taught them as one having authority, and not as the Scribes; that is, there went forth a mighty command with the word of Jeſus Chriſt; He did not, as I may ſay, beg attention and ſubmiſſion to his doctrine, but exact it upon them, and draw it from them. Where God teacheth, he commandeth, his word worketh mightily; when he ſpeaketh, all muſt hear at their peril. Where Princes give the rule and publiſh their Laws, ſubjects muſt hear and obey, or ſuffer for not obeying: How much more where God gives the Rule, and publiſheth his Law!

Seventhly, Who teacheth like him? that is, ſo effectually, ſo efficaciouſly. As God hath authority to charge his teachings upon us at our peril to receive them, ſo he hath a power to work our hearts to the receiving of them. Who teacheth thus like God? The Miniſters of Chriſt teach in the authority of God, and charge all to receive what they ſay in his Name, but they cannot give an effect to the charge (Iſa. 48. 17.) He teacheth to profit. One tranſlation ſaith, He teacheth things profitable. But that is a lean rendring, for ſo doth every Miniſter that teacheth as he ought; but our rendring carrieth the efficacy of the word of God in it, He teacheth to profit; that is, he can make the dulleſt Scholar learn, he can make the moſt ſtubborn heart to ſubmit. Chriſt ſpeaking of this great work of God in teaching, ſaith (John 6. 45.) No man cometh unto me, except the Father draw him. What is that drawing? It is this teaching, as ye may ſee (verſ. 45.) Every one therefore that hath heard and learned of the Father, cometh unto me. That is, every one whom the Father hath vouchſafed to teach and inſtruct, that man cometh to me, that is, he believeth and obeyeth the Goſpel, and ſubmitteth both in judgment and practice. Every one that hath heard and learned of the Father cometh to me: There is not one whom God hath undertaken to teach, that doth miſcarry. (Iſa. 32. 4.) The heart of the raſh ſhall underſtand knowledg; or, the heart of the haſty. Now haſty and raſh perſons, are heady and inconſiderate perſons, and therefore none of the wiſeſt; they uſually have little judgment or diſcretion, who are much in paſſion; but God can make the heart of the raſh to underſtand knowledg; that is, he can make them underſtand and know things aright, who ſeem moſt uncapable of, and are naturally at the greateſt diſtance from a rightneſs of knowledg and underſtanding.

To cloſe the Point, take theſe inferences from the whole.

Firſt, If God be ſuch a teacher, then ſtay not in the bare teachings of men. What are the teachings of men to the teachings of God? Though you ſhould have an Angel from heaven to ſpeak to you, yet ſtay not in his teachings, wait for the teachings of God. Till ye are taught of God ye never learn to purpoſe. Set your ſelves, not only as in God's preſence, but as under his Spirit, to be taught; wait for the moving of the Spirit in every ordinance, as they did for the Angels moving of the waters, who lay at the pool of Betheſda for healing (Joh. 5. 4.)

Secondly, Seeing God teacheth thus paramount, ſeeing none teach like him, then ſubmit to his teaching. Do not queſtion any of his rules of life or doctrines of faith, they are all righteous and full of divine truth; you cannot do amiſs if you do, nor believe amiſs if you believe, no, nor miſs of bleſſedneſs in doing and believing what he hath taught.

Thirdly, Then appear as they who are taught of God.

You will ſay, How, or when doth it appear, that we are or have been taught of God? I ſhall anſwer that query in four things.

Firſt, If you are or have been taught of God, his teaching unteacheth or emptieth you, and that in a threefold reſpect. Firſt, of your own carnal principles. The great buſineſs of divine teaching, is to unteach, to take men off from their own Will and Reaſon, from their own Rules, as alſo from thoſe Cuſtoms which they have received by tradition from their fathers. If you would appear as taught of God, you muſt lay down all theſe. The teachings of grace empty the ſoul of what it hath taken up by Nature. Secondly, the teachings of God empty the ſoul of all ſelf-righteouſneſs. If ye be taught of God ye will be nothing in your ſelves. Paul, before the teachings of God came, had confidence in the fleſh, and boaſted in his own righteouſneſs; but when he was taught of God, he threw off all thoſe. Thirdly, If ye are taught of God, that will certainly unteach and empty you of all unrighteouſneſs. The Apoſtle ſpeaks fully to that (Epheſ. 4. 20, 21.) Ye have not ſo learned Chriſt, if ſo be that ye have been taught as the truth is in Jeſus. If ye have been divinely taught, then this teaching hath emptied you of the old man; as of all ſelf-righteouſneſs ſo of all unrighteouſneſs towards others. It is impoſſible any ſhould take in the teachings of God, and yet hold any ſinful practiſings.

Secondly, Divine teachings, as they empty and unteach the ſoul, ſo they keep it very humble. Knowledg endangers us naturally to high thoughts of our ſelves, and hath a tendency in it to pride (1 Cor. 8. 1.) Knowledg puffeth up, but charity edifieth. Take knowledg barely as received of men, even the knowledg of divine things (for ye may have a humane knowledg of divine things) this uſually makes the heart ſwell; but the knowledg we have from the teachings of God, makes us humble, it will cauſe us to cry out (as the Prophet did, when the Lord appeared and let out a more than ordinary manifeſtation of his glory, Iſa. 6. 5.) we are undone. It was ſo with Job, when the Lord had ſchooled him, and made himſelf more fully known to him than ever before, he preſently cried out (Chap. 41. 5.) I have heard of thee by the hearing of the ear, but now mine eye ſeeth thee; wherefore I abhor my ſelf in duſt and aſhes. Nothing keeps the ſoul ſo humble as the teachings of God. Where we ſee any proud of what they have learned, it is an argument that either they were never taught of God, or, that as yet they have not underſtood his teachings.

Thirdly, The teachings of God do not only empty and humble the ſoul, but they transform the ſoul, and change it into another thing than it was, as to its ſtate and qualities. The teachings of God change not only our manners but our very natures; they not only give a light to the Underſtanding, but a newneſs to the Will, new Affections, new Deſires. This is it which the Apoſtle calls the new creature (2 Cor. 5. 17.) and that this creature is wrought to its higheſt perfection by the teachings of God, he ſheweth (2 Cor. 3. 18.) We all with open face, beholding as in a glaſs, the glory of the Lord, are changed into the ſame image from glory to glory, as by the Spirit of the Lord. The glaſs wherein we have this ſight of the glory of God, is chiefly the Word. The glory into which we are changed by thoſe ſights, is our conformity to that holineſs which ſhineth in the Word. And this change is twofold; Firſt, from ſin to grace, which is a degree of glory. Secondly, from glory to glory, that is, from a high to a higher, and at laſt to the higheſt degree of grace. Look what the Word is, and calleth us to be, that are we when taught according to the truth of the word, by the power and Spirit of God.

Fourthly, The teachings of God confirm the ſoul in that which is taught, or we have learned. If God teach any divine leſſon, that will ſtick. We receive many leſſons from men, and let them ſlip, as the Apoſtles word is (Heb. 2. 1.) Doctrine taught us of God ſettles upon us, we hold the ſubſtance of it, and hold forth the fruit or power of it in every ſeaſon of our lives: yea, if trouble or perſecution ariſe for the truth, they who are taught of God will hold it faſt, though they let go all they have in this world for it. If God teach us the doctrine of Free Grace, how we are juſtified by the righteouſneſs of Jeſus Chriſt, without our own works; If God teach us the doctrine of pure Worſhip, how he is to be ſerved, and honoured according to his own will, without the Traditions of men, (as Chriſt ſpake (Mat. 15. 9.) If (I ſay) God teach us theſe, or any other ſaving truths, we cannot but hold them: whereas they who have received them from men will part with them on the account of man. Only that which God hath taught us abideth with us, and that no man can take from us. Men may take the life of ſuch a one from him, which God hath given him, but they cannot take the truth from him which God hath taught him. What God teacheth, is written, as it were, with a pen of iron and the point of a diamond, it is graven upon the tables of the heart for ever. Thus we may in ſome meaſure diſcern who are taught of God; and ſeeing they who are taught of him, are ſo taught, we may very well inſiſt upon Elihu's challenge; Who teacheth like him? And as there is no teacher like God, ſo neither is there any ruler like God; this alſo is taught us by Elihu, as a matter out of queſtion, while in the next verſe he proceeds to make more queſtion, or two queſtions more.

Verſ. 23. Who hath enjoyned him his way? or who can ſay, thou haſt wrought iniquity?

This verſe holds out two things. Firſt, the ſoveraignty; Secondly, the integrity of God. God is ſupream in power, and he is righteous in the uſe of his power, and therefore, O Job, thou haſt much forgotten both thy ſelf and him, in making ſo many complaints about thy condition, which is indeed to enjoyn God his way, or preſcribe to him how he ſhall govern the world. And ſeeing no man hath enjoyned God his way, who can queſtion him about it, what way ſoever he is pleaſed to take, either with whole Nations, or with any of the ſons of men.

Who hath enjoyned him his way, or, viſited him?] No man hath, no man can, enjoyn him his way. God hath no viſitors over him. Mr. Broughton renders, Who gave him charge over his ways? Like that, Chap. 34. 13.

The way of God is any courſe which himſelf taketh, either in governing the world in general, or any perſon in particular; who ſhall inſtruct him about either what or how he ſhall do, whom he ſhall ſpare, whom he ſhall puniſh, whoſe heart he ſhall ſoften, whoſe he ſhall harden, whom he ſhall ſave, whom he ſhall deſtroy, how he ſhall teach, which way he ſhall lead; in a word, how he ſhall adminiſter juſtice and order any of his matters? all muſt be bound to and by his Laws, he cannot be bound to or by the Laws and Preſcripts of any, either in works of Judgment or of Mercy, either in doing good to and for man, or in dealing out of evil. Further,

Who hath enjoyned him his way? By the way of God we may underſtand both the actions of God themſelves, as alſo the reaſons moving him to thoſe actions. As if Elihu had ſaid, Who hath taught God what to do? Who hath, or who can direct him what to do? Who may be ſo bold with God, who is the ſoveraign Lord over all the earth, thus to enjoyn him his way?

Hence note, God is the firſt mover of all that himſelf doth;

No man hath ſhewed him or enjoyned him his way. He is the fountain of light, he ſeeth what to do; who hath been his counſellor? (1 Cor. 2. 16.) that is, no man hath, or may inſtruct him (Iſa. 40. 13. Rom. 11. 34.) Again, he is the fountain of power; none hath authority to direct him, he is above all; as he needs not the counſel of any, ſo he receiveth the rule from none. I have had occaſion more than once in the proceſs of this Book, to ſay ſomewhat of the ſoveraignty of God over all creatures, and therefore only remind it here, Who hath enjoyned him his way?

Or who can ſay, thou haſt wrought iniquity?

The world is full of iniquity, but in God there is none at all. As God is not obliged to give any men an account of his works, ſo no man can find any, the leaſt, real fault or defect in any of them; and if his works do not appear ſo to us now, yet at laſt they will appear to all without any ſhadow of iniquity. Samuel called together the Iſraelites, and demanded (1 Sam. 12. 3.) Whoſe oxe have I taken? &c. Whom have I defrauded? &c. Come charge me, witneſs againſt me, who can ſay, I have wrought iniquity? It was much, and a rare thing for Samuel to carry it ſo juſtly, that note could challenge him; but when all the world ſhall be ſummoned before God, he will be able to put the queſtion, Who of all the ſons of men, can ſay, I have wrought iniquity? None can ſay it, but with utmoſt impudency and higheſt blaſphemy. It is impoſſible for God to work iniquity; not only is his Command, but his Will totally againſt it. Whatever God works is according to his own Will, and his Will is the rule of Righteouſneſs; therefore he can do no iniquity. There is no iniquity in acting or working according to the Law. If men act according to their will, they uſually act iniquity, becauſe their will is not a Law, and 'tis ſeldom conformed to the Law. The will of no man is ſo right, or ſo fixed in the right, as to be received for a Law. But ſeeing whatever God doth, he doth it according to his own Will, and his Will is the righteous Rule of all things, therefore all muſt be right which he doth: Who ever took him tripping in his dealings? Who can ſay, he hath wrought iniquity?

But why doth Elihu ſpeak thus to Job? Had he ever ſaid that God works iniquity?

I anſwer, He had not. Yet becauſe he thought God might have done better by good men, or have given out that which was more ſuitable to their eſtate, than ſuch continual ſorrows and afflictions as he endured, therefore this ſaying is deſervedly imputed to him. For, it would have become Job, and doth every man, to ſay, that is beſt done which God doth, and that he hath choſen or pitched upon the beſt, and moſt proper means of doing his own choiceſt ſervants good, even when 'tis worſt with them in the world, or, when he afflicts them with the greateſt evils; For, Who can (then) ſay, he hath wrought iniqnity?

Hence obſerve; Firſt, The infinite purity of God, as alſo his love to righteouſneſs and juſtice;

Who, though he be ſo abſolute in power, that none can call him in queſtion (none can enjoyn him his way, and therefore none can queſtion him for his way) yet he is ſo perfect in righteouſneſs, that no fault can be found in him, nor any error in his way. Though the Lord hath power to do what he will, yet he hath no will to do wrong with his power. The Lord neither doth nor can do wrong to thoſe who have, to their power, continually wronged him. And indeed, he that hath all power in his hand, can have nothing but right in his heart. How few are there in power (though their way be injoyned to them, though they have power meerly by commiſſion, from ſuperior powers, though their power be ſuch as they are to give an account of, yet, I ſay, how few are there in power, who do not much iniquity, who do not, either for want of better information, or, of a better conſcience, oppreſs, grieve and afflict thoſe that have to do with them, or are ſubject to them! God may do what he will, yet will do nothing but what is right. How infinitely then is God to be exalted in his truth and righteouſneſs! And thus the word of truth exalts him (Deut. 32.4. 2 Chr. 19.7. Rom. 9.14.) There is no unevenneſs, much leſs aberration in any of the ways of God, he never trod awry, nor took a falſe ſtep; Who can ſay unto him (without great iniquity) thou haſt wrought iniquity?

Hence we may infer;

If God works no iniquity in any of his ways, whether in his general or ſpecial providences, Then,

All ought to ſit down quietly under the works of God. Though he bring never ſo great judgments upon nations, he doth them no wrong; though he break his people in the place of dragons, and cover them with the ſhadow of death, he doth them no wrong; Though he ſell his own people for nought, yet he doth them no wrong. All which, and ſeveral other grievances, the Church ſadly bemoans (Pſal. 44.) yet without raiſing the leaſt duſt, concerning the juſtice of God, or giving the leaſt intimation of iniquity in thoſe ſeveral ſad and ſevere ways.

Secondly, We ſhould not only ſit down quietly under all the diſpenſations of God, as having no iniquity in them, but exalt the righteouſneſs of God in all his diſpenſations, as mingled alſo, and ſprinkled with mercy. Though we cannot ſee the righteouſneſs of God in ſome of them, yet we muſt believe he is not only ſo, but merciful in all of them; though the day be dark, and we cannot diſcern how this or that ſutes with the righteouſneſs, much leſs with the goodneſs and mercy of God, yet ſit down we ought in this faith, that both this and that is righteous, yea, that God is good to Iſrael, in the one and in the other. When the Prophet was about to touch upon that ſtring, he firſt laid down this principle as unqueſtionable (Jer. 12.1.) Righteous art thou, O Lord, yet give me leave to plead with thee about thy Judgments: Why doth the way of the wicked proſper? Why is it thus in the world? I take the boldneſs to put theſe queſtions, O Lord, yet I make no queſtion but thou art righteous, O Lord. It becomes all the ſons of men to reſt patiently under the darkeſt providences of God. And let us all, not only not charge God fooliſhly, but exalt him highly, and cry up both his righteouſneſs and kindneſs towards all his people; For who can ſay to God, thou haſt wrought iniquity? Having in ſeveral other paſſages of this book, met with this matter alſo, I here briefly paſs it over.

VERS. 24, 25.

Remember that thou magnifie his work, which men behold.

Every man may ſee it, man may behold it afar off.

These two verſes contain the third advice, counſel or exhortation given by Elihu to Job, ſtirring him up to give glory to God in his providential proceedings with him.

There are three things conſiderable in theſe two verſes,

Firſt, The general duty commanded, which is, to magnifie the work of God.

Secondly, We have here a ſpecial reaſon or ground of that duty; the viſibility and plainneſs, yea, more than ſo, the illuſtriouſneſs of his work. The work of God is not only ſuch as ſome men may ſee, but ſuch as every man may ſee, yea, behold afar off.

Thirdly, We have here an incentive to provoke to this duty, in the firſt words of the Text, Remember.

Verſ. 24. Remember that thou magnifie his work, which men behold.

To Remember, imports chiefly theſe two things.

Firſt, to call to mind what is paſt (Mat. 26.75.) Then Peter remembred the words of Chriſt.

Secondly, To remember, is to keep ſomewhat in mind againſt the time to come; in which ſence the Law runs (Exod. 20.8.) Remember the reſt-day; that is, keep it in mind, that whenever it cometh, or upon every return of that day, ye may be in a fit poſture and preparation for it; Remember the reſt, or ſabbath-day to keep it holy.

To remember in this place, is ſet (I conceive) in a double oppoſition: Firſt, To forgetfulneſs of the duty here called for; remember and do not forget it. Secondly, To the ſlight performance of the duty here called for; the magnifying of the work of God.

Remember that thou magnifie.] As if he had ſaid, Be thou daily and duely affected with it, do not put it off with a little, or a bare remembrance; the matter is weighty, conſider it fully. As if Elihu had ſaid to Job, Thou haſt much forgotten thy ſelf, and gone off from that which is thy proper work. I have heard thee much complaining of the works of God, but thy work ſhould have been to magnifie the work of God. Though God hath caſt thee down and laid thee low, yet thy buſineſs ſhould have been to exalt the work of God; Remember, it would much better become thee to act another part than this; thou ſhouldſt have acted the part of a magnifier of the work of God, not the part of a complainer againſt it. Remember that thou

Magnifie;] The root ſignifieth, to increaſe and extol. We may conſider a twofold magnifying of the work of God. There is an inward magnifying of the work of God; and there is an outward magnifying of the work of God.

i. e.
Augeas, extollas ejus opus, non accuſes ut nunc facis. Merc.

Firſt, There is an inward magnifying of the work of God, when we think highly of it; thus did the Virgin in her ſong (Luke 1.46.) My ſoul doth magnifie the Lord. Her heart was raiſed up, and ſtretched out in high thoughts of God.

Secondly, There is an outward magnifying of the work of God. To ſpeak highly of his work is to magnifie his work; to live holily and fruitfully is to magnifie his work.

We cannot make any addition to the work of God, there is no ſuch magnifying of it; but we muſt ſtrive to give the works of God their full dimenſion, and not leſſen them at all. As we muſt not diminiſh the number of his works, ſo we muſt not diminiſh the juſt weight and worth of them. There is ſuch a charge of God to the Prophet about his word (Jer. 26. 2.) Go tell the people all the words that I command thee to ſpeak unto them; diminiſh not a word. Deliver thy meſſage in words at length, or in the full length of thoſe words in which it was delivered unto thee. We then magnifie the work of God, when we diminiſh not a tittle. As we cannot add any thing to it, ſo we muſt neither abate nor conceal any thing of it. To magnifie, is not to make the works of God great, but to declare and ſet forth the greatneſs of them; that's the magnifying here eſpecially intended. Remember that thou magnifie his works.

I ſhall not ſtay upon that other reading, Remember that thou art ignorant of his work. The ſame word which we tranſlate, to magnifie, with the variation of a point, ſignifieth to erre; hence that tranſlation. There is a profitable ſenſe in it; for indeed the beſt knowledg which we have of the work of God may be call'd ignorance, and we ſaid to be ignorant of that work which we are moſt knowing in. Yet becauſe this is ſtraining of the Text, I paſs it by, and keep to our own rendring, Remember that thou magnifie

Memento quod ignores opus ejus. Vulg. Hieronymus confundit שׂנא cum שׁנא quanquam שׁנה potius errare quam ignorare ſignificat. Druſ.

His work.] What work? Here is no work ſpecified, therefore I anſwer;

Firſt, All the works of God are here included; Magnifie his work. Whatever is a work of God, whatever hath the ſtamp and inſcription of God upon it, ſee that thou magnifie it.

Secondly, and more ſpecially, we may underſtand this work of God to be the work of Creation, the goodly ſtructure and fabrick of this viſible world; and indeed that's a work ſo great and magnificent, that it ought to be continually remembred and magnified.

Hujus mundi opificium intelligo. Bold.

Thirdly, Others reſtrain it more narrowly, to that part of the work of God which is eminent in the heavenly Meteors, and wonderful changes in the air, together with the motions and influences of the ſtars, of which we ſhall find Elihu diſcourſing at large, like a divine Philoſopher, in the next Chapter. There are ſtrange works of God in theſe lower heavens, where thoſe Meteors are born and brought forth; Remember to magnifie thoſe works.

Fourthly, I rather conceive (though ſuch works of God are afterward ſpoken of) that Elihu intends the work of Providence in both the appearances of it, as it is a white or black work, as it is for good or for evil, as it is in judgment or in mercy. A modern Interpreter pitcheth upon the former, and upon one particular of the former; as if Elihu had directly led Job's thoughts back to the Deluge, that work of God in bringing the Flood upon the old world; and if we can but go back and honour God for his paſt works of Providence, we ſhall magnifie him for his preſent. As if Elihu had ſaid, Thou complaineſt that thou art overflowed with a deluge of afflictions; but doeſt thou remember how God deſtroyed the whole world at once in the univerſal flood? But though I think, that may be taken in among other works, yet to reſtrain it to that is a great deal too narrow for this Text. Therefore under this work of God, we may comprehend any great work of God, which is upon record, or which we have heard of, wherein he hath ſhewed his power, wiſdom, and juſtice.

Remember his work;] The work of providence. Thoſe works of providence which are afflictive, have a great place in this Text, becauſe the perſon ſpoken to was one in an afflicted condition. And I conceive Elihu directs Job not ſo much to magnifie God for the day of proſperity and Sunſhine which he once had, as for the day of adverſity and darkneſs, which then covered him. Remember that thou magnifie his work,

Which men behold,] Which the ſons of Enoſh behold, ſaith Mr. Broughton. But the word Sons is not in the Text, there 'tis only men, or weak men. The word which we tranſlate to behold, hath a double ſignification, and that hath cauſed a double tranſlation: It ſignifieth, firſt, to ſing; ſecondly, to ſee or behold. It is tranſlated by ſeveral in the former ſenſe, Remember that thou magnifie his work, whereof men have ſang; The Chaldee Paraphraſe ſaith, For which juſt men have given praiſe in Pſalms and Songs. Beholding fully a good thing, and praiſing it, or praiſing God for it, go together, as Mr. Broughton's gloſs expreſſeth it out of Ramban. Gracious and holy men do not only ſpeak, but ſing the wonderful works of God; And, that praiſes were in ſong or verſe, both the Scriptures and many ancient Authors teſtifie. God works, and men ſing the praiſes of God for his works, as Moſes, David, and Deborah did. And we find all the Saints (Rev. 15. 3.) ſinging praiſes to the Lord for the great work which he will do in bringing forth judgment to perfection upon Babylon. Thus it is a truth, the work of God is to be ſung and ſet forth in Meeter, or in verſe.

De quo cecinerunt viri.

Quod laudarunt juſti viri Chald.

We take the other tranſlation, Which men behold; which, with reſpect to that which followeth (verſ. 25.) where both expreſſions refer to the eye, is, I conceive, moſt proper. Magnifie the work of God, which men behold; As if Elihu had ſaid, O Job, I adviſe thee to leave off ſearching into the ſecrets of God, and ſet thy ſelf to conſider and magnifie thoſe works of God which are plain and lye open to every man's eye.

The word rendred Behold, may note, both a tranſient, and an intenſe or fixt beholding, to look wiſhly as we ſay, to look faſtning the eye ſolicitouſly, yea, it imports, not only to behold with the eye of the body, but with the eye of the mind.

Some Interpreters put an Emphaſis upon the word men, as noting excellent men, vertuous men, men of vertue in their qualities, and of excellency in their abilities; ſuch are men indeed, worthy men, worthy the name of man; as it hath been ſaid of old, Where there are no men, do thou play the man, act and ſpeak like a man. Some men have nothing but the outſide of a man. This is a good notion. For good men, holy men, men of divine excellency, are moſt quick-ſighted, and quick-ſented; Firſt, eſpying the appearances of God in any of his providences, and then making a due improvement of them. Therefore (ſaith Elihu) magnifie his work, which men, that is, holy and good men, behold and take notice of. David ſpeaking of the works of God in that notable place, (Pſal. 92. 6.) ſaith, A bruitiſh man knoweth not, neither doth a fool underſtand this; that is, ſuch a one as he, cannot behold the work of God. And therefore it is more than a criticiſm to reſtrain the word men, to men of this ſort; yet it muſt be granted that the word ſignifies not only excellent men, but any ſort of men, whether wiſe or fooliſh, rich or poor, and the weaker ſort of men more ſpecially than the ſtronger and more noble in any kind.

Quæ viderunt non homines ſed viri præſtantes, ut ſit nomen ἀρετῆς. Sic alibi, in loco ubi non ſunt viri, virum te præſta. Druſ.

And to take the word in that univerſality, as compaſſing and comprehending all ſorts of men, even thoſe who are dim ſighted, blear-eyed, that is, of weakeſt underſtanding, may be a good improvement of the Text, implying, that as ſome of the works of God are ſo myſterious, that the wiſeſt cannot ſee the meaning of them, ſo many, very many, of his works are ſo manifeſt, that common men may compaſs them. Magnifie his works, which men behold.

The works of God are of two ſorts, viſible and inviſible.

Firſt, Such as we ſee or know, by ſight: Thus the works of Creation, and the works of Providence, his preſent providences, are ſuch as we behold, they are viſible works.

Secondly, There are inviſible works of God, which we cannot behold, but muſt believe, and can know only by faith; ſuch are his ſpiritual works, or what he works upon or in the ſpirits of the children of men: Theſe are written in too ſmall a letter for the eye of Nature to behold; none can ſee them or behold them but by an eye of faith, or ſpiritual underſtanding. The works of regeneration and ſanctification (for which God is wonderfully to be magnified) may be ſeen or beheld in the fruits and effects of them, in thoſe they are very viſible, but they cannot be ſeen in themſelves. The paſt and future providences of God cannot now be ſeen by the eye, but by faith they may, and we ought to believe that ſuch things were wrought, and ſhall be wrought; we are to receive the teſtimony given by faithful Hiſtory, that ſuch things were done, though we never ſaw the doing of them, and we are to receive the ſure word of Prophecy that ſuch things ſhall be done, though we live not to ſee the doing of them. The work of God intended here by Elihu is a viſible work, therefore it muſt fall among his providences.

Verſ. 25. Every man man may ſee it.

כל ארם Omnes homines in quibus eſt vel mica bonæ mentis. Merc.

That is, ſay ſome, every wiſe and underſtanding man; but rather, any man, (as was touched at the former verſe) if he be but a man of common underſtanding, if he have any ſpark of Reaſon left in him unquencht, if he have his eyes in his head, he may ſee it; the eye of every one who will not ſhut his eyes againſt the light, muſt needs ſee it. We ſay, Who ſo blind as they that will not ſee?

שור חזה נבט

Man may behold it afar off.] The word here rendred Behold, is not the ſame which we tranſlate Behold in the former verſe, nor is it the ſame word which ſignifieth to ſee in the former part of this verſe. Some make a difference between ſeeing in the former part of the verſe, and Beholding in the latter. Holy and good men ſee the works of God clearly and diſtinctly, they look on them with delight and contentment; the common ſort of men only behold them, firſt, darkly, as at a diſtance; ſecondly, confuſedly and in groſs. Man may behold it.

מרחוק A longe. Mont. Eminus, i. e. à formatione mundi huc uſq; Rab. Solemoth. Non planè perſpicit rationem ejus. Piſc.

Afar off.] There is a fourfold conception about that afar off.

Firſt, Some expound it for afar off in time, The work of God doth not wear out; that firſt and great viſible work of Creation which was from the beginning, yet remaineth. Ages paſs away, but the work of God doth not paſs away, though done ſome hundreds, yea thouſands of years ago.

Secondly, Afar off, that is, imperfectly, not fully; he may have ſome diſcoveries of it, every man the weakeſt man may diſcern ſomewhat of it. Things that are high and afar off, are confuſedly ſeen, not clearly or fully diſcerned. A man that is afar off, cannot be diſtinguiſhingly known. When a man is a far off, we may ſee him to be a man, but what manner of man he is, or who he is, we cannot diſcern; though poſſibly it may be our own father, yet being afar off we cannot know him diſtinctly. Thus to ſee afar off notes only a confuſed knowledg. That's a good ſenſe; things afar off are not diſtinctly ſeen.

Et longinquo, i. e. ex poſterioribus & effectis. Merc.

Thirdly, Afar off, may be expounded of all the ſight we have on this ſide Heaven. In this world we ſee all that we ſee afar off, we have not a near intimate knowledg of things, eſpecially not of the beſt things, ſpiritual things, of all them we muſt ſay, We know but in part, and ſee through a glaſs darkly, as the Apoſtle ſpeaks (1 Cor. 13. 12.) Such things as are not immediate to us, we are ſaid to ſee through a glaſs, or as repreſented in their effects, and iſſues, or in their back parts, as God himſelf is ſeen. (Exod. 33. 18, 23.) Thou ſhalt ſee my back parts: but my face ſhall not be ſeen, ſaid God to Moſes when he moved to ſee his glory.

Fourthly, This beholding afar off, may note the greatneſs of the work of God, the exceeding lightſomneſs and gloriouſneſs of it. Thoſe things that are great, may be ſeen a great way off. A high Tower is ſeen afar off. We hardly believe the doctrine and reports of Aſtronomers, how far off the Sun is, which every eye beholds. Though the Sun be ſo many thouſand miles diſtant, yet any man may ſee it, 'tis ſo great, ſo beautiful, ſo bright a body. Many of the works of God have ſuch a beauty, radiancy and luſtre in them, that any that are not ſtark blind may ſee them afar off. Remember that thou magnifie his work, which men behold. Every man may ſee it, man may behold it afar off. From the context of theſe two verſes, note, > Firſt, We are very apt to forget our duty in giving God the glory of his works.

The memento or remember at the beginning of the verſe is no more than needs. We have bad memories for any thing that's good, eſpecially for the good word word and the good works of God. We are ſo far from magnifying his work, that we often forget his work. 'Tis ſaid of Iſrael (Pſal. 106. 13.) They ſoon forgat his works. If we ſoon forget the works of God, we ſhall ſooner forget to magnifie God for his work. Many remember the work of God, who do not magnifie it, nor him for it; but none can magnifie the work of God, nor God for his work, who do not remember it.

Secondly, In that the Text ſaith, Remember that thou magnifie, not only that thou ſpeak of, or declare his work, but magnifie it,

> Note, We uſually have low apprehenſions of the work of God.

While we remember it, we do not magnifie it; while we ſpeak of his work, we ſeldom praiſe his work. It is ſaid of the vertuous Woman, (Prov. 31. 31.) Her own works praiſe her in the Gates; that is, they like ſo many elegant Orators tell all that paſs by, how praiſe-worthy ſhe is. The works of God will praiſe him, whether men do or no. All thy works ſhall praiſe thee, (ſaith David, Pſal. 145. 10.) What then ſhould they do for whom they are wrought? The latter part of the verſe ſhews what they will do who know what God hath wrought for them; Thy Saints (ſaith he) ſhall bleſs thee. They who have (as moſt have) low thoughts, can never give high praiſes of the works of God.

Thirdly, In that this counſel and exhortation is given to Job, in that this ſpur is, as it were, put to his ſides, Remember that thou magnifie,

> Note, The beſt men need Monitors and Remembrancers to quicken them about their duty of magnifying the works of God.

The Lord, though he needed not, yet will have us to be his remembrancers, to do our works for us, if we would have our works done; the Lord would have us by prayer to mind him of our own, and of all his peoples condition (Iſa. 62. 6.) Ye that are the Lords remembrancers (ſo we put in the Margin, and in the Text) ye that make mention of the Lord, &c. The Lord will have us to be his remembrancers. And though he is ever mindful of his Covenant, yet he liketh it well to be put in mind of it. But O what need have we of a remembrancer, to put us in mind of the work of God, and to magnifie his work! We need a daily remembrancer to put us in mind of what we ſhould do, how much more of what God hath done! We need to be minded of that which 'tis a wonder how we can forget, our latter end, or how frail we are; how much more do we need to be minded of thoſe duties which fit us for our latter end, and lead us to thoſe enjoyments which never end!

> Fourthly, obſerve, Such is the ſinfulneſs of mans heart, and his ſluggiſhneſs, that he hardly remembers to magnifie God for thoſe works which he cannot but ſee.

Elihu urgeth Job, and with him all men, to remember that they magnifie even that work of his which men behold, and which every man may ſee. How ſlack are they in or to that great duty of magnifying God, who when they ſee, or may ſee, if they will, his mighty works, yet mind not the magnifying of him!

> Fifthly, obſerve, Some works of providence are ſo plain, that every man, that doth not wilfully ſhut his eyes, may behold them.

He is altogether ſtupid and blockiſh, that ſeeth not what all may ſee. Hence the Pſalmiſt, having ſaid, O Lord, how great are thy works, concludeth ſuch among brutes and fools, (Pſal. 92. 6.) The brutiſh man knoweth not, neither doth a fool underſtand this. It was the ſaying of Plato an Heathen; That man is worthy his eyes ſhould be pulled out of his head, who doth not lift them up on high, that he may admire the wiſdom of the Creator in the wonderful fabrick of the world; I may add, and in the works of providence: Are they not ſuch, that as the Prophet ſpeaks, He that runs may read them?

Sixthly, Conſider why doth Elihu thus charge it upon Job? ſurely to humble him for his ſin, in that he did not magnifie God for his works.

> Hence note, It is a great aggravation of our neglect of praiſing God for his works, or of our not magnifying the works of God, ſeeing his works are obvious to every man, even to the weaker and ruder ſort of men.

If the very blind may ſee them, how ſinfully blind are they, who ſee them not! The works of God ſhould be ſought out, (Pſal. 111. 2, 4.) If they lie in corners, yet they are to be ſought out, and they are ſought out of them that have pleaſure therein. If God ſhould hide his work under ground, if God ſhould put his Candle under a buſhel (as Chriſt ſaith men do not, Mat. 5.) yet 'tis our duty to ſeek it out, and ſet it upon a Candleſtick, that all may behold it, and praiſe him for it. Now if the moſt hidden works of God muſt be ſought out, that they may be magnified, ſurely then, when the works of God ſtand forth and offer themſelves to our view, and we cannot tell which way to draw our eyes from them, how great a ſin is it, not to behold them, not to give him the glory of them.

Seventhly, Obſerve, To magnifie the works of God is mans duty, yea it is a moſt neceſſary and indiſpenſible duty.

This is the point chiefly intended by Elihu in his preſent diſcourſe with Job; This containeth the ſum and ſubſtance of the whole Text. To magnifie the work of God is ſo neceſſary, ſo indiſpenſible a duty, that A remember is put upon it, leſt at any time it ſhould ſlip from us. The Lord knowing how great, how weighty, how comfortable, how profitable a duty it is to keep the Reſt-day, prefixeth this word, Remember the Sabbath day to keep it holy, (Exod. 20. 8.) I might give inſtance from ſeveral other Scriptures, importing thoſe duties which have a memento put upon them to be of great neceſſity, and that the Lord will not bear with us if we lay them by, or neglect the conſtant performance of them. To forget any duty is very ſinful, how much more thoſe which we are ſpecially warned to remember that we do them! David was not ſatisfied in doing the duty of the Text alone, but muſt aſſociate others with him in it. (Pſal. 34. 3.) O let us magnifie the Lord together; that's a bleſſed conſort, the conſort of the bleſſed for ever. The whole work and reward too, of Saints in heaven is, and eternally will be, to magnifie God; and they have the beginnings of that work and reward, who are ſincerely magnifying his works here on earth. God hath magnified his word (in all things) above his name (Pſal. 138. 2.) and the reaſon is, becauſe his works anſwer or are the fulfilling of his word to the praiſe of his glorious name. Now if God hath magnified his word by his works, then we muſt magnifie his works, or him in his works, For wherein doth God magnifie his word but in his works? He hath magnified his work by bringing his word forth in his works: Surely then if God hath magnified his word by bringing it forth in his works, then 'tis our duty to magnifie the works of God, which are the product, effect and anſwer of his word.

But ſome may ſay, how is that done? I would give anſwer to this queſtion in five things.

Firſt, Then we magnifie the work of God, when we magnifie God for his work: we cannot magnifie the mercy of God, but by magnifying the God of our mercies; We cannot magnifie his work while we neglect himſelf. We magnifie God in his work, firſt, when we aſcribe the whole efficiency of what we ſee done in the world, to him, and ſay, This is the finger of God, Or when we ſay, according to this or that time, What hath God wrought? (Numb. 23. 23.) To magnifie the work of God is to give the whole of it to God. 'Tis the hand of God upon a work that ſets the price upon any work, and makes it worthy to be magnified. As in ſome Pictures, this ſets a price upon them, to ſay they are ſuch a man's work, the work of ſuch a famous Artiſt, the work of Apelles, or of Michael Angelo. So if we would magnifie any providential work, we muſt ſay, it is the work of the great God, it is he that hath done it; the eye of our mind muſt look directly at God in ruling and governing of the world. While we pore much upon, or ſtay our thoughts about ſecond cauſes, we cannot exalt the work of God; though we call it God's work, yet if our hearts hang about ſecond cauſes, the work cannot be exalted as his. 'Tis a depreſſion of the work of God to put any thing of man upon it. To honour the work of God is to give him the whole effect of the work. As we then magnifie God when we look to him alone, with a ſingle eye, as the end of all our works (There is nothing doth magnifie God in what we do, but our looking to God as the end of all we do; Let our work be what it will, never ſo glittering, never ſo gay and glorious in the eye of the world, yet if it be not conſigned over to God, it is a baſe and pitiful work; if any man dedicates his work to himſelf he diſhonours his work: Now (I ſay) as it magnifieth our work when we make God the end of our work) ſo that which magnifieth God's work, is; when we look upon him, not only as having an hand in it, but as being both the beginner and ender of it. If we take or give this to the creature, that is, ſit down in this or that Inſtrument, as the means by which we have attained our end, or as the end of what we have attained, we ſpoil the work as to God, or deſpoil God of his work. Remember, this, and this only, magnifyeth our work, when we with a ſingle eye look to God as the author and as the end of it. Every work we ſee done is magnified, and God in it, when we look to God as the Alpha and Omega, as the Author and Ender of it. Nor is this true only in thoſe works of God which he doth more immediately, but where men act moſt, and are very inſtrumental. Let us therefore aſcribe every work to God, and that firſt, in afflicting us; ſuch an eye Joſeph had (Gen. 45. 8.) It was not you that ſent me hither, but God; that is, not ſo much you, as God (ſaith Joſeph to his brethren) I do not ſay it was you (though you were unkind brethren) it was not you that ſent me hither, but God: I look at him more than at you in that great affliction, which was brought upon me by your envy and unbrotherly unkindneſs towards me. Such an eye David had when he was under a very grievous, black, dark providence, when his ſon roſe up againſt him, and when his ſubject Shimei curſed him, even then he magnified that work of God, by aſcribing it wholly unto him (2 Sam. 16. 10.) The Lord hath ſaid unto him, curſe David. He magnified God in that great affliction by looking at the hand of God alone in it, and paſſing by Shimei's, both undutifulneſs and extream malignity. He ſaid as much, while he tells us he ſaid nothing, in a like or as bad a caſe (Pſal. 39. 9.) I opened not my mouth, becauſe thou didſt it. Hence that reproof in the Prophet (Iſa. 5. 12.) They regard not the work of the Lord, nor conſider the operation of his hand. Secondly, Let us aſcribe every work to God in exalting us; ſuch an eye had the Church to God (Pſal. 44. 1, 2, 3.) Our fathers have told us what work thou didſt in their days; Thou didſt drive out the heathen by thy hand, and plantedſt them, they got not the land in poſſeſſion by their own ſword, &c. but by thy right hand, and thine arm, &c. Here is no mention at all of Joſhua's atchievements and famous victories in ſubduing the Canaanites, &c. All is given to God, and he alone exalted for that exalting work. That's the firſt anſwer: Then we magnifie the work of God, when we acknowledg him alone both in afflicting and exalting us.

Secondly, Then we magnifie the work of God, when we beat out, as it were, and ſift all the circumſtances of his work (as we ſay) to the bran, that ſo we may find out every perfection, every glory of it: when we do not only behold and ſee the work, but when (as direction is given, Pſ. 48.) We walk about Zion, tell her towers, and conſider her palaces, that is, when we do not look upon things only in the bulk, but make an exact ſcrutiny, or take a full view of every part. We cannot magnifie the work of God by a bare beholding of it, but by prying into every circumſtance of it, or by conſidering what excellencies and rarities are in it. As we magnifie our ſinful works (in one ſenſe we ſhould magnifie our ſins, that is, aggravate them, not magnifie them to applaud them, or glory in them, but to make our ſelves aſhamed of them, as (I ſay) we magnifie our ſinful works, or what we have done ſinfully, when we conſider all the circumſtances of our ſins, as committed againſt light and love, againſt mercy and goodneſs, againſt the patience and forbearance of God, againſt our own profeſſions and promiſes, againſt our experiences & priviledges, all which ſhould oblige us to holineſs, and engage us to a gracious circumſpection in all our ways and walkings, leſt at any time we ſhould ſin againſt God and grieve his Spirit) So we magnifie the works of God when we eye all the circumſtances of them, and conſider them as done for us when we could do nothing for our ſelves, as done for us when we muſt have periſhed and been undone, unleſs God had appeared for us; as done for us when we deſerved not the leaſt good to be done for us; as done for us when none would do any thing for us, none caring for our ſouls; as done for us when none could do any thing for us. Theſe and ſuch like circumſtantial conſiderations, exceedingly magnifie the work of God. A bare behold, a tranſient look may diſcover no great matter, but if we ſeriouſly weigh every particular, we ſhall then ſee cauſe enough to magnifie the work of God. Eliah (1 Kings 18. 43.) commanded his ſervant to look towards the ſea, and when he went firſt, he ſaw nothing, but being commanded to go ſeven times, he at the ſeventh ſaw a little cloud riſing out of the ſea, as big as a mans hand; but at the laſt, heaven was black with clouds and wind, and there was a great rain. If we would look again and again, if we would look ſeven times upon the work of God, that which at firſt ſeemed nothing, or afterwards no bigger than a man's hand, or no bigger than a man's hand could effect and bring about, will at laſt be magnified to ſuch a vaſtneſs, that all muſt confeſs, the hand of God hath done it.

Thirdly, We then magnifie the works of God, when we freely ſubmit to God in them, as juſt and righteous, when we accept and take them kindly at his hand, not only when they are outward kindneſſes, but croſſes. All the great words and rhetorick we can beſtow upon the works of God will not magnifie them, unleſs we freely ſubmit to them as juſt and righteous. They that would magnifie the works of God, muſt ſay, Judgment and righteouſneſs are the habitation of his throne, while they can ſee nothing but clouds and darkneſs round about him (Pſal. 97. 2.) I (ſaith the Pſalmiſt) am in the dark about all that God is doing at this day, yet of this I am as confident as confidence it ſelf, Judgment and Righteouſneſs are the habitation of his throne; I know God doth nothing amiſs, no not in the leaſt. Thus John in the Revelation (Chap. 15. 3.) ſaw them that had gotten the victory over the beaſt, and over his image, and over his mark, and over the number of his name, and they (ſaith he) ſing the Song of Moſes, &c. ſaying, Great and marvelous are thy works, juſt and true are thy ways. The works of God in Judgment upon Babylon, are full of juſtice, and we magnifie them by proclaiming and crying them up as juſt; yea, the work of God in Judgment upon Zion, is exceedingly magnified, when Zion ſubmits to it, and embraceth it as juſt and righteous. It was the great ſin of the houſe of Iſrael, when they ſaid (Ezek. 18. 25.) The ways of God are not equal. As if they had ſaid, are theſe the Lord's equal dealings, that we his People ſhould be given up to the hand of the enemy, and ſuffer ſuch things as theſe? yea, the houſe of Iſrael muſt ſay, all the works of God, not only his exalting works, but his humbling works, are equal, juſt and righteous, for we have ſinned. This is to magnifie the work of God.

Fourthly, To magnifie the work of God, is to look upon his work whatever it is, not only as having juſtice in it towards all men, but as good and being full of goodneſs to his People. Poſſibly it may be very hard work, yet we muſt bring our hearts to ſay it is good work, good to and for the Iſrael of God. Thus the holy man of old magnified the work of God (Pſal. 73. 1.) Truly God is good to Iſrael. This he ſpake while he was bemoaning himſelf under very afflicting providences. We magnifie the afflicting works of God, when we ſubmit to them as juſt, much more when we embrace them as good. And it was very much the deſign of Elihu to bring Job off from diſputing about the evils with which God had ſo long exerciſed him, to a ready yieldance that they were good for him, and that in all the Lord intended nothing but his good.

Fifthly, To magnifie the work of God, is to anſwer the end of it. Every work is magnified when it receiveth its end; if a work be done, yet if it have not its effect, if it bring not that about to which it was deſigned, the worker receives no honour from it, nor is the work honoured. To work in vain, is a debaſing, a leſſening of any work, not a magnifying of it. The Apoſtle was afraid to beſtow his labour in preaching the Goſpel in vain. When people ſtill continue in their blindneſs and unbelief, &c. this layeth the preaching of the Goſpel low; but when ſouls are convinced and converted, and come flocking in, then the Goſpel is magnified, and the word of the Lord glorified, as the Apoſtle prayed it might (2 Theſſ. 3. 1.) Now as the word of God is magnified when it attains its end, ſo the work of God is magnified when we give him, or come up to thoſe ends for which he wrought it: But if we let God loſe the end of his work, we do what we can to debaſe his work, as if he had done it in vain. We ſay, he works like a fool that hath not propoſed an end to every work he doth; and he appears not very wiſe, at leaſt not very powerful, who attaineth not the end or ends for which he began his work. The moſt wiſe God hath his end and aim in all his works in this world; and this is the honour we do his work, when we labour, firſt, to know, and ſecondly, to give him his end in every work.

But if any ask, VVhat are the ends of God in his work? I anſwer, They are very various.

Firſt, The chief end of all that God doth, is the advancement of his own Name and Glory. As he made all things for himſelf in Creation, ſo he doth all things for himſelf in Providence. That which is the ſin of man is the holineſs of God, to ſeek himſelf. It is moſt proper for God, who is the chief good, and whoſe glory is the ultimate end of all things, to ſet up himſelf in all things (Prov. 16. 4.) The Lord hath made all things for himſelf, ſaith Solomon. And the Apoſtle ſaith as much (Rom. 11. 36.) Of him and through him, and to him, are all things: to whom be glory for ever, Amen. All things are of him, therefore all things ſhou'd return unto him. If we would magnifie any work of God, we muſt be ſure to give him this end, the glory of it. Let it not ſatisfie us, that we are advanced, or get up by the works of God, unleſs we our ſelves advance his glory by them. Many advance themſelves, and are lifted up with pride, when God works for them or by them, not at all minding that which they ſhould chiefly mind, the glorifying of God in and by what he hath wrought, either for themſelves or others.

Secondly, God hath this in deſign, by all his works, to make us better. If it be a work of Judgment, it is to make us better, and then we exalt his works of Judgment, when we are bettered by them, when we are more humbled and weaned from the world by them. And as 'tis the deſign of God to make us better by his works of Judgment, ſo by all his works of mercy. The Apoſtle beſeecheth us by the mercies of God, to preſent our bodies (that is, our whole ſelves) a living ſacrifice, in all holy ſervice to himſelf (Rom. 12. 1.) What will it advantage us to be bettered in our outward enjoyments, by what God works or doth for us, unleſs we learn to be better, and do his work better? that is, unleſs our hearts be more holy, and we more fruitful in every good word and work. Some will magnifie the work of God by keeping a day of thankſgiving, becauſe they are richer or greater by what God hath wrought for them, who yet are not a whit more holy or ſpiritual by it. Wo to thoſe who magnifie the work of God becauſe they think it ſhall go better with them, when themſelves are not better. Enquire therefore what luſt hath the work of God moved you to mortifie, what grace hath the work of God put you upon the exerciſe of? They only indeed magnifie the work of God who have ſuch workings towards God. It were better not receive a mercy, than not to be bettered by a mercy. It is not our crying up the works of God in our words, but in our works, which is the magnifying of them. It is more ſafe for us to ſay nothing of what God hath wrought for us, than to publiſh it, or make our boaſt of it, when we our ſelves do nothing worthy of it, in a way of condecency, and proportion to it. 'Tis the deſign of God in giving promiſes to make us cleanſe our ſelves from all filthineſs of fleſh and ſpirit, perfecting holineſs in the fear of God (2 Cor. 7. 1.) Much more having given us any great performances of his promiſes, doth he expect that we ſhould be clean and holy. O then what a pitiful courſe do they take, who pretending to magnifie the works of God, do ſuch things as are a defilement both to fleſh and ſpirit!

A third deſign of God in working for us, is to make us truſt him more, or to be more in believing. 'Tis ſhewed (Pſal. 78. 4.) what great things God did for the Jewiſh Nation, and for their fathers; But what did God aim at in all? we have the anſwer (verſ. 8.) That they might ſet their hope in him, and not forget his works. The aim which God had in thoſe great works, was that their hope might be ſet upon him, that they might truſt in him more than ever they had done. The Lord, by the great works he doth, would gain upon our faith, or cauſe us to truſt him for the future. How diſhonorably do they carry it towards God, who believe not his word, much more they who believe not his works, that is, who believe him not, notwithſtanding his works, as 'tis ſaid of Iſrael (Pſal. 78. 32.) For all this they ſinned ſtill; and believed not his wondrous works. The Pſalmiſt doth not mean, that they did not believe ſuch works had been done; but the meaning is, they did not truſt God who had done thoſe works. Theſe and many more duties the Lord teacheth us by his word, and he teacheth them alſo by his works, as it is ſaid (verſ. 22.) who teacheth like him? The Lord teacheth us many excellent leſſons by his works, if we had hearts to learn thrm. Lay theſe things together in practice, and they will be the beſt, yea, they are the only way of magnifying the works of God done for us. And, if the works of God are to be magnified all theſe ways, then they fall ſhort of this duty.

Firſt, Who only make a report of the works of God, who tell the ſtory of what he hath done, and ſo have done. As we ought to adorn the Doctrin of God (*Tit.*2.) ſo likewiſe the doings of God, or what God hath done by our doings. Meer narratives about the work of God, is far below magnifying his work.

Secondly, They fail much more who extenuate and diminiſh the works of God, who obſcure or eclipſe his works. As in our confeſſions of repentance, it is a ſign of a bad heart barely to report our ſins before God, without aggravating them in their ſinfulneſs; but in confeſſion to extenuate our ſin ſheweth a very rotten and naughty heart: ſo in our confeſſions of praiſe, meerly to report what God hath done for us, without putting an accent or a due emphaſis upon his mercies, ſhews much coldneſs of ſpirit in the duty; but to clip and leſſen the works of God, to hide and darken them, to abate and detract from them, ſhews a baſe and a wicked ſpirit.

Thirdly, How do they fail in magnifying the works of God, who do not only conceal how good they are, but bring up an ill report upon them, as thoſe ſearchers did upon the land of Canaan. Thoſe works and diſpenſations of God, which (like that land) flow with milk and honey, may be looked upon and cenſured by ſome, as good for nothing but to eat up and conſume thoſe that are under them.

Fourthly, They who are impatient under any work of God, who murmur and repine at it, are far from magnifying the work of God.

Fifthly, They are far from magnifying the work of God, who think themſelves ſo wiſe that they could mend the work of God; had they the penſel in their hand, they would make fairer work of it: what hudling is here? Think ſome; what confuſion is here? Say others; what ſad work is here? Saith a third. If we had the ordering of things, what an orderly world would we make, if we had the ordering of things (as God hath) we would quickly cure and remedy all theſe diſorders. Though ſuch formal ſpeeches be not uttered, yet ſuch things are ſpoken in parables, the actions of ſome tell us ſuch are their thoughts, as if they could mend the work of God, and govern the world with greater moderation than tis; though indeed we need not ſcruple to call the wiſeſt man in the world a very dotard, if he thinks ſo, or that any thing can be done more equally than God hath done it. Let all fleſh adore, let none preſume to queſtion the work of God; let God alone with his work; as he will have no controler, ſo he needs no counſeller. Remember, tis mans duty to magnifie his work, not to mend it, to ſhew how good it is, not to attempt the making of it better. And indeed as it is the higheſt point of preſumption, ſo of ignorance, to meddle with the mending of it. The Lord is a Rock (ſaith Moſes, Deut.32.4.) and his work is perfect. Who but a fool, or who but by the over-working of his own folly would venture to mend that which is already, not only perfected, but perfect, were it only the work of a man, much more when it is the work of God, the only wiſe God?

And that we may be provoked humbly to magnify, and for ever deterred from that proud attempt of finding fault with, or mending the work of God, conſider theſe three things;

Firſt, Take the argument in the Text, the plainneſs of the work of God, it is ſuch as may be ſeen afar off, none can pretend ignorance of it, or if they do, that's a vain covert, or excuſe; every man may ſee it, man may behold it afar off, as moſt worthy to be magnified.

Secondly, If we do not magnifie the work of God, God will leſſen his own works of mercy and favour toward us.

Thirdly, He will do no more for us if we magnifie not what he hath done. It is ſaid (Math. 13. 58.) Chriſt did not many mighty works there, becauſe of their unbelief. God will do no more mighty works for them, who refuſe or neglect to pay him a tribute of praiſe and glory for what he hath done.

VERS. 26.

Behold, God is great, and we know him not, neither can the number of his years be ſearched out.

ELihu having called upon Job to magnifie the work of God in general, proceeds to draw him to the magnifying of the ſpecial works of God in naturals: Yet before he leads him to the conſideration of the greatneſs of thoſe works, he invites him to conſider God himſelf who is the Author and Diſpoſer of them, and he invites him to conſider God in three things, all which we find laid down in this 26. Verſe.

Firſt, In his greatneſs, Behold God is great.

Secondly, In his Incomprehenſibleneſs; He is great, and we know him not.

Thirdly, In his Eternity; Neither can the number of his years be ſearched out.

Surely he is moſt worthy our conſideration who is great, and ſo great that he cannot be comprehended, and who is eternally great, whoſe years are numberleſs.

Verſ. 26. Behold God is great.

שגיא Et multus, & magnus, multus robore. Druſ. Septuaginta legunt multus, i. e. omnibus numeris perfectus, atque omnibus perfectionibus cumulatus.

The word Behold, is here a note both of Attention and admiration; O mind, O admire the greatneſs of God. God is great. The word rendred great, properly ſignifies an encreaſing growing greatneſs; God is without all encreaſe or growth, being for ever the ſame, yet he may be ſaid to encreaſe, to be magnified and multiplied (as I may ſay) according to the apprehenſions which we have of him. This word bears the ſignification both of much and many. God is but one and the one-moſt one, yet (in this ſenſe) many. So the Septuagint renders it here, he hath, or is many, that is, he hath all perfections in him; the lines of all excellency and virtue, of all glory and perfection, center in God alone. Thus God is much, and God is many; the one God is many, he hath many, he hath all eminencies and excellencies bound up, boundleſly in him.

Again, God is great, in himſelf or in his being. Whatſoever is in God is God, and therefore whatſoever is in God is great. The power of God is the powerful God, and therefore his power muſt needs be great; the wiſdom of God is the wiſe God, and therefore his wiſdom muſt needs be very great; the mercy of God is the merciful God, and therefore his mercy muſt needs be very great: And thus we may proceed in our meditations quite through all the divine Attributes.

And as God is great in his being, ſo he is great in his working, he doth great things. The Pſalmiſt ſaith, he is good, and doth good; he is alſo great, and doth great things; he is the firſt, the chief, and the beſt being, and his doings are ſuch as he is, he doth like himſelf. God is great, and he hath an excellent, an excelling greatneſs. Praiſe him (ſaith *David, Pſal.*150. 2.) according to his excellent greatneſs; for when the Scripture ſaith, God is great, this poſitive is to be taken as a ſuperlative, God is great, that is, he is greateſt, he is greater than all, ſo great that all perſons and all things are little, yea, nothing before him *Iſa.*40.15. Behold the nations are (to him but) as the drop of the bucket, and are counted but as the ſmall duſt of the balance: behold, he taketh up the Iſles as a very little thing, they are as nothing, and they are counted to him as leſs than nothing and vanity. How great is God in compariſon of whom the greateſt things are little things, yea, the greateſt things are nothing!

Behold, God is great. From this excellent Attribute, the greatneſs of God, I have made ſeveral Inferences already, at the 12. verſe of the 33. chapter; yet I ſhall infer ſome things further here, both for our direction and conſolation.

Firſt, If God be great and greateſt, then fear him greatly. Great is the Lord (ſaid David, in his thankſgiving-ſong, 1 Chron. 16.25.) he alſo is to be feared above all gods; That is, above all the great powers on earth, and above all the imaginary powers of Heaven. Idols, who are the fancied powers of Heaven, are ſometimes called gods in Scripture; ſo likewiſe are Princes or Magiſtrates, who are real powers on earth. Now, ſaith David (who was one of thoſe gods, and a great one) fear him above all gods: Why? Becauſe he is above all gods, he is higher than the higheſt and he is greater than the greateſt; therefore fear him above all gods, yea, therefore fear, or worſhip him all ye gods (Pſal. 97. 7.) Many ſay with their mouths, God is great, yea, infinitely greater than man, yet they fear men, eſpecially great men, more than God.

Secondly, If God be great, then love him greatly. Shall this great God have but little love from us? The Law of love, with reſpect to God, is expreſt two ways in Scripture; Firſt, as to the truth of it; and Secondly, as to the meaſure or degree of it. The love which is given to God muſt be a true love, a ſincere love, yet not only ſo, but the love which is given to God muſt be the greateſt love; Thou ſhalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart, and with all thy Soul, and with all thy might, and with all thy ſtrength; with all thy heart ſincerely, with all thy might and ſtrength greatly.

Thirdly, If God be great, then ſerve him greatly, or do him great ſervice. Take heed of offering the lean and the lame, the halt and the blind to this great King. A great King muſt not be put off with little ſervices with ſmall pittances of duty.

Fourthly, If God be great, then believe him greatly; let us have great faith in the great God. Jeſus Chriſt rebukes his diſciples (Matth. 8. 26.) O ye of little faith; have you God to pitch your faith upon, who is great? Have you his power, and his mercy, and his truth, and his faithfulneſs, all which are great, to reſt upon? And have you but a little faith? That woman (Matth. 15. 28.) gave glory to God in believing, when ſhe believed greatly; and therefore Chriſt cryeth up and magnifyeth the greatneſs of her Faith, O woman, great is thy Faith.

Fifthly, The great God is greatly to be praiſed; he doth great things for us, therefore we muſt return great thanks to him. That alſo we have expreſly (1 Chron. 16. 25.) Great is the Lord, and greatly to be praiſed. The great God muſt have great praiſes, for he doth great things. As every ſin we commit againſt God hath a greatneſs in it upon this conſideration, becauſe he is a great God againſt whom we ſin (Take heed of the leaſt ſin, for that is great, being committed againſt the great God) ſo whatſoever duty (this of praiſe eſpecially) we perform to God, we ſhould ſtrive to raiſe it up to the greateſt, to the higheſt, becauſe the great God, the high God is concerned in it, or it is conſigned to the great, to the high God.

Sixthly, If God be great, we ought to give him great ſubmiſſion, or to ſubmit greatly to him. Great ſubmiſſion to God is the ſubſtance of all duty to God. We owe the full ſubmiſſion of our wills to the Will of God in a twofold reſpect. Firſt, to whatſoever he willeth us to do, or to his commanding will. Secondly, to whatſoever he will do with us, or to his diſpoſing Will. In theſe, and in all things, let us ſtrive to greaten all the actings of our Souls towards God, becauſe he is great.

Secondly, If God be great, then we may infer for conſolation.

Firſt, Be not diſcouraged in prayer when you have great things to ask, when your wants are great, and your neceſſities urgent, when you muſt have great ſupplies, when ſmall matters will not ſerve your turn (in many caſes, it is not a little help, it is not a ſmall matter which will do the thing which we ſue unto God for) now here is a mighty ground of comfort for us, if we want great things, we have a great God to go unto; and how great ſoever our wants are, they are all but ſmall to the greatneſs of that God unto whom we go (Epheſ. 3. 20.) He is able to do exceeding abundantly above what we ask or think; and not only above what we actually ask and think, but indeed, beyond what poſſibly we can ask or think, above what we are able to ask or think. Therefore let us never be diſcouraged in prayer, becauſe of the greatneſs of the things that we have to ask of God.

Secondly, Be not diſcouraged, though as your wants, ſo your dangers and your troubles are great. How great ſoever the danger is you would be delivered from, God is greater, to whom you come for deliverance: And therefore when a great Mountain ſtood in the way of the deliverance of the people of God (Zech. 4. 7.) the Prophet ſpeaks in this language, Who art thou? O great Mountain, thou ſhalt become a Plain before Zerubbabel; That is, before the power of that God in whom Zerubbabel truſts and whoſe work Zerubbabel carries on. Hence that holy confidence (Pſal. 66. 3.) Through the greatneſs of thy power, thine enemies ſhall ſubmit themſelves to thee, or, they ſhall yield feigned obedience, as we put in the margin, which ſome render thus, though the greatneſs of thy power, thine enemies ſhall be found liars. All the readings magnifie the greatneſs of God. Through the greatneſs of thy power thine enemies, the enemies of thy people, ſhall ſubmit, they ſhall be found liars, they ſhall yield feigned obedience, they ſhall not be able with all their greatneſs to ſtand it out againſt the great God. Therefore be not diſcouraged at any time at the greatneſs of danger. Though you walk through the very valley of the ſhadow of death (that's to be in the greateſt danger) yet as David did not, ſo do not you fear, no not that great danger, while the great God is with you.

Thirdly, Be not diſcouraged though your ſins are great when you come to ask the pardon of them. As the greatneſs of ſin puts a very great damp upon the ſpirit of man in asking pardon, ſo the greatneſs of God ſhould take off that damp. My thoughts are not your thoughts (ſaith the Lord Iſa. 55. 7, 8, 9.) in this matter. There is nothing wherein God doth more exceed man than in pardoning ſin (Mic. 7. 18.) If ſin be great, the mercy of God is great too, infinitely greater than the ſin of man; if ſin be great, remember we have a great high Prieſt (Heb. 4. 14.) not only a Prieſt, but a high Prieſt, and a great high Prieſt; therefore fear not to ask the pardon, even of the greateſt ſin, in his name and for his ſake. And this is true, if we reſpect either national or perſonal ſins; it may encourage us in asking pardon for nations, how great ſoever their ſins are. Moſes, when the People had greatly ſinned againſt God, had recourſe to this (Numb. 14. 18, 19.) The Lord is of great mercy; pardon I beſeech thee the iniquity of this people, according to the greatneſs of thy mercy, as thou haſt forgiven this people from Egypt even until now. Do thus alſo with reſpect to perſonal ſins. David made the greatneſs of his perſonal ſin an argument to go to God for mercy (Pſal. 25. 11.) Pardon my ſin, O Lord, for it is great. He was ſo far from being diſheartened by the greatneſs of his ſin, to ask the pardon of it, that (according to our reading) he had great hope of pardon, as well as ſaw he had great need of pardon; and all becauſe he knew God was great in mercy. Or, if we read that Text thus, Pardon my ſin, O Lord, though it be great, the ſenſe is much the ſame; for as the former makes the greatneſs of his ſin a reaſon provoking him to haſten unto God for pardon (as great diſeaſes haſten us in ſeeking remedies) ſo the latter ſhews that the greatneſs of ſin is no ſtop to the mercy and free grace of God in Chriſt, for the pardon of it. Chriſt in that Parable (Mat. 18. 24.) gives inſtance of the greateſt debt; he tells us of one that owed his Lord ten thouſand talents, a vaſt ſum, a very vaſt ſum; a talent being, according to the loweſt computation, three hundred pounds of money; ten thouſand times three hundred pounds is a huge ſum; ſo that here was a great debt, now (ſaith the Text) When the debtor had nothing to pay, he came to his Lord, or Creditor, and he forgave him all. He did not ſay, wouldeſt thou have me, or can I, forgive ſuch a debt as this? What, ten thouſand talents? He forgave it as if it had been a debt of two mites. Thus, and many other ways we may improve this firſt Attribute of God, mentioned in the Text, his greatneſs, both as to our direction in duty, and conſolation in every extremity. Behold God is great,

And we know him not.

That's the ſecond thing. The words are plain, but the ſenſe is difficult; for it may be objected, Do not we know God? Elihu ſaid but juſt now, in the very verſe before the Text, Magnifie his works which men behold, every man may ſee it, man may behold it afar off? Surely if the works of God may be known and ſeen by every one, God himſelf may be known, for he is known in his works, as the Apoſtle argues (Rom. 1. 20.) The things which he hath made make him known: how is this then ſaid, That God is great and we know him not? Doth not the Prophet in denouncing that dreadful curſe (Jer. 10.25.) Pour out thy wrath upon the heathen that know thee not, thereby intimate, that all the people of God know him? Doth not Chriſt tell us (John 17.3.) This is eternal life, to know thee the only true God. They who have eternal life, muſt have the knowledg of the true God. But all true believers have eternal life already in hope, and ſhall have it ſhortly in hand, therefore they know God. The Promiſe of the New Covenant is (Heb. 11.) They ſhall all know me from the leaſt to the greateſt; That is, all my Covenant-people ſhall know me. How is it then ſaid, God is great, and we know him not? When Paul was at Athens, he found an Altar with that Inſcription, To the unknown God (Act. 17.23.) They worſhipped a God whom they knew not, but certainly we muſt know whom we worſhip. Ye worſhip ye know not what, was Chriſt's reproof of the Samaritans (John 4.22.) We know what we worſhip; That is, whom we worſhip.

For anſwer to this, when the Text ſaith, God is great and we know him not; we may ſay, Firſt, That even heathens, the untaught, untutored, and uncatechized heathens do, or, may know God; That is, they may know him in ſome degree or other, they may, yea, they do know him (as the Apoſtle ſaith, Rom. 1.20.) ſo far as to leave them without excuſe; they have no plea, nor can they make any apologie for themſelves. Secondly, 'Tis certain, all believers, I mean all true believers, know God ſavingly, or ſo far as is ſufficient for their Salvation. Every believer knows God. There is no faith in God without the knowledg of God. Thirdly, Which ſhall be the point of Obſervation from this part, as well as an anſwer to the Queſtion;

None know God fully, perfectly, comprehenſively.

That's Elihu's meaning when he ſaith, God is great, and we know him not; That is, we know not how great he is, or we know not the utmoſt of his greatneſs. God only knoweth himſelf fully and comprehenſively. There is no proportion between the greatneſs of God and the underſtanding of a man. The greatneſs of God is infinite, the underſtanding of a man is but finite and limited; the deepeſt underſtanding among men, yea, the underſtanding of Angels is but ſhallow, compared with God. Thus we are to underſtand this Text, God is great, and we know him not. There is a greatneſs in every thing of God, tranſcending the poſſibility of any created underſtanding. This ſome give for the reaſon, why the Seraphims ſpoken of (*Iſa.*6.) are ſaid with two of their wings to cover their faces, they were not able to bear the light of the knowledg of the glory of God. For, though Chriſt, in that admonition which he gave, to take heed of offending and deſpiſing the little ones, gives this reaſon for it, (Matth. 18.10.) For in Heaven there Angels do always behold the face of my Father which is in Heaven; though (I ſay) it be a truth, that the holy Angels, and bleſſed Saints above, do always behold the face of God, yet neither Saints nor Angels, not the Saints in glory, nor the glorious Angels, can fully comprehend the greatneſs and majeſty of God; and therefore the Prophet (as was ſaid) repreſented the Angels covering their faces with their wings. We have heard of King Hiero putting the queſtion to Simonides, a Philoſopher, What God was? who deſired (not being able to give a ſudden anſwer) that the King would reſpit him till next day; when next day came he deſired a ſecond, and when that came he deſired a third; and ſtill the more he ſearched, the farther he was from finding his anſwer. This is true, not only of Philoſophers, who ſee but by the dark light of Nature, but of thoſe who are enlightened divinely, or from above, they who receive much light from God, cannot comprehend the light of God; the more they ſearch into it, the more they ſee themſelves ſhort of it. The moſt we know of God is not ſo much as the leaſt part of that which we know not of him; and when we know as much of God as is knowable by man, yet it may be ſaid, as in the Text, God is great, and we know him not.

Hence take three brief Corollaries or Deductions.

Firſt, If God be great and we know him not; this is, we are not able to comprehend him; then we muſt reſt ſatisfied with what God hath manifeſted of himſelf and of his will. God hath manifeſted himſelf theſe four ways. Firſt, In his Word. Secondly, In his works of Creation and Providence. Thirdly, In his Son. Fourthly, By his Spirit. Theſe ways God is pleaſed to manifeſt himſelf, or make himſelf known unto his People; now what knowledg of God can be gathered up in theſe ways, what can be learned of him out of his word, out of his works, by conſidering him in his Son, and by waiting for the help of his bleſſed Spirit, we muſt labour to take in; but take heed of a bold preſſing into the ſecrets of God, or of a curious prying into the nature of God, which indeed will but dazle our eyes, and the more we think or look into it, the blinder we ſhall be.

Secondly, If God be ſo great that we know him not, Then we ought not preſumptuouſly to inquire into a reaſon of the works and ways of God; for that which is true of God himſelf, is true of his works and of his ways, we cannot know them in the ſenſe opened: Therefore the Apoſtle ſpeaking about that wonderful diſpenſation of God, the laying aſide of the Jews and calling of the Gentiles (Rom. 11.33.) cryeth out, O the depth of the knowledg and wiſdom of God! how unſearchable are his Judgments, and his ways paſt finding out! As God himſelf cannot be fully known, ſo neither can his ways nor works.

Thirdly, If God cannot be fully known, neither in himſelf, nor his works, Then take heed of murmuring or complaining of the ways, works, and dealings of God. Will you find fault with that which you neither do, nor can fully know? How little is it of any of the works of God, that we know! How little a way do we ſee into them! Let us not find fault with that thing, the perfections whereof cannot find out; ſay not, why is it thus? Why doth God let things go thus? Why are his providences ordered thus? There are many ſuch queryings in the hearts of men, and ſome ſuch are expreſt by the tongues of men. But remember, the Lord cannot be known in his works, therefore let us not complain of his works, but, ſitting down in ſilence, ſubmit to them; let us (as David) Be dumb becauſe God hath done it, (Pſal. 39.9.) David was ſilent, not only with reſpect to the ſoveraignty of God, who, he knew, had power and liberty to do whatſoever he pleaſed, but with reſpect to his incomprehenſibility, becauſe he knew he was not able to know or underſtand the bottom-reaſon of that which God had done. This ſome conceive, the ſpecial intendment of Elihu in this Text, as reproving Job for his many complaints, and murmurings, and diſputings about the dealings of God with him in the extremity of his ſufferings: Therefore, ſaid he, Conſider God is great, and we know him not.

Yet let none be diſcouraged in ſeeking after the knowledg of God, becauſe 'tis told us we cannot know God; yea let no man think to excuſe himſelf in his neglect of purſuing the knowledg of God, becauſe this Text ſaith we cannot know him. Some poſſibly will ſay, If God be ſo great, that we cannot know him, then why ſhould we labour after the knowledg of God? Or we hope this will excuſe us, if we do not know him, ſeeing we cannot. Take heed of ſuch reaſonings; for though God cannot be known to the utmoſt of what himſelf is, yet God may be known ſo far as is needful for us, and that is very far. We may know God ſo far as concerns our duty to him, and our happineſs by him; we may know God ſo far as to honour him, and to enjoy him: and we muſt labour to know him perfectly, though we cannot. The Apoſtle ſpeaking of the love of God (Eph. 3.17.) would have us labour to comprehend with all Saints, the heighth, the bredth, the depth, the length, and to know the love of Chriſt that paſſeth knowledg. That the love of Chriſt paſſeth knowledg, that it exceeds our underſtanding, ſhould not diſcourage us from labouring to know it; nor will it excuſe any that ſit down idly, and do not ſtudy the knowledg of God, though he paſſeth knowledg; we muſt labour to know the greatneſs of Gods love, and the greatneſs of Gods wiſdom, and the greatneſs of Gods power, though the greatneſs of God in all theſe is greater than our narrow hearts can comprehend. Behold, God is great, and we know him not,

Neither can the number of his years be ſearched out.

Numerus annorum ejus, & non eſt inveſtigatio.

The Text is, Number of his years, no ſearch; That is, as we well tranſlate it, the number of his years is ſuch as cannot be ſearched, we ſay, ſearched out; It is but one word in the Hebrew, properly ſignifying, to ſearch a thing to the bottom, that we may find out the utmoſt of it. The number of Gods years cannot thus be ſearched out, we cannot find them to the bottom. Elihu ſpeaks of God after the manner of men; years properly belong to man, and the things here below of this world: the life of man, and the continuance of the creature, are meaſured by hours, and days, and weeks, and months, and years, as theſe are meaſured by the motion of the Heavens. But God is far above any ſuch rule or meaſure of life, or of his being, all theſe meaſures are improper unto God; there's no meaſuring him by hours, days, weeks, months or years or ages. The word which we tranſlate Years, ſignifieth Changes. Years are changed or returned; there is a return of the ſame time every year, Spring and Summer, and Autumn and Winter; Thus the year changeth, and turns about continually. God is infinitely above all theſe changes and turnings of time (*Pſal.*102.25,26,27.) The Heavens wax old, and as a veſture thou ſhalt change them, and they ſhall be changed, but thou art the ſame, and thy years fail not. The years of God are not like the years of the world, which wear it out, and change it as a veſture, is changed by time; the Lord is for ever the ſame. Thus one of the Ancients gloſſeth thoſe words of the Pſalm, Thy years fail not: Thy years (ſaith he) neither go nor come; thy years ſtand all together, for becauſe they ſtand, they that go are not excluded by them that come; thy years are one day, and thy day is not day by day, but to day; thy to day doth not give place to tomorrow, nor doth it ſucceed to yeſterday; thy to day is eternity, therefore thou haſt begot thy co-eternal, to whom thou ſaideſt, to day have I begotten thee. So then this expreſſion, Neither can the number of his years be ſearched out, is, according to our apprehenſion and underſtanding, a deſcription not only of very old age, but of eternity. We would think that man very old, the hours, yea the minutes of whoſe life could not be ſearched out by a good Arithmetician, much more eaſily may we tell how many years the oldeſt man hath lived: What then ſhall we think of him the number of whoſe years cannot be ſearched out? This can ſpeak nothing leſs than everlaſtingneſs. And this eternity or everlaſtingneſs of God, though it be impartible, yet it hath, I may ſay, a double reſpect: Firſt, to what went before; Secondly, to what is to come. The eternity of God is ſuch as cannot be ſearched out, either as to what is paſt, or to what is to come; indeed unto God there is nothing paſt or to come; for eternity, properly taken, is an everlaſting Now, it is not that which paſſeth or moveth away; and therefore ſome of the Ancients elegantly deſcribe eternity, to be the perfect enjoyment of bleſſed life all at once; which becauſe it is all at once together and perfect, cannot be altered nor leſſned. In eternity that which is paſt is preſent, yea that which is to come is preſent in an eternal bleſſed life. 'Tis ſo with God, and ſo in proportion with all thoſe who are entred into eternity, whatſoever they have had is always preſent with them, nor are they in the expectation of any thing to come; they enjoy all in every moment, without the want of any thing. 'Tis much more ſo with God; though years have ſucceſſion, yet the years of God have no ſucceſſion of times or things.

Annus apud Hebræos (שנה) Ex ſua proprietate & Etymologia nomen habet à mutatione, quaſi dicatur mutatorius. Ab hac radice veſtes dicuntur מיונים, nam mutantur veteraſcunt innovantur; & mutari idem quod veſtiri (1 Reg. 14. 2.)

Auguſtinus in Pſal. 102. v. 28.

Æternitas tempora omnia ſine ulla ſucceſſione complectitur Æternitas eſt vitæ beatæ tota ſimul & perfecta poſſeſſio. Boetius. Æternum eſt unum eſſe, & totum ſimul eſſe, & nihil deeſſe. Greg. l. 16. Mor. c. 21. Æternum eſt immutabile & totum impartibiliter. Dionyſ. cap 10 de divinis Nom.

Further, The eternity of God, which lies under this deſcription, The Number of his years cannot be ſearched out, is not a particular attribute of God, but that which diffuſeth it ſelf through all his attributes; he is eternal in all; there is no ſearching out the Number of the years of any of the perfections of God; his Wiſdom is eternal, and his Power is eternal, and his goodneſs is eternal, and his Juſtice is eternal; there is no ſearching out the Number of the years of God in any of theſe perfections.

Hence Note; God is an eternal being.

His years come not under account, or number. God is eternal, not only without end, as created Spirits are, but without beginning, which no creature is, nor can be; He is eternal, not only without end or beginning, but without ſucceſſion or mutation. Some of the Ancients tell us, Eternity ſtands faſt, but moves all other things. The eternal God is the firſt Mover, himſelf being immoveable. If ſo, then

---Stabiliſq; manens dat cuncta moveri. Boet. de Conſol. Metro. 9.

Firſt, All things are always preſent with or before God: Things paſt, things to come are preſent with God, he were not eternal elſe. In that eternity or eternal eſtate of glory which believers ſhall at laſt arrive unto, even they ſhall enjoy all at once, becauſe all their enjoyments ſhall be in God, or God ſhall be their whole enjoyment.

Secondly, God is infinitely happy and bleſſed. He hath all that ever he had, or that ever he can have, all at once, or already, nothing of his bleſſedneſs is either to come to him or gone from him; therefore he muſt needs be infinitely bleſſed. Here in this world ſome men have had a kind of bleſſedneſs, they have been rich and great, they have been in power, they have had their fill of pleaſure, but now they have it not, all is periſhed and gone and paſt away. There are others in expectation of great matters, of great riches, of great honours, of great contentments in this world, but as yet they have them not; we ſay of many, Their lands are not come into their hands, their eſtate is but yet in reverſion and expectation. Thus it is with men; ſome have had it, and it is gone, and others though they may have it, yet it is not come. But now with the Lord all is preſent, and therefore how infinitely happy is he! A man would think himſelf very happy if he could have all the contentments that ever he had ſcattered through the ſeveral days and years of his life gathered into one moment; it is thus with God, and thus in proportion it ſhall be with us, when we come to that bleſſed ſtate of eternity.

Thirdly, If God be eternal, if there be no ſearching out of his years, then

Time is in the diſpoſe and ordering of God. He that inhabiteth eternity, is the Lord of time. God is ſaid to inhabit eternity, (Iſa. 57.15.) That is, he is eternal, and therefore he is the diſpoſer of all times; he that made time will order time: he ordereth time as to perſons, and he orders time as to Nations, he orders times, and all the changes of times, he ordereth, not only the duration of time, but the condition of times; all is from him, whoſe years cannot be ſcarched out. David ſaid (Pſal. 31.15.) My times are in thy hands, that is, my perſonal times in all the changes of them, troubleſome or comfortable, joyful or ſorrowful, are ordered at thy will, by thy power and wiſdom. And with reſpect to Nations Daniel ſaid (Chap. 2.21.) He changeth times and ſeaſons. The Lord puts a new face of things upon States and Kingdoms; what changes hath not, cannot the Lord make among the ſons of men? The reaſon of all is, he is eternal.

Fourthly, If there be no ſearching out the number of the years of God, if he be eternal, then

How ought we to reverence and adore God! We have a Command from God to reverence thoſe who have attained many years in this world, which alaſs are very few, none at all to the years of God; the aged, and gray-headed muſt be reverenced, (*Lev.*19.32.) And one reaſon of that Law may be, becauſe the aged have ſome ſhadow of Gods eternity upon them; they who have many years have ſome reſemblance of him, the number of whoſe years cannot be ſearched out; therefore God will have them reverenced. Now if the ancient are to be reverenced, how much more God himſelf, who is called (*Dan.*7.9.) The ancient of days!

Fifthly, If God be eternal, then, we may truſt him, yea therefore we ought to truſt him, (Pſal. 74,12.) Thou art my King of old, commanding deliverances. O how did Davids confidence ariſe upon this, that God who was King of old, is King now, and will be King for ever, (Pſal. 10.16.) The Lord is King for ever and ever; the Heathen are periſhed out of his Land, that is, they ſhall ſurely periſh. God will not always bear with evil men in his Land; For if becauſe God was King of all the Lands, he therefore drave the old Heathen out of Canaan, and planted his people there; doubtleſs, if they who bear the name of his people there, live ſo like the old Heathen that they may be called Heathen, he will alſo cauſe them to periſh out of his Land, and all becauſe he is King for ever and ever, and therefore can do it at one time as well as at another, and now as eaſily as at any time heretofore. Truſt in the Lord for ever, for in the Lord Jehovah is everlaſting ſtrength, (Iſa. 26. 4.) David a great Prince makes it an argument to draw off our truſt from men, from the greateſt men, from Princes, becauſe they are not for ever, (Pſal. 146. 3, 4.) Truſt not in Princes, nor in any Children of men; why not? many reaſons may be given why not; but the only reaſon there given is their frailty, and the conſequents of it; His breath goeth forth, &c. As if he had ſaid, Suppoſe Princes are never ſo good, and juſt, and gracious in the exerciſe of their Power, yet truſt not in them, for they die, their breath goeth forth, and then all their thoughts periſh: all the real purpoſes which they had, as alſo the promiſes which they made for your good, die with them, and can do you no good: The number of their years may be ſearched out, and run out, their years are not for ever. Now the contrary of that which is an argument uſed by the Spirit of God to draw off our truſt from the gods here on Earth, is an argument to draw on and engage our truſt ſtrongly to the God of Heaven; His breath goeth not forth, none, not one of his thoughts ſhall periſh; therefore truſt in him.

Sixthly, If there be no ſearching out the number of the years of God, then, Be not troubled if God ſeem to ſtay and not to do the work which you expect this or that year: If God doth it not this year, he hath another year to do it in, there is no ſearching out the number of his years. We may ſay of any man if he doth not his work this year, he may be gone before the next: but if God doth not his work this year, he may do it next year, or two or ten years hence; he hath time enough, even all time before him: therefore the Prophet, having ſaid (Hab. 2. 3.) The viſion is for an appointed time, but at the end it ſhall ſpeak and not lie, preſently adds, Though it tarry, wait for it: As if he had ſaid, The Lord who hath all times and ſeaſons in his power, will do his work in the beſt time and ſeaſon, he will do what he hath promiſed, when it is moſt fit to be done; if he doth it not at the time when we expect, yet let us wait, he is the Maſter of time. God who is eternal, cannot be ſcantied of time, The number of his years cannot be ſearched out. 'Tis a known maxim among the wiſe men of the World, Take time, and you may do any thing. What cannot God do, who knoweth all times, and can take what time he will!

Seventhly, Which followeth upon the former, God will carry on his deſigns through all the world: He will carry them through, againſt all, (Pſal. 92. 8, 9.) Thou Lord art moſt high for evermore; Lo, thine enemies ſhall periſh; thine enemies who would hinder thy work, they ſhall certainly fall. Chriſt is called The firſt and the laſt; He (ſaith St. John, Rev. 1. 17.) laid his right hand upon me, and ſaid, fear not, I am the firſt and the laſt: Why ſhould he not fear? What did Chriſt offer to cure him of his fear? Chriſt doth not give him a bare diſſwaſive, Fear not, but a rational ground why he ſhould not fear. Fear will not be blown away with a breath: Our paſſions are never truly quieted nor attempered but by reaſon. Upon what ground then would Chriſt take off Johns fear, even upon this in the Text, I am the firſt and the laſt. As if he had ſaid, John why doeſt thou fear? Knoweſt thou not who I am, what a Lord and Maſter thou ſerveſt? Why, John, I tell thee, I am the firſt and the laſt; and therefore thou mayeſt be ſure, I will do my work, and none ſhall let me. John had wonderful things in viſion; ſhall all theſe be done thought he? Yea, ſaith Chriſt, Fear not, I will carry on my deſigns (all the deſigns that Chriſt had in the world were then in viſion) Eternity triumphs over all difficulties; The Eternal will ſee the laſt man born, (as we ſay) he will have the laſt word, and the laſt blow. I am the firſt and the laſt.

Laſtly, From this Conſideration of God, let us take a proſpect of our ſelves, what poor ſhort-lived ſhort-breathed Creatures we are. There is no ſearching out the number of the years of God, but we may quickly ſearch out the number of our own years? Our life is but a ſpan long, (Pſal. 39. 5.) yea our age is nothing before God. Did we conſider the eternity of God, what ſhould we judg of our ſpan-long life? We are ſaid to be of yeſterday. Some expreſs man thus; He is yeſterday; as if he were not to day, but were already paſt while he is. The beſt that can be ſaid of him is this; he is but of yeſterday, and poſſibly he ſhall not have a to morrow: but the Lord is for ever and ever the ſame.

And though we are ſhort-lived as to this world, though our years may ſoon be told over, yet let us remember that God hath called us to the participation of eternity; though we have not the eternity of God, which is without beginning, yet we ſhall have an eternity from God without end; every man is everlaſting as to his ſoul. The godly ſhall be bleſſed for ever; and there is an eternal eſtate of wo and miſery to the wicked, the number of the years of their ſorrows and ſufferings, who live and die without Chriſt, cannot be ſearched out. The number of the years of the joy and bleſſedneſs, and reſt and happineſs, and tranquility of thoſe that believe, of thoſe that are faithful, of thoſe that are godly, of thoſe that walk with and fear God, I ſay the number of the years of their joy and happineſs cannot be ſearched out neither. No man can number or tell how long-laſting the felicity of Saints ſhall be. As the number of the years of God cannot at all be ſearched out, ſo he hath given man as to his future eſtate a numberleſs number of years: And it were well if we who enjoy this life, and are dying every moment, would often conſider there is a life coming which will never die, the number of our years alſo in that ſenſe cannot be ſearched out.

The thoughts of eternity ſhould ſwallow up all our time; yet alaſs, how doth time, or the things which are but temporary, ſwallow up, in moſt men, the thoughts of eternity! What-ever we do in time, ſhould be to fit us for eternity; yet alaſs, moſt uſe their time ſo, as if they did not believe, or at leaſt hoped, there would not be, any ſuch thing as eternity. Did we but ſpend two or three minutes of time every day in the ſerious remembrance of our eternal eſtate, it would be an effectual means, to make us both holy in and contented with what-ever temporal eſtate we meet with in this world. We ſhould be earneſtly ſearching after God all our days, did we conſider what it imports to us, that the number of his years cannot be ſearched out.

Thus Elihu labours to draw Job to the conſideration of God himſelf, who is the Author of thoſe great providential works, both of thoſe he had ſpoken of before, the works of providence, ordering men here in civils, as alſo of thoſe works of providence in natural things, of which he comes to treat largely, both in the latter part of this Chapter, and in moſt of the next. Where we ſhall find Elihu giving us as it were a Syſtem, or body of natural Philoſophy in his diſcourſe about the wonderful works of God, which he is calling Job to conſider.

VERS. 27, 28.

For he maketh ſmall the drops of water: they pour down rain according to the vapour thereof;
Which the clouds do drop, and diſtil upon man abundantly.

ELihu having ſhewed the greatneſs of God himſelf, in the former verſe, proceeds to ſhew the greatneſs of his works; he had done it before as to Civil Adminiſtrations, and the ordering of human affaires, in caſting down and lifting up the ſons of men; he doth it now in natural things, or in ordering the motions of nature, ſtill in reference unto man. He deſcribes the greatneſs of the works of God aloft or above in the Air and in the Clouds, as he had before deſcribed the greatneſs of his works here below on the Earth.

The whole remainder of Elihu's ſpeech in this Chapter and to the end of the 37. is ſpent in a philoſophical diſcourſe about the Meteors, and thoſe various operations and changes that are wrought in the Air; he diſcourſeth of Rain, of Thunder and Lightning, of Snow and Winds; from all which works of God in Nature, Elihu would convince Job of the Juſtice and Righteouſneſs of God (as well as of his power) which was his chief purpoſe. He begins this philoſophical Lecture or Lecture of divine Philoſophy with the Rain, in the two verſes now read; and he mingles much of that matter in this and the following Chapter. He ſpeaks here, I ſay, of the Rain, which is a diſpenſation of God uſually both very profitable and comfortable; what more profitable or more comfortable than the rain? It is alſo a diſpenſation of God ſometimes very dreadful and hurtful: The Lord ſends the very ſame Creature upon contrary ſervices, ſometimes for good, ſometimes for evil; at one time as a bleſſing, and at another as a curſe, to the inhabitants of the earth.

What Elihu ſpeaks of the Rain in this Chapter, may be reduced to five heads.

Firſt, He ſheweth the manner of it's formation and generation, Verſ. 27, 28.

Secondly, The vaſtneſs or huge extent of the veſſels containing it, which are the clouds of the air, ſpreading themſelves all the Heavens over, Verſ. 29.

Thirdly, He tells us of the ſudden changes and ſucceſſions of rain and fair weather, of a cloudy and ſerene sky, Verſ. 30.

Fourthly, He ſets forth the different purpoſes of God in diſpenſing the rain, which are ſometimes for judgment, ſometimes for mercy, Verſ. 31, 32.

Fifthly, He intimates the Prognoſticks of it, or what are the ſigns and forerunners or foretellers of it, Verſ. 33.

The two verſes under-hand, hold out the firſt point, the formation and generation of the rain.

Verſ. 27. He maketh ſmall the drops of water.

That is, God (as it were) coins and mints out the water into drops of rain: As a mighty maſs of gold or ſilver is minted out into ſmall pieces, ſo a huge body of water is minted out into ſmall drops; that's the ſum of theſe words according to our rendring. The Hebrew word rendred, He maketh ſmall, hath a twofold ſignification, and that hath cauſed a three-fold tranſlation of theſe words.

Subtraxit Deus ſtillas aquarum, ſc. ex mari, fluminibus & locis humidis, quæ fundunt pluviam ad nubem ejus. Hauſtus vapor. ex aqua cogitur in nubem, quæ deinde fundit pluviam Merl.

Qui aufert ſtillas pluvia. Vulg.

Firſt, It ſignifieth to take away, or, to withdraw; according to this ſignification of the word, a two-fold power of God is held forth about the drops of water.

Firſt, The power of God in drawing the water up from the Earth to make rain, for that in Nature (as we ſhall ſee afterwards) is the cauſe of rain; God draws up the water from the Earth, which he ſends down upon the Earth: he draws up the vapours, and the vapours become a Cloud, and the Cloud is diſſolved into rain.

Secondly, The word may very well expreſs, according to other Texts of Scripture, the putting forth of the power of God in ſtopping, ſtaying, keeping back and withholding rain from the earth; when God hath drawn water from the earth, he can hold it from the earth as long as he pleaſeth. The Chaldee Paraphraſe ſaith, He forbids the drops to water the earth, or he ſends forth a prohibition to the clouds that they give no water. The vulgar Latin ſpeaks to the ſame ſenſe, who takes away drops of rain, that is, from the earth. Mr. Broughton renders, he withdraws dropping of water. In this ſenſe I find the word rendred expreſly (Numb. 9. 7.) where certain perſons are brought in by Moſes thus complaining, Wherefore are we kept back that we may not offer an offering to the Lord with the children of Iſrael? It is a caſe; there were ſome, it ſeems, ſuſpended from bringing their offerings to the Lord, and they demand a reaſon of it; to give which, Moſes ſaith, ſtand ſtill, and I will hear what the Lord will command concerning you. But I quote that Scripture only for the force of the word, wherefore are we kept back, or with-held, which was for ſome uncleanneſs. Thus you have the firſt ſignification of the Word, and a double Tranſlation upon it, both very pertinent to the nature of the rain, and the Lords dealing with man in it, which is the ſubject Elihu is inſiſting upon.

Secondly, The Original word ſignifies to diminiſh, or leſſen, or make a thing ſmall; ſo 'tis rendred (Exod. 5. 8.) when the children of Iſrael complained that they were oppreſſed in making brick. This commandment came from Pharaoh, The tale of bricks which they did make heretofore, you ſhall lay upon them, you ſhall not diminiſh ought of it. It is this word. Again (Deut. 4. 2.) Ye ſhall not add to the word which I command you, neither ſhall you diminiſh ought from it. Man muſt not make the word of God ſmaller or greater than it is. 'Tis high preſumption to uſe either ſubtraction from, or addition to the word of God. Thus alſo the word is uſed in the caſe of Second or double marriages (Exod. 21. 10.) If he take him another wife, her food (that is the food of the firſt wife) her raiment, and her duty of marriage ſhall he not diminiſh.

Our tranſlators take up this ſenſe of the word as noting the diminiſhing of a thing in the quantity of it. He maketh ſmall the drops of water, or, he makes the water fall in ſmall drops; whereas if the water were left to it ſelf, it would pour down like a ſea, or like a flood to ſweep all away. This is the work of God, and though it be a common, yet it is a wonderful work; He maketh ſmall the drops of rain. A drop is a ſmall thing, and therefore the Prophet when he would ſhew what a ſmall thing, or indeed, what a nothing man is, yea, all the nations of the earth are to God, ſaith (Iſa. 40. 15.) The nations are as a drop of a bucket, and are counted as the ſmall duſt of the ballance. Behold, he taketh up the Iſles as a very little thing. The Spirit of God pitcheth upon this compariſon, when he would ſet forth that great diſtance between God and man. Man is but a drop to God.

But are not all drops ſmall? Why then doth he ſay, He maketh ſmall the drops? The reaſon is becauſe, though all drops are ſmall, yet ſome drops are ſmaller than others, and we read of great drops in the Goſpel Hiſtory of Chriſts agony in the Garden, which was an immediate ſuffering in his ſoul, from the hand of his Father, preſſing him with that weight of wrath, which was due for our ſins (Luke 22. 44.) He ſweat, as it were, great drops of blood. As God made Chriſt ſweat great drops of blood for our ſins, ſo he makes the Clouds to ſweat ſmall drops of water for our comfort. He maketh ſmall

The drops of rain.] The Verb of this Subſtantive is uſed (Joel 3. 18.) In thoſe days it ſhall come to paſs, that the mountains ſhall drop down new wine; by which we are to underſtand, the plentiful effuſion of the Spirit promiſed in the latter days. David deſcribing the Lords glorious march thorow the wilderneſs, ſaith (Pſal. 68. 8, 9.) The earth ſhook, the heavens alſo dropped at the preſence of the Lord; thou, O God, didſt ſend a plentiful rain, whereby thou didſt confirm thine inheritance when it was weary. Which Scripture principally intends the ſpiritual rain, which drops down upon believers, and refreſheth their wearied ſouls: And therefore by a Metaphor, this phraſe, to drop, ſignifies, to propheſie or preach the word of God; becauſe that, like rain, falls ſilently, and as it were in drops upon the hearers, it falls in at the ear, and ſoaks down to the heart, it ſoaks quite thorow, as Moſes ſpake (Deut. 32. 2.) My doctrin ſhall drop as the rain, and my ſpeech ſhall deſtil as the dew. And as the word is uſed in Propheſies of mercy and inſtruction, ſo of judgment and deſolation. Thus the Lord charged his Prophet (Ezek. 20. 46.) Son of man, ſet thy face towards the ſouth, and drop thy words towards the ſouth, and propheſie againſt the foreſt of the ſouth field. Again (Ezek. 21. 2.) Son of man, ſet thy face towards Jeruſalem, and drop thy words towards the holy place, and propheſie againſt the land of Iſrael. Once more (Amos 7. 16.) Drop not thy word againſt the houſe of Iſaac. So that, I ſay, this dropping is uſed frequently, as in a natural, ſo in a ſpiritual ſenſe. He maketh ſmall the drops

----Subinde Præceptum auriculis hoc inſtillare memento. Horat. Lib. 1. Ep. 8.

מים Forma duali, ſignificantur aquæ duplices.

Of water.] The word is of the Dual Number in the Hebrew, and ſo it ſignifies both ſorts of water; the waters of Heaven, and the waters of the earth, the upper and the nether waters, the upper waters in the Clouds, and the nether waters in the Springs. We find them ſpoken of together in the firſt of Geneſis at the 7. verſe; God divided the waters which were under the firmament, from the waters which were above the firmament. We find the upper waters ſpoken of ſingly (Pſal. 104. 3.) Who layeth the beams of his Chambers in the waters; Chambers are above. And in the firſt of Geneſis at the 9. verſe, we find the lower waters alone; Let the waters be gathered together under the Heavens. Under-heaven waters are the lower waters. One of the Rabbies renders the words thus; He multiplieth the drops of rain; and the reaſon of it is (which falls in with our tranſlation) becauſe the leſs any one thing is made the more is is the general maſs, out of which it is made, multiplied.

Rabbi Selo exponit, יגרע per ירבה Multiplicat quia dum ita guttatim aquæ decidunt multiplicantur. Merc.

From the words thus far opened, we may note ſomewhat for our inſtruction.

Taking the former ſignification of the words, He draweth up the drops of water,

Obſerve; The ordinary rain which watereth the earth, is firſt fetched from the earth.

Pluvia eſt vapor calidus & humidus ex aquis & locis humidis virtute Solis & Stellarum, uſque ad mediam aeris regionem elevatus, & ibi propter loci frigiditatem in nubem condenſatus, &c. Garc. de Meteorol. part.2.cap. 25.

God raiſeth vapours from the earth, and then watereth the earth with them, All the rain which falls upon the earth was raiſed from the earth. If I were to anſwer that queſtion in nature, What is Rain? I might reſolve it thus; Rain is the moiſture of the earth, drawn up by the heat of the Sun, into the middle Region of the Air, which being there condenſed into clouds, is afterwards at the will of God, diſſolved, and dropt down again in ſhowers. The Clouds, at the command of God, hold faſt, and at his command they break and let out their waters upon the earth. This is, as was toucht before, a very ordinary, yet a very admirable work of God. As in ſpirituals, all thoſe acts of grace in faith, and love, and joy, &c. By which our hearts and ſouls are carried up to Heaven, come firſt from Heaven; ſo that rain which comes down upon us from Heaven, was firſt fetched from among us by the mighty power of God. Rain, according to natural Philoſophy, is thus generated: The water and moiſture of the earth being attenuated by the heat of the Sun-beams, become vapours, which being ſo rarified and reſolved into an airy ſubſtance, are by the ſame heat of the Sun drawn up to the middle region of the air, where being again condenſed or thickened into water, they melt down into rain, at the appointment of God.

We may conſider rain briefly in all the cauſes of it; thus:

Firſt, The efficient cauſe of rain is God.

Secondly, The inſtrumental cauſe is the heat of the Sun.

Thirdly, The material cauſe is the moiſture of the Sea and watery Land.

Fourthly, The final cauſe of it, is, 1. Supream; the glory of God. 2. Subordinate; and that threefold. Firſt, the benefit. Secondly, the puniſhment. Thirdly, the inſtruction of man.

Secondly, From that other ſignification of the word, as it notes withdrawing or keeping back, upon which ſome inſiſt much,

Obſerve; God when he pleaſeth can with-hold the water or the Rain.

He can give a ſtop to the rain, and then the clouds yield us no more water than a ſtone; He with-holds the drops of water. The Lord threateneth the Vineyard with this ſtop (Iſa. 5.6.) I will command the clouds, that they rain no rain upon it; which is true of a natural and proper Vineyard, and of proper natural rain, though it be meant there of the people of God, whom he metaphorically, or improperly, calleth his Vineyard; and the rain there intended, is the rain of inſtruction uſually falling upon them. Now as God doth often forbid the ſhowers of the word, that they fall no more upon a people, as he ſends forth a prohibition to ſtop the ſpiritual rain; ſo he alſo ſtops and prohibits the natural rain (Amos 4.7,8.) I have with-holden the rain from you, when there was yet three moneths to the harveſt, and I cauſed it to rain upon one city, and cauſed it not to rain upon another city; one piece was rained upon, and the piece whereupon it rained not withered: ſo two or three cities wandered unto one city to drink water, but were not ſatisfied. Thus in caſe of diſobedience to his divine Law, the Lord threatened to ſtop the common Law of nature, and to make the heavens braſs, and the earth iron (Deut. 28.23.) And when the heavens are braſs, that is, when they yield no more moiſture than braſs, then the earth is as iron, that is, it yeelds no more food for the ſuſtentation of man or beaſt, than a bar of iron doth. Such ſtops the Lord hath often put upon the courſes of nature, and can do again when he pleaſeth; though I believe he never did, nor ever will do ſo, but when highly diſpleaſed and provoked by the ſin of man.

Take two or three inferences from it.

Firſt, If the rain or drops of water come not in their ſeaſon, let us acknowledg the hand of God. It is God that hath lockt up the clouds when-ever they are lockt up; God hath forbidden the clouds to let down their rain when-ever they with-hold it. Men and Devils can no more ſtop the rain than make it.

Secondly, When we want rain, let us go to God for it. 'Tis the prerogative of God alone to help us in that ſtreight; and therefore the holy prophet ſends a chalenge to all other powers, or declares them diſabled for this help (Jer. 14.22.) Are there any among the vanities of the Gentiles that can cauſe rain, or can the heavens give ſhowers? Neither the one nor the other can. The heavens cannot diſpoſe of a drop, though they poſſeſs a ſea of water. God muſt hear the heaven, before the heavens can hear the earth, that is, anſwer the neceſſities of the earth. And as the heavens cannot give man rain, ſo neither can the gods of mans making and placing there, ſuch are all the vanities or vain Idols of the Gentiles. The prophet having ſhewed us that theſe cannot, ſheweth us who can give rain in the next words, Art not thou he, O Lord, our God (ſurely thou art he) therefore we will wait upon thee, for thou haſt made all theſe things. Solomon, at the dedication of the Temple, puts this as one ſpecial caſe wherein they were to apply to God by prayer (1 Kings 8.35.) When heaven is ſhut up and there is no rain, becauſe they have ſinned againſt thee, If they pray, &c. then hear thou in heaven. The prophet ſends the people in that exigent to God (*Zec.*10.1.) Ask ye of the Lord rain, in the time of the later rain. As if he had ſaid, if ye would have rain, you muſt ask for it, and be ſure ye ask it of none but him; ask of the Lord. As it is God that gives out or with-holds the rain, ſo he gives it out or with-holds it at the voice of prayer. The Apoſtle ſaith of Elias (Jam. 5.17.) he was a man ſubject to the like paſſions that we are, and he prayed earneſtly that it might not rain, and it rained not on the earth, by the ſpace of three years and ſix months; and he prayed again, and the heavens gave rain. At his word the Lord ſtopt rain, and at his word he gave rain. Let us therefore confeſs that God is the Author or Father of the rain; He cauſeth vapours to aſcend from the ends of the earth, he maketh lightnings for the rain (Pſal. 135.7.) He covereth the heaven with clouds, he prepareth rain for the earth (Pſal. 147.8.) God covereth the heaven with clouds, by drawing up vapours from the earth, which are the matter of theſe clouds, and in thoſe clouds he prepares the rain, and by the rain ſent down makes the graſs to grow upon the mountains. The increaſe of vegetables is the effect of rain; God hath the rain in his power, and to acknowledg him in it is our duty. 'Tis a great part of our ſpiritualneſs to acknowledg God in naturals as well as ſpirituals; Or, that the key of the clouds, as well as the key of the heart, is in the hand of God, and in his only. One of the Antients ſpeaking to this point, ſaid, Let us not aſcribe rain to the Saints, much leſs to Witches. Papiſts have their Saints to whom they pray for rain, and Atheiſts go to Witches for rain. The modeſt and moderate Heathen will riſe up againſt ſuch in judgment; they aſcribed rain to their gods though falſe gods; they had Epithetes or Titles of Honour for their Idols, teſtifying their faith in them and dependance upon them for the ſhowers of heaven, they called them ſhower-bringing gods, and fair weather-making gods. If heathens would yet aſcribe the rain to their gods, not to men, not to any inferiour powers, how abominable are they, who profeſſing the knowledg of Jehovah, the only true God, do not acknowledg him alone in this! In times of drought many will ſay, we hope we ſhall have rain when the Moon changeth, or, when the Wind turns; now though there be ſomewhat in nature, both in the change of the Moon and turn of the Winds, as to the change of weather, yet to ſpeak much of, or expect any thing from either, argues ſome withdrawing of the heart from God; and God to ſhew the folly of ſuch, hath often with-held the rain, though the Moon hath changed more than once, and the Wind turned to all quarters, and paſſed through all points of the Compaſs.

Deus ſibi Soli clavem pluviæ reſervat. Trag Hieroſol. in Cap. 3. Gen.

Imbriferi, ſerenatores.

Thirdly, Let us take heed of provoking the Lord; he can quickly ſtop our Comforts, thoſe common outward comforts, the rain and ſhowrs of heaven, and then (as to this Life) in how ſad a caſe are we! As the Lord hath not left himſelf without witneſs (namely of his goodneſs) in ſending rain and fruitful ſeaſons, ſo he can quickly leave a witneſs of his Juſtice, and diſpleaſure, or of his juſt diſpleaſure, by with-holding rain and (as a conſequent of that) fruitful ſeaſons from us.

Were it only to have rain and fruitful ſeaſons, we ſhould take heed of diſpleaſing God. If a man had ſuch power as to with-hold rain from your land, you would take heed of diſpleaſing him. How dangerous then is it to provoke God, who cannot only with-hold the rain from your land, but can, as the Scripture ſaith, make the rain of your land to be powder and duſt (*Deut.*28.24.) that is, give you powder and duſt inſtead of rain! When the rain is long withholden the earth grows hard, and being much trodden or traveled on, duſty; this duſt being raiſed up by the wind, ſhall come down in ſtead of rain, or that's all the rain which I will give you. The Lord hath our natural comforts in his hand, as well as our ſpiritual and eternal.

Further, As this with-holding of the rain ſometimes, ſo the holding up of the rain at any time, ſhews the great power of God; to hold the water in the air is the work of God as much as to with-hold it from the earth. The water is a heavy body, and all heavy things tend downward; is it not a wonder that ſuch a mighty weight of water ſhould hang in the air, and be there held up? If it were not held there, it would not ſtay there, but come down and drown all. What holds it up? the Cloud is a thin ſubſtance, yet it holds the water as well as the ſtrongeſt veſſel bound with hoops of Iron; But by what power? Doubtleſs by the power of God. The water hath no conſiſtence in it ſelf, it is a fluid ſlippery body, now what can hold the water that none of it leaks out, but the power of God? There are many millions of drops in one little cloud, and every drop is of it ſelf ready to ſlip away, yet the whole cloud yields no more water then a rock till God orders it. Let us contemplate the Almightineſs of God, who can hold ſuch a mighty body of water in the air, or who (as Job ſpake, *Chap.*26.8.) bindeth up the waters in his thick clouds, and the cloud is not rent under them.

Theſe notes ariſe from that tranſlation, which imports the Lords power in drawing the water from the earth, as alſo in with-holding it from the earth when there is need, and in holding it when there is no need.

We tranſlate, He maketh ſmall the drops of water. Not only hath God made the body of the water, which is one of the four general Elements, of which all bodies are compounded and made, but he makes the water into ſmall drops, or maketh ſmall the drops of water.

> Hence Note; That the water falls from heaven by drops, comes to paſs by the eſpecial power, wiſdom and goodneſs of God.

The water, if left to it ſelf, would fall whole like a Sea upon us, or like a mighty floud, in ſuch quantities as would, inſtead of refreſhing, overwhelm the earth. When God drowned the world, it is ſaid (*Gen.*7.11.) The ſame day were all the fountains of the great deep broken up, and the windows or flood-gates of heaven were opened. We are not to imagin that heaven hath windows or flood-gates; but God did not put forth his mighty power to make ſmall the drops of rain, but let it come all at once: thoſe waters which were before bound up in the clouds, by the decree of God, were now, by his decree, let looſe in a wonderful manner and meaſure, and came down, not in drops, but in ſtreams and ſpouts; the clouds did not (as formerly) deſtil their burden, but eaſe themſelves of it at once, or altogether. Rain ordinarily (as ſweat through the Pores of the skin) paſſeth by degrees through the Pores of the Clouds, yet God can let it out all at once. Sea-men, who take long Voyages tell us, they meet with ſpouts of water, indangering great ſhips. So then, this making ſmall the drops of water, is to be aſcribed to a threeſold Attribute of God.

Pluvia in nubibus, velut in linteo continetur, atque in illis velut compreſſa guttatim diſtillatur.

Firſt, It is a work of his power, nor is it done without a kind of Miracle, that the water comes down, as it were, through a ſive, or watering-pot.

Secondly, It is a work of divine Wiſdom. The Lord knowing that the earth cannot digeſt huge portions of water at once, divides it into little portions, that the earth may gradually receive and let it ſoak into its boſom, for the feeding of Plants, and the ſupply of all creatures that live upon it.

Thirdly, 'Tis a work alſo of divine goodneſs; for if God did not make ſmall the drops of water, if it ſhould come down whole it would drown the earth, inſtead of comforting and fattening it. Behold then, the Power, Wiſdom and goodneſs of God in making ſmall the drops of water!

Though Philoſophers have attempted to find out and aſſign a reaſon in Nature, about this falling of the rain in drops, yet they have not fully attained the reaſon why, nor the manner how, God doth this; we muſt aſcribe it chiefly to the power, wiſdom, and goodneſs of God, in ordering it for the benefit of man, yea of all living creatures. And ſurely Elihu leads us to conſider the wonders of thoſe things which are common and natural, to convince us, that foraſmuch as we cannot clearly ſee the reaſon of thoſe leſſer things, we ſhould take heed of prying into greater and remoter ſecrets; and he would have Job particularly know, that ſeeing he could not find out the way of God in theſe natural things; much leſs could he find out the way and whole deſign of God in thoſe his providential dealings with him: He maketh ſmall the drops of water; and then as it followeth in this verſe, Plane admirabilem & tremendum in illis & per illa ſeſe exhibet Deus. Merc.

They pour down rain according to the vapour thereof.

Though the water be made into ſmall drops, yet he doth not ſay, they drop down but they pour down rain; that is, the drops fall plentifully; that frequent expreſſion, in Scripture, of pouring down, every where implyeth plenty or abundance. The promiſe of pouring out the Spirit in the latter days, notes the abundance of the Spirit that ſhall then be given. The word ſignifies alſo to ſtrain, implying that the rain is contained in the Clouds, as it were in a linnen cloath, which being preſſed, diſtills the water in ſmall ſtreams or drops, as it were through a ſtrainer. They pour down

Rain.] There are three words in the Latin, the firſt of which notes a ſhowr or gentle rain; the ſecond, a ſtormy or fierce rain; the third, rain in general. Rain, in this place, may be taken in all or either of theſe notions, for at one time or other the Clouds pour down drops into all ſorts of rain. Rain (as I ſaid) is made of vapours drawn up, and here he ſaith, They pour down rain

According to the vapour thereof.] There are two ſorts of vapours; there are dry vapours, and moiſt vapours; dry vapours (ſay Naturaliſts) are the matter of the wind, and the moiſt are the matter of the rain; Now ſaith Elihu, they pour down rain according to the vapour thereof; That is, look in what proportion the Sun draweth the vapours into the Air, in that proportion doth the rain fall upon the Earth; or, in the ſame proportion that the vapour is drawn up, in that proportion is the rain let down.

Pluviæ quaſi fluviæ, eo quod fluant. Iſidor. Quæ fundunt pluviam poſt nebulam ejus. Piſc.

Some render the word which we Tranſlate vapour, a Cloud, that is, after the water is drawn up into a Cloud, it pours down rain proportionably. Another Tranſlation renders it, Affliction or trouble, and give the whole verſe thus; He draweth up the drops of water, which poured down rain to their Calamity. This the learned Author applyeth particularly to the Flood in Noahs time; but I ſhall not ſtay upon that. Our reading is clear; They pour down rain according to the vapour thereof; That is, in the ſame proportion that vapours come up, the rain falls down.

Firſt, In that, as the rain is made of the vapour, ſo according to the vapour, or in proportion to the vapour, ſuch are the ſhowrs of rain; Note;

According to what is naturally received, returns are naturally made.

And if the Clouds of Heaven return to man naturally according to that they receive from the Earth; how is man on earth bound morally, or in duty, to return according to what he receives from Heaven. Let us mind our accordings and proportions to the dealings and diſpenſations of God. The Clouds of the air will condemn us, at leaſt witneſs againſt us, if we receive much, and return little. I paſs this. Only here we may take notice of ſix things in Concatenation one with another: Firſt, vapours are drawn up from the Earth: Secondly, they are made into watery Clouds: Thirdly, from thence they are ſent back to moiſten the Earth: Fourthly, the rain ſent down is proportionable to the vapour that went up: Fifthly, according to that proportion, the Earth is made more or leſs fruitful; plentiful rains cauſe or produce plentiful fruits ordinarily from the Earth, and little rains little fruits: Sixthly, and laſtly, man is nouriſhed and hath his outward Comforts encreaſed or leſſened in proportion to the fruits which the Earth bringeth forth, or to the fruitfulneſs of the Earth. All theſe things attend and depend upon one another. They pour down according to the vapour thereof, and God draws up in proportion to what himſelf purpoſeth they ſhall pour down. Thus we ſee, how God by the Sun draws out the moiſter and ſap of the Earth, to return it back with advantage. Drawing up the moiſture makes the Earth languiſh, and her fruits wither; ſending it down again, makes the Earth green, flouriſhing and fruitful. They pour down rain, &c. And what more? Elihu anſwers

Verſ. 28. Which the Clouds do drop.

שחקים Nunc cœlum, nunc nubis denotat; à tenuiſſima earum Subſtantia. Druſ.

Here he ſpeaks more expreſly, and tells us more clearly than before, what the vapours are made up into, According to the vapour thereof, which the Clouds do drop, As Clouds are made of vapours, ſo they are the receptacles or veſſels of rain, which they hold (as was ſhewed before) as long as God pleaſeth, and when he gives the word, then they drop

And diſtil upon man abundantly.] That's another elegant word, implying the manner in which the rain comes or falls, it is as by a diſtillation. Here alſo 'tis expreſſed for whoſe uſe or ſake principally the rain is ſent. The Clouds (ſaith the Text) drop and diſtil upon man, yet we know men get themſelves out of the rain as ſoon and as faſt as they can. The rain falls upon the earth, and abides there; yet 'tis ſaid to diſtil upon man, becauſe the rain diſtils at mans requeſt; and for mans ſake: That other creatures are cheriſhed by the rain, is not for themſelves, but for man, as man is not cheriſhed and maintained by thoſe creatures for himſelf, but for God. As the rain diſtils chiefly for the glory of God, ſo nextly for the relief and comfort of man; and for man it diſtils

עלי אדם רב Super hominem multum, vel ſuper homines affluenter, ut רב ſit adverbium, quod eo minùs ſe probat mihi, quia Rab. hic ſcribitur cum Cametz. Druſ.

Abundantly.] There is a double reading of this word. Some take it as an Adjective to the Subſtantive man, rendring thus, it diſtils upon many men; we take it adverbially, Which diſtil upon man plentifully, that is, in great plenty upon man. We may take in both readings without ſtrain to the Text, or departure from the matter in hand. For as the rain falls or diſtils upon man abundantly, ſo upon abundance of men; the rain, we know, falls ſometimes very plentifully, and at times, or one time or other all the world over, watering every mans ground, and ſerving every mans turn or occaſions. Therefore Elihu expreſſeth the bleſſing fully when he ſaith, The Clouds diſtil upon man abundantly, or upon abundance of men.

Hence Note; Firſt, The Lord hath rain enough in ſtore;

He hath veſſels plentifully filled for the watering of the Earth; and, The Lord is ſo free in his diſpenſation of the rain, that as he gives it to many in number, ſo to many in kind, he maketh his rain to fall, (as well as his Sun to ſhine) upon the juſt, and on the unjuſt, (Matth. 5.45.) It ſhews the exceeding goodneſs, as well as the bounty of God, that the evil partake of his benefits as well as the good.

And, for our further improvement of this bounty of God, remember, that if God be ſo abundant and liberal in bleſſings to us, we ought in proportion to abound in duty towards him, or (as the Apoſtle exhorts, 1 Cor. 15. 58.) we ſhould be ſtedfaſt and immoveable, always abounding in the work of the Lord. Some do only a little, I may ſay) only here a ſtitch and there a ſtitch of work for God, but we ſhould abound in it; and that not only now and then by fits, but be always fixed in it, eſpecially we ſhould do ſo, with reſpect to that, which the rain is a Symbol of, the word of God. When God drops and diſtils the rain of Goſpel truths and holy ſoul-ſaving inſtructions abundantly upon us, how ſhould we abound in every good word and work! It was propheſied of Chriſt (Pſal. 72.6.) He ſhall come down as rain upon the mown graſs, as ſhowers that water the earth. Some of the Ancients expound that place of the coming down of Chriſt in his Incarnation; then indeed he came down like rain upon the mown graſs, he came down ſweetly and powerfully. 'Tis true alſo that Chriſt, who is God, the Word, the ſubſtantial Word, comes down as rain in and with the declarative word of God preached and faithfully diſpenced to the Souls of men: and when Chriſt comes down thus to us, we ſhould riſe up to him, and return fruits of grace, according to the ſhowers of grace, which we have received. The Prophet gives us an elegant compariſon of the natural and ſpiritual rain in their effects and iſſues, (Iſa. 55. 10, 11.) For as the rain cometh down and the ſnow from Heaven, and returneth not thither, but watereth the earth, and maketh it bring forth and bud, that it may give ſeed to the ſower, and bread to the eater; ſo ſhall my word be, that goeth forth out of my mouth; it ſhall not return unto me void, but it ſhall accompliſh that which I pleaſe, and it ſhall proſper in the thing whereto I ſend it. Now what is the pleaſure of God in giving his Word? What is the arrand upon which he ſends it? 'Tis I grant, ſometimes to harden, deafen and blind a people, (Iſa. 6. 9. 10.) 'tis ſometimes to be a ſavour of death unto death, (2 Cor. 2. 16.) Theſe are dreadful judiciary purpoſes of God in ſending his Word; nor doth it ever pleaſe the Lord to ſend his Word upon this arrand, but when he is ſorely diſpleaſed by a peoples ſlighting and contempt of his Word. The thing which primarily pleaſeth him, the purpoſe which he chiefly purſueth in ſending his Word, is, that his people may have (as the Apoſtle ſpeaks) Their fruit unto holineſs in this life, and in the end everlaſting life. For theſe ends, the Lord is daily diſtilling upon us the rain of his Word, both in commands and promiſes, and in both abundantly. Therefore let us labour to abound in returns of faith, of love, of hope, of ſelf-denial, of zeal for God, and of fruit-bearing unto God. If when God diſtils the natural rain, that ſhould provoke us to fruitfulneſs in ſpirituals, how much more when he pours down ſo much ſpiritual rain upon us! For the cloſe of this meditation, conſider, That

As the natural rain, Firſt, ſoftens the earth, and mollifies it; Secondly, cleanſeth the earth, and waſheth it; Thirdly, enricheth the earth, and makes it fruitful; Fourthly, comforts the earth, and makes every thing that moves upon it, and grows out of it, to rejoyce; Fifthly, ſometimes drowns the earth, and deſtroys the Inhabitants of it: As I ſay, the natural rain doth all theſe things, ſo alſo doth the ſpiritual rain, the word of God. That, Firſt, mollifieth; Secondly, cleanſeth; Thirdly, fructifieth; Fourthly, comforteth the hearts of all thoſe that receive it; and Fifthly, The rain of the word drowns and deſtroys all thoſe that riſe up againſt it, or will not receive it.

VERS. 29, 30, 31.

Alſo, can any underſtand the ſpreadings of the Clouds, or the noiſe of his Tabernacle?

Behold, he ſpreadeth his light upon it, and covereth the bottom of the Sea.

For by them he judgeth the People, he giveth meat in abundance.

Elihu having ſpoken of the wonderful work of God in forming and ſending rain in the two former verſes, ſpeaks next of the Clouds, which are as veſſels containing the rain, and in which the rain is carried and conveighed up and down the world for the uſe of man, or for thoſe ſervices, to which God hath appointed it. He begins with a denying Queſtion:

Verſ. 29. Alſo, can any underſtand the ſpreading of the Clouds?

As if he had ſaid, To what I ſaid before, I add this, Here is another ſecret in nature, Can any underſtand the ſpreading of the Clouds? He doth not ſay, can vulgar ignorant and unlearned perſons underſtand, but can any? Can the wiſeſt? Can the moſt learned? Can the beſt ſtudied Philoſophers underſtand the ſpreading of the Clouds? Can they underſtand? That is, they cannot underſtand.

But have not men, eſpecially learned men, underſtanding enough to aſcend the clouds, and diſcover the nature of them? Surely their underſtandings are very mean, or very much clouded, who underſtand not what the ſpreading of the clouds meaneth.

I anſwer, though Elihu's queſtion hath a negation in it, yet not a total negation, he doth not exclude the underſtanding of men wholly out of the clouds; he only denieth man a full underſtanding of all things which concern either the nature or motion of the clouds. Wiſe men underſtand much about the ſpreading of the clouds, but they cannot underſtand all. The beſt of godly men underſtand not much, or ſee but a little way into ſpiritual things: And the wiſeſt of worldly men do not, cannot, ſee all in natural things. Can any underſtand

מפרשי עב Expanſiones vel differentias nubium cum aliæ ſteriles ſint, aliæ pluviam, aliæ grandinem mittant; Sed rectius expanſiones vertitur. Merc.

The ſpreading of the Clouds?] Here are, Firſt, the Clouds; Secondly, the ſpreading of them. The word which we tranſlate, ſpreading, hath a twofold ſignification: Firſt, (with the alteration only of a point upon one letter) it ſignifieth The difference of things in any kind: And then the Text is read, Can any underſtand the difference of the Clouds, that is, the variety that is among the clouds. The clouds are not all of a likeneſs, nor all of a bigneſs; there are clouds of many ſorts and ſizes: there are clouds which breed ſnow, and clouds which breed hail, clouds which breed rain, and clouds which breed thunder and lightning. Some clouds are empty, called clouds without rain or water, (Pro. 25. 14. Jude, verſ. 12.) and other clouds are full of water: There is a difference alſo of clouds as to our ſight and view, ſome are black, ſome white, ſome red, ſome are greeniſh, others paliſh clouds, from which various colours and appearances, Prognoſticks are made of the change of weather, as Chriſt told the Phariſees (Mat. 16. 2, 3.) Naturaliſts obſerve very many differences in the clouds, nor is it without wonder, that the clouds which are made all of one matter (vapours drawn from below) ſhould produce ſuch and ſo many different effects, that (according to this reading) we have reaſon to put the Queſtion, Who can underſtand the differences of the Clouds?

We read and that well and full to the Hebrew Text, Who can underſtand the ſpreadings of the Clouds, or their expanſion? The moſt cunning and knowing men in the myſteries of nature, cannot either tell how far the Clouds will ſpread, or to what point and part of the world they will convey their water, and (as I may ſay) unburden themſelves. Thus the words refer back to the two former verſes. The Clouds are ſpread as a Curtain, or as a piece of Tapeſtry, or as a mighty Canopy, Who can underſtand the ſpreading of them? The ſpreading of them; Firſt, as they carry rain; or, Secondly, the ſpreading of them (as ſome expound the place) as they convey the Lightening, which the Scripture ſaith, (Math. 24. 27.) Paſſeth from one end of Heaven to the other, from the Eaſt to the Weſt; who knoweth how far the Lightning will ſpread in the Clouds? Thus ſome connect it with the following verſe. Who can underſtand the ſpreading

Of the Clouds?] There is a ſpecial derivation of the word rendred Clouds, from the Hebrew, Greek, and Latin, all pretending to the nature of the Clouds: The Hebrew word properly noteth the thickneſs or groſneſs of the Clouds; the Greek word noteth the dropping nature of the Clouds, being derived from a root which ſignifieth to drop, or (which is near the ſame) to deſcend, the root word ſignifying to fall; the Latin word is taken from covering, becauſe the Clouds mask or cover the face of Heaven, and often hide and ſcreen the ſhining of the Sun from us.

Now becauſe Elihu is upon a work of nature, and inſiſts upon it all along in the next Chapter; I ſhall therefore to clear the matter, propoſe and anſwer three Queſtions concerning the Clouds.

Firſt, What is a Cloud, or what is the nature of the Clouds? A cloud is a moiſt vapour drawn up from the earth or water by the heat of the Sun into the middle region of the Air (as Naturaliſts divide the Air) where being by the coldneſs of the place congealed, and as it were knit together, it hangeth and continueth there, till it be broken up at the diſpoſe of God, and ſent down for the comfort or correction of man in rain, ſnow, hail, &c. The Clouds of Heaven, derive their pedigree from the moiſture found on earth, and to the earth they return their moiſture.

Secondly, Seeing the Clouds are ſuch mighty bodies, and contain (as I may ſay) whole ſeas of water in them, and water, being a heavy body, naturally deſcends or leads downward (as all heavy things do) it may be queſtioned (indeed it is a wonder) how thoſe Clouds are kept aloft in the Air? How comes it to paſs that ſuch heavy bodies, ſuch floods of water do not preſently fall violently, and at once ſhed themſelves down upon, and overwhelm the Earth? To that I anſwer,

Firſt, Some ſay the Clouds are kept up by that natural inbred heat or warmth which is included in them; or that they are kept up by the ſuperiour heat of the Sun, and Stars, which firſt drew them up.

Secondly, Others ſay, theſe mighty Clouds are held up by the wind; which keeping them in perpetual motion, they fall not, they deſcend not, but according to a divine Order, by which they are diſpoſed of to ſeveral uſes.

Thirdly, Others aſcribe it to the hollowneſs or ſpungineſs of their nature, which receiving and taking in the thin air, they are more eaſily kept up.

But when we have ſearched to the utmoſt for reaſons in nature, we muſt riſe higher, and reſolve the queſtion according to Scripture and divine Philoſophy, into the power and will of God. The holding up of the Clouds is Gods work as well as the raiſing of them up; He gave this law or command unto the Clouds in the day of their creation, that they ſhould not fall down nor diſtil a drop, but by his own commandment and appointment. Thus we find it expreſſed by Moſes in his deſcription of the creation, (Gen. 1. 6.) Let the firmament (that is, the air, the inferiour air next to the middle region) divide the waters from the waters. Here is a divine ſanction; there are waters above, and waters below; And ſaith God, Let the firmament divide the waters from the waters; That is, thoſe waters that are drawn up into Clouds in the air, a proviſion for Rain, &c. Let them be kept above, and divided from the Sea and waters that dwell below. Thus there was a Law at firſt to keep quarter, as I may ſay, between thoſe waters. And Solomon ſpeaking of the eternal Son of God, of his co-eternity with the Father, brings him (under the name of Wiſdom) ſpeaking thus of himſelf; I was with him (when he did this and that, and among the reſt, Prov. 8. 28.) When he eſtabliſhed the Clouds above; That is, when God made a Decree that the Clouds ſhould ſtay above, and not come down but at his call. So 'tis expreſſed (Job. 26. 8.) God bindeth up the waters in the thick Cloud, and the Cloud is not rent under them. 'Tis not of it ſelf that the Cloud (having ſuch a weight in it) doth not rent and break, but, ſaith God, it ſhall not. (Pro. 30. 4.) He hath bound the waters in a garment. But what is the garment? His own decree and purpoſe is the garment which bindeth up the waters. For as the waters of the Sea are bounded by the Decree of God (Job 38. 11.) So likewiſe the waters in the air are bound up by his Decree (Pſal. 148. 4, 6.) Praiſe him ye Heaven of Heavens, and ye waters which are above the Heavens, he hath eſtabliſhed them for ever, and hath made a decree which ſhall not paſs. He hath eſtabliſhed the waters which are above the Heavens, aſwel as the waters below the Heavens; he hath eſtabliſhed them by a decree (like that of the Medes and Perſians) which ſhall not be diſanulled. So then, here's the anſwer to this ſecond queſtion, How it comes to paſs, that the Clouds containing ſuch floods of water (which is an heavy body) do not deſcend and overwhelm the earth? This is by the power and decree, or by the powerful decree of God, who hath cauſed ſuch a weak and thin ſubſtance, as the Clouds, made up only of Vapours, to hold thoſe mighty waters cloſe, and keep them priſoners, that not a ſpoonful ſhall ſhed forth till himſelf pleaſeth. The Clouds, as ſome have well expreſſed it, are like ſpunges filled with water, and till God layeth his hand upon the Clouds (that is, till he gives a word) and as I may ſay, ſqueezeth or preſſeth them by his providence (as we ſqueez a ſpunge full of water) the waters fall not. Thus we ſee the reaſon, why Elihu makes ſo great a matter of the ſpreading of the Clouds, and why the waters fall not preſently together, nor preſently drop out of them, but in their ſeaſon.

Zanch. de operibus Dei l. 2. c. 1.

A third Query concerning the Clouds may be this; Why are they placed above? What is their uſe?

I anſwer, The uſe of the Clouds may be conſidered two ways; Firſt, there is a natural, Secondly, a ſpiritual uſe of them.

Firſt, There is a natural uſe of them, and that is twofold.

Firſt, That they may contain water in a readineſs to moiſten and fatten the earth: Stores and treaſures of rain are kept in them to ſupply the neceſſities of all earthly Creatures.

Secondly, The natural uſe of the Clouds is, to attemper the heat of the air, and to be as a Curtain, or Screen between us and the Sun. If the Sun ſhould always ſhine fully upon the earth, we were not able to abide it; but the Clouds coming between, do exceedingly qualifie and moderate the heat and fierceneſs of the Sun. Theſe, beſides others, are their natural uſes.

And if we look into the Scripture, we ſhall find many ſpiritual and gracious uſes, for which God hath made the Clouds.

Firſt, God hath ſet his Bow in the Clouds, as a token of his favour unto mankind, as a token of his general favour, that he will not drown the world again (Gen. 9. 14, 15.) And it ſhall come to paſs, when I bring a Cloud over the Earth, that the Bow ſhall be ſeen in the Cloud; and I will remember my Covenant which is between me and you, and every living creature of all fleſh; and the waters ſhall no more become a flood, to deſtroy all fleſh. This is alluded to by the Prophet (*Iſa.*54.9.) as a token of the ſpecial favour of God to his People, that he will never break Covenant with them. When Believers ſee his Bow in the Cloud, they may be as well aſſured, that they ſhall be freed from a deluge of wrath, as that the world ſhall not be overwhelmed again with a deluge of waters.

Secondly, We find the Lord making uſe of a Cloud, or uſing the miniſtery of a Cloud, in a gracious way, for the conducting of his People out of Egypt quite through the Wilderneſs unto Canaan. That I grant was more than an ordinary Cloud, and lower and nearer the earth than uſually Clouds are, yet it was doubtleſs of the ſame nature with other Clouds (Exod. 13.21. *Neh.*9.19.) And therefore, when the Prophet would aſſure the Church of guidance and protection, he tells them (Iſa. 3.5.) The Lord will create upon every dwelling place of mount Sion, and upon her aſſemblies, a Cloud and Smoak by day, and the ſhining of the flaming Fire by night: for upon all the glory ſhall be a defence. And we at this day, may make this ſpiritual uſe (according to Scripture) of the Clouds, which we behold, as to mind us how the Lord both protected and guided the People of Iſrael through the wilderneſs, ſo to aſſure us that he will protect and guide us through the World. Chriſt is this Cloud, a covering protecting Cloud unto his Church; and we may ſweetly meditate upon him, not only when we behold the Sun, but as often as we behold the Clouds.

Further, As Chriſt ſerves his Church like a Cloud, ſo the Clouds have done and ſhall do many ſervices to Chriſt. A bright Cloud overſhadowed Chriſt in his transfiguration (Mat. 17.5.) A Cloud received him out of the Apoſtles ſight at his aſcenſion (Act. 1. 9.) and he ſhall come again in the Clouds to judgment (Mat. 24. 30. Luke 21.27.) He is alſo repreſented ſitting upon a white Cloud (Rev. 14. 14.)

Thirdly, The ſpirit of God gives us another gracious uſe of, and meditation upon the Clouds; that as often as we ſee thick and black Clouds, which threaten a grievous ſtorm, ſcattered, and the air cleared, this ſhould put us in mind of the abundant grace of God pardoning our ſin (*Iſa.*44.22.) I have blotted, as a thick Cloud, thy tranſgreſſion, and as a Cloud thy ſins. Falſe and faithleſs Miniſters are called Clouds without water (Jude Verſ. 12.) And the faithful Miniſters of the Goſpel, flee as a Cloud to water Souls, as the converted Gentiles are ſaid, to flee as Doves to the windows (Iſa. 60. 8.) There are not only natural but ſpiritual uſes and improvements to be made of the Clouds, as often as we behold them; and the Scripture in many places, leads and points us to ſuch meditations. It is ſaid of Luther, that once beholding a great Cloud, that promiſed, or had a great appearance of rain, in a time of drought, blown away and diſpelled, without yielding one drop of rain to refreſh the earth; he turned to ſome of his friends, and ſaid, Such are the Promiſes of the world. Men, ſaid he, make great and fair promiſes, pretending much good, and good-will to thoſe to whom they are made, which yet vaniſh and come to nothing; and concluding his obſervation upon the deceitful appearance of the cloud, added the words of Solomon (Prov.25.14.) Who ſo boaſteth himſelf of a falſe gift, is like clouds without rain. Such eſpecially are all falſe teachers, they, if any, boaſt themſelves of a falſe gift, that is, they either pretend to a gift which they have not, or they pretend their gift is of Chriſt, when it is not; theſe are like Clouds without rain, or (as the Text in the Epiſtle of Jude, even now mentioned) calls them, they are Clouds without water, carried about of winds, that is, which way ſo ever the wind of outward reſpects and advantages bloweth, they are carried.

Tales ſunt promiſſiones mundi.

So much for anſwer to thoſe three queſtions about the Clouds. Who can underſtand the ſpreading of the Clouds?

Hence Note; Firſt, Even natural things exceed the reach of mans underſtanding.

How much more do ſpiritual things, the myſteries of Grace! Nicodemus was a knowing man, a Maſter in Iſrael, yet how ſimply did he ſpeak when Chriſt propoſed to him, and preſented him with the neceſſity of a new-birth! Nor hath a natural man a clearer inſight in any other Goſpel myſtery (1 Cor. 2.14.) The natural man receiveth not the things of God, neither can he know them, becauſe they are ſpiritually diſcerned. But he that is ſpiritual judgeth (or diſcerneth) all things; That is, he hath a principle of ſpiritual underſtanding, whereby he is able to make a right judgment of all things neceſſary to his own edification and Salvation.

Again; If the natural things which God hath made (the ſpreading of the Clouds) exceed our underſtanding, then how much more doth God himſelf who made them!

Who can underſtand the ſpreadings of God? The immenſity of God? The eternity, the omnipotency, the infinity of God? That's the thing Elihu chiefly aims at in all this diſcourſe. While he poſeth Job, and all men, in the natural works of God, he would convince Job, and all men, that neither he was, nor any man is able to comprehend the equity and righteouſneſs of his proceeding in the darker ways of Providence. And this he did, becauſe Job had too often (upon the matter) called God to anſwer, asking why it was ſo? Inſtead of a ſilent ſubmiſſion to what he did not underſtand, nor could ſee the reaſon of.

Further, conſider this particular in nature, The ſpreading of the Clouds. We ſee the Clouds every day, and we ſee their ſpreadings, that's common and obvious to the eye; yet (ſaith Elihu) who can underſtand theſe Spreadings? There is a greater latitude in the Clouds than we imagin; and if we cannot fully underſtand the things which we ſee, how can we underſtand what we ſee not? Who apprehends the true greatneſs of the Clouds, the greatneſs of the Moon, the greatneſs of the Stars, the greatneſs of the Sun; all which our eyes behold? We can neither underſtand by our eye, nor by the rules and reports of the greateſt Aſtronomers, the true magnitude or greatneſs of thoſe heavenly viſible bodies; who then can take the true dimenſion (if I may ſo ſpeak) of things inviſible? Who can underſtand the ſpreading of the Clouds?

Or the noiſe (or noiſes) of his Tabernacle.

The word notes a dreadful noiſe, a noiſe with a tumult, ſuch a noiſe as is made when ruin and deſolation cometh upon a place, ſuch a noiſe as the Prophet deſcribeth in a time of War. Moab ſhall die with a tumult (Amos 2. 2.) Who can underſtand the noiſe of his Tabernacle?

תשאות a שאה Sonuit, perſtrepuit, denotat ſonitum tumultus bellici Rab.Shelo.

This noiſe may be expounded two ways;

Firſt, Of thunder-claps. When Clouds are diſcharged, their thunder-bolts, like cannon bullets, rattle through the air: Who can underſtand this noiſe of his Tabernacle? As no man can at all underſtand the thunder of his power (Ch. 26. 14.) ſo not the All of his powerful thunder. This is a truth, and the Text may well take in that noiſe, the noiſe of the thunder. But becauſe Elihu ſpeaks profeſſedly and expreſly of thunder in the next Chapter (Verſ. 4.) therefore (I conceive) the noiſe of his Tabernacle, here may be ſome-what elſe, or leſs than that of thunder, that is, the noiſe of the winds, breaking out from the Tabernacle of God. What a buſtling noiſe, what an out-cry (as I may ſay) the winds make we all know, eſpecially when they become ſtorms, and are not only winds but tempeſts. There are ſweet gentle gales of wind, which make but a little murmur, or whiſper in the air, we can ſcarce hear their voice; but ſome winds roar, ſome winds come little ſhort of thunder, for noiſe and loudneſs, and I ſuppoſe Elihu chiefly intends this noiſe, by The noiſe

Of his Tabernacle.] But what is the Tabernacle of God? I anſwer; That word Tabernacle is often uſed in the Old Teſtament; properly it ſignifieth a Tent in War, a military manſion, a flitting habitation, or portable houſe, having no fixed or ſetled ſeat. The Tabernacle under the Law was the place appointed by God for publick worſhip. We read alſo of the Feaſt of Tabernacles (Lev. 23. 34.) at which ſolemn Feaſt, the Jews dwelt ſeven days in Tents, to put them in remembrance, that God made their fore-fathers dwell in Tents when he brought them out of Egypt, as alſo to mind them, that here they had no abiding place, but were to ſeek one to come. And as this place of publick worſhip, ſo any place for private dwelling was called a Tabernacle. Surely I will not come into the Tabernacle of my houſe, until, &c. (Said David, Pſal. 132. 3.) That is, into my houſe, which though it be a royal Palace, yet I look upon it, but as a movable Tabernacle. But doth God dwell in a movable houſe? God is immovable, he makes no removes, yet whereſoever God is pleaſed to ſhew himſelf in his power and marvelous works, there we may ſay his Tabernacle is. The Tabernacle of God, where this noiſe, this mighty noiſe is made, is nothing elſe but the Clouds before ſpoken of. The Clouds are Gods Tabernacle; they are called ſo expreſly by a word of very near cognation unto this (Pſal. 18. 11.) He maketh the Clouds his pavilion. A pavilion is an extraordinary Tabernacle; a pavilion is that Tabernacle which is proper to a King or to the General of an Army. Now ſaith the Pſalmiſt, He maketh the Clouds his pavilion; In them he ſhews his power and glory. They are alſo called the chariots of God (Pſal. 104. 3. Deut. 32. 6.) and he is ſaid to come in the Clouds, as a Prince in his chariot. He came in a thick Cloud (Exod. 19. 9.) and he deſended in a Cloud (Exod. 34. 5.) which here is called his Tabernacle. So then, the Clouds, together with all that middle region of the air, where the rain now, and fiery meteors, are generated, are in Scripture allegorically called, the Tabernacle of God; becauſe there he ſeems often to dwell or reſide, for the producing of many wonderful works upon this inferiour World. We may take the word here in a double alluſion unto a Tabernacle, or unto two ſorts of Tabernacles.

Firſt, There were ordinary Tabernacles, wherein men dwelt. The ancient Hebrews dwelt in tents or Tabernacles; theſe were Tabernacles for civil uſe, or for habitation; in alluſion unto which, the Apoſtle ſpeaks of the body, wherein the Soul dwels (2 Cor. 5.) When the earthly houſe of this Tabernacle ſhall be diſſolved, we know, that we have a building of God, an houſe not made with hands, eternal in the Heavens.

Secondly, There were Tabernacles for military uſe, Souldiers Tents, or Tabernacles. As the whole Heavens, ſo the clouds eſpecially may be called the Tabernacle of God in both reſpects; they are his houſe, wherein he ſits unſeen, and doth wonders all the world over; in them he ſheweth his power, and appears gloriouſly, and as a great Prince or mighty General he ſends out his edicts and orders from the clouds, he commands winds, ſtorms, tempeſts, ſnow and hail for ſeveral diſpenſations to go from thence, according as his own infinite wiſdom ſeeth fit, and the caſes of men require, whether in ways of Judgment or of mercy; as Elihu tells us, yet more diſtinctly, at the 31. Verſe, For by them (ſaith he) judgeth he the people, he giveth meat in abundance. The clouds are very fit and commodious for Gods uſe in any of theſe reſpects; either for the terrifying and puniſhing of the wicked, or, for the helping and feeding of them that fear him. Now foraſmuch as the clouds are called the Tabernacle of God upon theſe accounts, > Learn Firſt; There God is ſaid to be eſpecially, where he eſpecially works.

God is no more in one place of the world than in another, as to his being and exiſtence; for he is every where, he filleth heaven and earth. We muſt not think that God is ſhut up in the clouds as a man in his Tabernacle; but becauſe God works much in the clouds, and doth great things by the rain, thunder and lightening, therefore the clouds, whence theſe Meteors iſſue, are called his Tabernacle. Where-ever God works much, he is ſaid to dwell. Why is God ſaid to dwell with them that are of an humble and contrite heart? Even becauſe he works much in them, and much by them. So becauſe many great works of God are done in the Clouds, as we ſhall ſee more particularly hereafter, therefore the Lord is ſaid to dwell there as in his Tabernacle.

Secondly, When 'tis ſaid, Who can underſtand the noiſe of his Tabernacle?

> Obſerve; The moſt dreadful ſtorms and tempeſts, the roaring winds which we hear at any time, are ſent out by God, they are the noiſe of his Tabernacle;

They go when he ſaith Go, (Pſal. 148. 8.) Stormy winds and tempeſts fulfilling his will. We may think, ſtorms, of all things, leaſt under command and order, yet they are under an exact order. The moſt ſtormy winds go not an hairs breadth beſides, or beyond the commiſſion which God gives them. As often as we hear the roaring noiſe of the wind, much more, of thunder, let us remember, 'tis the noiſe of the Tabernacle.

Verſ. 30. Behold, he ſpreadeth his light upon it, and covereth the bottom of the Sea.

Elihu inſiſts ſtill upon the works of God, He ſpreadeth his light. Some underſtand by this light, the lightening; and it is a great truth, God wonderfully ſpreads the lightening upon the dark clouds, as if they were all in a flame, That's clear to the eye when it lighteneth; and God is ſaid (Pſal. 144. 6.) To caſt forth his lightening; which comes neer this word in the Text, he ſpreadeth it. But becauſe in the next chapter Elihu ſpeaks purpoſely of the lightening, therefore I ſhall not ſtay upon that ſenſe here, but decline it.

Rather take light in the common notion; He ſpreadeth his light, that is, the light of the Sun, which is eminently called Gods Light, upon it, that is, upon the cloud ſpoken of in the former verſe; and ſo the two parts of this verſe, yield us a deſcription (as I conceive) of the weather-changes made by God. When we have had much rain and ſtorms, God can preſently ſpread his light upon the cloud, that is, cauſe the light and heat of the Sun to conquer the clouds and ſcatter them.

And (he alſo) covereth the bottom of the Sea. That is, by and by, he makes it very dark by the gathering of thick clouds, even as dark as the bottom of the Sea, whither the light cannot come, or dark to the bottom of the Sea. The original is, the roots of the Sea, that is, the loweſt parts of the Sea, which we ſignificantly tranſlate, the bottom of the Sea. Some explicate the whole verſe, He ſpreads his light upon the face of the whole Heavens, and ſpreads the waters over the Ocean, ſo that no bottom can be ſeen, ſcarcely found. Mr. Broughton, by the roots of the Sea, underſtands the Earth. Another ſaith, he makes mention of the roots of the Sea, becauſe the waters of the Sea, are as it were the roots of the Clouds, they chiefly ſupplying the matter of which they are made. Vapours drawn from the waters of the Sea, by the heat of the Sun, become Clouds, and theſe Clouds cover both Earth and Sea, far and near. Thus 'tis matter of wonder to ſee ſuch great and ſudden changes in the air; that the ſame Sun with its beams ſhould exhale thoſe vapours which are condenſed into Clouds, and that ſoon after, thoſe Sun-beams ſhould ſcatter and diſſolve thoſe Clouds; or that now the Heavens ſhould be ſo masked with Clouds as to make all dark, and in a little ſpace, all return to its former brightneſs and beauty.

Radices maris ſunt profundiſſimæ infimæq; illius partes.

He ſpreadeth his Light. What is there in the world that is not Gods? Here he calleth Light his.

Hence note, God loves to entitle himſelf to Light in an eſpecial manner.

He cauſeth his Sun to ſhine, &c. (Mat.5 44.) The Moon is his as well as the Sun, and the Stars are his as much as either; but becauſe the Sun is the greater Veſſel and conveigher of Light; therefore ſaith Chriſt, He cauſeth his Sun to ſhine on the evil and the good, &c. God himſelf is Light, and the Father of Lights (Jam. 1. 17.) which is true not only of ſpiritual Light, by which the things of God are diſcovered to us; but alſo of natural Light, the light of the Sun, that's Gods Light too, he is the Father of it.

Secondly note, The changes which we ſee in the air, from fair to fowl weather, from calms to tempeſts, are from God.

It is not in the creature to make one day or hour fair or foul. As Chriſt gives the reaſon why no man ſhould ſwear by his head, becauſe he cannot make a hair white or black, he cannot change the colour of an hair, nor make a hair of any colour: So, it is not in the power of any man, to make one day fair or foul, that's Gods peculiar; He ſpreadeth his Light upon the Clouds, and covereth the bottom of the Sea.

Verſ. 31. For by them he judgeth the People, he giveth meat in abundance.

This 31. Verſe give us the effect of all that which Elihu had ſpoken before, of the rain, of ſtorms and tempeſts and we may add, of lightening, and of thunder; By them he judgeth the people and giveth meat in abundance. Here are two effects; Firſt, an effect grievous; Secondly, an effect gracious: The former proceeds from the juſtice, the latter from the mercy and goodneſs of God.

By them, that is, by the rain, by the winds, &c. he judgeth the people.

To judge is taken three ways in Scripture.

Firſt, To judge, is to rule or govern. When it is ſaid, ſuch a man judged Iſrael, the meaning is, he ruled and governed Iſrael: That's the language of the book of Judges every where, when their Governours are ſpoken of.

Secondly, To Judge, is to determine, or give ſentence in a ſpecial caſe (Deut. 25. 1.)

Thirdly, To judge is to puniſh or afflict, and thus often in Scripture, when God puniſheth any perſon or people, he is ſaid to judge them (Pſal. 51. 4.) That thou mayeſt be cleared when thou judgeſt, that is, when thou afflicteſt, or layeſt thine hand upon me (ſaith David) as God had threatened by Nathan, that the ſword ſhould not depart from his houſe; this moved David to make confeſſion, Againſt thee, thee only, have I ſinned: ——that thou mighteſt be juſtified when thou ſpeakeſt, and cleared when thou judgeſt. As if he had ſaid, my confeſſion, O Lord, will be thy juſtification; all may ſee I have given thee abundant cauſe to lay thy chaſtening hand upon me (Heb. 13. 4.) Whoremongers and Adulterers God will judge; though men let them paſs, yet God will not, he will puniſh them. Again in that notable place (1 Cor. 11. 31, 32.) If we would judge our ſelves we ſhould not be judged of the Lord. What it is to be judged, the Apoſtle ſheweth in the next words; But when we are judged, we are chaſtened of the Lord. The Apoſtle warns the Church to take heed how they come to the ſolemn aſſemblies, leſt coming raſhly and unpreparedly, the hand of God ſhould fall heavy upon them, by weakneſs, ſickneſs and death. When Elihu ſaith, By them he judgeth the People. We are to take judging in this third ſence; He judgeth, that is, he afflicteth and puniſheth men by theſe things. Thus the Alluſion is elegantly followed. The Lord from his Tabernacle, or throne in the Clouds, ſends forth Edicts, and ſigns his Warrants, for the puniſhment both of nations and perſons; windy ſtorms, rain and thunder, going forth as executioners of his orders and appointments: By them he judgeth the people.

Hence obſerve, Firſt, God can make a ſcourge of any of the creatures.

By them, that is, by the rain and by the wind, he judgeth the people. He can uſe what inſtrument he pleaſeth to afflict and chaſten us with. Read the holy Scriptures, read the Hiſtories of the Church, and you will find all ſorts of creatures ſummoned one time or other, and ſent forth as Gods meſſengers, to puniſh the pride and ſtubbornneſs, the impenitency and perverſneſs of mens hearts and ways. How many creatures did God make uſe of to puniſh Pharaoh with, and many of them very contemptible ones; among the reſt, the hail, rain, and thunder ſpoken of in this place, were his inſtruments of vengeance in plaguing that hardned King. Whenſoever God afflicts a people by the creatures, he judgeth them by the creatures. Let us take heed, that we provoke not God to turn thoſe things which were given for our good, to our hurt; that he make not what was made our ſervant, our puniſhment. God made all creatures ſerviceable and uſeful to man, but through ſin they become grievous and deſtructive to man; By them he judgeth the people.

He giveth meat in abundance.] Here is the ſecond effect wrought or produced by theſe Creatures: He giveth, that is, God giveth, meat, that is, all kind of food and proviſion, for the life both of man and Beaſt; and he giveth it in abundance: He doth not give it ſcantly or niggardly, in ſmall portions and pittances, but in full meaſure, preſſed down, heaped up, and running over. By them, that is, by the rain and by the wind, &c. God gives us our meat in abundance. One tranſlation ſaith, He giveth meat to many, that is, to all.

Eſcam ad copiam. Heb. i. e. copioſam.

Dat eſcam multis mortalibus. Hieron.

Hence Note, Firſt, Our daily food is the gift of God.

He giveth meat. No man gets his own bread unleſs God giveth it; God muſt give it before we can get it.

Note, Secondly, God is a free, bountiful and liberal Houſe-keeper.

He giveth meat in abundance; he giveth to very many, yea, to all, and he giveth very much; he giveth meat to all the Fowls of the Air, and to all the Fiſhes of the Sea, to all men and Beaſts living on the Earth, they all receive food from God: He giveth food to all fleſh (Pſ. 136. 25.) He filleth every living thing. (Pſ. 147. 9.) He giveth to the Beaſt his food, and feedeth the young Ravens when they cry. Chriſt makes this an argument of faith in God for food and clothing (Matth. 6. 26.) Behold the Fowls of the Air, for they ſow not, neither do they reap, nor gather into Barns; yet your heavenly Father feedeth them: Are not ye much better than they? How little faith have you, who knowing that God feeds the Fowls of the Air, yet cannot truſt him for your food! He giveth food in abundance.

Note, Thirdly, Plenty and ſcarcity are at the diſpoſe of God.

He can give meat in ſcarcity, as well as meat in abundance; he can give cleanneſs of teeth as well as fulneſs of bread: And as he can ſtrengthen the ſtaff of bread, ſo break it, and cauſe us to eat bread by weight and with care, and to drink water by meaſure and with aſtoniſhment (Ezek. 4. 16.) To eat by weight and drink by meaſure, is to eat and drink in the want of bread and water, as is expreſſed (verſ. 17.) And as theſe changes of our natural, ſo of our ſpiritual food are from the Lord (Amos 8. 11.) I will ſend a famine (What famine?) not of bread, but of hearing the word of the Lord. 'Tis the Lord who ſends plenty and ſcarcity of bread, whether for the Soul or for the Body.

Fourthly, In that he ſaith, by them he giveth meat in abundance,

Note, God uſeth natural means as the cauſe either of plenty or ſcarcity.

The Lord could give us abundance, if he pleaſed, without rain, but he rarely gives abundance but by rain; he ſends rain out of the Clouds to water the Earth, and make it fruitful. The Lord could make our Souls fruitful in every good work, without the preaching of the word, but he ſeldom doth it (I believe never when the word may be had) without the preaching of the word. And therefore the Lord by his Prophet makes a compariſon between, or a parallel of theſe two (Iſa. 55. 10, 11.) As the rain cometh down, and the ſnow from Heaven, and returneth not thither, but watereth the earth, and maketh it bring forth and bud, that it may give ſeed to the ſower, and bread to the eater; ſo ſhall my word be, that goeth out of my mouth, &c. The Lord uſeth rain and ſnow, yea, wind and thunder, to fit the earth, as he uſeth his Word and holy Ordinances to fit the ſoul, to bring forth fruit to himſelf. He could do both alone, but he improveth that order of nature and grace which himſelf at firſt ſet up and inſtituted to bring about theſe excellent ends. By them he giveth meat in abundance.

Παρέξει τροφὴν πάμπολλην. Præbebit eſcam permultam. Sept.

The Greek Tranſlation renders all manner of muchneſs. From the whole learn, what cauſe we have to acknowledge the goodneſs of God in every ſhower of rain, and fleet of ſnow; for by them he giveth us our meat.

We ſhould hence alſo be minded to fear the Lord, and to take heed of his diſpleaſure. It is ſaid (Acts 12. 20.) when Herod was highly diſpleaſed with them of Tyre and Sidon, they came with one accord to him, and having made Blaſtus the Kings Chamberlain their friend, deſired peace, becauſe their Country was nouriſhed by the Kings Country. O how much more ſhould we labour to avoid the diſpleaſure of God, and haſten to make our peace with him, ſeeing our Country is nouriſhed by his Country! The heavens nouriſh the earth, elſe the earth could not afford any thing for our nouriſhment. We are fed rather from the heavens than from the earth. The clouds drop down and make the earth fat, to give graſs for cattel and corn for man. Elihu ſpeaks nothing of the Earth, but of the Clouds, from them we are fed.

Laſtly conſider, Elihu joyns both effects expreſly, By them he judgeth the people, he giveth meat, &c.

Hence note, The Lord can make the ſame creature either beneficial or hurtful to us.

That which is an inſtrument in his hand for good to his ſervants, is often a plague and a ſcourge to his enemies. The rain which at one time moiſtens the earth, at another time drowns it; the rain which at one time cheriſheth the creatures, at another time choaks them. The winds which at one time fan the air and cool it, at another time enrage and vex it; the winds which at one time ſweeten and cleanſe the air, at another time corrupt and infect it. The Lord can with the ſame creatures, furniſh himſelf for any diſpenſation: By them he judgeth the people, and by them he giveth meat in abundance.

VERS. 32, 33.

With clouds he covereth the light, and commandeth it not to ſhine, by the cloud that cometh betwéen.

The noiſe whereof ſheweth concerning it, the cattel alſo concerning the vapour.

Hujus & ſequentis verſus difficultas & obſcuritas tanta ſemper ab omnibus enarratoribus habita eſt ut vix alius in toto hoc libro, ne dicam in toto ſacro codice locus iſto impenetrabilior eſſe videatur. Bold.

These two verſes have a Character of difficulty and obſcurity put upon them by ſeveral interpreters; and ſome have concluded them the moſt difficult and darkeſt portion of the whole Book of Job, yea, of the whole Book of God. And ſhould I reckon up all the various Grammatical conſtructions of theſe words, together with the diſtinct interpretations given upon them, I ſhould weary my ſelf, and rather perplex than advantage the Reader.

And therefore I ſhall ſpeak to theſe two verſes, Firſt, as they are laid down plainly in our Tranſlation, according to which (with ſubmiſſion to the judgment of thoſe learned Authors) I ſee neither any great difficulty nor obſcurity in them, and ſhall afterwards give a brief account at leaſt, of ſome of thoſe different readings and tranſlations which I find upon them.

The words (as I conceive) according to the mind of our tranſlators, and as the Text clearly beareth, hold out two things concerning the rain, of which Elihu had ſpoken before.

Firſt, What is naturally preparatory to rain or foul weather, that we have in the 32. verſe, With clouds he covereth the light, and commandeth it not to ſhine by the Cloud that cometh between.

Secondly, We have that which is declaratory of rain, or (as ſome call them) the Prognoſticks and ſigns of rain; theſe are laid down in the 33. verſe, The noiſe thereof ſheweth concerning it, the Cattel alſo concerning the vapour.

Verſ. 32. With clouds he covereth the light.

Vox כפים ambigua eſt ad manus & nubes, proprie volas denotat; ad nubes refero quia de iis hactenus actum, & quia proprie curvaturas ſignificat, quales in unaquaque nube duæ ſunt, convexa & concava. De Dieu in loc.

He, that is, God covereth the light with Clouds. We heard of the Clouds at the 29. verſe, but the word there uſed is not that which is uſed in this 32. verſe. The word here made uſe of by Elihu, ſignifies generally any thing that is hollow or concave, as a ſpoon, platter, or boul, or ſuch like utenſils, which are bowed with a convex and concave ſuperficies; it hath alſo particularly two eminent ſignifications, both of which are made uſe of in this place by Interpreters. Firſt, it ſignifieth the hand; ſo we tranſlate it (Job 16. 17.) There is no injuſtice in my hand. The word which here we tranſlate a Cloud; is there tranſlated, a hand: Now, the hand, we know, hath a hollowneſs or cavity in it, unleſs when it is purpoſely held forth plain. The ſecond ſignification is that of the Text, a Cloud, which is alſo hollow, and (as moſt conclude) the ſame word is put to ſignifie a hand, and a Cloud, becauſe Clouds uſually at the firſt appearance are but ſmall, or like a hand, as Elijahs ſervant reported to him, after his ſeventh going to view the Heavens (1 King. 18. 44.). Behold, a little Cloud, like a mans hand. In this ſence we take it here in our tranſlation: Some render With his hand he covereth the light, we ſay, With Clouds

כסה Texit, abſcondit, imponendo aliquid quo tegas tanquam operculo vel veſte.

He covereth the light.] He covereth or hideth the light, that is, from our eyes, he cauſeth it to diſappear, or not appear to us: The word notes covering as with a garment, or covering with any thing that intercepts and ſtops the ſight; and hence by a Trope it is applied to the pardon of ſin (Pſal. 32. 1.) Bleſſed is the man whoſe ſin is covered. When the Lord pardons ſin, he is ſaid to cover it, becauſe he will not ſuffer it to appear againſt the ſinner, nor be charged upon him to condemnation. As pardon covers ſins, ſo Clouds cover the Heavens, and when they are covered the light is covered. With Clouds he covereth the light. The Prophet Jeremy in his Lamentations (Chap. 3. 44.) complained ſadly, becauſe God (who is light) had covered himſelf, Thou haſt covered thy ſelf with a Cloud, that our prayers ſhould not paſs through. As God doth ſometimes cover himſelf, or hide the light of his Countenance from his people, as with a cloud, that their prayers cannot paſs through; ſo he often hides or covers the light of the air with natural or proper Clouds, that the Sun-beams for a time cannot pierce nor paſs through; With Clouds he covereth.

The light.] The word uſed by Elihu, ſignifies both light and the Sun, which is the fountain, from whence light flows and iſſues; yea, the word ſignifies alſo fire. The Sun, Moon, and Stars, are called (ignes) the fires of heaven, becauſe like ſo many fires or mighty torches they give light to us on earth. And by a metaphor the word ſignifies Joy, Comfort, all ſorts of good things; as on the other ſide, by darkneſs, troubles and calamities of all ſorts are metaphorically expreſt in Scripture. With Clouds he covereth the light,

And commandeth it not to ſhine by the Cloud that cometh betwéen.

As if he had ſaid. When a Cloud covereth the light, 'tis the command of God which puts the Cloud as a covering upon it. Thoſe words [not to ſhine.] are not expreſly in the Hebrew Text; there it is only thus; With Clouds he covereth the light, and commandeth it by that which cometh between: nor is the word Cloud expreſt in the latter part of the verſe, we put it in as a ſupplement in another Character, more fully to expreſs the ſence of the Text.

And commandeth it not to ſhine.

Verbum צוה quod ſignificat præcipere, quum regit præpoſitionem על ſignificat interdicere. Piſc.

The word which we tranſlate to command, properly ſignifies, to bid or command a thing to be done; but when it ſtands in conſtruction, as here, with Gnal, it ſignifieth to forbid or ſtay a thing that it be not done. (Gen. 2. 16.) God commanded the man, or concerning the man, &c. As that command expreſſed a liberty to eat of every other tree in the Garden, so it included a prohibition of eating the fruit of the tree of knowledge, which is alſo expreſſed at the 17. verſe. We have a like conſtruction of the word (Gen. 28. 6. 1 Kings 2. 43.) He commandeth it not to ſhine

By the Cloud that cometh between.] By that which cometh between, or by that which meets it, that is, as we ſupply it, by the thick and dark Cloud which meets and intercepts the bright beams of the Sun. The root of the word ſignifies to meet with force (not only occurrere but irruere) to ruſh upon, to invade, to aſſault, or to charge, as an enemy is charged in battel; and it ſignifies, by a Metaphor, to intercede, to make prayer or ſupplication for another, which is as it were a coming between man and man. An Interceſſor cometh between two parties, the party offending, and the party offended, he interpoſeth himſelf to make up the breach, or to take up the difference, that if poſſible a reconciliation may be made. The Latine word which we tranſlate Latinely to intercede, is of the ſame ſignificancy; and this Hebrew word is often ſo rendred (Jer. 7: 16.) Pray not for this people, nor make interceſſion to me; that is, thou ſhalt not come between me and this people to ſtop or ſtay me, that I break not out into wrath, or from pouring out my wrath upon them. In other Scriptures it is uſed to note an act of interceſſion between man and man (Gen. 23. 8.) as alſo an act of addreſs by prayer and intreaty, whether towards God or man, (Job 21. 15. Ruth 1. 16) And becauſe the word properly notes meeting another with a kind of violence, it intimates with what a holy violence, with what ſtrength, earneſtneſs, and fervency of ſpirit, we ought to meet God, either in prayer for our ſelves, or when we come as interceſſors, and ſtand before him in the behalf of others, whether Perſons, Nations, or Churches.

Many Interpreters (as I ſhall ſhew afterward) take the word in this ſence here for an Interceſſor, or for a perſon that prayeth and intercedeth for another. We, in our tranſlation, expound it of a thing, and that thing of a Cloud that interpoſeth or cometh between us and the Light. He commandeth the light not to ſhine, by the Cloud that cometh between, or, by the Cloud that paſſeth between us and the light of the Sun.

Hence note, Firſt, The beſt and ſweeteſt mercies we have in this world, may quickly meet with a ſtop.

When we have the Light, a Cloud may ſoon come between the Light and us: Which as it is true of the natural Light and Clouds, ſo of that which is Light in a figure, our moſt comfortable enjoyments; and that which is a Cloud in a figure, troubleſom and afflictive Providences. There is no light, of what kind ſoever it is, but there may be a Cloud to intercept it, and come between us and that; even the light of the favour of God, the light of his countenance, which is the moſt bleſſed light of all, even that light hath many a Cloud. The clouds of our ſins cauſe the Lord to cloud his face with anger and diſpleaſure, and hinder the light of his favour and loving-kindneſs from ſhining upon our ſouls.

Secondly, In that Elihu ſaith, He commandeth it not to ſhine,

Note, The Lord hath a ſoveraign power over all creatures;

He ſends forth his commanding word, not only to Angels and Men, but to Beaſts, yea, to inanimates, he ſends out his orders and edicts to the Clouds of the Air, to the Light of the Sun, to things without life, and they ſubmit preſently and obey; he ſpeaketh to the light as if it were a reaſonable creature, he commandeth it not to ſhine, and it ſhineth not. The hoſts of heaven and the inhabitants of the earth are at the diſpoſe of God; the whole courſe of nature moves and ſtands ſtill at his word and pleaſure. The Sun ſtood ſtill in the days of Joſhua at his command; and by the ſame command, the Sun went backward in the days of Hezekiah; and 'tis by his command that the Sun withdraws its light, and is muffled up with Clouds at any time. He commandeth it not to ſhine.

Take theſe Inferences from it.

Firſt, Then, what cannot God do? He that commands the light not to ſhine, and it ſhineth not; Is any thing too hard for him? who but God can ſtop the Sun from ſhining? If all the Princes and Potentates of this world ſhould joyn their forces, their counſels together, and ſend a prohibition to the Sun, to ſtay its light, and forbear its ſhining one moment, they were not able to do it; yet if the Lord do but ſpeak the word, the Sun ſhineth not; he can give it a prohibition, and ſuperſede the going forth of its light to us: yea, he hath power enough, not only to cover the Sun with Clouds, but to turn it into a Cloud, and to blot it out of the heavens.

Secondly, learn hence, In what dependance we are upon God for every thing. God can keep the light from us every day if he pleaſeth, and wrap us up in perpetual darkneſs, as he plagued the Land of Egypt with thick darkneſs for three days together. 'Tis true, the Sun riſeth and goeth down in a natural courſe, yet ſtill by a divine order and commiſſion. As God can forbid the Light by interpoſing Clouds, ſo he can forbid the Clouds to give us ſhowers, and bind up all the ſweet influences of heaven from diſtilling upon the earth to make it fruitful. He can ſpeak to our garments that they warm us not, to our food that it nouriſh us not, to our phyſick that it cure and heal us not, to all our relations that they comfort us not, to all our poſſeſſions and riches that they content us not. O let us remember that we depend upon God, for Rain, for Light, for Sunſhine, for all; it is at his word that they all put themſelves forth to do us good, and at his word they are all ſtaid and ſtopt in their motion, from doing or bringing us any good.

Let us remember alſo God can command another light not to ſhine; he can by a word ſtop the progreſs of the Word, and ſtay that bleſſed and moſt beautiful light, the light of the Goſpel, from ſhining to us, by ſome Cloud or other coming between. To how many nations of people, where that light ſometimes ſhined, hath God long ſince ſent a command, and it ſhineth not! It ſhined brightly in former Ages upon the African Churches, but now, for a long time, God hath ſaid to the light of the Goſpel, ſhine not upon them; there's ſcarce any light at all, at moſt but a glimering of Goſpel-Light in all that vaſt continent, a quarter part of the world. What mighty Dominions are now poſſeſſed by the followers of Mahomet, both in Europe and Aſia, where the light of the Goſpel did once ſhine very brightly and gloriouſly! How famous were thoſe ſeven Aſian Churches, mentioned and writ to by the command of Chriſt, and the miniſtry of his ſervant and Secretary John (Rev. 1. 2, 3.) yet now darkneſs poſſeſſeth all thoſe places, and the Alcoran hath thruſt out the Goſpel; and whence is all this? Surely God commanded, and that light ſhined not, nor hath it ſhined with any brightneſs for many hundred years. Jeſus Chriſt, who threatned Epheſus with the removal of her Candleſtick, hath removed all thoſe Candleſticks, and put out their lights. The ſame ſtop can God give to the Goſpel-Light which hath ſhined among us (bleſſed be his Name) for many years together: Let us take heed that we forfeit not that bleſſed light, that we provoke not the Lord by our abuſe of it and unthankfulneſs for it, to ſend out a command, that it ſhine not among us any more. We read in the Prophets how divine light was prohibited both to the People and to the Prophets: The ſtop of it to the People, we have (Amos 8. 9.) I will cauſe the Sun to go down at noon, and I will darken the earth in the clear day. The Prophet ſpeaks not here at all of the ſtop of natural light, nor doth he only intend the ſtop of that metaphorical light, Proſperity in outward things, which the Lord doth often eclipſe and darken, when men dream leaſt of it, or have no more fear about it, than they have that the Sun will go down at noon day; but he, at leaſt, intends, if it be not his principal intendment, to ſhew that a grievous judgment was haſtning upon them, as to their ſpiritual enjoyments; that the light of divine knowledge, what to believe, and what to practiſe, was declining, and ready to go down, though they thought it was but noon with them, and the day very clear. For as the famine threatned (verſ. 11.) is expounded upon the place, by the Prophet himſelf, not to be a famine of bread, and a thirſt for water, but of hearing the word of the Lord; ſo the darkneſs threatened in this 9. verſe, is not to be reſtrained to the loſs of their worldly liberties and comforts, but extended to thoſe which were ſpiritual and divine, the failing of viſion, and the removing of the light of the Word. And as in this Prophet we find the light departing from the People, ſo in the third of Micah (verſ. 6, 7.) we find God commanding the light not to ſhine to the Prophets (the falſe prophets he means there, for ſo he deſcribeth them, verſ. 5.) Therefore ſhall night be unto you (the prophets who deceive my people, who teach them vanity, and lead them to Idolatry and ſuperſtition; therefore, I ſay, ſhall night be unto you) that ye ſhall have no viſion, and it ſhall be dark to you that you ſhall not divine and the Sun ſhall go down over the Prophets, and the day ſhall be dark over them. What the Lord means by all this, you have expreſt in the cloſe of the 7. verſe, There is no anſwer of God, that is, God doth not now any more manifeſt his mind and will by the Prophets, that they might manifeſt his will unto the People. I cloſe this point with the renewal of my former admonition; Let us therefore take heed we provoke not the Lord to command this light not to ſhine, either to Prophets or People, in our Horizon.

Thirdly, He commandeth it not to ſhine by the Cloud that cometh between. Though (as I ſaid) the word Cloud, be not expreſt in the Text, yet we know 'tis a Cloud that uſually cometh between the light and us.

> Hence note, Though God can do all things by his bare word, yet he ordinarily uſeth means to bring about his purpoſes, whether for good or evil, whether in mercy or in judgement, to the children of men.

ὁ κατέχων,
Verſ. 7.

There is ſomething comes between. God hath a Cloud, or ſomewhat like it, to put between us and the light. The Apoſtle (2 Theſ. 2. 6, 7.) treating of Antichriſt, the man of ſin, intimates, that he would have filled the world with the darkneſs of errour and ſuperſtition very quickly, by a full diſcovery of himſelf, had not ſomething with-held him, had not ſomething come between him and his deſign for a time. What was that? 'Tis generally conceived, that which did with-hold or come between the man of ſin, and his purpoſe of filling the world with the darkneſs of his wicked errours and abominable worſhip, was the power of the Roman Empire at that time; Antichriſt could not put forth his power while that power ſtood in its ſtrength. God could have with-held Antichriſt immediately from putting forth of himſelf, but he ſaw it beſt to put a block in his way, the power of the Roman Empire, and until that was thruſt out of the way, the man of ſin could never ſhew himſelf fully, in that unlimited exerciſe of his ſinful power. Now, I ſay, as there was then a with-holder of Antichriſtian darkneſs, ſomwhat that came between and hindred its effectual working; ſo uſually, I may ſay univerſally, ſomewhat comes between to check and ſtop the courſe of the Goſpel-light, or of any other mercy. Sin is a Cloud of our making, and God in judgment makes that as a Cloud coming between us and our mercies. He did ſo of old to Iſrael, and he told them ſo by his Prophet (Jer. 5. 25.) Your ſins have with-holden good things from you. Sin withholds good things, not formally, but meritoriouſly, that is, ſin is the meriting or deſerving cauſe of their with-holding. This one Cloud of our ſins, brings all the Clouds of trouble between us and our mercies; and the Lord hath always ſome Cloud or other of trouble at hand, in readineſs to cover the light, that it ſhine not to us, when we trouble and grieve him by thoſe foggy and filthy clouds of our ſins. Thus far of that which is preparatory to rain, Clouds covering the light. It followeth,

This Verſe, according to our Tranſlation, as I touched before, carrieth on the ſame thing. There we had the preparation as it were, for rain, Clouds gathered and covering the Sun, ſo making dark weather: Now, ſaith he, that the rain is coming, the noiſe thereof ſheweth concerning it. The word which we render noiſe, taken from one root ſignifieth any troubleſom clamour; and as derived from another root, it ſignifieth a friend or companion (as I ſhall touch afterward) But at preſent leaving that, I ſhall open it according to our own reading, as it ſignifieth a noiſe. Some read his noiſe, that is, Gods noiſe, he maketh a noiſe in the air: And this noiſe of God in the air, is either, firſt, the noiſe of the wind; winds often fore-run great rains; or ſecondly, the noiſe of thunderclaps, that ratling noiſe heard from the clouds, which come between us and the light; this noiſe ſheweth concerning it, that is, this ſheweth foul weather is coming, or that rain (as we ſpeak) is brewing in the Clouds. Both the bluſtering winds and the ratling roaring thunder tells us as afore-hand, and give warning, that the weather will ſuddenly change, or that rain is at hand.

> Hence note, God by natural ſigns give warning of a change in natural things.

When God is about to ſend rain, the noiſe that is in the Clouds tells the world that 'tis coming. Some are very skilful in obſerving theſe thing; ſuch we call, weatherwiſe. From this I would only infer, If God doth fore-ſhew or give ſigns of the change that he makes in natural things, then ſurely he doth much more give his people warning of the changes he is about to make in civil things, in the States and Kingdoms of this world. There are ſome things which do, as it were, predict or foreſhew ſuch and ſuch changes near, if we were wiſe to obſerve them. The Jews were very inquiſitive to know of Chriſt the ſigns of the times; Theſe ſigns they enquired of him, not ſo much out of curioſity (which had been bad enough) as out of treachery, to intrap him in his words, yet mark what Chriſt ſaid to them (Matth. 16. 1, 2, 3.) He anſwered and ſaid unto them, when it is evening, ye ſay it will be fair weather, for the skie is red (a red skie ſhews concerning fair weather) and in the morning it will be foul weather, for the skie is red and lowring. When the skie lowrs; or, as here in Job, when the Cloud cometh between us and the light, that tells us it will be foul weather. Now, ſaith Chriſt, do you think that God hath given us ſuch warnings about changes in natural things, and hath he not given ſigns which may fore-ſhew changes in other things, which more concerns us? Therefore Chriſt checks them in the 3. verſ. O ye hypocrites, ye can diſcern the face of the skie, and can ye not diſcern the Signs of the times, that is, what changes God will make in the times? As if he had ſaid, if you were wiſe ye might diſcern the ſigns of ruine approaching to you and your City. A dreadful black Cloud of deſtruction hung over the City of Jeruſalem at that time, as Chriſt had foretold them in ſeveral places of the Goſpel: the time is coming (ſaith he) when there ſhall not be left one ſtone upon another; yet you cannot ſee the ſigns of theſe things; you are very skilful to diſcern a fair day and a foul day (there are natural prognoſticks of theſe things) but ye hypocrites cannot diſcern the ſigns of the times: Do ye not think God hath given you warning, hath he not fore-ſhewed what he will do with you and with this City? if ye were wiſe ye might underſtand that ſhortly it will be overthrown, and ſo it was by Titus Veſpaſian not long after. God gives as clear ſigns of the changes that ſhall be in times, as he doth concerning the change of the weather: And that's one thing which doth very much fore-ſhew it, when God puts it into the hearts of his Miniſters unanimouſly to forewarn approaching troubles. Such warnings were given to Hieruſalem, not only by Chriſt, but afterwards by others. Joſephus in his Hiſtory reports of one that could not by any puniſhment be ſtopt from crying up and down the City, for ſeveral years, after this manner, A voyce from the Eaſt, a voyce from the Weſt, a voyce from the four Winds, a voyce againſt Jeruſalem, and a voyce againſt the Temple. There was alſo (as the ſame Author reports) a voyce heard in the Temple, Let us depart hence. The Jews generally would not believe theſe voyces, but went on and were angry when any told them of a Cloud coming over their day, yet they found them all verified in the ſubverſion of their city, by the Romans. Such fore-warnings were give the Palatinate, and other parts of Germany, before thoſe great evils came upon them. Some way or other God hath always ſhewed when theſe ſhowers were coming; and when a people grow weary of their warnings, when they grow more prophane and wicked under them, this is a ſure ſign, a fatal prognoſtick, that God is coming with a ſhower of wrath, and is ready to pour down a ſtorm of vengeance upon them. And ſurely theſe warnings, both with reſpect to natural changes in the Air, and civil changes in the affairs of this World, argue the wonderful goodneſs of God, that he would have us prepare for all diſpenſations: He will not ſend a ſhower of rain, but would have us prepared for it: and when he is about to ſend to ſend thoſe great ſhowrs of Judgment upon the world, he would have his people ready and prepared, and therefore by ſome means or other he tells them before hand what is at hand.

Thus, the noiſe thereof ſheweth concerning it, or telleth us the ſtorm is coming. But is there nothing elſe that foretels this? Yes, it followeth,

The

The cattel alſo concerning the vapour.] The very beaſts of the field give notice of the vapour. The Hebrew is that which goeth up, ſo we read in the Margin. The rain comes down, and the vapours go up; and the going up of the vapour is an argument of the coming down of the rain. As the noiſe of thunder in the Clouds fore-ſheweth a ſtorm, ſo the cattel concerning the vapour, they tell us the rain is coming down by their apprehenſion of the vapour which goeth up.

Some render, not vapour, but plants or herbs, trees or graſs, theſe go up or aſcend out of the earth, as well as vapours. Our Tranſlation is plain. The cattel alſo, the very ſheep and oxen, yea the fowls of the air will tell when we ſhall have foul weather; before ſuch ſtorms come uſually they run to ſhelter, hiding and ſhifting for themſelves as as well as they can, againſt the ſtorm. Cattel preſage rain. Pliny in his Natural Hiſtory ſpeaks much of the natural ſagacity that is in beaſts, ſwine, ſheep and oxen, whereby they perceive change of weather. The Poet Virgil alſo verifies largely and accurately of theſe things; reporting how husbandmen that keep cattel will gather by what they ſee in the cattel what the weather will be. The Cattel alſo concerning the vapour.

Plinius, lib. 18. c. 35. Natural Hiſtory. Virgilius, in Georg. l. 1.

Hence Note, Brute Creatures, by a natural inſtinct, perceive the approaching changes of the weather.

And why hath God given them that natural inſtinct? Why are they quick-ſented and quick-ſighted, yea many times more quick-ſighted than men are? Surely, it is firſt, that thoſe poor Creatures may provide themſelves of ſhelter, and not be abroad in the ſtorm, rain or wind, in a time of danger, or inconvenient to them. This may be of uſe to us. God would teach us by the very dumb Creatures, the Bruits, what our duty is; the Cattel, the Swine, the Sheep will witneſs againſt us, if we do not take notice of, nor obſerve, the ſigns of the various diſpenſations of God, or when he is about to vary his diſpenſations. Can the Cattel tell when it will be foul weather, and are men ſo ſtupid (are they eſpecially that profeſs the Goſpel ſo ſtupid) that they underſtand none of theſe things? The Prophet Jeremiah (Chap. 8.7.) reproves the people of Iſrael upon this account, by the fowls of heaven (as was ſhewed upon another occaſion, at the 11.ver. of the 35.Chap) The Stork in the heavens knoweth his appointed time, and the Turtle, and the Crane, and the Swallow know the times of their coming; that is, they will not ſtay in any place, where it is not fit nor ſafe for them to ſtay, and they will not come to any place till they know all things are ſuitable and ready for them: But my people knoweth not the judgment of their God, they are more ſenſeleſs than the very fowls of heaven in this. And therefore the Prophets checks them (Verſ. 8.) How do ye ſay, we are wiſe, and the Law of the Lord is with us? You count your ſelves very wiſe, yet ye are not ſo wiſe in this matter as the Stork and the Crane, and the Swallow, for they obſerve their times, but you do not. It is a great part of our wiſdom to ſee what God is doing, or what he is about to do before he doth it. It is ſaid (Prov. 22. 3.) A prudent man foreſeeth an evil. When evil is come every one can ſee it (though ſome will ſcarce ſee it then, as the Prophet complained (Iſa. 26. 11.) When thy hand is lifted up they will not ſee it) but uſually that which is done or doing we can ſee; when we feel an evil we can ſee it; but the prudent, that is the godly man, foreſeeth the evil. How comes he to foreſee it? not by any helliſh divination, not by ſtar-gazing, nor by asking the Devil what ſhall be hereafter, as Saul did; he would foreſee the evil, but he went to the Devil, to a Witch for it (1 Sam. 28) Now a godly man doth not foreſee the evil by any ſuch ways or means, but by a diligent collection of things, comparing one with the other, or by the connection of cauſes with their effects, and of antecedents with their conſequents; by theſe he plainly foreſeeth that ſuch or ſuch an evil is coming, even as the beaſt foreſees the ſtorm is coming by the vapor, or that which goeth up. The prudent man foreſeeth an evil approaching by way of argument. For thus he reaſons, if God be an unchangeable God, if he be as holy, as juſt, as powerful, as zealous, as jealous now, as ever he was, and if ſin be the ſame as ever it was, if ſin be as fowl in it ſelf, if it be as loathſom and as burdenſom to God, if it be as pernicious and hurtful to man now, as ever it was, then ſurely when men run ſuch and ſuch ſinful courſes, ſuch and ſuch will be the effects, ſuch and ſuch the fruits. Thus a prudent man ſeeth the effect in the cauſe, the conſequent in the antecedent. This was Solomons purpoſe, when he ſaid (Eccleſ. 2. 14.) The wiſe mans eyes are in his head. You may ſay, ſo are the fools eyes too; Where are his eyes elſe? But when Solomon ſaith, The wiſe mans eyes are in his head, his meaning is, they are there to purpoſe; the wiſe man well obſerves and marks how things go, and whither things tend, he conſiders how things go, and whither things are going: but the fool walketh in darkneſs, that is, he walketh as if he had no eyes in his head, as if his eyes were in his heels, not in his head. It is ſaid, (1 Chron. 12. 32.) concerning the men of Iſſachar, They were wiſe concerning the times, and to know what Iſrael ought to do: They knew what the times required, and what God required in thoſe times, what ſpecial duties were incumbent upon them, from the diſpenſations of God. It is a great mercy, and a great part of our wiſdom to be thus wiſe, and if we are not, we ſhall be found and judged more brutiſh than the brute beaſt, for the Cattel alſo give warning concerning the vapour, they give notice when rain and ſtorms are coming.

Thus I have held out the ſence of the words, as they are laid down plainly in our Tranſlation.

But there are very many differences among Interpreters (as was hinted before) in the reading and rendring of theſe words, all which ariſe from ſome difficulty in the Grammatical conſtruction and copious ſignification of the Hebrew Text. I might give you more than three and three ſeveral interpretations of theſe words, but, as I ſaid before, I ſhould rather perplex the Reader than confirm him; yet I ſhall name three, when I have only ſhewed which words in the Text occaſion this variety in Tranſlation. Firſt, the word rendred by us Clouds, ſignifieth alſo the hands. Secondly, the word rendred cometh between, ſignifieth an Interceſſor, or one that prayeth, as alſo an oppoſer, who ſtands up againſt and reſiſts the force of another. Thirdly, The word rendred noiſe ſignifieth (when derived from another root) a friend or familiar. Fourthly, the word rendred cattel, ſignifieth alſo poſſeſſion, or that which is poſſeſſed, and taken from another root, emulation, or ſtrife. Fifthly, the word which we Tranſlate as an Adverb, alſo ſignifieth likewiſe anger. Sixthly, the word rendred vapour, ſignifieth an aſcenſion, or going up; and ſo plants or herbs, which grow out of the ground and aſcend into the air according to their growth are elegantly expreſſed by it.

All theſe differences found in the ſingle terms, are made uſe of by Interpreters, as will appear while I give you a taſte of three different Tranſlations.

Firſt, The common Latin Tranſlator renders thus, In his hands he hideth the Light, and commands it to come again; he ſpeaks of it, or declares it to his friend, that it is his poſſeſſion, and that he may aſcend or come to it. This rendring is marvelous different from ours, yet there is ſome footing for it in the Original, and it may receive a uſeful ſenſe.

The whole Text being accordingly expounded as an argument of Gods great favour to godly men; from whom, though he at any time hideth the light, yet, tis but for a time, he commands it to return again, and tells them as his friends light is their poſſeſſion, and that at laſt they ſhall aſcend up into light.

There is a ſecond Claſſis of Interpreters, who expound theſe two Verſes wholly as a deſcription of the Clouds meeting together and aſſaulting one another, like two great Champions and Warriors in battel. The learned Beza Tranſlates the firſt part of the 32 Verſe conformable to the Vulgar Latine laſt ſpoken of, He hideth the light in either hand, or both hands; and the latter part of that Verſe, together with the whole 33 Verſe, in conformity to the ſenſe now given; He gives it (namely the light or Lightening) command concerning that which meets or comes againſt it (namely where and how to receive the force or charge of the other cloud that is ready to aſſault it) the noiſe, the ſtrife, the anger of it againſt the aſcender (or cloud coming up) plainly declareth this. Some of the Jewiſh Doctors inſiſt much in the deſcription of this conflict between the Clouds above, and the aſcending Clouds, concerning which the reader may conſult them for further information; but the difficulties of this Tranſlation noted by Modern Expoſiters, eſpecially by Mercer and Merlin, are ſo many that it may ſuffice to name it.

In utraque vola occultat lucem, & præcipit ei ſuper occurrentem. Indicat hoc tumultus ejus, æmulatio & ira adverſus aſcendentem. Bez.

Thirdly, Mr. Broughton, thus, By hands he covereth the light, and chargeth it as man doth pray, declaring his favour towards him, the cattel and alſo plants. The meaning is (which ſeveral others follow in tranſlating and opening this context) That when God covereth the light or cauſeth darkneſs, yet at the interceſſion or prayer of this people he makes a change and cauſeth great ſerenity, giving comfortable times, and thereby declaring his favour towards them, yea, and towards the cattel and the plants, which feed upon, aſcend or grow up out of the earth. Junius conſents fully with this ſenſe, whoſe Tranſlation and gloſs upon it I ſhall preſent the reader, and ſubmit all to his judgment and conſideration; with his hands he hideth the light (that is, he makes it dark as laying his hand upon it) and he forbids it (namely his hand to hide the light any longer) becauſe of him that intercedeth (that is, Noah in the time of the general flood, and the godly, who according to the example of Noah come to God, Jam. 5. 16.) declaring towards him (that is, the godly man praying and worſhiping God) his good will, yea, towards the cattel and fruits of the earth.

Theſe are the moſt eminent conceptions which I find upon the Text, all of them containing Truths, and ſuch as may occaſion uſeful meditations. But I rather adhere to our own verſion, in which, as the power of God in changing the weather is held out, ſo his goodneſs in giving ſigns and warnings of it, both by the noiſes which we hear in the air, and by ſome unuſual actions and motions, which we may ſee among Cattel here upon the earth.

CHAP. XXXVII. Verſ. 1, 2.

1. At this alſo my heart trembled, and is moved out of its place.

2. Hear attentively the noiſe of his voice, and the ſound that goeth out of his mouth.

This Chapter concludes the Conference of Elihu with Job, and it conſiſts of three parts.

Firſt, In it we have an enumeration, together with a deſcription of divers Meteors, or wonderful works of God in the Air, Thunder and Lightning, Snow and Rain; yet before Elihu ſpeaks of them, he doth two things by way of Preface, to lead us with more reverence towards God, into that diſcourſe of Nature, in which much of God appeareth.

Firſt, Elihu tells us, how himſelf was affected, either with the preſent ſenſe, or with the fore-apprehenſion of thoſe things concerning which he was about to ſpeak; At this alſo my heart trembled, and it moved out of its place.

Secondly, He ſtirs up the whole Auditory then preſent, and all others, to a diligent attention and ſerious conſideration of them. Verſ. 2. Hear attentively the noiſe of his voice, and the ſound that goeth out of his mouth.

Having ſpoken thus in way of Preface, Elihu proceeds, firſt, to a deſcription of Thunder, with its immediate forerunner, as to our ſence (the eye being quicker to receive its object than the ear) though in truth, and according to reaſon, its companion, the Lightning, in the three Verſes following (3, 4, 5.) concerning both which he ſhews,

Firſt, That they go not at random, but have a guide, he directeth it, that is, the Thunder and Lightning.

Secondly, He ſhews the extent of their motion and Gods direction, they are not confined to this or that part, He directeth it under the whole heaven, and his lightnings unto the ends of the earth, in the ſame Verſe.

Thirdly, He ſpeaks of the irrevocableneſs of Gods decrees and orders about them, at the 4th Verſe, After it a voice roareth, &c. and he will not ſtay them when his voice is heard.

Fourthly, He concludes about theſe and many other works of God, with an Elogie of all his works. Firſt, In their greatneſs; Secondly, In their incomprehenſibleneſs; or he concludes them, not only great, but wonderful and incomprehenſible (Verſ. 5.) God thundereth marvelouſly with his voice, he doth great things which we cannot comprehend.

Having thus ſpoken of Thunder and Lightning, he proceeds,

Secondly, To ſhew the power of God, which he deſcribes in Snow and Rain.

Firſt, From their efficient cauſe, at the 6th Verſe:

Secondly, By their effects. Firſt, Towards men, in the 7th Verſe. Secondly, Upon or towards irrational Creatures, the Beaſts of the earth, at the 8th Verſe.

Thirdly, He ſets forth the Power of God in the Winds, concerning which we have,

Firſt, Their original, whence they come (Verſ. 9.)

Secondly, Their effects, or what they produce, cold and froſt, in the latter part of the 9th and 10th Verſes.

Fourthly, He treats of the Clouds, and about them he declares four things.

Firſt, The melting or diſſolving of them into Rain, at the 11. Verſe.

Secondly, The ſcattering and diſperſing of them by the wind, in the latter part of that Verſe.

Thirdly, The diſpoſing and ordering of them by the counſel and command of God, at the 12. Verſe.

Fourthly, Their uſes, ends and operations, at the thirteenth Verſe.

Thus we have the firſt general part of the Chapter opened, containing a deſcription of the Meteors, or manifold works of God in the Air, all which hold forth and advance his mighty power and righteous adminiſtrations in this world, towards the children of men; which was the point that Elihu had laboured in all along, and undertaken to demonſtrate.

In the ſecond part of this Chapter, Elihu (upon the whole matter) gives Job ſerious counſel and admonition, wherein,

Firſt, He ſtirs him up to conſider theſe wonderful works of God, at the 14. Verſe.

Secondly, He aſſerts and urgeth the weakneſs and inability of Job (or indeed of any man) to underſtand them fully; this he doth, Firſt, In general, at the beginning of the 15. Verſe, Doſt thou know when God diſpoſed them? &c.

Secondly, More particularly, in their ſeveral kinds.

Firſt, Of the Rainbow, at the latter end of that 15. Verſe, and cauſed the light of his Clouds to ſhine.

Secondly, Of the Clouds and their various motions, at the 16 Verſe.

Thirdly, Of the heat according to the wind, Verſe 17.

Fourthly, Of the Heaven or Skie, Verſe 18.

All which were ſuch as he could not give a clear account of, and therefore at the 19. Verſe, Elihu bids Job do it if he could, as for himſelf he durſt not venture upon it, Verſe 20. nor can any (ſaith he, Verſe 21, 22.) ſee far into theſe natural things, or into the nature of theſe things. Theſe are the ſpecial points of his admonition to Job; and from theſe he paſſeth to the Third Part, or Concluſion of the Chapter, and of his whole diſcourſe with Job; wherein,

Firſt, He makes a recapitulation of, or ſums up all that he had ſaid of the unſearchableneſs of God in his works; this he doth in the former part of the 23. Verſe.

Secondly, He ſets down poſitively what God is, in a threefold Excellency.

First, Of Power.

Secondly, Of Judgment.

Thirdly, Of plentiful Juſtice, at the middle of the 23d Verſe.

Thirdly, He tells us what God will not do, at the end of the 23. Verſe, He will not afflict; and from all, makes two inferences at the 24. Verſe.

Firſt, That therefore men ought to honour and to fear him.

Secondly, That therefore God is not in the reverence nor fear of any man, in the cloſe of that 24. Verſe; He reſpecteth not any that are wiſe of heart.

Thus I have given a proſpect of the whole Chapter. Now to particulars, beginning with thoſe two Verſes by which Elihu leads in his diſcourſe of thoſe wonderful works of God.

Firſt, By ſhewing how himſelf was affected with them.

Secondly, By calling upon others to be affected as himſelf was.

Verſ. 1. At this alſo my heart trembled.

At this, that is, by reaſon of this, or for this cauſe, or becauſe of this; ſo the word is rendred (Gen. 2. 23.) She (ſaid Adam of his wife, or Second-ſelf) ſhall be called woman, becauſe ſhe was taken out of man. So here, at this, or for this cauſe, my heart trembleth. It may here be queſtioned, what it was at which the heart of Elihu trembled? I ſhall give a double anſwer to that querie.

Firſt, Some conceive that while Elihu was ſpeaking about, or about to ſpeak further of that marvelous work of God, the Thunder, God, to confirm what he had ſaid, or ſhould ſay, at that very inſtant cauſed it to thunder, that ſo Job might be in a more humble reverential frame, and ſo the better prepared to receive what Elihu had further to ſay unto him. That there was a ſtorm at or about that that time, may appear from the firſt Verſe of the 38. Chapter; then the Lord anſwered Job out of the whirlwind, and ſaid; and we find that God hath often giving great diſcoveries of himſelf in or by Thunder and Lightning. In Thunder and Lightning the Law was delivered to Moſes on mount Sinai (Exod. 19. 6.) And to affect the people of Iſrael, when they had provoked God by their peremptory and diſcontented way of asking a King, Samuel coming to deal with them about it (1 Sam. 12. 16, 17, 18.) ſaid, Stand and ſee this great thing, which the Lord will do before your eyes. Is it not wheat-harveſt to day? I will call unto the Lord, and he ſhall ſend Thunder and Rain, that ye may perceive and ſee that your wickedneſs is great. And the Lord ſent Thunder and Rain that day, even while Samuel was ſpeaking, for their conviction and humiliation, as the next words ſhew, and all the people greatly feared the Lord and Samuel. Thus poſſibly while Elihu was about to ſpeak of Thunder, for the humbling of Job God commanded it to Thunder for his deeper humiliation: and if ſo, the cauſe why Elihu trembled is apparent enough; The terrible Thunder-claps which then rent the Clouds and even ſhook the earth, might well cauſe him to tremble.

Secondly, We may underſtand theſe words (at this my heart trembleth) with reference to the whole matter which Elihu had before him; what he had begun to ſpeak, and was further to ſpeak of Gods dreadful power, might ſhake his heart with aſtoniſhment. The due apprehenſions of the greatneſs of God, may ſoon ſtrike man into a fit of trembling; it did Job, as himſelf confeſſed at the 21. Chapter of this Book (Verſ. 5, 6.) Mark ye, and be aſtoniſhed, and lay your hand upon your mouth; for when I remember, I am afraid, and trembling takes hold of my fleſh: As if he had ſaid, while I duly conſider the great things that I have ſpoken, and thoſe greater things (if greater may be) that I am about to ſpeak, I cannot but tremble, and ſtand as one filled with aſtoniſhment. How was the Apoſtle Paul amazed at that moſt myſterious diſpenſation of God in caſting off his ancient people the Jews, the ſeed of Abraham his friend, for ſo long a time! (Rom. 11. 33.) O the Depth! &c. At this my heart trembleth, that is, I am heartily afraid.

חרד Motus, commotus fuit corpore aut anima, ex cura aut motu mali. Ἐταράχθη. Sept.

The heart is here put for the whole inner man, or for all the powers of the ſoul; and the word rendered to tremble, notes a diſturbance of the whole man, both of ſoul and body. The Septuagint render it by the ſame Greek word uſed (Mat. 2. 3.) where (upon the wiſe mens coming from the Eaſt, to inquire concerning the King of the Jews) it is ſaid, When Herod heard this, he was troubled, and all Jeruſalem with him. That news of a new King put them into a grievous fright, they knew not what to make of it, nor which way to turn themſelves, in ſuch a turn of affairs, in ſuch a new world as that new-born King might make. This word is elſe-where in Scripture uſed to note the ſuddeneſt ſurprize and the ſtrongeſt poſſeſſion of fear. Thus when Iſaac, through the ſubtilty of Rebekah, had given the bleſſing to Jacob which he intended for Eſau, 'tis ſaid, that upon the appearance of his miſtake, he trembled exceedingly (Gen. 27. 33.) Doubtleſs it did wonderfully aſtoniſh the good old man, to think, that God ſhould carry him beyond and beſide his own purpoſe, to bleſs the younger brother inſtead of the elder. This ſtrange diſappointment by the over-ruling providence of God, put him to a ſtand, and troubled his thoughts more than a little; eſpecially, becauſe he was now taught, that by his carnal affections to Eſau, he was running quite croſs to the mind of God, revealed (Chap. 25. 23.) Read the ſame force of the word, (Exod. 19. 16.) to which the Apoſtle referring, ſaith (Heb. 12. 21.) So terrible was the ſight, that Moſes ſaid. I exceedingly fear and quake. Read alſo the ſame importance of the word 1 Sam. 4. 13. Chap. 14. 15. Such was the condition of Elihu, he was deeply affected, trembling took hold of him. The Spirits run to the heart in a time of fear, or upon a ſudden fright, as Citizens to the Caſtle in a day of danger; and then the outward members (being deſerted by the ſpirits) grow cold and tremble. There is a natural infirmity called, The palpitation or trembling of the heart; But this of Elihu was ſupernatural, at leaſt, ſome-what more then natural, as ariſing either from the conſideration of what God had done, or of what himſelf was about to ſpeak; and not only did his heart tremble, but

Which is added to ſet forth the exceeding greatneſs of that fear which ſeized upon him. The Text ſpeaks as if his heart were indeed removed or taken out of his body. It is uſual in Scripture to affirm that as done which is like to be done. The ſhip is ſaid to be broken (John 1. 4.) and the net (Luke 5. 6.) becauſe both were in eminent danger of breaking. We ſay of a man in great fear, his heart is ready to leap out of or out at his mouth. One of the Ancients renders here, my heart is pluckt out; the Septuagint, It floweth out; the Chaldee paraphraſe, takes up the former expreſſion; my heart leaps or jumps, which as it doth ſometimes for joy, ſo often for fear, or at the unexpected appearance of danger. Some conceive by this moving of his heart out of his place, that Elihu was in a kind of extaſie, that he was, as it were, carried out of himſelf, upon the hearing of that dreadful voice of God, the Thunder; taking it ſo,

Note, Thunder is a terrible thing;

It hath made and may make the ſtouteſt heart to tremble. One of Chriſts Apoſtles was called Lebbeus (Mat. 10. 3.) as much as to ſay the hearty-man, or all-heart; Now he that is Lebbeus a man of the greateſt courage, the moſt hearty man, may be put to a tremble at this, when he hears it Thunder. Heathens have ſpoken much of this, and by a a peculiar word have called thoſe who are much amazed men Thunderſtruck, men being ſo much amazed at the ſound of Thunder. The Roman Hiſtorian reports of that great Emperour, who commanded all the world, and made the nations to tremble, that yet he himſelf trembled at this. Auguſtus Cæſar, was ſo afraid of Thunder, that whenever he travelled abroad, he cauſed the skin of a Sea-Calf to be carried about with him, becauſe it was in their ſuperſtition believed to be an Amulet or preſervative againſt any hurt by Thunder. And the ſame Author tells us of another of that rank, a heathen Roman Emperour, that was ſo afraid of Thunder, that he would hide his head when he heard it, and ſometimes ran under a bed for ſhelter. I ſhall have further occaſion to ſpeak of the terribleneſs of Thunder, at the 4. and 5. Verſes; I touch it here, becauſe, according to our interpretation, this was it at which the heart of Elihu trembled

Secondly. Taking the words more generally, as this trembling might ariſe from the conſideration of any other of the wonderful works of God,

Note, The great appearances of God in his power may and ſhould affect us even with fear and trembling.

The heart of man may well move out of his place when he conſiders how dreadful God is in his place, and what wonders he both doth and can do. David caſting his eye up to the heavens and the hoſt of them (Pſal. 8.) concludes with admiration (verſ. 8.) O Lord our God, how excellent is thy Name in all the world! they who have but little knowledge of the works of God, cannot be much affected with them; they who know them deeply cannot but be deeply affected with them. Fools and ignorant perſons ſlight or lightly paſs by any thing that God doth or ſpeaks; but they who are wiſe hearted will lay both his Word and Works to heart, their hearts will tremble and be moved out of their place. Holy King David adviſeth the Kings and Judges of the earth to ſerve the Lord with fear and to rejoyce with trembling (Pſal. 2. 11.) And the holy Apoſtle Paul exhorteth all Chriſtians to work out their ſalvation with fear and trembling (Philip. 2. 12.) Now if we are to tremble in our dayly ſervice, how much more under dreadful providences!

For the cloſe of this point, remember there is a four-fold trembling or moving of the heart at the appearances of God, or at the diſcoveries of his Power and Glory in his Word and in his Works.

Firſt, That which is natural. (Iſa. 7. 2.) When it was old the houſe of David, ſaying, Syria is confederate with Ephraim; his heart (that is, the heart of Ahaz) was moved, and the heart of his people, as the trees of the Wood are moved with the wind. And when Felix heard Paul reaſoning of righteouſneſs, temperance, and the judgment to come, he trembled: The Judge trembled at the voice of the priſoner. 'Tis natural for man to fear and tremble at the report of any truth which renders him guilty, or of any trouble which over-maſters his ability to withſtand or avoid it.

Secondly, There is a legal trembling, proceeding from a ſpirit of bondage, or the dreadful apprehenſions of the wrath of God againſt ſin (Rom. 8. 15.) This in many is precedaneous to their true converſion, and, as a needle, makes way for the ſpirit of grace and adoption, by which thread they are united and faſtned unto God through faith, and walk in a child-like fear before him all their days.

Thirdly, There is a penal or judiciary fear and trembling: God in judgment ſometimes fills the heart of ſinful man with fear, as the puniſhment of his ſin. They who have no fear of God in their hearts to keep or over-aw them graciouſly from ſinning and living in a courſe of ſin, are delivered up to a ſpirit of fear, which continually purſueth them with dreadful apprehenſions of the wrath of God, and of ſome imminent and impendent evils; ready to fall upon them for their ſins; A dreadful ſound is in their ears (as Eliphaz told Job, Chap. 15. 21.) yea, as he ſpeaks there (verſ. 24.) trouble and anguiſh make him afraid; they prevail againſt him, as a King ready to battel. The Lord threaten'd it as one of the four Judgments that he would bring upon his People the Jews, for their diſobedience (Deut. 28. 65) I will give thee a trembling heart; yea, he threaten'd (Iſa. 52. 17.) to give them the dregs of the Cup of trembling. Ezekiel (Chap. 12. 18.) was commanded to tremble, as a ſign to the People of that penal fear and trembling which God would ſend upon them. Such was that trembling ſpoken of (Ezek. 26. 16.) Then all the Princes of the Sea ſhall come down from their Thrones, and lay away their Robes, and put off their broidered garments, and ſhall cloath themſelves with tremblings. Doubtleſs they had little mind to ſuch change of rayment, they had rather have been cloathed with raggs; but the Lord would make them do it. And as thoſe confederate Princes or friends of Tyrus ſhould cloath themſelves with trembling, ſo 'tis propheſied (Zech. 15. 2.) that Jeruſalem ſhould be, not only a burthenſome ſtone, but a cup of trembling to all her enemies. As if the Lord had ſaid, This ſhall be their puniſhment who would make my Jeruſalem tremble, I will make them tremble at the remembrance of Jeruſalem, or at the ſight of thoſe great things which I will do againſt them, and for Jeruſalem.

Fourthly, There is a ſpiritual, a gracious trembling and moving of the heart; that's it which this point calls us to, and to which, in thoſe places lately mentioned, both David (Pſal. 2. 11.) and the Apoſtle (Phil. 2. 12.) call us to. It was well with Ephraim, when it was thus with him (Hoſ. 13. 1.) When Ephraim ſpake trembling he was exalted, that is, when he was in a trembling, humble, ſelf denying frame, he proſpered, and all things ſucceeded well with him. The Lord is never better pleaſed with us, than when he ſees us in theſe tremblings (Iſa. 66. 2.) To him will I look that is poor, and of a contrite ſpirit, and trembleth at my word; Theſe trembling ones are the men that God hath an eye upon and reſpect unto. The prophet Habakkuk ſpake of himſelf (Chap. 3. 16.) much like Elihu in the Text, When I heard, my belly trembled, my lips quivered at the voice, &c. The prophet fore-ſaw a day of trouble, and trembled at it, and this gave him aſſurance that he ſhould not tremble, when he ſaw it, for (ſaid he in the next words) I trembled in my ſelf that I might reſt in the day of trouble. The more we tremble in our ſelves, the more reſt we have in God. None have ſo little fear when trouble comes, as they who fear before it comes. Noah, by faith moved by fear, prepared an Ark to the ſaving of his houſe (Heb. 11. 7.) Thus to fear a flood is the beſt way to eſcape it. 'Tis not courage, but ſtupidity, not to fear and tremble, when we hear of the judgments of God. They who tremble graciouſly ſhall never tremble deſpairingly. At this my heart trembleth, &c.

Elihu having thus ſhewed how himſelf was affected, with a gracious fear and trembling, labours to affect others alſo with the ſame fear, in the next verſe.

Verſ. 2. Hear attentively the noiſe of his voice, and the ſound that goeth out of his mouth.

We have here a doubling of the word in an unuſual way. That Hebraiſm is ordinarily read, hearing hear, but in this place, 'tis hear in hearing; which one of the Jewiſh Doctors ſaith, hath a greater emphaſis than the ordinary Hebraiſm hearing hear. Others find nothing of ſuch a difference in thoſe differing Hebraiſms: however both call for greateſt heed in hearing what is ſpoken, when 'tis either ſaid hear in hearing, or hearing hear; we ſhould, as our tranſlation gives the ſenſe fully,

Plus eſt, inquit. Rab. David, *quam audi*endo audite, nam infinitum poſtponitur; ego nihil aut parum referre puto, hoc an illo modo efferas. Druſ.

Hear attentively.

There is a two-fold hearing.

Firſt, A hearing with the ear of the body; there needs little ſtirring up of that ear to attend the voice of thunder here ſpoken of; that ſpeaks ſo loud that men cannot (if they would not) but hear, that commands audience and attention, that boreth the ear and makes its own way. The deafeſt adders can hardly ſtop their ears ſo, as not to hear the voyce of that (not muttering charmer, but) but rouzing ſpeaker, Thunder.

Secondly, There is a hearing with the ear of the mind, a ſpiritual hearing, ſuch as the Prophet ſpake of (Hab. 3. 2) O Lord, I have heard thy ſpeech, &c. that is, I have heard it fully, clearly, underſtandingly, affectionately, obedientially. Elihu is here ſtirring up, not ſo much the outward ſence, as the affections, with all the powers of the inner man, to attend and take notice of that which was then to be heard; what was that? Hear attentively

Non ſolum auditum excitat, ſed intelligentiam poſtulat.

The noiſe of his voyce.] The word here rendred noiſe, ſignifies both an angry noiſe, and an awful fear (Pſal. 4. 4.) ſuch a noiſe as cauſes fear, or ſuch a fear as is cauſed by a dreadful noiſe; Hence ſome read the words, Hear his voyce with trembling; we ſay, hear the noiſe of his voyce.

רגז Commotio, perturbatio animi præ metu vel præ ira. Audite audiendo cum tremore vocem ejus. Merc.

According to the former interpretation the noiſe of his voice] is the noiſe of thunder; that, if any thing, makes a noiſe, a dreadful noiſe, as was toucht before, a noiſe like the roaring of a Lion. Hear the noiſe

Of his voyce.] The word voyce is taken in general for any ſound, articulate or inarticulate (Ezek. 1. 24.) and it may very well ſignifie Thunder, becauſe Thunder in ſeveral Scriptures is called abſolutely, A voice, the voice of God, and whole vollies of Thunder are called voices of God (Exod. 9. 28.) Pharaoh entreated Moſes, that he would entreat the Lord that there might be no more mighty

קול Omnem ſonitum articulatum aut inarticulatum ſignificat, & in generis quemcumque ſtrepitum.

Thunderings, we in the margin, voyces of God. It is ſaid (Exod. 20. 18.) the people ſaw the Thunderings, the Hebrew is, voyces; the meaning is, they heard the Thunderings, as if they had been ſo many voices, or they heard as it were voyces when it Thundered. Thus 'tis ſaid (Rev. 4. 5.) Out of the Throne proceeded lightnings and thunderings, and voyces. Again (Chap. 10. 3.) ſeven thunders uttered their voyces. Hear attentively the noiſe of his voyce, that is, the noiſe of his Thunder ſpeaking aloud and aloft in the air.

And the ſound that goeth out of his mouth.

The word imports ſecret, ſilent meditation, as alſo an audible ſound by voice or words ſpoken; and it may be applied particularly to that more gentle, quiet, or whiſpering ſound of Thunder, of which I ſhall have occaſion to ſpeak further at the 4. Verſe. Some Thunders ſpeak very loud, others give a kind of a gentle ſound. Philoſophy tells us, that this difference in thunder ariſeth from the different conſtitution of the clouds in which it is bred, and through which it breaks. The greater may more properly be expreſſed by the words in the firſt part of this Verſe. The noiſe of his voyce, and the leſſer by theſe in the latter part, The ſound that goeth out of his mouth.

Now, Whether it be the noiſe of his voyce, or a whiſpering ſoft ſound, both or either muſt be attended; Hear attentively the ſound

That goeth out of his mouth.] Thunder is ſaid to go out of the mouth of God, as words go out of the mouth of man; and as men, eſpecially the minds of honeſt men, are known by the words which go out of their mouths, ſo God maketh himſelf known to the world, or makes the world both know him and fear him in his power and greatneſs by the noiſe and ſound of thunder.

Elihu chargeth Job to attend diligently this noiſe, this ſound, and he calleth it the noiſe of Gods voice, the ſound that goeth out of his mouth.

Tonitruorum unum genus eſt cujus ſit grave murmur, aliud genus eſt acre, quod crepitum magis dixerim quam ſonum, aliud fragor eſt ſubitus & vehemens quo edito concidunt homines, &c. Sen. l.6. Nat.q.c.27.

Hence obſerve, Firſt, God ſpeaks to man in Thunder, or, Thunder is the voice of God to man:

And ſo 'tis often called in Scripture; the 29. Pſalm, almoſt throughout, is a proof of it, Thunder being there ſeven times called, The Voice of the Lord. The very Heathens had that apprehenſion of Thunder, calling it, the Voice of the Gods. Jupiter was ſurnamed, Thundring Jove. Here we have Jehovah, the true God, the living God, ſending out his Voice in Thunder. That Voice ſpoken of by David (Pſal. 68. 33.) is uſually interpreted of Thunder. Lo, he doth ſend out his Voice, and that a mighty Voice. Thunder may be called the Voice of God in a double reſpect.

Poetæ Jovem tonantem, & tonitruum vocem Jovis vocare ſolent.

Firſt, Becauſe it is a great and mighty voice; and then thoſe words (of God) have only the force of an Epithete. As the Cedars of God, the Rivers of God, are great Cedars and Rivers, ſo a great Voice is called the Voice of God. God is great, and therefore great things are aſcribed to him.

Quod magnum eſt divinum eſſe dicitur.

Secondly, Thunder is called the Voice of God, becauſe God forms, and puts it forth by his power, as a man doth his voice. God may be ſaid to utter his Voice when he ſends out the Thunder: And as Thunder is put forth by, or ſpeaks from God, ſo it puts forth, or ſpeaks much of God, it ſpeaks and puts forth much of the Power and Majeſty of God. When it thunders, we ſhould think we hear God, the God of glory ſpeaking to us. Some will excuſe themſelves, they are ignorant, they have never been taught to know God: But did ſuch never hear it thunder? that teacheth much of God, ſo much as will make them inexcuſable, who obey him not, who tremble not at his Power and Majeſty. Thunder calls for, and more, it commands, our fear of, our reverence and ſubmiſſion unto God, eſpecially when God, together with this voice, ſends his arrows, bolts or bullets, to do great things againſt his enemies, as he did againſt Pharaoh (Exod. 9. 23.) and againſt the Philiſtines (1 Sam. 7. 10.) Yea, the Lord threatned to diſtreſs Jeruſalem with Thunder, and with Earth-quake, and with great noiſe (Iſa. 29. 6.) Now, if Thunder be the Voice of God, or the noiſe of his Voice, then take theſe brief Inferences from it.

Firſt, Let us ſee what a powerful and mighty God we have! When it thunders, every believing ſoul may ſay, This is the Voice of my Father; what cannot he do for me that can ſpeak thus?

Secondly, If God hath ſuch a dreadful Voice, if he thunder with his Voice, we ſhould learn to ſecure, arm, and fence our ſelves againſt the dread and danger of Thunder, by the actings of Faith in him, and of Repentance and godly Sorrow for our ſinnings againſt him. Some of the Heathens have given pittiful counſel what to do in time of thunder. Seneca was a wiſe man, yet he directs to poor ſhifts, in ſuch extremities; The remedies (ſaith he) againſt Thunder and the Batteries of the heavens, are under-ground houſes, caves or holes of the earth, to hide our ſelves in. Theſe were the beſt helps he could adviſe his Roman Gallants to, when God uttered his mighty voice in Thunder. But Chriſtians know better how to hide themſelves, even in the goodneſs of God, againſt thoſe terrible appearances of his Power.

Adverſus tonitrua & cœlorum minas ſubterraneæ domus, & defoſſi in altum ſpecus remedia ſunt. Sen. lib 6. Natur. quæſt. c. 4.

Thirdly, If God ſpeak with ſuch a Voice as this in the Air, take heed of ſlighting his Voice whenſoever he ſpeaks in the Church, as Atheiſts and Epicures do. He who ſpeaks ſo loud in Thunder can thunder upon us at any time. The Word preached, if not obeyed, will at laſt come upon all thoſe who obey it not, with as great a terror as Thunder.

Fourthly, Let us not be amazed and frighted at Thunder as Heathens or Unbelievers.

Fifthly, Let us not think lightly of it, as if it either came by chance, or meerly from natural cauſes.

Sixthly, Let us fear the God of Thunder, not fear Thunder as a God.

Some have ſuperſtitiouſly thought Thunder was a God, and adored it: ſo 'tis reported of the Lithuanians anciently, and poſſibly ſome of them do ſo to this day.

Lithuani fulmen deum eſſe putabant, & propterea illud adorabant. Cromerus, l. 15. Hiſt. Pol.

Secondly, In that Elihu calls ſo earneſtly for attention to this voice, Hear attentively the noiſe of his voice,

Learn; Thoſe things which are moſt eaſie to be heard, poſſibly may not all be underſtood.

Who doth not hear when it thunders? but how few are there who attend or underſtand the Thunder, or hear Thunder attentively? God ſpeaks to us, not only with a ſtill voice, few hearing or attending him, but though he thunders few attend him; yea, thoſe works of providence which ſpeak louder than Thunder, and ſhine clearer than the Lightning, yet are neither heard nor ſeen. As When his hand is lifted up ſome will not ſee (Iſa. 26. 11.) So when his Voice is lifted up, when 'tis lifted up, not only like a Trumpet, but like Thunder, when he ſpeaks moſt audibly, yea moſt terribly, ſome will not hear; and he is not heard by many, much leſs diligently attended to, how loudly, how terribly ſoever he ſpeaketh. The Lord often thunders by the voice of his Word; what are his terrible threats but loud thunder-claps? yet few hear, or though they hear, yet they attend not. Not to hear the voice of God in his Word, is as if you did not attend to the voice of Thunder. Every word of God, though ſpoken with a ſtill voice, hath a greater force in it than Thunder from the Clouds. As the terrible works of God are ſignified by Thunder (Rev. 10. 3, 4.) So the terrible words of God, his threatning words againſt impenitent ſinners, are reſembled to Thunder. And therefore ſuch as the Lord fitted among his own Apoſtles for that diſpenſation, are called in Scripture Sons of Thunder (Mark 3. 17.) And they who diſpence the Word with a ſtrong voice and fiery zeal, are truly ſo called to this day, and may be ſaid both to Thunder in their Exhortation, and to Lighten in their Converſation. And indeed the Word of God truly and faithfully diſpenſed by any is like Thunder. For,

Firſt, As Thunder, ſo the Word ſpoken is the Voice of God, and a more excellent and diſtinct Voice than Thunder; that only ſhewing in general that God is, or that he is great and powerful; this ſhewing us diſtinctly, who and what God is, and what he requireth of us.

Secondly, Thunder throws down and diſſipates high things; So doth the Word of God (2 Cor. 10. 5.)

Thirdly, Thunder is irreſiſtable by any power of man, it will make its way through all oppoſition; ſo is and doth the Word of God.

Fourthly, Thunder pierceth very ſubtilly, it reacheth the bones quite through the fleſh; the Word of God doth more, it divideth ſoul and ſpirit, and the joynts and marrow, and is a diſcerner of the thoughts, and intents of the heart (Heb. 4 12.)

Fifthly, Thunder breaketh the hardeſt things which reſiſt it, but not ſoft things; ſo the Word of God breaks the ſtout, but binds up the contrite ſpirit; it reſiſts the proud, but giveth grace to the humble (Jam. 4. 6.)

Now if the Word of God be in all theſe reſpects like Thunder, Let us not only hear, but attend, or as the Text ſaith, hear attentively the ſound of his voice.

If any ask, when do we both hear and attend with the inward and outward ear, the Thunder of God, or his voice both in his works and in his word? I anſwer, Firſt, When we are ſtirred up to high and holy thoughts of God. We are never rightly affected with the Word of, till our hearts are wrought up to, and deeply, at leaſt truly, affected with the God of the Word.

Secondly, When our hearts are raiſed up in thankfulneſs for any diſcoveries of God in his goodneſs and mercy to us, who can ſo eaſily deſtroy us by his power. He that trembles at this voice of God, and hath no ſenſe nor taſt of his goodneſs, nor is moved to praiſe and ſerve him, trembles only like a brute beaſt.

Thirdly, When we learn to depend and hang upon him for all, as he that can do all things graciouſly for us, as well as ſpeak ſo terribly to us; then we hear diligently the noiſe of his voice, and the ſound that goeth out of his mouth.

For the cloſe of this matter I ſhall only add; That though we ought to be affected with the voice of God in his Word, as with his voice in Thunder, yet let us not ſtay in that, which notes chiefly, if not only, that dread of God which the word leaves upon our ſpirits; but let us look after and labour for that effect of the Word, which like the beams and light of the Sun, may warm our hearts with joy, and leave ſtrongeſt impreſſions of the kindneſs and favour of God upon them. Mr. Forbes, opening that Scripture (Rev. 14. 2.) where St. John ſaith, He heard a voice from heaven, and that of three ſorts.

Firſt, He heard a voice, as the voice of many Waters.

Secondly, As the voice of a great Thunder.

Thirdly, He heard the voice of many harpers harping with their harps. Upon conſideration of this threefold voice, which St. John heard, the fore-named worthy Author, takes up a meditation to this purpoſe. The word of God (ſaith he) hath three degrees of operation in the hearts of men.

Firſt, It comes into mens ears, as the ſound of many waters, which is a kind of confuſed noiſe and commonly bringeth neither terror nor joy, but a wondering acknowledgment of a ſtrange force, and more than human power; as we read of thoſe (Mark 1.) who having heard the word of Chriſt were aſtoniſhed at his doctrine (v. 22.) and were all amazed (v. 27.) inſomuch that they queſtioned among themſelves, what thing is this? what new doctrin is this? But knew not what to make of it.

The ſecond degree is, that the Word of God cometh to the ear of man like Thunder, which cauſeth not only wonder, but greater aſtoniſhment and amazement. Both theſe may be in a wicked prophane perſon, and are often found upon common profeſſors.

But there is a third degree or effect of the Word operation, which (ſtrictly taken) is proper and peculiar to the Elect, and that is, when the Word heard is as the voice of harpers harping with their harps; that is, when the Word doth not only affect us with admiration, or ſtrike the heart with aſtoniſhment and terror, like the ſound of many waters, and the voice of Thunder; but alſo filleth it with ſweet peace, and joy in the Holy Ghoſt, when the Word is like melodious muſick to the ſoul, raviſhing us with divine delights, and raiſing us up to a heavenly life, while we are here ſojourning on this earth.

VERS. 3, 4, 5.

He directeth it under the whole heaven, and his Lightening unto the ends of the earth.

After it a voice roareth: he thundereth with the voice of his excellency, and he will not ſtay them when his voice is heard.

God thundereth marvellouſly with his voice: great things doth he, which we cannot comprehend.

ELihu having ſhewed in the two former Verſes, how much himſelf was affected with what God then did, or with what himſelf was about to ſay concerning the doings of God; having alſo called upon others for due attention, and laboured to make the ſame impreſſion upon their ſpirits that he found upon his own; he proceeds to ſpeak to the ſpecial matter.

Firſt, To the works of God in thoſe terrible fiery Meteors, Thunder, and Lightning, which he doth in the three Verſes now under diſcuſſion; and then goeth on to ſpeak of other wonderful works of the wonder-working God, in the following part of this Chapter, as was before ſhewed in laying open the whole.

Verſ. 3. He directeth it under the whole heaven.

This verſe holds forth the divine guidance of thoſe things which ſeem moſt remote from any guidance; He directeth it under the whole heaven. Here we may conſider, Firſt, In whoſe hand this guiding power is; He, that is, God directeth it.

Secondly, how far he guideth, or the extent of his guiding power; 'tis not limited, but univerſal, far and near, even under the heaven, and to the ends of the earth.

There is ſome variety, as of reading, ſo of interpretation, about this verſe, ariſing from the various ſignifications of that word which we render directeth; there is a threefold ſence given of it.

Firſt, As taken from a root which ſignifieth to preſs or ſqueeze, and ſo tis applied to the preſſing of grapes, which cauſeth the juice or liquor of them to flow out: And upon that conſideration the ſeventh month of the year, our September, hath its name among the Jews from this word; becauſe then the Vintage being ready, the ripe Grapes are gathered and preſt into Wine. From this notion of the word, ſome render the Text thus, he preſſeth or diſſolveth it under the whole heaven; that is, God preſſeth the Cloud as a bunch of Grapes is preſſed (theſe Interpreters make that the antecedent to it, he preſſeth it, that is, the Cloud) and ſo cauſeth it to rain. 'Tis God who preſſeth and (as I may ſay) ſqueezeth the Clouds by his power, and then ſhowers fall down and diſtill upon the earth under the whole Heaven. That's a truth, and ſome where elſe ſpoken of in this book, where we read of Gods melting or preſſing the Clouds as we do a bunch of Grapes or a ſpung, ſo cauſing them to give forth rain.

Aliqui à Rabinica שרה quod eſt reſolvere, humectare, exprimere. Hinc & September ab illis תשר Tiſhri dictus, quaſi expreſſorius, quod eo menſe fiat Vindemia. Merc.

Secondly, Others derive the word from a root that ſignifieth to behold attentively, to behold and conſider: Thus the Latine tranſlator renders it, he conſidereth under the whole heaven; that is (according to this interpretation) there is a Providence of God, a wiſe and an unerring Providence of God at work in all places, he conſiders and takes notice of all things under heaven, the leaſt motion of the Creature falls under his inſpection, He beholdeth, or conſidereth under the whole heavens; that's a truth alſo; yet, I conceive (with others) the Grammar of the Text will not well comply with this reading: Therefore Alii à שור intueri, reſpicere, conſiderare, quaſi Deus omnia ſub cœlo conſideret. Sed nec Grammatica convenit (tum enim שורחו dicendum fuerat) nec ſenſus admodum, propter affixum. Merc.

Thirdly, I conclude our own tranſlation moſt ſuitable both to the Original Text, and to the ſcope of this whole Chapter. Now, according to our rendring, the word comes from a root which ſignifieth to ſet a thing right or ſtrait, and from that a perſon who is right, a man of a right ſpirit, who ſquares and orders his actions by a right rule, and to a right end, is expreſſed (Chap. 1. 1.) where Jobs character is given by this word, A man perfect and right, we ſay, upright, that is, a man that hath right aims, and walks by a right rule. Moſes (Deut. 32. 15.) calls the people of God (collectively as one man) Jeſhurun, that is, a people that are or ſhould be right and upright with God. Thus here, he directeth it, that is, God doth, as it were, by a ſtrait line, level or take his aim, when he diſchargeth the Thunder in the Cloud: As he that diſchargeth his gun, ſmall or great, or ſhoots an arrow, levels and directs it at a mark, ſo the Lord directeth it. What is this it? 'Tis plain, by what followeth in the latter part of the verſe, where the Lightning is expreſly mentioned, that he means the Thunder or the Thunder-bolt, for the Clouds are, in that caſe, charged with bolts: we have had many dreadful inſtances, as well in ancient Hiſtories, as in our own time, of Thunder-bolts like Bullets ſhot from the Clouds. As if Elihu had ſaid, whither-ſoever the Thunder-bolt goeth, to what quarter of the world ſoever, 'tis deſigned, it receives commiſſion and direction from God, what to do, and where to fall, whom it ſhall ſmite, or what mark it ſhall hit; He that directeth it under the whole heaven,

Subter omnes cœlos ipſe conſiderat. Vulg.

And his Lightning to the ends of the earth.

Naturaliſts define or deſcribe Lightning thus; 'Tis a bright ſhining, cauſed by exhalations fired in and violently breaking out of the Clouds. The Hebrew is, his light. The Sun is the fountain of Light, and that is eminently Gods Light; but the Light here ſpoken of, is not the ordinary Light ſhining in the Air, by the riſing of the Sun; this Light is Lightning, which is a ſudden flaſhing or breaking forth of light from the Clouds; as when a gun is fired or diſcharged, a light flaſheth from it; ſuch is that which Authors of all ſorts call Lightning, and here the Scripture calls his Lightning. At the 3. Verſe the Thunder was called his Voice, the Voice of God; and in this, the Lightning is called his Lightning; Elihu appropriates it unto God himſelf, his Lightning. This Lightning hath more than light in it, it hath heat and fire in it; though we do not always feel it, yet many have, the effects of heat and fire appearing ſadly upon them. And this is ſuch a fire as water cannot quench; and therefore we often read in Scripture, of Lightning joyned with the Rain (Pſal. 135. 7. Jer. 10. 13. Jer. 51.16.) which may be remark't as one of the wonders of it. There is a ſecond, that the Lightning is ſaid to fall from heaven. When the diſciples brought a report back to Chriſt what great things they had done, what conqueſts they had got over evil ſpirits, Chriſt anſwered (Luke 10. 18.) I ſaw Satan like Lightning fall from heaven. Lightning falls from heaven; for though Lightning of its own nature (being fiery) ſhould aſcend, yet it deſcends through the power of God. Naturaliſts obſerve it, as a wonder, that the Lightning ſhould deſcend: Seneca demonſtrates, it could not be, unleſs there were a divine power in it, that the Lightning ſhould come down from heaven; and as Elihu ſaid before, he directeth it, or the Thunder, under the whole heaven; ſo we are here to take up that word again, and ſay, He directeth his Lightning

Fulgur ſeu coruſcatio eſt flammæ micatio ab exhalationibus accenſis, & è nubibus erumpentibus exorta. Ariſt. 2. Meteor. cap. 9.

Ignis ſua natura in verticem ſurgit; & ſi nihil illi prohibeat, aſcendet; fulmen autem cadit eadem neceſſitate, qua excutitur; nihil itaque dubii relinquitur, quin divina illi virtus inſit. Seneca.

To the ends of the earth.

Here is the act, and the extention of the act, to the ends of the earth; the Hebrew is the wings of the earth, ſo the word is uſed (Gen. 1. 21.) God created great whales, &c. and every winged fowl. The ends of the earth are called the wings of the earth, becauſe they are the fartheſt outſtretchings of the earth; as a bird when ſhe flies ſtretcheth out her wings to the utmoſt. They are alſo called, The corners of the earth (Ezek. 7. 2.) Thou ſon of man, thus ſaith the Lord God unto the land of Iſrael: an end, the end is come upon the four corners of the land; the Hebrew is, upon the four wings (or ends) of the earth; as if he had ſaid, an end is come upon the Eaſt and Weſt, North and South. Theſe four wings, or extreams of the earth, are the ſame which Chriſt called the four winds (Mat. 24. 31.) where ſpeaking of the Reſurrection at the laſt Judgment, he ſhews how all that are raiſed ſhall be brought to one place or general Seſſion, and he ſhall ſend his angels with a great ſound of a trumpet, and they ſhall gather together his Elect from the four winds, from one end of heaven to the other, that is, from the four ends, corners, ſkirts, or wings of the earth. The utmoſt extremity of a garment or of a land, according to the Hebrew, is called, the wing of it. Now foraſmuch as Elihu repreſents God, thus directing both the Thunder and Lightning, כנפ Ala, proprie avium eſt. Ἐπὶ πτερύγων τῆς γῆς. Sept.

Obſerve Firſt, All the motions of the Creature, even the moſt violent, and, to appearance, contingent motions of the Creature, are under the direction, yea, under the dominion of God.

Thunder and Lightning go the way which God appointeth and chalketh out to them; they move not of themſelves, they move not whither men or devils would have them, but whither God would have them. The Devils, I grant, have great power in the Air, yet 'tis limited by, and wholly ſubordinate to the will and power of God. As the reaſonable creatures and their motions, that is, the motions of Men and Angels, are under the direction of God, as Jeremiah ſpeaks (Chap. 10. 23.) It is not in him that goeth to direct his own ſteps. The Hebrew uſeth a word there which may be rendred to prepare, to eſtabliſh or to confirm, neither of which are in him that goeth; we render it according to the preſent Text, it is not in him that goeth to direct his own ſteps; who directs them then? It is God that directs the ſteps of man. It is not in the power of man to direct his own ſteps, he is not able to do it; and beſides that, he hath not the liberty or priviledge to do it, he may not do it, he ought not to do it; 'tis the duty as well as the ſafety of man to leave the direction of his ways and ſteps to God. 'Tis God that directs the ſteps of man, yea, the indirect ſteps of man are under the mighty power of God; the very wandrings of men are under the guidance of God; the motions, yea commotions, the actions, and the moſt diſturbed actions of man are under a moſt certain diſpoſure and diſpoſition of God: When men do they know not what, God knows and orders what they do. Now (I ſay) as God directs reaſonable creatures, men or angels, ſo unreaſonable creatures in their motions; the motions of the beaſts of the earth, and the motions of the birds of the air, are all directed by God; yea, the motions of the very inanimate creatures, of thoſe that have no motion in or of themſelves, but whoſe motion is by ſome outward violence and preſſure put upon them, even their motion alſo is directed by the hand of God. Thunder and Lightning are inanimate liveleſs creatures, they have no motion of their own, but by impreſſion and violence, yet God directs their motion as truly, as he doth the motions of thoſe creatures which move by the moſt deliberate actings of their own will, reaſon, and underſtanding. What is there ſo violent in its motion as Thunder? What is there ſo ſwift in its motion as the Lightning? of which Chriſt being about to give his people warning, not to believe thoſe deceivers, who ſay, Lo here is Chriſt, &c. ſaith (Mat. 24. 27.) For as the Lightning cometh out of the Eaſt, and ſhineth even unto the Weſt, ſo ſhall alſo the coming of the Son of man be; that is, as the Lightning inſtantly paſſeth from one part of the heaven to the other viſibly, ſo ſhall the coming of the Son of man be, a ſudden, ſwift, and viſible coming; Ye ſhall not need to go into corners to ſhew or ſee him, for he ſhall come as the Lightning diſcovering himſelf to all by the brightneſs of his coming. There was ſuch an apprehenſion of the ſwiftneſs of the Lightning among the Ancients, that though the Latine word ſignifying to Lighten, is accented long, yet becauſe Lightning is ſo ſwift in motion they were wont to pronounce it ſhort; Lightning being ſo quick and active, they thought it was not ſuitable to draw it out in ſpeaking by a long pronunciation. But though Lightning have ſuch a violent and ſwift motion, yet 'tis under Gods command and direction, and it ſhall make no more haſte than God will. An arrow flies with a very violent and ſwift motion, yet it is God that directeth the arrow, he directs it more than the man that ſhoots it; and when a ſhot is made, as we ſay, at random, God then directs it; as in that notable hiſtory of Ahab, when he, againſt the counſel God given him by Michaiah, would needs go up to the battel at Ramoth Gilead (1 Kings 22. 34.) the Text ſaith, There was a man who drew a bow at a venture, we put in the Margin, He drew a bow in his ſimplicity, he had no ſpecial intention againſt Ahab, he did not aim at Ahab when he ſhot his arrow, but God carried it to the right mark, to fulfil that which he had determined and ſpoken concerning Ahab; yea, he directed it not only to the right man, but to the right place, the joint of his armour. When in battel, arrows, and darts, and bullets are ſent forth, as ſo many thunder-bolts, the Lord directs them and hands them whither they ſhall

Chirſtus non venit clam aut inviſibiliter ut illi volunt, qui jactant ſe habere Chriſtum in deſerto, in urbe in clauſtro, in conditorio, ſed palam, ut fulmen editum per omnia lucet. go, whom they ſhall hit, and where. God alſo directeth the thunder-bolts of his Word, where and whom they ſhall hit. And (to the point in general) that the Lord hath a guidance over thoſe things that are moſt contingent, we may ſee in that of Moſes, when he gave a Law from the Lord about the man that goeth with his Neighbour to cut VVood; If (ſaith he) the head ſlippeth from the helve, and lighteth upon his neighbour that he die, he ſhall flee into one of thoſe cities and live (Deut. 19. 5.) The reaſon of this Law is expreſſed (*Exod.*21.13.) becauſe in ſuch contingent caſes God delivers him into his hand; the man had no intent to hit his Neighbour, but fetching a blow, the head flieth from the helve, and both hits and kills him; and to ſhew that this contingency was ordered by God, the Text ſaith, God delivered him into his hand.

Providentia non eſt incerta aut vaga.

And foraſmuch as God hath ſuch a power over the motions of the creature, it may be matter of comfort and incouragement to us, not only with reſpect to Thunder and Lightning, that we ſhould not fear them, as the heathen, who neither know nor fear God; but we may take comfort from hence alſo, with reſpect to the moſt violent and hurried motions that we ſee here below. When we find men acting like Thunder and Lightning, without deliberation, when they are all in paſſions and perturbations, yet let us know, theſe violent motions ſhall not fall any where by chance or hap hazard, nor by their own ſway, but as God appoints and over-rules them; they ſhall either fall quite beſides the mark which men aimed at, and ſo do no hurt to any, or if they do, God orders what hurt they ſhall do. He directeth it under the whole heaven. Let us carry this conſideration always with us, and it will be a great ſtay to our minds in all the violent motions of the creature.

Again, from the extent of this divine direction or providence of God, as to theſe things; He directeth it under the whole heaven, and unto the ends of the earth, that is, every where.

Note, The providence of God reacheth to all places.

His orders go forth into all lands, his dominion is under the whole heavens and unto the ends of the earth (Pſal. 65 5.) He is the confidence of all the ends of the earth, and of them that are afar off upon the Sea. God is not helpful to his people in one place of the earth, and not in another, or helpful to them upon the earth and not upon the Sea, but to the ends of the earth, and upon the broad Sea he is their confidence, that is, they may confide and truſt in him whereſoever they are. Hence that expoſtulation in the Prophet (*Jer.*23. 23.) Am I (ſaith the Lord) a God at hand, and not a God afar off? Some would circumſcribe and limit the Power of God, as if being a God near at hand he could not be a God afar off too, or to thoſe who are ſcattered to the ends of the earth. But while he puts the queſtion, am I a God at hand and not afar off? he puts it out of queſtion, that he is a God afar off as well as at hand. The Syrians ſaid and pleaſed themſelves in their conceit (1 Kings 20. 28.) The Lord is God of the hills, but he is not God of the vallies; therefore they would change the battel, as if he could order things here, and not there; but all ſhall find and feel him (as they did) a God both of the hills and of the vallies, a God both of the Land and of the Sea, a God both at hand, and afar off. It is ſaid of the Empire of the Sun (*Pſal.*19. 6.) his going forth is from the end of the heaven, and his circuit unto the ends of it, and there is nothing hid from the heat thereof: much more may I ſay of the Empire of God, his going forth is from one end of the earth to the other, and there is nothing hid from his wiſdom and government. One of the Ancients gives his ſentence clearly with this truth; He (ſaith he) that ruleth in the higheſt heavens doth not forſake the ends of the earth, he is every where preſent, and every where alike preſent; though the places are unlike, yet the preſence of the Lord is alike when need requires it. That's further matter of comfort, that under the whole heaven and unto the ends of the earth we may find the Lord ready for us, and diſpoſing all things, not only for good, but for the beſt. He directeth it, &c.

Verſ. 4. After it a voice roareth, or, after it he roareth with a voice.

There is another reading of theſe words, ſome give it thus: after him a voice roareth, That is, after his command; God willing and giving forth an order for it, a voice roareth, that is, at his command or word the voice roareth, or followeth. As if the ſcope of Elihu in this Text, were to ſhew, that neither Thunder nor Lightning ſtir a foot or hairs breadth, till they have a word from God, as indeed they do not. For, though Thunder and Lightning may be called God's Vſhers or Heralds that go before him and proclaim his approach (Pſal. 18. 12, 13, 14.) yet they follow and come after him; They go before him as to action, yet they come after him as to commiſſion, they go not till he ſaith go, or hath given them commiſſion to go. That's a profitable reading of the words.

Our tranſlation ſaith, after it a voice roareth, that is, after the Lightning, or as ſoon as it hath Lightned a voice roareth. Our experience teacheth us that Thunder followeth the Lightning; which we are not to underſtand according to the nature of the thing, for ſo Thunder and Lightning are, as it were, born and brought forth together; there is no difference between them at all in time, but there is a difference as to order, at leaſt as to order in our apprehenſion; and ſo the one may be ſaid to come after the other, the Thunder after the Lightning; as when a gun, leſſer or greater, is diſcharged, if you are at a diſtance you may ſee the fire a conſiderable time before you hear the report, and poſſibly the bullet hits the mark before the ſound hits to the ear, though the diſcharge be made in a moment; which ſome ſay is becauſe the eye is a quicker ſenſe than the ear, but rather, becauſe light doth in a moment ſtrike through the air, but the ſound comes by certain circuits, and fetcheth a longer compaſs before it comes at the ear, as hath been toucht lately before, as alſo at the 26. Verſe of the 28. Chapter. And beſides this, or any other reaſon of the thing in nature, conſtant experience teacheth us that we ſee the light firſt and then hear the voice; and therefore Elihu ſpeaks here very congruouſly to both, After it a voice roareth. And as the reaſon of this in nature (as was ſhewed) is that more ſpeedy paſſage of the light through the air than of the ſound, ſo a moral reaſon may be given of it, which take in this obſervation:

Segnius irritant animos demiſſa per aurem quam quæ ſunt oculis ſubjecta fidelibus. Horat.

God minds or warns us of his Judgments before he ſends them.

When you ſee Lightning you ſay there will be Thunder by and by; as natural Lightning gives warning of Thunder, ſo God gives warning from his Word, and Providences, when a Thunder-clap of judgment, in any kind, is coming. God never ſends a judgment, but we hear of it before we feel it; God ſpeaks before he ſtrikes (*Matth.*24.) Behold, I have told you before. Lightning tells us Thunder is at hand. God doth not uſe to ſtrike his people with a Thunder-bolt, before he hath given them notice by a flaſh of Lightning; indeed judgments always ſurprize the wicked; how much Lightning ſoever hath been daſhed in their eyes, yet the Thunder comes unawares. The day of the Lord will at leaſt come as a ſnare upon all carnal men, though they have had frequent calls to prepare for it. God in the courſe of nature teacheth us the courſe of his providence, Lightning gives warning that Thunder is coming, and happy are they who take warning by his Lightning, and ſo eſcape the ſtroke of his Thunder: After it a voice

Fulguratio oſtendit ignem, fulminatio emitit, illa (ut ita dicam) comminatio eſt, & conatio ſine ictu, iſta jaculatio cum ictu. Sen. lib. 2. Nat. Quæſt. cap. 12.

Roareth.] It hath been already ſhewed that Thunder is the voice of God; here Elihu tells us what kind of voice it is, it roareth. The word ſignifieth the roaring of a lion, 'tis alſo applyed to the roaring of the Sea, that's a dreadful roaring. Naturaliſts tell us there are ſeveral ſorts of Thunder; every Thunder is not a roaring Thunder, they give five or ſix gradual denominations of Thunder.

שאג Rugivit, proprium leonis.

First, There is a ſhreeking or craſhing Thunder. — 1. Stridens.

Secondly, There is a hiſſing Thunder, as when red hot iron is put into water. — 2. Sibilans.

Thirdly, There is a cracking Thunder, as when a bladder is broken, or a cheſnut in the fire. — 3. Crepans.

Fourthly, There is a rumbling Thunder. We ſometimes hear only a ruſhing in the clouds, no crack of Thunder breaking out. — 4. Tumultuans.

Fifthly,

ſ Rugiens, &c. Garcæus Meteorolog.

Fifthly, There is a roaring Thunder, as this Text ſpeaks, a voice roareth.

Sixthly, There is a whiſpering Thunder, I may call it a kind of ſilent or ſtill-voiced Thunder; poſſibly that was ſuch ſpoken of (1 Kings 19. 12.) After the fire, a ſtill ſmall voice. As alſo that when Jeſus Chriſt was baptized by John in Jordan (Matth. 3. 17.) And lo, a voice from heaven, ſaying, This is my beloved Son, in whom I am well-pleaſed; 'Tis conceived, that voice came in a ſtill whiſpering Thunder. Such doubtleſs was that Thunder (John 12. 28, 29.) when Chriſt prayed, Father, glorifie thy Name; then came there a voice from heaven, ſaying, I have both glorified it, and will glorifie it again. At the hearing of this voice, the people that ſtood by, ſaid that it thundred, others ſaid, that an Angel ſpake to him. This voice was an articulate ſound coming with the Thunder; and the Hebrew word which we commonly tranſlate voices, ſignifieth thunder. The Jewiſh Writers tell us that (Bath col) the daughter of voice (which they reckon the only way of divine revelation, leſt them after the Babyloniſh Captivity) was the will of God made known to them immediately from heaven by this ſort of Thunder. Thunders and voices are often joyned in the Book of the Revelations (Chap. 4. 5. Chap. 8. 5.) implying, the revelation of thoſe prophetick wonders, was made by Voices accompanied with Thunder. And thus thoſe two Texts which ſeem contradictory may be reconciled, (Act. 9. 7.) it is ſaid, They who journied with Paul, ſtood ſpeechleſs hearing a voice. But (Act. 22. 9.) Paul ſaith, They ſaw indeed the light and were afraid, but they heard not the voice of him that ſpake to me. The voice which they heard in the 9. Chapter was the voice of Thunder, and the voice which they did not hear the 22. was the diſtinct articulate voice of Chriſt, ſaying, Saul, Saul, Why perſecuteſt thou me?

From this conſideration of God's gradual ſpeaking to us in the Clouds, we may be led to conſider how gradually he ſpeaks to us in the Miniſtry of his Word; there he ſpeaks ſometimes whiſperingly, gently, he at firſt awakens the ear a little, but at laſt he roareth with his voice. If we will not hear, he hath louder and louder voices, which we ſhall hear whether we will or no. At the giving of the Law (Exod. 19. 19.) The voice of the trumpet ſounded long, and waxed louder and louder. There are different degrees in the loudneſs of the voice when God ſpeaks to his people. We ſhould take warning by the light that ſhineth, we ſhould hear the ſmalleſt voice, the firſt whiſperings of God, and not put him to his roaring voice. God is ſaid to roar out of Zion (Joel 3. 16.) yea, many times he roareth upon Zion, becauſe of the diſobedience and negligence of the Citizens of Zion. After it a voice roareth, the words that follow ſpeak the ſame thing,

He thundereth with the voice of his excellency.

רעם Tonuit, intonuit, commotus fuit præ indignatione. Tonitru eſt fragor editus ex plaga compactorum ignium è nube erumpentium. Plin. Tonitru eſt horrendus ſonus in nube ſpiſſa, qui excitatur ab exhalatione calida & ſicca, concluſa intra nubem, quæ cum fremitu quærens exitum, magna violentia erumpit & undique nubem concutit. Garcæ.

This is the firſt time that we have the word Thunder expreſt in the Text, though the ſenſe of the whole place ſpeaks thunder. The word which ſignifieth Thunder, ſignifieth any great noiſe or dreadful cry (Ezek. 27. 35.) (Pſal. 96. 11.) it ſignifieth alſo the voice of any one that complaineth or bemoaneth his or her condition, or that is troubled or fretted at the croſneſs of relations: It is ſaid of Peninnah, ſhe provoked her (that is, Hannah) ſore (or, as the Margin reads it, angred her) for to make her fret, becauſe the Lord had ſhut up her womb: The word is that of the Text, to make her thunder, or to cauſe a tumultuation in her ſpirit, like that in the Clouds, when heat and cold contend for the maſteries.

Thunder is ſo unquiet and tumultuous, that any thing which is ſo, may by a figure be called Thunder. The Text ſpeaks of proper Thunder, and if we enquire among Philoſophers about the nature and generation of Thunder, ſome tell us briefly, Thunder is a craſhing or cracking noiſe made by the ſtroke of encloſed fires breaking through the Clouds. Or thus, Thunder is a dreadful ſound in a thick Cloud, cauſed by the hot and dry exhalation ſhut up in the bowels of it, which ſeeking paſſage out, makes its own way with mighty violence.

But though the matter here treated upon by Elihu be Philoſophical, yet I muſt remember that mine is a Divinity, not a Philoſophy Lecture, and therefore it may ſuffice me to touch theſe things, and leave the Reader, who deſires to know more of them, or of other myſteries in Nature, to ſeek his ſatisfaction in thoſe learned Authors who profeſſedly handle this ſubject of Thunder; and ſhall here only take notice that Elihu doth not only ſay, He thundereth, but He thundereth

Meteorolog. ex Ariſtot. lib. 2. Meteor c. 9.

With the voice of his excellency.] That's an explication of he roareth. The voice of his excellency, is his high voice. The word ſignifieth pride, becauſe they that are in high places are ſo apt to be proud, or becauſe high-mindedneſs is the ſame with pride. Proud men think themſelves higher than their brethren, as Saul was above the people by head and ſhoulders; therefore the ſame word ſignifieth pride and light. The Lord thundereth with the voice of his highneſs or excellency of his greatneſs.

The Septuagint ſaith, He thundereth with the voice of his reproach, or with his reproaching voice. A man that is angry pours out his diſpleaſure in reproaches upon ſuch as have provoked him. God knows how to Thunder juſt and deſerved reproaches upon provoking ſinners. The Scholiaſts explain that tranſlation of the ſeventy, with the voice of his reproach, thus, with or by a voice full of threatning; and 'tis a truth, the mouth of God is full of threatnings, and his heart of indignation, againſt preſuming ſinners. We may put all theſe together, yet I conceive our own reading moſt ſuitable; He thundereth with the voice of his excellency, like a great Commander in war, of whom God ſpeaks (Job 39. 25.) in that moſt high-ſtrained rhetorical deſcription of the ſtrength and courage of the horſe; He ſmelleth the Battel afar off, the thunder of the Captain, and the Shoutings. When an Army is engaged in Battel, there is not only a thundering of the Guns, but of the Captains and Commanders, they ſpeak highly, they thunder with a voice of their high courage and excellency; much more doth God in the day of his Battel thunder with the voice of his excellency.

Ἐν φωνῇ ὕβρεως αὐτοῦ. In voce contumeliæ ſuæ. Sept. Scholia explicant in voce minarum plena.

> Hence note, God works like himſelf, he makes his excellency and his highneſs appear to the children of men in the very works of nature.

And doth he not often ſo in his works of Providence, whether for the Salvation of his people, or for the Deſtruction of his enemies? I ſhall not ſtay upon this point, having met with matter of the ſame purport more than once before. He thundereth with the voice of his excellency,

And he will not ſtay them when his voice is heard.

'Tis queſtion'd, who are meant by them, He will not ſtay them; Some underſtand the rain and ſhowers, which uſually follow upon, or after a great thunder; and we commonly call them thunder ſhowers. Others underſtand the Lightning and the Thunder; as if he had ſaid, When God's purpoſe is declared, that there ſhall be lightning and thunder, he will not ſtay them, or take them by the heel, as the word properly ſignifieth: whence Jacob had his name, becauſe when Eſau was coming into the world, Jacob took him by the heel, as if he would have ſtayed or ſtopped his birth, at leaſt have got into the world before him; and therefore Eſau ſaid (Gen. 27. 36) Is he not rightly called Jacob? for he hath ſupplanted me theſe two times. Which ſome render according to the letter of the Text, My brother may well be called an Heeler, for he hath heeled me theſe two times. In this ſenſe the Lord will not ſtay the birth and breaking forth of theſe terrible twins, Thunder and Lightning. Laſtly, learned Junius refers them to the Lightnings only, rendring, He doth not defer them when his voice is to be heard; which he thus expounds, He ſends lightning before, foretelling thunder will follow. But I conceive the former expoſition more clear, which refers this not ſtaying, or he will not ſtay, both to thunder and lightning, in conſort or together.

> Hence note, When once God ſpeaks the word, and is reſolved upon the doing of a thing, there is no ſtopping of him, nor will he ſtay his work.

He will not take thunder & lightning by the heel, when he hath bid them go. We have a parallel ſenſe to this concerning the thunder and lightning of divine Judgments (Zeph. 2. 1, 2.) Gather your ſelves together, O gather your ſelves together, before the decree bring forth. As if he had ſaid, If once the decree bring forth, if once God declare that wrath ſhall come, there is no recalling of it, He will not ſtay it when his voice is heard; for then (Iſa. 43. 13.) The Lord will work, and none ſhall let him; he will not ſtop it himſelf, and none elſe can. Thunder and lightning ſhall come; whoſoever ſtand in their way muſt down. And as none can lett God by power, ſo none ſhall lett him by prayer, if once he be reſolved, and hath ſent forth his decree; therefore do not provoke the Lord to give out the word, for then your caſe is deſperate. There's no oppoſing the work of God, or God in his working. He will not ſtay them when his voice is heard.

Verſ. 5. God thundreth marvellouſly with his voice; great things doth he that we cannot comprehend.

Conſider how often this word is repeated, He roareth with his voice, He thundereth with the voice of his excellency, and here, He thundereth marvellouſly. This may teach us, Firſt, (which hath been noted before) that the works of God in nature are to be heeded. Secondly, that we are very backward to heed them. Thirdly, this is ſo often aſcribed to God, leſt we ſhould think that thunder is only a work of nature.

Tonat mirabilia. Hebr. Numerus pluralis indicat ingentem admirationem & ſtuporem mortalium ad vocem tonitrui. Pined.

God thundereth marvellouſly.] The words may be read, God thundereth marvels; 'tis in the plural number: We render well, God thundereth marvellouſly; but there is a greater Emphaſis, taking it in the plural number, God thundereth marvels. Conſider thunder and lightning in a proper, or in a metaphorical ſenſe, there are many marvels or wonders in them. Naturaliſts obſerve many marvels in natural thunder and lightnings; theſe ſometimes melt the ſword without hurt to the ſcabbard; diſſolve the metal, not conſuming the purſe; break the bones, and not the fleſh; theſe ſpoil the Wine without ſtaving or breaking the cask; kill or ſtifle the child in the womb, and not the mother. God thunders marvellouſly in theſe things.

Again, how many marvellous Judgments hath God wrought by thunder! how often hath he deſtroyed the enemies of his people, and the blaſphemers of his great Name, by thunder and lightning from Heaven! Anaſtaſius the Emperor, an Eutychian perſecutor of the Orthodox Chriſtians, was ſlain by thunder. The Hiſtory of the Church ſpeaks of a Chriſtian-Legion or Brigade of Chriſtians in the Army of Aurelius the Emperor, who earneſtly prayed (the whole Army being in a great ſtrait) that God would appear for their help, and the defeating of the enemy; whereupon the Lord ſent rain for their relief, as alſo thunder and lightning, by which the enemy was diſcomfited and deſtroyed: whereupon that Legion was called, The thundering Legion. When Julian the Apoſtate, meerly to deſpite the propheſie of Chriſt (Mat. 24.) who had ſaid of the Temple at Jeruſalem, there ſhould not be left one ſtone upon another; Julian, I ſay, in deſpite of this propheſie, yea, to deſpite it, gave command for the building of the Temple at Jeruſalem, and upon his command there was a great quantity of materials brought together for that purpoſe; but the Lord ſeeing the pride of this enemy, ſent a marvellous thunder, with an Earthquake, which not only amazed the workmen, but ſcattered thoſe materials, and put a ſtop to the work.

Now as there are many marvels wrought by natural thunder and lightning, ſo alſo by that which is ſpiritual. Nor will it be unuſeful for us to conſider them upon occaſion of what is ſaid of natural thunder in this Scripture.

God thundereth marvellouſly in the diſpenſation of his Word, or in his dealings with the ſouls of ſinners, to bring them home to himſelf, and to turn them from their ſins. We may (not excluding the proper ſenſe) profitably expound the whole 29. Pſalm in this ſpiritual ſenſe; wherein the Lord under the Allegory of a terrible thunder-tempeſt, ſeems to give a prophetical deſcription of his mighty power in propagating the Goſpel to the ends of the earth; which goeth not out as an empty ſound beating the air, but with wonderful efficacy, convincing the world of ſin, and of their need of Chriſt to ſave them from their ſins. And to ſhew that this is the ſcope of the Pſalm, David begins it with a ſtrong exhortation, (verſ. 1, 2.) Give unto the Lord, O ye mighty, give ye unto the Lord glory and ſtrength: Give unto the Lord the glory due unto his Name; worſhip the Lord in the beauty of holineſs. As if David had ſaid, O ye, the mighty Princes and Potentates of the world, who in moſt places and times have contemned God and his holy worſhip; and being your ſelves either irreligious, or engaged in a falſe religion, have uſed your power againſt, and hindered the progreſs of the Goſpel, and the advancement of true religion; I adviſe and admoniſh you to lay down that ſpirit, to embrace the Goſpel, to love the power of godlineſs, to propagate the true knawledg of Jeſus Chriſt, and to encourage the faithful diſpenſers and profeſſors of it, both by your favour and example, worſhipping the Lord in the beauty of holineſs.

If any ſhould ask, Why is the Lord to be ſo worſhipped? why muſt he have ſuch high honours from thoſe that are high? what doth he in the World which calls for ſuch adoration? David anſwers Meteorologically as well as Theologically, he anſwers from the Clouds (verſ. 3.) The Voice of the Lord is upon the Waters, the God of glory thundreth; the Lord is upon many Waters; The voice of the Lord is powerful, the voice of the Lord is full of Majeſty. As if he had ſaid, Although the Lord Jeſus Chriſt will not ſet up an outward, pompous, political Kingdom, ſuch as that of Cyrus or Alexander, &c. yet by the Miniſtry of the Goſpel he will erect a ſpiritual Kingdom, and gather to himſelf a Church, that ſhall abide for ever, out of all the Nations of the earth: For the Goſpel ſhall be carried and preached to, not only the people of Iſrael, the Jews, but to the Gentiles all the world over, that the minds of men may be awakened, enlightned, and moved with that unheard of Doctrine of Salvation by Chriſt, which had been hid from Ages and Generations.

And though many ſhall be hardned againſt, and oppoſe that glad-tydings, yet becauſe the God of glory thundereth, that is, becauſe the voice of the Lord is powerful and full of Majeſty; he accompanying the Miniſtry of the Goſpel with power and terror like that of Thunder, home to the Conſciences of men, for their conviction and converſion, therefore it ſhall do great and glorious things, ſubduing the greateſt and ſtouteſt ſinners to the obedience of his Will. This Thunder will caſt down the ſtrong holds of ſin, and every thing that exalteth it ſelf againſt the knowledg of God, and bring into captivity every thought to the obedience of Chriſt (2 Cor. 10. 4, 5.) This is it which the Prophet David intendeth (according to this allegorical interpretation) by the effects of Thunder, elegantly expreſſed (verſ. 5, 6, 7, 8, 9.) The Voyce of the Lord breaketh the Cedars, yea, the Lord breaketh the Cedars of Lebanon; that is, proud and high-minded men, who are (in their own conceit) as tall as Cedars, theſe he will make to ſee that they are but ſhrubs, theſe he will humble and break their hearts by true repentance, for the pride of their hearts, and all the abominations of their lives. Further, (verſ. 6.) He maketh them alſo to skip like a Calf, Lebanon and Syrion like a young Unicorn; that is, the Lord by his thundering powerful voice, firſt, will make them skip as frighted with fear, and ſecondly, as revived with joy. Yet more (verſ. 7.) The Voice of the Lord divideth the flames of fire; that is, will ſend and divide to every one as they need (1 Cor. 12. 11.) the holy Spirit, who is compared to and called Fire (Mat. 3. 11.) and who came as with a Thunder-ſtorm of a mighty ruſhing wind, and with the appearance of cloven Tongues, like as of fire, and ſate upon each one of the Apoſtles, (Acts 2. 2, 3.) Nor did this voice of Thunder, accompanied with divided flames of fire, reach Jeruſalem only; for, as it follows (verſ. 8.) The voice of the Lord ſhaketh the wilderneſs, the wilderneſs of Kadeſh; that is, the Lord by the voice of the Goſpel ſhall go forth with power to thoſe Gentiles, who are like a wilderneſs, barren of goodneſs, and unmanur'd in ſpirituals, though they dwell in well govern'd Cities, and are well furniſhed with Morals. It ſhall go forth alſo to thoſe Gentiles who inhabit waſt wilderneſſes, and are not ſo much as reduced to civility: Theſe wilderneſſes the thundering voice of the Lord hath ſhaken heretofore, and doth ſhake at this day, and will yet further ſhake, that the fulneſs of the Gentiles may come in. Many of theſe wilderneſſes hath the Lord turned into fruitful fields, and pleaſant lands, by the voice of the Goſpel ſounding among them. For in theſe wilderneſſes (as it followeth verſ. 9.) The voice of the Lord maketh the hinds to calve; that is, they that were as wild, as untaught and untamed as the hind or any beaſt in the forreſt, he brings to the ſorrows of their new-birth, to Repentance and Goſpel-humiliation: And in doing this He (as the Pſalmiſt goes on) diſcovereth the forreſts, that is, opens the hearts of men, which are as thick ſet and full grown with vanity, pride, hypocriſie, ſelf love, and ſelf-ſufficiency, as alſo with wantonneſs and ſenſuality, as any forreſt is over-grown with thickets of trees and buſhes, which deny all paſſage through, till cleared away by cutting down or burning up; Such an opening, ſuch a diſcovery doth the Lord make in the forreſts of mens hearts, by the Sword and Fire, that is, by the Word and Spirit of the Goſpel; and when all this is done, the forreſt becomes a Temple, and as that verſe concludes, In his temple doth every one ſpeak of his glory. And if the floods of ungodlineſs riſe up againſt this people, whom the thunder and lightning of the Goſpel have ſubdued to Chriſt and framed into a holy Temple, then the Pſalmiſt aſſureth us (verſ. 10.) The Lord ſitteth upon the flood, that is, 'tis under his power, he ruleth and over-ruleth it: yea, The Lord ſitteth King for ever, and (verſ. 11.) The Lord will give ſtrength to his people, the Lord will bleſs his people with peace. Thus the Lord thundereth marvellouſly and theſe are glorious marvels which he thundereth; he converts ſinners. The thunder of the Goſpel frights them out of ſin, and the grace of it gives them peace.

Thus, though I like not their way who are given to allegorize the Scriptures, yet, I doubt not but we may make a profitable uſe both of this and many other Scriptures by way of allegory. This being an undeniable truth, which is the ground of it, That the Lord puts forth, as it were, the power of Thunder and Lightning in the preaching of his Word, theſe two things are to be marked.

Firſt, That Thunder and Lightning are a kind of Word of God to us, they tell us (though confuſedly, yet plainly enough, for the conviction and condemnation of gainſayers) there is a God; the greateſt Princes of the world have taken notice by Thunder and Tempeſt that there is a God over all, governing all; nor needs there any more teaching than that to condemn Atheiſts and Mockers at Religion. We ſay proverbially of ſome men, who make a rude noiſe, they are ſo loud that we cannot hear God Thunder for them; yet know there's no noiſe can ſo drown the voice of God's Thunder in the Clouds, but it will condemn all that hear it not, ſo as to acknowledg God in it.

Secondly, We ſhould mark, that as Thunder and Lightning are a kind of Voice or Word of God to us, ſo the Word of God, or the Voice of God, ſpeaking in his Word, is a kind of Thunder and Lightning to us, very mighty, very powerful, even clothed with an irreſiſtible power and might. And therefore if we take the Prophet David in 29. Pſalm before mentioned, ſpeaking, in the former part of it, of the effects of Natural Thunder only; yet toward the cloſe of the Pſalm, he applieth it to the Word of God, while he ſaith (verſ. 9.) And in his Temple doth every one ſpeak of his glory; that is, the Word and Ordinances of God, miniſtred in his Church, or Temple, will put every one to acknowledg and ſpeak of the glorious Power of God, even much more than the mighty Thunder which ſoundeth in our ears, or the ſubtil Lightning which flaſheth in our eyes. There is a far more royal power in the Thunder of the Word, than in the word of Thunder; This terrifieth only to Conviction, but that terrifieth to Salvation; for after God ſpeaks terror there in his Threatnings, he ſpeaks comfort in the Promiſes; and when he hath affrighted us with a ſenſe of our ſins, and of his wrath due to us for our ſins, as with an horrible tempeſt, he preſently refreſheth us with the gentle gales of revealed grace, and with the pleaſant amiable Sun ſhine of his favour by Jeſus Chriſt. And therefore in reſpect both of the Natural and Spiritual Thunder, conſidered in the circumſtances and conſequences of it, Elihu might well conclude, as he doth, in the laſt words of this Verſe and matter,

Great things doth he, which we cannot comprehend.

We may take theſe words, not only as intending the great things of the Thunder, which indeed are ſuch as we cannot comprehend; but as a tranſition from Thunder, to thoſe other great things that God doth, ſet forth in the latter part of the Chapter.

Great things doth he.] God doth the leaſt things, but he can do great things, he doth great things

Which we cannot comprehend.] The Hebrew is, He doth great things, and we know not; which may be expounded two ways.

Facit magna & non cognoſcimus. Heb.

Firſt, We know not, that is, we take no notice of them. God doth great things, and we are very backward to conſider them.

Secondly, We know not, that is, he doth ſuch great things, that let us conſider and ſtudy them as long as we will, let us break our brains to find out the greatneſs of them, yet we ſhall never find it out; He doth great things, that we cannot comprehend. The Text is clear, and the ſenſe profitable in either Interpretation; he doth great things which we do not conſider, or he doth great things, that when we have conſidered them, and done the moſt we can, we cannot come to the full knowledg of them. Naturaliſts ſpeak much of the cauſes of theſe things, yet the cleareſt ſighted among them, could not ſee the bottom of them, nor reach the utmoſt reaſon of them. Great things doth he, which we cannot comprehend.

> Hence note, It is both proper and eaſie to God to do great things.

He is the great God, ſo great that doing great things is no wearineſs to him. The Text doth not ſay, he hath done great things, or, he will do great things, but, he doth great things, he is always doing great things; and that is a point improveable for the comfort of the people of God. When a great matter is to be done, we ſay, who ſhall do it? when we are in great troubles and dangers, we ſay, who ſhall deliver us? If ſmall matters be to be done, we think we or other men like our ſelves can do them; but when great matters are to be done, we hardly believe, that God can do them for us; yet 'tis all one with God whether the thing be great or little that is to be done, if he pleaſe to undertake the doing of it. It is queſtioned (Amos 7.2.) By whom ſhall Jacob ariſe, for he is ſmall? They looked to this and that creature, and ſaw Jacob ſo ſmall and low, that they thought he could never riſe again; but remember Jacobs God is great, and he doth great things, this great thing eſpecially, to raiſe them that are low and ſmall. Whatever your condition is, remember God is great, and can as well do great things as little, as eaſily make a world as give you a morſel of bread; there is nothing hard to God; He doth great things, and (according to the ſtrictneſs of the Hebrew Text) we know not, that is, we conſider them not, we take little notice of them.

> Hence obſerve, The ſons of men are commonly very ſlight thoughted about the great works of God.

When God thunders marvels, we know them not, we lay them not to heart. The Prophet (Iſa. 5. 12.) ſheweth how buſie the careleſs Jews were in their mirth and jollity, but they regarded not the work of the Lord, neither conſidered the operation of his hands. When God is doing great things, one man is getting wealth, another taking his pleaſure, but they regard not at all, or have very little regard to what God is doing.

Again, from our reading, Great things doth he, which we cannot comprehend.

> Note, God doth great things that are beyond the greateſt of our apprehenſions, ſuch things, as after all our ſtudy we are ſhort in, and ſhort of.

As it is our ſin that we take not pains enough to know the great things that God doth; ſo God doth things ſo great, that when we have done our beſt, or, after all our pains, we cannot know them fully: though we know their outſide, yet little of their inſide, though we know their effects, yet little of their cauſes and contrivances. To know a thing, is to know it in the cauſes of it, to ſee the reaſon of it. A man knoweth not the things that he knows, till he ſeeth the reaſon of what he knows. How little doth man know of, or ſee into the reaſon of the great things that God doth? How little do we ſee of the marvels that are in the works of God? The love of God paſſeth knowledg (Eph. 3. 19.) Though we labour to know it (and 'tis our ſin that we labour not more to know it) yet we cannot, it ſurpaſſeth all our knowledg. And as that love of God, which is the firſt mover of all the good and great things that he doth for his people, paſſeth our knowledg, ſo the things that are the effects of that love to his people are ſo great, that they paſs our knowledg. Hence we may infer theſe two duties.

Firſt, Let us be much in the admiration of the great things that God doth. Where knowledg ends, there admiration ſhould begin. It was a ſhame for a Philoſopher to admire, becauſe he was ſuppoſed to know the whole compaſs of nature; but 'tis no ſhame for a Chriſtian to admire, there being many things, not only in the ſpecial diſpenſations of grace, but in the common diſpenſations of providence, which he cannot know comprehenſively, the whole compaſs of which he cannot graſp or take in with the beſt of his underſtanding.

Secondly, Let us take heed of cenſuring the works of God. Some are very bold in paſſing their Verdicts upon the great things that God doth; this, and that is not ſo well done, this and that might have been otherwiſe done. The great things which God doth pleaſe not many men if they hit not their intereſt, how apt are they to find fault; But ſeeing God doth great things that we cannot comprehend, let us take heed of cenſuring any of the great things that God doth; no man ſhould judg or cenſure that which he doth not, cannot know, and fully underſtand: But uſually they who underſtand things leaſt, cenſure them moſt, and they are moſt apt to judg, who have the weakeſt judgments.

VERS. 6, 7, 8.

For he ſaith to the ſnow, be thou on the earth: likewiſe to the ſmall rain, and to the great rain of his ſtrength.

He ſealeth up the hand of every man, that all men may know his work.

Then the beaſts go into dens, and remain in their places.

Elihu having ſet forth the wonders of divine power in Thunder and Lightning, gives us other inſtances, to the ſame purpoſe, in this context.

Firſt, In the Snow.

Secondly, In the Rain. And he deſcribes the Snow and Rain three ways.

Firſt, By pointing at their Author or producer, in the 6. verſe [He] that is, God, of whom he ſpake in the cloſe of the former verſe.

Secondly, He ſheweth the way or manner of their production [he ſaith] 'tis done by a word, or command, that is, by a word of command; he ſaith to the Snow, he likewiſe ſaith to the ſmall Rain, and to the great Rain of his ſtrength, be ye on the earth.

Thirdly, He deſcribes the effects, or conſequences, at leaſt, of Snow and Rain; and thoſe are of two ſorts.

Firſt, What reſpects man, at the 7. verſe, He ſealeth up the hand of every man, that all men may know his work. There we have the firſt effect, the ſealing of mans hand, together with the deſign or intent of God in it, that all men may know his work.

The ſecond effect reſpects the beaſts of the earth, at the 8. verſe; then, that is, when God hath commanded the Snow and the Rain to be on the earth, then the beaſts go into dens and remain in their places. Thus we may conceive the parts and general ſcope of theſe three verſes.

Verſ. 6. For, he ſaith to the Snow.

That cauſal particle [for] in the front of this verſe, imports a reaſon, or an account given in theſe words, of what was ſaid before at the 5. verſe, God doth great things which we cannot comprehend; then preſently followeth, for he ſaith to the Snow, &c. As if Elihu had ſaid, not only are Thunder and Lightning, but Snow and Rain to be numbred and reckoned among the great and marvellous works of God; for he ſaith to the Snow.

He ſaith;] That is, as hath been ſhewed already, he commandeth. What God ſaith, ſhall be, muſt be, his words are Laws, he ſaith to, or commandeth the Snow Not only doth God give commands to rational creatures, men & Angels, but to meer ſenſitive creatures, the beaſts, & to ſenſleſs creatures, vegetatives or plants, yea, to inanimates, to things without any life at all, ſuch are Snow & Rain; yet, as if Snow & Rain had an ear to hear, and an underſtanding to mind a command from God, the Text repreſents God ſpeaking to theſe,

He ſaith to the Snow, &c.] The Snow falls in ſilver ſhowers every year, and covers the face of the earth; All men behold it, but few underſtand either what it is, or why it is ſent. Take this brief deſcription of it from the School of Nature:

Snow is a moiſt vapour, drawn up from the earth, to, or near the middle region of the Air, where it is condenſed or thickned into a Cloud, and falls down again like carded wool, ſometimes in greater, ſometimes in leſſer flakes.

Nix eſt vapor humidus in mediam aeris regionem ſubvectus, ubi in nubem condenſatur & congelatus, inſtar lanæ carminatæ deſcendit per partes, interdum magnas, interdum exiguas, antequam in guttas reſolvatur. Garcæ Meteor. c 29.

Snow and Rain, are made of the ſame matter, and have their breeding in the ſame place, only they differ in their outward form, as is obvious to the eye, and their ſeaſon; Rain falleth in the warmer ſeaſons, the Clouds being diſſolved into Rain by heat, or when the cold is more remiſs; Snow falleth in the ſharper ſeaſons, the cloud being thickned by the cold. Hence Solomon's compariſon (Prov. 26. 1.) As Snow in Summer, ſo honour is not comely for a fool. Snow is a goodly white robe upon the Winter-body of the earth, or upon the body of the earth in Winter; yet how unſeemly is it upon the body of the earth in Summer, hiding and obſcuring, as well as hurting that which is the natural beauty and ornament of it; Thus honour is a precious robe, yet no way fitting the back of a fooliſh or undeſerving perſon. Snow is very improper and unnatural in Summer, becauſe the coldneſs of it hinders the ripening of the corn, and other fruits of the earth: And therefore when Solomon ſaith (Chap. 25. 13.) As the cold of ſnow in the time of Summer, ſo is a faithful meſſenger to him that ſendeth him. His meaning is not, that the falling of Snow is either comfortable or ſeaſonable in the time of Summer, but that Snow gathered in Winter, and reſerved (as the cuſtom is in hot Countries) till Summer, being put into drink doth exceedingly cool it, and ſo refreſheth thoſe who are ready to faint with heat.

But not to go further from the Text in hand; we ſee that Snow and Rain have the ſame original, both being formed out of vapours. As in man's body (who is a little world) from the Stomach there riſe up vapours to the Head, which by the coldneſs of the brain are changed into, and ſent back again in Rheums and Catarrhs: So vapours drawn up from the Earth into the Air, are ſent back in Snow and Rain. Solomon deſcribing the infirmities of old age, alludes to this, while he warns the young man, that thus the Clouds will return after the Rain (Eccl. 12. 2.) which may be underſtood either more generally of that ſucceſſion of troubles to which old age is ſubject, or more particularly of Rheum and Flegm wherewith old age is moleſted; the defluxion of the Rheum being as the Rain, and the gathering of new matter, which continually diſtilleth from the Head upon the Lungs, being as the returning of the Clouds after the Rain. He ſaith to the Snow

Be thou on the earth.] The place where Snow is generated is in the Air, from thence it receives a command to diſpatch it ſelf to the Earth, and there to abide; He ſaith to the Snow, be thou on the Earth, that is, cover the face of the earth, be thou as a mantle upon the earth, or as a white ſheet ſpread over the whole face of it, until I call or take thee off and diſſolve thee into water. The ſame command which is here expreſt concerning the Snow, is alſo ſent forth to the Rain; He ſaith to the Snow, be thou on the earth,

Imber eſt agmen cœleſtium aquarum & pluviarum. Nonius.

Likewiſe to the ſmall rain, &c.] That is, he ſaith to the ſmall Rain, do thou deſcend upon the earth. By ſmall Rain is meant any gentle Rain, ſoftly and ſweetly dropping and diſtilling out of the Clouds. Now as God orders this ſmall Rain, ſo likewiſe, as it followeth, Coacervatio hæc nominũ & genitivus ille pluralis vehementiſſimum & proccelloſum imbrem ſignificat. Merc.

The great Rain of his ſtrength.] The whole Original Text, which we render the ſmall Rain and the great Rain of his ſtrength, hath a great elegancy in it, word for word thus, He ſaith to the ſhower of Rain, and to the ſhower of Rains of his ſtrength. The word Rain in both is the ſame, only the former is in the ſingular, and the latter in the plural number, which heightens or increaſeth the ſenſe, as Criticks and Grammarians tell us, and therefore we render ſmall Rain and great Rain; to which Elihu gives this further addition in the cloſe of the verſe, The great Rain

Cum duo nomina copulantur idem fere ſignificantia quorum poſterius ponitur loco adjectivi alterũ determinantis, ſi fuerit pluralis numeri erit ſuperlativæ ſignificationis. Bold.

Of his ſtrength.] Of whoſe ſtrength? ſurely of the ſtrength of God; as if God did in ſome rain put forth his mighty ſtrength, and make bare his own Arm in the ſhowers which he ſends upon the earth. The great rain of his ſtrength is that violent rain which comes forth from God and ſhews forth to us the great ſtrength of God: For neither of thoſe two Epithetes ſmall and great are expreſly in the Text, yet both the ſcope and Grammatical conſtruction of the words juſtifie that Tranſlation, A ſhower of Rain in the ſingular number implying a mild gentle Rain, or, as we call it, a ſmall Rain; and a ſhower of Rains in the plural number implying a continued, vehement, fierce Rain, or as we call it, a great Rain, eſpecially having that remarkable adjunct following, of his ſtrength. When the Lord promiſed to give ſhowers of Rain for the King (Zach. 10.1.) He meant a plentiful ſtrong Rain; by which alſo he intended to ſignifie the abundance of ſpiritual gifts and graces, which he would pour down upon the Church. So much for the opening of this Verſe, For he ſaith to the Snow, be thou on the Earth, likewiſe to the ſmall Rain, and to the great Rain of his ſtrength.

Firſt, From the cauſal Particle, for, which referreth to the former words, God doth marvelous things which we cannot comprehend, for, he ſaith to the Snow, and to the ſmall Rain, &c.

Obſerve, The Snow and Rain are to be written in the Catalogue of Gods wonderful works.

What more common than Snow and Rain? And yet, as common as they are, that have wonders in them. Some of the Ancients have obſerved many wonders in the Snow, ſuch as theſe:

Firſt, That being in its own nature ſo extremely cold, yet it is formed in that part of the Air which is comparatively near the earth, and ſo hath more heat in it.

Secondly, That Snow being ſo exceeding cold, doth yet by God's command fall in ſome very hot Countries, even in the hotteſt of Summer. Geographers tell us of Snow in many places of Tartary, which are extremely hot.

Plin. lib. 6. cap. 32. Nat. Hiſtor.

Thirdly, They give this as a wonder, That whereas it never ſnows at all upon the Main Ocean, yet there is an Iſland ſpoken of by Pliny, called (Nivaria from Nix) the Snow Iſle, which though compaſſed with the Sea, is always covered with Snow.

Fourthly, This is given as a wonder, That the Snow being ſo apt to melt by heat, yet Mount Ætna, which is full of Sulphur, and caſts out flames of fire continually, hath the head of it hidden continually under or covered with a Cap of Snow.

Fiftly, That in ſome places Worms are bred and live in the Snow of a fiery colour.

Sixthly, That the Snow, thoug it be very cold and chilling, hath in it a fecundating or fatning power, as to the earth, is alſo wonderful. Snow is a great cheriſher and nouriſher of Plants and Trees, of Corn and Graſs; and therefore David ſaith (Pſal. 147. 15, 16.) He giveth Snow like Wool, and hoary Froſt like aſhes. There are three things conſiderable in Snow, for which it is compared to Wool. Firſt, for the whiteneſs of it, Snow is white as Wool; Snow is ſo exceeding white, that the whiteneſs of a Soul cleanſed by pardoning Grace, in the blood of Chriſt, is likened to it (Iſa. 1. 18.) and the latter part of the ſame Verſe intimates, that the whiteneſs of Snow bears reſemblance to that of Wool. The Whiteneſs of Snow is cauſed by the abundance of Air and Spirits that are in that pellucid Body, as the Naturaliſts ſpeak: Any thing that is of a watery ſubſtance being frozen or much wrought upon by cold, appears more white. And hence it is that all perſons inhabiting cold Climates or Countries, are of a whiter complexion than they who inhabit hot.

Cauſa albedinis eſt Spiritus aeriſque copia in corpore diaphano. Ariſt. lib. 2 de Mundo.

Secondly, Snow is like Wool for ſoftneſs, 'tis as plyable to the hand, as a Lock or Fleece of Wool.

Thirdly Snow is like Wool (which may ſeem ſtrange) with reſpect to the warmneſs of it. Though Snow be cold in it ſelf, as I ſaid before, yet it is to the earth as Wool, or as a woolen cloth or blanket, that keeps the Body warm. Snow is not warm formally, yet it is warm effectively and virtually, and therefore is it compared to Wool; and for that reſpect alſo the hoary Froſt is ſaid to be like aſhes, in the ſame place of the Pſalm: Aſhes are warm, Froſt is cold, yet that is a known expreſſion, burning cold, that is, there is an effect in Froſt, in the hoary Froſt, of heat; things are kept warm by that which is contrary to warmth, Froſt and Snow. Naturaliſts have beat their Brains, but can aſſign no ſatisfying reaſon of theſe things, and therefore we muſt aſcribe them eſpecially to the power and wiſdom of God. Theſe particulars laid together are a ſufficient witneſs, that even Snow and Rain are to reckoned with, and numbred among the wonderful works of God.

Urins frigus. Pruinâ dici volunt Grammatici quaſi urinâ, quod urat arbores & flores.

Hence Note, Secondly God can do what he will by a word ſpeaking.

And as himſelf can do what he will by his word, ſo he can make the creature do what he will by his word. This goodly Fabrick of the World was made by his word, and all the creatures in the World will preſently act upon a word from God (Pſal. 33. 9.) He ſpake and it was done, he commanded and it ſtood faſt; God's ſaying is doing. This is a point of high conſolation to all the people of God; whatever their affliction is, God can command them out of it; whatever their wants are, God can command a ſupply for them. He that ſaith to the natural Snow and to the Rain, to Storms and Tempeſts, be ye upon the earth, can alſo ſay to the Snow and Rain, to the Storms and Tempeſts of trouble, be ye not upon the earth; he can do or undo, by his word, as himſelf pleaſeth. 'Tis alſo matter of great terror to all that riſe up againſt, and diſobey the word of the great God; for though they ſee nothing at hand to interrupt them, nothing to check them in the way of their luſts, though they look upon themſelves beyond the reach of danger, yet 'tis but a word ſpeaking from God, and they are wrapt up in Snow, and hurrican'd with a Storm and Tempeſt; He ſaith to the Snow, &c. This irreſiſtible force of a word from God, was noted alſo upon thoſe words in the Ninth Chapter (Verſ. 7.) He commandeth the Sun and it riſeth not. The Sun will not appear, or it will hide it ſelf in an Eclipſe, or Cloud, and darken the whole earth, if God do but give a command.

Thirdly, Take the point yet more ſtrictly and reſtrainedly, as here in the Text, He ſaith to the Snow and to the Rain, Snow and Rain are at the command of God.

* (Pſal. 147. 15, 16.) He ſendeth forth his commandment upon earth, his word runneth very ſwiftly; that word refers to the particular matter in hand, as appeareth in the very next Verſe, and the two which follow; He giveth Snow like Wool, he ſcattereth the haor Froſt like aſhes, he caſteth forth his Ice like morſels, &c. David applies the ſwift running of God's word to theſe things; and how ſwiftly theſe run on his errants we may ſee (1 Kings 18. 44.) For whereas there had been no Rain for three Years and a half, according to the word of Elijah the Prophet, God did but ſay to the Rain, come, and it came; and though Elijah's Servant, at firſt, ſaw a very ſmall appearance of it, only a Cloud like a mans hand, yet preſently the whole Heavens were masked over with Clouds, and there was a mighty Rain. The great Rain of his ſtrength. Rain, and Snow, and Vapours quickly fulfil his word (Pſal. 148. 8.) God is the Lord of Hoſts, and theſe creatures are his Hoſt, theſe as well as men and Angels are his Hoſts (Pſalm. 24. 10.) Who is this King of glory? The Lord of Hoſts is the King of glory; and 'tis the great glory of God, that he hath ſuch Hoſts at his command: None of the Princes or Powers of this World have any ſuch; how long may they ſend their commands to the Snow before it will come, or to the Rain before they can get a drop of it! Neither the one nor the other will ſtir at the command of man, but at the command of God they haſte away.

Non tibi videantur caſibus moveri qui verbo Dei in omni motu ſuo deſerviunt. Quo vult Deus illuc fertur nubes ſive pluviam ſive nivem ſive grandinem portat. Auguſt. in Pſal. 148.

And if when the Lord ſaith to the Snow and to the Rain, come, and they come, abide upon the earth, and they abide there, how will this reprove and condemn Thouſands of the children of men, to whom the Lord ſpeaks and ſpeaks again and again, he ſends out his commandment, and his word runs very ſwiftly to them, yet they ſtir not, they move not! Surely Snow and Rain will riſe up in judgment againſt thoſe, to whom the Lord hath ſaid, Do this, and they did it not, to whom the Lord hath ſaid, Do not this, yet they did it. The word repreſents all ſorts of Creatures below man, as well as the Angels above man, readily obeying the command of God, to teach man how readily he ſhould obey his commands, and how greatly he ſhall be comdemned if he do not, and that not only by the Angels in Heaven, but by the Snow and Rain that fall upon the earth.

Fourthly, From the diſtinction which is here made of the Rain, the ſmall Rain, and the great Rain of his ſtrength,

Note, In what degree or quantity ſoever the Rain falls, it is by the ſpecial appointment of God.

If it be a ſmall, gentle, ſoaking Rain, it is becauſe God hath ſpoken to the ſmall Rain to go; if it be a great, a violent, a ſmoaking rain, a rain of his ſtrength, it is becauſe God hath ſaid to the great rain, go: We are not to ſtick in ſecond cauſes, but to have our hearts raiſed higher, both as to the rain it ſelf, and to the proportions of it. He maketh ſmall the drops of rain, as 'tis ſaid at the 27. verſe of the former Chapter, and he can make great the drops of rain, or the drops of rain great; he can caſt the rain into what mold he pleaſeth, great or ſmall; it ſhall be a ſweetly-diſtilling rain, or it ſhall be, as Solomon ſpeaks, a fiercely ſweeping rain, (Prov. 28. 3.) where he compares the poor man that oppreſſeth to a ſweeping rain. God hath ſweeping rains, and as 'tis ſaid (Ezek. 13. 13.) overflowing ſhowers in his hand; and he ſometimes ſends, not a watering ſhower, not a refreſhing or comforting ſhower in mercy, not a ſhower to enrich and fatten the earth, but an overflowing ſhower to drown the earth and deſtroy the fruits of it in his anger; and this is true, whether you take the ſhower properly, or metaphorically. If you take the ſhower properly for that which falls from heaven, he ſends the refreſhing, and he ſends the overflowing ſhower; or if you take it metaphorically (a ſhower may ſignifie any kind or degree of judgment) he can ſend one judgment which ſhall be as a ſmall rain, and he can ſend another which ſhall be as great rain, as the rain of his ſtrength, an overflowing ſhower: He can ſend forth (as that alluſion is uſed, Jer. 12. 5.) his footmen, and he can ſend forth his horſemen, greater or leſſer Judgments, as himſelf pleaſeth; he proportions and cuts them out according to his own infinite wiſdom and righteous will.

Laſtly, From theſe words, He ſaith to the ſnow, abide on the earth, or be thou on the earth, ſtay there; and ſo to the rain,

> Obſerve, Snow or Rain continue or ſtay upon the face of the earth till God calls them off.

When he ſaith, be ye upon the earth, upon the earth they will be, until the ſame power that ſent them, fetch them back again. Theſe hoſts are like a well-ordered and well-diſciplined army, wherein Soldiers ſent out by the order of their General or ſuperior Officers, muſt ſtay at their poſt where they are appointed, they muſt abide, till called off, upon pain of death: Be thou there, ſaith the Commander to his Soldier, be thou there till I fetch thee off; and when, after ſignal given, the battel begins, the Soldier never leaves charging or purſuing the enemy, till the Trumpet ſound a retreat. So 'tis in this caſe, God ſaith to the Rain, be upon the earth till thou haſt wrought my purpoſe and done all my pleaſure, and there it is.

Thus we ſee the efficacy of God's command upon theſe Meteors, the Snow and the Rain; now follow the effects, or what comes of it.

Firſt, We have that effect which reſpects man;

Verſ. 7. He ſealeth up the hand of every man.

He,] That is, God,

Sealeth up the hand;] Sealing, in Scripture, hath a threefold ſignification.

Firſt, It notes the hiding of a thing, or the keeping of it ſecret and cloſe; that which is ſealed, is alſo concealed (Iſa. 8. 16.) Bind up the Teſtimony, ſeal the Law among my diſciples. There is a time wherein God commands the Law to be ſealed, and the Teſtimony to be bound up, and that is a very ſad time; for though there are various apprehenſions about the meaning of this command given the Prophet, yet the moſt probable intendment of it is, that God would not have him loſe any more time in dealing with thoſe faithleſs and prophane ſcoffers of his meſſage, but reſerve thoſe ſacred myſteries, as ſecrets, to be communicated only to the faithful, who would with due reverence and faith religiouſly receive them. Seal the Law among, or for my diſciples, that is, ſuch as deſire to learn, or have been taught and learned of me, and by learning are become ſpiritually skilful and learned, as the word is rendred (Iſa. 50. 4.) Wo to ſinners when the Teſtimony is bound and the Law ſealed; which is the import (I conceive) of that place in the ſame Prophet (Iſa. 29. 11.) And when in the Revelation (Chap. 4. 1.) a Book ſealed with ſeven ſeals was ſhewed to John, he wept (verſ. 4.) becauſe no man was found worthy to open, and to read the Book, &c. implying, that the Book was full of divine ſecrets, hidden from the eyes or underſtandings of men, and ſo muſt have continued, if the Lion of the Tribe of Judah, the Root of David, that is, the Lord Jeſus Chriſt, had not prevailed to open the Book, and to looſe the ſeven ſeals thereof. Sealed things are hidden things. Is not this (ſaid the Lord, Deut. 32. 34.) laid up in ſtore with me, and ſealed up among my treaſures? That is, is it not kept cloſe and hidden there? are not their curſed treaſures of ſin laid up among my righteous treaſures of wrath? The Church (Cant. 4. 12.) is called, a Fountain ſealed, becauſe the waters by which ſhe is refreſhed and made fruitful are a hidden thing to the world, or becauſe the Church muſt keep her ſelf apart and diſtinct from the prophane and unbelieving world. That's one thing, we ſeal what we would hide or keep cloſe.

Secondly, The word importeth ſometimes, to finiſh or compleat a thing. When a Writing is perfected then we ſeal it, when a Letter is made up we ſeal it; to that purpoſe the word is uſed (Dan. 9. 24.) Where the Prophet ſpeaking of Chriſt's coming in the fleſh, and what he ſhould then do, ſaith, He ſhall finiſh tranſgreſſion, that is, he ſhall compleat, by the ſacrifice of himſelf, all the ſacrifices for tranſgreſſion. Chriſt had no hand in any tranſgreſſion, as to the doing of it, but in this ſenſe he finiſhed all tranſgreſſion; that is, he finiſhed the ſacrifices of attonement for tranſgreſſion, that ſo our tranſgreſſions might not be charged upon us. Further, that word, as there uſed, may very well bear the firſt ſenſe of ſealing; He ſhall ſeal tranſgreſſion, that is, he ſhall cover or hide our tranſgreſſions, for that is the effect of the Mediatorſhip of Jeſus Chriſt.

Thirdly, To ſeal a thing is (in common ſenſe) to confirm it (Jer. 32. 10. 11.) I (ſaid the Prophet) ſubſcribed the Evidence and ſealed it; that is, I confirmed it and made it good in Law. Now when 'tis ſaid here, He ſealeth up the hand of every man, I conceive we are to take it in the firſt ſenſe, that is, he hideth or ſhuts up every man's hand. The hand is the chief inſtrument of working, and therefore to ſay, God ſhuts up or ſeals the hand, is an elegant Metaphor, ſignifying that God puts a ſtop or ſtay to, or that he takes men off from their work. If a man's hands be bound or ſealed up he cannot uſe them.

But how doth God ſeal up the hand of every man, of every working man or labourer? By the Snow and by the Rain, ſaith Elihu; becauſe when God ſends abundance of Snow upon the earth, or when he ſends the great Rain of his ſtrength, men cannot work; in a deep ſnow, or in a great rain without doors, Labourers are hindered from their labour: And hence anciently, Winter had this title given it, dull or ſluggiſh Winter; becauſe in the extremity of winter weather, many men are forced to ſit (as we ſay) with their hands in their pockets, or folded under their arms. He ſealeth up the hand of every man, that is, by tempeſtuous and foul weather, he binds their hands and preſſeth them together as with a Seal.

Hyems iners dicitur quod homines cogat deſidere inertes & complicatis manibus.

The Hebrew is, In the hand he will ſeal, or, ſealeth every man. From which strict reading, ſome have made a very impious interpretation of this Text, thereupon grounding that (as moſt uſe it) moſt unwarrantable Art of Chiromancy, as if God did put certain Lines, Prints, or Seals upon the hand of every man, from whence it may be collected and concluded, what (as ſome call it) his Fortune or Deſtiny will be in the world. Which, as it is an opinion wicked in it ſelf, ſo altogether heterogeneal to this place, the tendency whereof is not to ſhew how things ſhall work with men hereafter, but how they are often hindered or ſtopt in, or from their preſent work.

In manu omnes homines obſignabit. Mont.

There is yet another reading of the place, thus, He ſealeth up every man with ſtrength. The word which we tranſlate hand, they tranſlate ſtrength, and refer it to God; he with ſtrength, or by his mighty power ſhuts up every man. The word hand may be rendred ſtrength, becauſe by the hand men act violently and put forth their ſtrength. And God may be ſaid to ſhew his ſtrength in ſo ſoft and fluid a thing as ſnow and rain, that thereby he may give proof, how eaſily, or with how ſmall a matter, in appearance, he can ſtop any any man from his work and purpoſe. There is a truth in this reading, but I rather take the words as they ſtand in our tranſlation, not as noting the hand or power of God ſealing men, but God's ſealing the hands of men, putting them off from or beſides their labour. Thus by Snow and Rain he ſealeth or ſhutteth up the hand of every man; and why ſo? the reaſon is given in the next words, ביד Vehementia omnem hominem recludit. Merc. pagn.

That all men might know his work.

God by extraordinary Snows and Rains ſtops men from their work. But what, Is it that they ſhould be idle? No, but that they may know his work. Whoſe work?

Some underſtand it of mans own work; As if the meaning were this; God ſtops men a while from further or preſent work, that they may take a view of their paſt works; or he takes them off from their civil works and employments, that they may employ themſelves in conſidering their moral works; as the Prophet admoniſhed the Jews (Iſa. 1. 5.) Now therefore, thus ſaith the Lord of hoſts, conſider your ways. Another Prophet reproved them for the neglect of this duty (Jer. 8. 6.) No man ſaith, what have I done? The Lord often brings his people to hard ſufferings that they may know their own doings or works. This is a profitable ſenſe; yet I rather conceive that the work here intended is Gods work, and ſo I ſhall proſecute the words, That all men may know his work.

This work of God may be taken two ways.

Firſt, More ſtrictly; thus God by rain ſhuts up the hands of men from their work, that they may know, thoſe extraordinary ſtorms of Snow and Rain, which drive them in from their labour, and ſhut up their hands from working, are his ſpecial work. Great Snows and Rains declare to all men the great power of God, who doth not only aſtoniſh men by terrible thunder and lightning, but can by Snow and Rain (his much weaker weapons) put them beſide their purpoſe, and ſtop their work.

Secondly, Take his work more largely; God ſealeth up the hands of men, that they having a vacancy from their own work may conſider his; he doth as it were force them from what they were doing or intended to do, that ſo they may have leiſure to take notice of what he hath done, That all men may know his work.

Hence note; Firſt, God can hinder or ſtop any man or all men in their work.

He, when, and as he pleaſeth, can ſeal up the hand of every man. If God hath a mind to work, none can lett him (Iſa. 43. 13.) Who can ſeal the hand of God? I may ſay alſo, whoſe hand cannot God ſeal? How eaſily did the Lord ſeal up the hand of the builders of Babel (Gen. 11.7.) They were hot upon a mighty work; but God by confounding their tongues, ſealed their hands, and they (as 'tis ſaid, verſ. 8.) Left off to build the City.

Secondly, When the Text ſaith, God ſealeth up the hand of every man, that all men may know his work.

Obſerve, How diligent ſoever men are about their own works, yet they are ſlow enough, too too ſlow to take notice of the works of God.

When the hand of God is lifted up ſome will not ſee it, they are not only backward to ſee it, but oppoſite to the ſeeing of it; and though others do not ſet themſelves againſt, yet they do not ſet themſelves to the knowledg of his works. 'Tis a great and common ſin, our not ſtudying to know the works of God; we ſhould ſtudy the works of God as much as we do the word of God; we ſhould ſtudy both his work of Creation, and his works of Providence, whether works of Mercy, or of Judgment; we ſhould endeavour to know all his works.

From the univerſality of the expreſſion, that all men may know his work,

Note, God would have all ſtudy this Book, the book of his works.

They whoſe buſineſs and labours lie in fields, the Ploughmen and the Vine-dreſſers, he would have them know his works, as thoſe ſpecial works of his, the Snow and the Rain, ſo his works in general. The meaneſt of men cannot excuſe their ignorance of the works of God, ſeeing the Text and Point tell us, God drives them many times out of the field, home to their houſes, and will not let them do a ſtroak of work more abroad, on purpoſe that they might know his work.

Hence note, Thirdly, The aim and intendment of God in keeping us at any time from our work, is that we may know more of his works.

It is a great part of our wiſdom to anſwer the deſigns of God in all his providences to us. We ſeldom think what God intends by a wet day, by a rainy day, by a tempeſtuous day, we little think the aim of God in calling us from our works, is to call us to the conſideration of his work. Some men would never find a time to beſtow their thoughts upon the works of God, if God did not take them off from their own work; they would never be at leiſure, if he did not give them a leiſure, a vacation time, and as here in this Text, ſeal up their hand. God hath various ways to take men off from the hotteſt purſuits of their own works; he takes many off from them by ſickneſs, he binds them as Priſoners to their beds; others are taken off from their own buſineſs by proper impriſonment, and reſtraint of liberty; and why? what is the reaſon of this? is it not that they may know his work, that they may well conſider the dealings of God with them? A ſick bed is a School, and ſo is a Priſon, where we ſhould ſtudy both the Word and Works of God. Let us remember, whenever God takes us off from our Callings by ſickneſs, or reſtraineth our liberty by impriſonment, his gracious purpoſe is, that we may know his work. Poſſibly when we had liberty to go about our own work, we could find little, or would not find much leiſure to meditate upon the works of God. Well, ſaith God, I ſee I muſt take you off from your works, elſe you will never be Students in mine. That's the effect of Snow and Rain, with reference to man, He ſealeth up the hand of every man, that all men may know his work.

But here we have another effect, with reſpect to beaſts.

Verſ. 8. Then the beaſts go into dens, and remain in their places.

There are two words in the Hebrew which ſignifie brutes, or beaſts. The word here uſed properly ſignifies wild beaſts, the other tame beaſts, ſuch as are for our uſe, and brought up to our hand. The Text intends the wild beaſts, the beaſts of the forreſt, the beaſts of prey, they go into dens, theſe ſeek ſhelter in ſnow time, or when the great rain of the ſtrength of God falleth upon the earth. The Pſalmiſt (Pſal. 104. 20.) deſcribes the beaſts ordinarily going out of their dens when the night comes; Then (ſaith he) all the beaſts of the forreſt go forth. Here we have the beaſts, whether night or day, driven to their dens by a ſtorm, or by the Snow; then they go to their dens and places of ſhelter, or, as we ſpeak, to Covert. The word rendred Dens, ſignifies a place of ambuſh, or of lying in wait; ſuch are the dens of wild beaſts; as it is ſaid of the wicked (Pſal. 10.9.) He lieth in wait ſecretly, as a Lion in his den, to catch the poor, &c. It is this word. Such kind of retreats have the wild beaſts, they have their dens, which are alſo places to watch for their prey: And as they often go to their dens upon choice, or of their own accord, ſo they are ſometimes driven to them (as in the Text) for ſhelter againſt a ſtorm. Then the beaſts go into dens,

חיה Potius fera quam beſtia, à vivacitate, nam eadem vox vitam ſignificat. Druſ.

ארב Ereb, a verbo Arab, inſidiari. Et ingreditur beſtia in inſidias, i. e. in latibula unde inſidiatur. Merc.

And remain in their places.] They not only go into dens, but there they remain, they keep home, the ſtorm keeps them in. As when the flood of waters, the great rain of God's ſtrength, was upon the earth, Noah was ſhut into the Ark, and there he remained (Gen. 7.) he did not only go in, but ſtayed in till the flood was aſſwaged; ſo it is ſaid here of the beaſts, they remain in their places, they will not budg nor peep out till the ſtorm be over.

Hence Note, Firſt, The Providences of God in various ſeaſons, affect the very beaſts of the earth.

Thoſe creatures which live only a life of ſenſe, yet partake ſomewhat of reaſon, at leaſt, they act according to reaſon; they are ſenſible of what God doth, though they know not that he doth it. And is not this a great reproof to thoſe, who are not only not ſenſible of, but ſlight thoſe ſeverer diſpenſations of God? how beaſt-like are thoſe men, who have not ſo much ſenſe of the dealings of God as the beaſts have! who though they have a knowledg beyond brutes, yet they uſe their knowledg no better, no not ſo well as brutes; and ſo they are either (as the Prophet ſaith) bruetiſh in their knowledg, or as the Apoſtle Peter (2 Pet. 2. 12.) They are as brute beaſts (in humane ſhape) made to be taken and deſtroyed. How can they avoid being taken and deſtroyed by the judgments of God, or as Elihu expreſſeth it, by the great rain of his ſtrength, who take not ſo much notice of them, as to ſee their danger and get into a hiding place? For,

Secondly, When the beaſts go into dens and remain in their places, what is it that moves them to it? Surely 'tis to be (as we ſay) out of harms way.

Hence note, Every creature by the light of nature would get out of danger.

Great ſnows and rains of ſtrength are dangerous or grievous to beaſts, therefore they avoid them; they will not ſtand in the open Air while a ſtorm laſts, if they can help it. Beaſts will ſave themſelves as well as they can; and if ſo, then take theſe two inferences from it.

Firſt, For our inſtruction. We are ſent to School by God himſelf more than once to the Beaſts and creeping things of the Earth. Solomon ſends us to the Ant, a creeping thing, he bids us conſider her ways, and be wiſe. Elihu, in this Text, ſends us to the wild Beaſts of the Earth, to Lions and Bears, to Tigers and Wolves, and bids us conſider their ways and be wiſe. Here is matter of inſtruction for us; What is that? Get out of harms way, make haſte out of danger; when the cold Snow comes, and the great Rain of the ſtrength of God, take heed you be not found abroad without a ſhelter. Surely God who hath provided dens for the beaſts, and places for thoſe wild creatures to hide themſelves in, hath not left us without a hiding-place, when the great rains of trouble fall, or threaten to fall. God invited his people of old, where to look for and whither to go for ſhelter in ſuch a rainy day (*Iſa.*26.20.) Come my people, enter thou into thy Chambers, and ſhut thy door about thee; hide thy ſelf as it were for a little moment, until the indignation be over paſt. For, Behold, the Lord cometh out of his place to puniſh the Inhabitants of the earth for their iniquity. As if he had ſaid, Hide your ſelves till the ſtorm be over, till the great rain of my ſtrength be gone. God, who hath put an inſtinct into the creatures to go to their dens, to their places in a ſtormy ſeaſon, doth ſpecially call to men, and among men, ſpecially to his own people, when 'tis a time of indignation, to go into their Chambers and hide themſelves till it be overblown. Do not ſtand out in the rain, do not ſtand in the ſtorm, get into your chambers; what are theſe Chambers? ſurely not the chambers of our houſes, they are poor refuges, the rain of his ſtrength will break or ſoak into thoſe chambers, how well ſoever roofed or cieled. The chambers in which the people of God are called to hide themſelves, are God himſelf; the Power of God, the Faithfulneſs of God, the Truth of God, the Goodneſs of God, in theſe Chambers he calls his people to hide themſelves. Solomon aſſureth us (Prov. 81. 10.) The Name of the Lord is a ſtrong tower, the righteous runneth into it and is ſafe. As God hath taught the beaſts to run into their dens, ſo he inſtructs us in his Word to run into his Name, as to a ſtrong tower, where we may be ſafe. David ſaid (*Pſal.*57. 1.) Under the ſhadow of thy Wings ſhall be my refuge until this calamity be overpaſt; That is, I will put my ſelf under thy protection, while the ſtormy ſhowers laſt. The Hen gathereth her young ones under her wings; ſo would Chriſt the Jewiſh Nation, both for comfort and ſafety, and they refuſed him; What followed? The next verſe tells us, Deſolation. What could ſave them when the Roman Eagle ſpread her wings againſt them, who would not come under the wing of Jeſus Chriſt! (Matth. 23. 37.) 'Tis not any worldly refuge, not any arm of fleſh, but the ſhadow of the Lord's wings that can hide us in an evil day from the evil of the day. They who get and keep cloſe to God by Faith, need not fear the worſt ſtorms which this world can raiſe againſt them.

And hence, let ſinners in general take warning; ſuppoſe you ſhould live all your days in this world without a ſtorm, I mean, without any outward trouble, yet remember, there will be a ſtormy day, the day of the great rain of the ſtrength of God will come, he will rain down vengeance upon all the ungodly in that day; Upon the wicked he ſhall rain ſnares, fire and brimſtone, and an horrible tempeſt in that day (Pſal. 11. 6.) Therefore ſee that you have a refuge againſt that day, when many ſhall (as it is ſaid, Rev. 6.) Call to the rocks, hide us, and to the mountains, fall upon us, cover us from the preſence of him that ſits on the Throne, and from the wrath of the Lamb. Although we ſhould have proſperity or fair weather as long as we live in this world, yet there is a day of wrath coming; be not then to ſeek of a hiding place, which is only to be had in and by Jeſus Chriſt; He is the man chiefly intended by the Prophet (Iſa. 32. 2.) That ſhall be a hiding place from the wind, and a covert from the tempeſt. If you are without him in that day, you ſtand naked to the wrath of God, and that will quickly ſoak into you, or ſink you for ever.

Secondly, As the beaſts going to their dens for ſhelter, may inſtruct us, ſo it may reprove and upbraid us, and it will be at laſt a dreadful reproof, upon all that are backward in this thing, to provide themſelves of a Covert againſt the Storm. The Jews (as hath been formerly toucht) were upbraided with the Crane, the Turtle, and the Swallow, becauſe they knew the time of their coming (*Jer.*8.7.) They knew when ſuch a Countrey would be unfit, or unſafe for their ſtay, and therefore they removed to places more comfortable to, and commodious for them: But (ſaith he) my people know not the judgment of the Lord. As if he had ſaid, my people have not ſo much wit or fore-caſt as the Crane, and the Swallow, they know not what is good and ſafe, much leſs, what is beſt and ſafeſt for themſelves; let it ſnow and rain never ſo faſt, either they ſtand it out and out-dare it, or they ſeek ſuch coverts from it, as cannot be a covering to them.

'Tis ſaid, the very Vermine, Mice and Rats, will (by a natural preſage) come out of a houſe that is ready to fall. They are more ſenſleſs than Mice or Rats, who haſten not to a place of ſafety, when they perceive the foundation of that ſinful State wherein they ſtand, ſinking, and the walls cracking on every hand. How faithleſs then are they, how preſumptuous and ſenſleſs who haſten not out of Babylon, when they hear the Scriptures of truth ſaying not only that Babylon ſhall fall, or is falling, but, as of a thing already done and paſt, Babylon is fallen, is fallen! Is it not dangerous to ſtay in a falling houſe, in a houſe which ſhall ſo certainly fall, that 'tis ſaid, and ſaid again, 'tis fallen, 'tis fallen. O take heed of a hard heart when you hear of a falling houſe, or of a ſtorm ready to fall upon your heads. When God threatned Pharaoh to bring a ſtorm of hail upon the land of Egypt (that was indeed a rain of his ſtrength) a mighty rain of hail, the Text ſaith (Exod. 9. 20.) He that feared the word of the Lord amongſt the ſervants of Pharaoh, made his ſervants and his cattle flee into the houſes; but they whoſe hearts were hardned, let them ſtay abroad, and ſo they periſhed. Sinners, you hear of a worſe ſtorm of hail threatned than that which fell upon Egypt, even the great rain of the ſtrength of the Lord's wrath, revealed from heaven againſt you; ſhall the beaſts in ſuch a day of diſtreſs go into dens, and remain in their places, and do you think to abide the day of the Lord's terrible coming? Do you think to ſtand it out when he appeareth? The Prophet foreſhewing the day of Chriſt's firſt coming in frail fleſh, ſaid (Mal. 3. 2.) Who may abide the day of his coming: and who ſhall ſtand when he appeareth? for he is like a refiners fire, and like fullers ſope. Now if the day of Chriſt's firſt coming was ſuch as ſinners could not abide, when he came only with refining fire to fetch out the droſs of their ſins, and purge away their corruptions, ſhall ſinners (impenitent and unbelieving ſinners I mean) preſume that they ſhall be able to abide or endure that day of his ſecond coming, when he ſhall come with conſuming fire to puniſh and take vengeance on them for their ſins! Away with theſe vain confidences, which (as the Prophet told the Jews, Jer. 2. 37.) the Lord will certainly reject, and in which you can never proſper, and go into thoſe holes of the rock, the wounds of a crucified Saviour, in which, and in which only, you may be ſafe and ſaved for ever, from the Snow and great Rain of God's ſtrength, the power of his anger, which none know at preſent (Pſal. 90. 11.) but all muſt feel, who are not ſheltred from it by Jeſus Chriſt, who delivereth us from the wrath to come (1 Theſ. 1. 10.)

VERS. 9, 10, 11.

Out of the South cometh the Whirlwind, and cold out of the North.

By the breath of God Froſt is given; and the breadth of the Waters is ſtraitned.

Alſo by watering he wearieth the thick Cloud: he ſcattereth his bright Cloud.

E*lihu* having ſpoken of Thunder and Lightning, as alſo of Snow and Rain, with their effects upon man and beaſt, at the 6, 7, and 8. verſes laſt opened, he in the 9. and 10. verſes ſpeaks of the Winds, with their effects; Firſt, Cold; Secondly, Froſt: or, firſt, of the Wind; ſecondly, of the Cold; and thirdly, of the Froſt; and then at the 11. verſe, of the wonderful works of God in diſpoſing and diſperſing the water in the Clouds, for the refreſhing of the earth by Rain in its ſeaſon.

In the 9. and 10. verſes (I ſay) he diſcourſeth of the Winds; and though there be four Cardinal or principal Winds, the Eaſt, Weſt, North and South, which are ſubdivided into thirty two Winds according to the Mariners Compaſs, yet here Elihu treats by name of two Winds only, the South Wind, and the North-Wind; which two are often and eminently ſpoken of in Scripture; which two, as they come from directly contrary Points in the Heavens, ſo they produce contrary effects, famouſly known among men, on earth. And therefore, I conceive, Elihu gives inſtance only about them, as being more generally taken notice of.

Verſ. 9. Out of the South cometh the Whirlwind, &c.

The word which we render the South, properly ſignifieth a Chamber, an inner Room, or ſecret place, a Chamber within a Chamber, which is the moſt private, retiring Room or Chamber. Gen. 43. 30. Judg. 16. 9. 2 Sam. 13. 10. 1 Kings 20. 30. Cant. 3. 4. We ſay, Out of the South, &c. And the reaſon why the South is expreſſed by that word which ſignifieth a ſecret Chamber, is, becauſe the South Pole is ſcituate or placed in the moſt ſecret part of the world, as to them who inhabit Northern Climates; they who live neareſt the North Pole, are fartheſt removed from the South. And as the ſame word in the Hebrew Tongue ſignifieth the South and an inner Chamber, ſo at the 9. Chapter of this Book (verſ. 9.) we read of the Chambers of the South. The Septuagint render, He bringeth the Wind, or Whirlwind, out of his Cellar. Cellars or Store-houſes being ſecret places, and removed out of ſight, for the keeping of Goods and Wares that are laid up there; and it is elegantly expreſſed, that Winds come out of Store-houſes, as if God did lay them up, till he hath occaſion to draw them forth and uſe them.

Some render it by a general word, Out of a ſecret place cometh the Whirl-wind.

ἐκ ταμιείων ἐπέρχονται ὀδύναι. E promptuariis ſuperveniunt dolores. Sept.

We ſay beſt, Out of the South; Firſt, becauſe it is expreſly oppoſed to the North in the Text; Secondly, becauſe Southern Winds are the ſtrongeſt and moſt vehement Winds, as the Northern are the coldeſt. For though we find by experience, that ſtrong Winds blow from all Quarters of Heaven, yet uſually the South brings forth the ſtrongeſt Winds; and therefore in Scripture a ſudden and violent Wind is called a Whirl-wind out of the South. When the Prophet would deſcribe an unavoidable coming of Judgment, he ſaith (Iſa. 21. 1.) As Whirl-winds in the South paſs through, ſo it cometh, &c. And again (Zech. 9. 14.) The Lord God ſhall blow the Trumpet, and ſhall go with Whirlwinds of the South. Both places expreſſing it, according to what was moſt uſually and commonly known, great Winds coming out of the South. That place (Pſal. 126. 4.) is rendred by ſome (not as we, Turn again our Captivity, O Lord, as the Streams in the South, but) Turn again our Captivity, as Storms or Whirlwinds in the South. The Church prayed that God would make ſome ſudden change of things, like that made by the Southern Storms and Whirlwinds. Yet we are not to underſtand it, as if all Southern Winds were Whirlwinds or tempeſtuous, favourable refreſhing Winds come from thence ſometimes, as may be collected from the 17. verſe of this Chapter, and from Canticles 4. verſe 16. and and as is expreſſed (Acts 27. 13.) The South Wind blew ſoftly. So that Elihu ſpeaks of what is often and uſually done, not of what is always done, when he ſaith, Out of the South cometh Redeamus tua benignitate ab exilio & captivitate, ea celeritate, qua turbo & procella erumpunt ab auſtrali plaga. Bold.

The Whirlwind] That's wind with an addition a Whirlwind is more than an ordinary wind. Wind is one of thoſe Meteors, which God the Author of Nature hath provided for the uſe of man: It is called by one of the Ancients, the agitation or flux of the Air. Much might be ſpoken about the natural cauſes and matter of winds, but I ſhall not inſiſt upon that. A Whirlwind is a tempeſtuous wind; the Greeks have a ſpecial word for it, and ſo have the Latines, both importing violence, or that which troubles and turns all upſide down, and throweth every thing out of its place: Such a boiſterous thing is the Whirlwind, 'tis a toſſing, tumbling, breaking, diſturbing wind; this Whirlwind cometh out of the South.

It cometh.] A like or the ſame expreſſion is applied to the Sun, (Pſal. 19. 3.) He hath ſet a Tabernacle for the Sun, which is as a Bridegroom coming out of his Chamber, and rejoyceth as a ſtrong man to run a Race. As the Sun cometh every morning out of his Chamber by God's appointment; ſo doth the Whirlwind at ſpecial times appointed by God. 'Tis fitly ſaid ſuch fierce and unruly winds come forth, for they are as it were kept faſt in Priſon till God takes off their Bonds, and opens their Priſon-door, and then out they come furiouſly and boiſterouſly, to do the work God hath commanded and deſigned them to. Out of the South cometh the Whirlwind.

When Elihu ſaith, The Whirlwind, the great Wind cometh out of the South, he doth not expreſs, yet intimates, who it is that brings the Whirlwind out of the South; The Whirlwind cometh, but it doth not come before it is ſent. The ſcope of Elihu all along is, to ſhew the mighty power of God in ordering and diſpoſing the Meteors, and among them theſe mighty winds.

Hence Note, Winds come at Gods appointment.

He is the Author of them, he is the diſpoſer of them, he rules their moſt unruly motions. The Heathen Poets feigned a god of the winds, whom they called Æolus, who was Pictur'd or Statued puffing the winds out of his mouth. But 'tis Jehovah who hath the winds in his power, the winds and the Whirlwind. Neither the Heathen god Æolus, nor the God of this World the Devil, nor the Devils of this World, Witches and Conjurers, have any power of their own over the leaſt breath of wind, either to raiſe or lay it. Agur deſcribing the excellency of God, both in himſelf and in his working, ſaith among other things (Prov. 30. 4.) He gathereth the Wind in his Fiſt; implying, that God hath the winds in his hand, even as a man carrieth a thing in his hand, or holdeth it in his Fiſt, keeping it there, or letting it out at pleaſure, or as he liſteth. (Pſal. 135. 7.) He bringeth the Wind out of his Treaſure. We read the ſame in the Prophet (Jer. 10. 13. Jer. 5. 1, 16.) Theſe Treaſures out of which God brings the wind, ſome call the Secrets of Nature, or ſecret natural Cauſes; but I conceive 'tis an alluſion to the Cuſtoms of men, who lay up things uſeful in private places, that they may have them at hand when occaſion calls: Chriſt teacheth us, in imitation of them, to get and keep by us ſuch Treaſuries of ſaving Truth (Mat. 13. 52.) To be ſure, God hath the winds ready, he hath a ſtore and ſtock of them, which upon any occaſion he can bring forth.

God makes a twofold uſe of the winds, or there are two general purpoſes, for which he brings them out of his Treaſures. Firſt, for good; Secondly, for hurt to the World: Firſt, in Mercy; Secondly, in Judgment.

Firſt, God brings them forth out of his Treaſures in a way of Mercy, and for good to Mankind. And there is a ſixfold good or good uſe, for which God brings the winds out of his Treaſure.

Firſt, to cleanſe and purge the Air; therefore, by ſome the winds are called, The Brooms of Heaven. When the Air is corrupt and foul, God ſweepeth it by theſe Brooms. And we find, when Judgment is threatned, a negative is put upon the wind as to this uſe, (Jer. 4. 11.) A dry wind of the High-Places of the Wilderneſs, toward the Daughter of my people, not to fan or to cleanſe, &c. Implying that one merciful uſe of the winds, is to fan and to cleanſe the Air, as Corn is fanned and cleanſed.

Venti Aquilonares dicuntur ſcopæ cœli, quod reddunt aërem mundum. Vatabl.

Secondly, God brings the winds out of his treaſure to temper the Air. When the Air is cooled by a gentle Brieze, we count it a mercy in hot ſeaſons. And ſuch is the goodneſs of God, that in thoſe places where the heat is moſt troubleſome, there are many cool Briezes. We read (Gen. 3. 8.) of the cool of the day, or (as the Margin hath it) the wind of the day, implying that the extream heat of the day is uſually aſſwaged and cooled by the wind. The Prophet (Jer. 14. 6.) deſcribing a time of drought, ſaith, The wild Aſſes did ſtand in the high places, they ſnuffed up the wind like Dragons. To ſnuff the wind in time of drought, is a great refreſhing; wind refreſheth the body as well as food, and 'tis ſome refreſhing in famine, or want of food.

Thirdly, The wind is a Rain-bringer. We ſay when the wind riſeth there will be rain. Thus (1 Kings 18. 45.) before the mighty rain which Elijah foretold, we read of a wind; The Heaven was black with clouds and wind, and there was a great rain. When Eliſha told thoſe three Kings diſtreſſed for want of water, Ye ſhall not ſee wind, neither ſhall ye ſee rain, yet that valley ſhall be filled with water (2 Kings 3. 17.) he thereby implyed, that wind is the ordinary forerunner of rain. We, indeed, tranſlate (Prov. 25. 23.) The North wind driveth away the rain; yet we put in the Margin, The North wind bringeth forth the rain. It is true of both, the wind ſcattereth and driveth away the rain, the wind alſo bringeth rain.

Fourthly, The wind cauſeth vegetables to flouriſh. A ſweet gale of wind is not only good for man and beaſt, but for the graſs, and for the herbs, for plants and trees, the blowing of the winds maketh them flouriſh; in alluſion unto which the Church ſpeaks (Cant. 4. 16.) Awake, O North wind, and come thou South, blow upon my garden, that the ſpices thereof may flow out; that is, that my Graces, my faith in thee, my love to thee, &c. may put forth and appear. The ſpiritual wind, the breathings of the Spirit, draw forth ſpiritual fruit from the heart, and in the life of believers, as the natural draws forth the natural fruits of the Earth.

Fifthly, The winds are beneficial and helpful for the drying up of the waters, they make the earth clean as well as the air. It is ſaid (Gen. 8. 1.) after the whole world was drowned, God made a wind to paſs over the earth, and the waters aſſwaged. The wind is a dryer as well us the Sun.

Sixthly, There is a great uſe of the winds, as to artificials. What mighty things are done by the wind? By it, Mills are turn'd to grind Corn at Land, and Ships are moved to carry both Men and Merchandize at Sea, there were hardly any paſſing from Nation to Nation, far disjoyned by water, but by the advantage or help of winds; by the help of winds Merchants bring treaſure and precious things from one end of the earth to the other. Theſe and many more are the common benefits of the winds, for which the Lord brings them out of his treaſures.

Secondly, The winds have their evil effects, God ſends them ſometimes for a plague, or in a way of Judgment.

Firſt, Winds often infect the air; the Lord can ſend, as a cleanſing, ſo a corrupting wind.

Secondly, As wind brings rain, ſo it hinders or blows away the rain.

Thirdly, The Lord ſends the wind to break and overthrow all that ſtands before it. What doth not the whirlwind overthrow? Houſes and Trees at Land are blown down; goodly Ships at Sea, richly laden, have been ſunk and overſet by tempeſtuous winds. God ſent a whirlwind out of his treaſure, which cauſed the Mariners in Jonah to caſt their Merchandize into the Sea, and Jonah himſelf too. What croſs and tempeſtuous winds did the Apoſtle Paul meet with in his voyage to Rome (Acts 27.)

Further, That the Lord bringeth the winds out of his treaſure, is matter of great comfort to all that have an intereſt in the Lord; He can command the winds for them, and againſt their enemies; the wind cometh out of his Chamber, and it ſhall do as he commandeth. It is ſaid (Nahum. 1. 3.) The Lord hath his way in the whirlwind, and in the ſtorm, and the clouds are the duſt of his feet: That is, he ruleth whirlwinds, he walks in and works by the whirlwind, and by ſtorms. And as we may take it properly, ſo metaphorically; that is, in the moſt tempeſtuous diſpenſations and providences, when the world is, as it were, in an Hurricane, as boiſterous winds in ſome places are called. In the greateſt concuſſions and confuſions, whether of things or perſons, the Lord carrieth on his work in a regular courſe. As the great toſſings of the air by natural winds, ſo the greateſt toſſings of affairs by the ſtrong and various paſſions of mens ſpirits in the world (which we may call civil winds, yea whirlwinds) are under the ordering of divine power and wiſdom. The Prophet (Iſa. 17. 13.) admoniſheth the wicked to take heed and give glory to God: For (ſaith he) the Nations ſhall ruſh like the ruſhing of many waters; But God ſhall rebuke them, and they ſhall flee far off, and ſhall be chaſed as the chaff of the mountains before the wind, and like a rolling thing before the whirlwind. A rolling thing is unſtedfaſt at all times, and a whirlwind will make that roul and tumble which is very ſtedfaſt; it maketh Trees to ſhake, it maketh ſtrong Towers tremble: Now if the whirlwind cauſeth things that are fixed and ſtrong to ſhake and move, what will it do to thoſe that are light and unfixed, rolling things! That which is (as men judg) fixt and ſteady as a Rock, ſhall be as a rolling thing before the whirlwind of the Lord's diſpleaſure, The Margin of our Bibles calls this rolling thing, Thiſtle-down. We know what the down of a Thiſtle is, which at ſome ſeaſons of the year falls off, and is the lighteſt thing imaginable. When there is not a breath of wind ſtirring, the Thiſtle-down will ſtir, roll, and move from place to place; what then, think you, will become of Thiſtle-down before a mighty wind, a whirlwind? The wicked ſhall be as Thiſtle-down before the whirlwind; but the people of God need not fear, for (as 'tis ſaid of the Sea, ſo of the wind) his way is in it, he rules the proper, and he rules the metaphorical whirlwinds, which toſs and tumble the ſtate and affairs of this world. To cloſe this matter,

We may take notice of ſeveral wonderful things in and about the wind; and becauſe Elihu ranks this among the great works of God, who doth marvellous things which we comprehend not, not only in Thunder and Lightning, in Snow and Rain, but in the winds, therefore I will reckon up ſeven wonders which peculiarly concern the winds.

Firſt, This is conſiderable, That there is ſcarce any Country but breeds ſome wind or other, which blows moſt there, and exerciſeth a peculiar force upon it; theſe are called Provincial Winds. The North-weſt wind (ſaith Pliny) is proper to the Athenians, other parts of Greece having little acquaintance with it. The North-eaſt wind afflicts Calabria. And that ſeveral other winds, are congenial to other Countries, whereof ſome are benign and favourable, others vexatious and uncomfortable to them, may be ſeen in the Authors quoted in the Margin.

Secondly, 'Tis a wonder that the ſame wind in one Country cauſeth fair weather, in another rain and ſtorms.

Thirdly, That the ſame wind is in one place very healthy, and in another cauſeth ſickneſs by corrupting the air, and ſo the blood and ſpirits of men. A learned Author ſaith, when*ever the South wind bloweth in ſuch a Country or City, the people fall ſick.*

Nulla propemodum regio eſt, quæ aliquem ventum ex ſe naſcentem, & circa ſe cadentem non habeat. Sen. l. 5. Natur. quæſt. c. 17. Plin. l. 1. cap. 47. In inſula Lesbo Oppidum Mytilene magnificè ædificatum eſt, ſed imprudenter poſitum, quod in ea civitate cū Auſter flat, homines ægrotant. Vitru. l. 1. c. 9.

Fourthly, That's alſo obſervable, that ſome winds are hot and dry, others cold and moiſt, according to the temperature of the places from whence they come, and through which they paſs to us.

Fifthly, 'Tis marvellous that in ſome parts of the world, the wind blows conſtantly one way; ſuch are called trade winds. Expert Sea-men know where to fetch a wind, when once they get to ſuch a point they never miſs it. The Eteſian winds are famouſly known in Hiſtory, blowing out of the Eaſt or North-eaſt yearly at one time, for the ſpace of forty days together; theſe Cicero called Anniverſary winds.

Sixthly, Yet in moſt places nothing is more unconſtant than the wind; inconſtancy it ſelf is Emblemed by the winds. No man knoweth when or where to have them certain for an hour; Hence we ſay, Take the wind while it ſerveth; Wind and Tide tarry for no man.

Seventhly, That's alſo wonderful, That winds blow at once from contrary points, North and South, &c. at the ſame time. Daniel (Chap. 7. 2.) ſaw in a viſion the four Winds ſtriving together upon the Sea; All the winds were let looſe together, contending (as it were) for victory. Naturaliſts diſpute and queſtion whether contrary winds can blow at once; Ariſtotle, the great Philoſopher, affirms they cannot, becauſe (ſaith he) the one muſt needs beat back the other. That's true; yet, what hinders but that for a time there may be ſuch a conflict or battel fought between them, as may extreamly trouble both the air and waters, and ſhake vehemently ſuch things as ſtand in their way on earth? The Natural Hiſtorian reports, That two conſiderable Cities in the Corinthian Bay, were ſuddenly ſwallowed up by the Sea, which inundation was cauſed by the fierce blowing of the North and South wind at one and the ſame time. Out of the South cometh the whirlwind,

And cold out of the North.

מִמְזָרִים A radice זרה eventilare, diſpergere. Per ventos diſpergentes intelliguntur venti aquilonares, qui diſpergunt nubes, & aerem ventilent. Boreas αἰθρηγενέτης dicitur quia gignit αἰθρίαν ſerenitatem. Homer. Odyſſ.

The Hebrew is out of the ſcattering or fanning Winds cometh cold; Mr. Broughton renders, And cold from the fair weather-Winds. Our tranſlation determines it,

Cold out of the North.] Common experience teacheth us, that the Northern coaſts are cold, yea the coldeſt coaſts: The coldeſt freezing winds come out of the North, as the ſtrongeſt out of the South. Here is North and South, and here are the ſeveral effects of them; the South breaths warmth, and the North cold.

Hence note, Cold comes at Gods call.

Now the South wind bloweth, and then 'tis warm, anon the North wind blows, and then 'tis cold. God hath his ſpecial ſtore-houſes for heat and cold, he brings cold out of his Northern ſtore-houſe, and not only heat but whirlwinds out of his ſtore-houſe in the South. Cold is diſpoſed of by God as heat is, ſometimes for the good, ſometimes for the hurt of the creature. Cold is both needful and hurtful; cold is needful to the body of man, and cold is needful to the body of the earth; therefore God hath that in his treaſure to ſerve the uſes of man with. Changes from heat to cold, ſet forth, Firſt, God's power; Secondly, His care: If the air were kept always at one rate, or in the ſame temper, neither windy nor ſtormy, neither very hot nor very cold, we poſſibly would like it better, but it would be worſe for us. Changes in the air are ſo uſeful, that nature could not be well preſerved without them; we would have all things alike, we would have it always warm weather, always fair, but God ſeeth 'tis beſt for us, there ſhould be changes in natural things for our natural good. It is alſo beſt for our ſpiritual good to have providential changes. God ſeeth it needful to leave us ſometimes under clouds and darkneſs, to bring cold as well as heat out of his treaſures, to ſend us chilling times as well as ſpringing times; cold is as good for our inner man as heat, ſtorms as calms, foul weather as fair. Now for a ſeaſon (ſaith the Apoſtle, 1 Pet. 1.6.) if need be ye are in heavineſs through manifold temptations. The coldneſs of the air kills the weeds in our grounds, ſo doth the cold of affliction and tribulation the weeds of corruption in our ſouls. Seaſonable cold makes trees and plants more fruitful in their ſeaſons: The cold nipping froſts of affliction, diſpoſe our ſouls) (through the bleſſing of God) to a gracious fruitfulneſs in every good word and work. We would always have it ſpring and Sun-ſhine, peace and ſafety, but God knows it muſt be otherwiſe; perpetual ſhining and fair ſeaſons are reſerved for Heaven. While we are on Earth the cold of adverſity is as advantagious to our ſpiritual condition, as the coldneſs of the air is to our natural. Out of the South cometh the whirlwind, and cold out of the North.

Frigora tempeſtivo arborum & plantarum conferunt fœcunditati Garc. Meteor.

Verſ. 10. By the breath of God froſt is given, and the breadth of the waters is ſtraitened.

In the former part of this verſe, we have the ſupream cauſe of the froſt, and in the latter an effect of it. By the breath of the Lord froſt is given, or, he giveth froſt by his breath. The Hebrew is active, we tranſlate paſſively.

Flante Deo, i. e. Deo ipſum flatum cauſante.

By the breath of the Lord.] That is, God breathing or blowing; not that the Lord uſeth breathing or blowing properly, he is a Spirit: But the Lord is ſaid to breath or blow when he commands the wind to blow or breathe. The winds are called Gods breath, or ſpirit. Some of the Hebrew Doctors, underſtand nothing elſe but his bare will and command, or the intimation of his mind to have it ſo; but I rather take it for the froſt-making winds which are ſent by God. By the breath of the Lord, that is, when the Lord appoints and orders cold winds to come out of his treaſure, when the Lord gives out the word of command, cold winds iſſue forth, and then froſt appears. David affirms in general, (Pſal. 33.6.) By the word of the Lord were the Heavens made, and all the Hoſt of them by the breath of his mouth. The Heavens and their Hoſts, all the powers and vertues of them, all the influences and efficacies of them are given out by the breath of the Lord. And among other things that are given by the breath of the Lord

A verbo Dei dat Gelu, Chald. pro à voluntate Dei dat gelu, ſc. Arcturus.

Froſt is given.] Froſt is cold in exceſs, froſt is great cold; every cold is not freezing cold. The word which we render froſt, is often rendred ice, and it cometh from a root which ſignifieth to make bald; becauſe froſt and ice cover the graſs (which is to the ground as hair to the head of man) and ſo make the ſurface of the Earth ſmooth like a bald head. Froſt alſo makes the ſurface of the Earth, not only ſmooth, but bright and ſhining like a bald head. By the breath of the Lord froſt is given.

Hence note, Froſt is the gift or diſpenſation of God.

Changes, in the air, as well as changes in the eſtates, lives or hearts of men, are from the Lord (Pſal. 147.17.) He giveth ſnow like wool: he ſcattereth the hoar froſt like aſhes: He caſteth forth his ice like morſels; who can ſtand before his cold? It is God's ice and his cold as well as his rain or his Sun-ſhine. When the Pſalmiſt ſaith, He ſcattereth the froſt, he caſteth forth his ice, he ſaith the ſame thing in ſubſtance which Elihu doth here, By the breath of the Lord froſt is given: There is a continual dependance of all creatures in their motions and operations, as well as in their beings, upon the will of God, 'tis by his word that froſt is given. Some deny the working of the firſt cauſe with the ſecond cauſes, any otherwiſe than as God once gave them a working power, and conſerveth that power once given them. Whereas indeed God hath not only given a general power to the creature, not only hath he ſaid, There ſhall be froſt ſometimes, and heat ſometimes, and fair weather ſometimes, but when-ever the heat, or cold, or froſt come, they come by a particular order from him. As all things, men eſpecially, have their being in him, ſo their working and moving from him; and that not only becauſe he makes us in general, working, moving creatures, but as to every ſpecial work and motion. This the Prophet aſſerts, while he puts thoſe reproving queſtions (Iſa. 10.15.) Shall the axe boaſt it ſelf againſt him that heweth therewith? or ſhall the ſaw magnifie it ſelf againſt him that ſhaketh it? as if the rod ſhould ſhake it ſelf againſt them that lift it up, or as if the ſtaff ſhould lift up it ſelf, as if it were no wood. Living and natural creatures move no more without God, than artificial and liveleſs inſtruments (ſuch as the axe and ſaw, the rod and ſtaff) can move themſelves without the hand or help of man. By the breath of the Lord froſt is given,

And the breath of the water is ſtraitned.

Glacies eſt copia aquæ in anguſto.

This is an effect of the former. Froſt drinks up the waters, and ſo ſtraitens them: ſome define ice, which is made by the froſt, to be ſtore of water in a little room, or narrow compaſs. Every years experience tells us, that the waters are pinched with the froſt. Waters which were out before a froſt, are fetcht in or contracted by the froſt; hence 'tis ſaid (Chap. 38.30.) The waters are hid as with a ſtone, which is of the ſame ſenſe with this expreſſion, The breadth of the water is ſtraitned; God brings the waters into their old bounds, or into narrower bounds than before, by froſt. From this effect of froſt, that the breath of the water is ſtraitned by it,

Note, Cold is a ſtraitner.

'Tis ſo in natural things, 'tis ſo alſo (to mind the reader of that occaſion'd this note) in ſpirituals and morals. Take coldneſs as it is an ill diſpoſition, or an indiſpoſition upon the heart, it ſtraitens us, as to the doing of any good; for, as Chriſt hath foretold us (Mat. 24.12.) that becauſe iniquity ſhall abound (in the latter days) the love of many ſhall wax cold: So whenever love or zeal, or any grace in us waxeth cold, piety, in all the acts or whole compaſs of it, will certainly decline and be ſtraitned. He that before had a large heart, becomes narrow-hearted, and is pinched in his ſpirit by this ſinful coldneſs. Warmth enlargeth, Cold ſtraiteneth. God ſends the cold of affliction upon many bad men, to ſtraiten their Luſts, elſe they would keep no bounds, they would overflow all, and it is the great deſign of Satan to ſend a cold upon, or to frieze the ſpirits of all good men, that they may be ſtraitened and made unfit for the ſervice of God. Take heed of a coldneſs in your diſpoſition, for that will be a ſtraitner of your graces; but welcom the froſt of affliction, that may be a ſtraitner of your corruptions. There is nothing we ſhould fear more (except the loſs of them, and the favour of God with them) than to feel our graces ſtraitened; nor is there any thing (except the favour of God) which we ſhould more deſire, than to feel our luſts and corruptions weakned and abated.

Some render this latter part of the verſe not as we, The breadth of the waters is ſtraitned; but, The waters are diſſolved into their breadth. As if Elihu had ſaid, the ice or froſt being diſſolved, the waters return to their wonted latitude. The word rendred ſtraitened, may be derived from a root which ſignifieth to diſſolve, to melt and pour out. Thus, as according to our tranſlation, we take the latter part of the verſe as an effect of the firſt, froſt being that whereby the breadth of the waters is ſtraitned; ſo according to this tranſlation, it ſtands in oppoſition to the former, By the breath of the Lord froſt is given, and he again (by his breath) diſſolveth the water. Thawing as well as freezing is from God. Thawing is the melting of the ice; as metal is melted in the fire, ſo ice is melted by the heat of the Sun. Thus the North makes ice, and the South unmakes or melts it. The power of God is to be ſeen in diſſolving thoſe huge rocks and mountains of ice into water, as well as in congealing thoſe mighty floods of water into icy rocks. David celebrateth the power of God in this alſo (Pſal. 147. 18.) He ſendeth out his word, and melteth them (that is, the morſels of ice ſpoken of verſ. 17.) He cauſeth the wind (a warm thawing wind) to blow, and the waters flow, that is, thoſe waters which were bound up by the cold, flow away by heat. Some inſiſt much upon this tranſlation. It is of the Lord that the waters are enlarged or ſtraitned, frozen or diſſolved. I leave it with the Reader which to pitch upon (both are ſafe and honourable to God) and proceed to the next verſe.

Et rurſum latiſſime funduntur aquæ. Vulg. Ego conſenſerim illis qui participium מוצק non arctum vel anguſtum, ſed fuſum aut ſolutum potius reddunt. Sic aquiloni facultatem efficiendi gelu, Auſtro liquandi & fundendi attribuit. Bold.

Verſ. 11. Alſo by watering he wearieth the thick cloud, he ſcattereth his bright cloud.

There is a fourfold reading or expoſition of the former part of this verſe; By watering he wearieth the thick cloud.

First, thus, For watering, or, that he may water the earth, he wearieth the thick cloud, that is, he calleth up ſo much vapour as burdens or wearieth the thick cloud, that he may have ſufficient for the watering of the earth by rain. God cauſeth his vapour to aſcend, ſaith the Prophet (Jer. 10. 13.) that is, he draws up much water by vapors, as the matter of clouds, or as the matter out of which clouds are made, and he fills the cloud ſo full of water, that it can ſcarce bear the weight; and all this he doth for the plentiful watering of the earth.

Secondly thus, He cauſeth the cloud to give out, or ſpend its water till it be weary. We ſay of any thing that is ſpent to the laſt, it is tired and wearied. Thus the Lord by watering wearies the thick cloud, commanding the clouds to pour rain upon the earth, till they are tired, till they have ſpent all their ſtore, and cannot yield a drop more. Yet becauſe to water the earth is the moſt proper and natural buſineſs of the cloud, therefore,

Vox ברי compoſita eſt præpoſitione ב & nomine רי quo ſignificatur irrigatio, à verbo רוה irrigare. Piſc. Cum tempus irrigandi terram eſt cogit & condenſat nubes illaſq; magna aquarum copia gravidas efficit. Inde apud Homerum. Νεφεληγερέτα ζεὺς, i. e. nubium congregator Jupiter. Bold. Mercerus.

Thirdly, A learned Expoſitor conceives, that the cloud is not wearied by watering or raining upon the earth; but that on the contrary the cloud is ſaid to be wearied or troubled, when while is is about that work, it is ſcattered or diſperſed by the Sun or Wind.

Fourthly, Others refer this wearying of the cloud, to the command which it receives for the watering of very remote parts of the earth. The Lord ſaith to this or that cloud, remove far off, go and water ſuch a Countrey (it may be a hundred, yea, many hundred miles off the place from whence the vapours were exhaled) and there diſburden thy ſelf, or fall down in ſhowers. When the Lord ſends the cloud a long journey, we may ſay, 'tis even wearied, as a man or beaſt is that hath gone a long journey.

I ſhall not trouble the reader with that wide interpretation of the Latine tranſlator, rendring thus, The cloud deſires corn, or the cloud labours for corn, that is, to make the earth fruitful, and bring forth abundance of corn. Some of the Ancients have taught that there is a kind of natural marriage, between the earth and the clouds, or between the clouds and the corn, or any other fruits of the earth. Rain is the food of the earth, that is, of Fruits and Plants; to which the Prophet (Hoſ. 2. 22.) makes an elegant alluſion. But I paſs this.

Frumentum deſiderat nubes. Vulg. Cibus arborum imber eſt. Plin. l. 17. cap. 2.

The ſecond interpretation I judg moſt congruous to the ſcope of the Text, which ſaith clearly, Alſo by watering he wearieth the thick cloud.

Whence note, Thoſe creatures which have greateſt ſtores to give, may quickly have none left to give.

Here is a cloud and a thick cloud (Elihu doth not ſpeak of an ordinary, but of a thick cloud) yet upon the Lord's command to give ſhowers the cloud is quite ſpent and wearied. Though men have the greateſt affluence, the largeſt ſtores and ſtocks, of wealth or riches, yea of gifts and graces, yet they may be wearied, and even drawn dry. The thickeſt clouds, that is, they who have the greateſt treaſures of ſtrength, of wit, of learning and knowledg, are ſoon wearied, exhauſted and emptied, unleſs they live in dependance upon God; Only, God himſelf can never be wearied by watering. How much ſoever God giveth out to us, he is not at all emptied, but remains everlaſtingly equally full. And if God will ſpeak to the meaneſt creature, even to that which ſeemeth moſt empty, it ſhall water others and not be wearied. The thick clouds, they who have much, may be ſpent, while he that hath but a little ſhall not be ſpent. The Prophet ſaid to the poor woman (1 King. 17. 14.) The oyl in the cruſe, and the meal in the barrel ſhall not waſte. The woman might draw out of the oyl as long as ſhe would, and ſtill there would be a ſupply of oyl, nor would the barrel be weary in yielding meal. The Lord can make the creature unwearied, and eſtabliſh it to us for good. A full cloud will ſoon drop away, if the Lord forbear ſupplies; and a few drops ſhall be as an everlaſting ſpring where the Lord gives out ſupplies. We may alſo allude to that (2 King. 4. 2.) There was a poor widow, and the creditors were ready to ſeize her two ſons for bondmen, and, ſaith ſhe, I have nothing but a little pot of oyl, and what will that do towards payment? Well, ſaith the Prophet, Go borrow thee veſſels abroad of all thy neighbours, even empty veſſels, borrow not a few, and thou ſhalt draw out of the pot, and the pot of oyl ſhall not be wearied by giving oyl into the veſſels. God ſpeaking to the pot of oyl it yielded a continued ſupply; the oyl never ceaſed till the woman had not a veſſel to receive it. If God ſaith to the leaſt pittance of temporals, which a man hath in this world, hold out, it ſhall not fail nor be weary; 'tis ſo likewiſe in ſpirituals, the Lord can make a little grace hold out, the thinneſt cloud ſhall not be wearied by watering.

Again, By watering he wearieth the thick cloud, that is, God giveth out ſhowers to water the earth abundantly.

Hence note, God is very free and liberal.

He will empty the thick cloud upon the earth to make it fruitful; He gives not only a few drops, but abundance; and this is moſt true in ſpirituals. How doth the Lord ſhower down and empty even whole clouds of good things upon the ſoul! as he hath promiſed, ſo he once did, and ſtill doth ſometimes (and will more in the laſt times) pour out the Spirit, which is an alluſion to thoſe ſhowers of rain poured from the clouds: And as the Lord pours out his Spirit, which can never be wearied or drawn dry; ſo the Lord makes uſe of many thick clouds (which hold much ſpiritual rain) even to wearineſs, for the refreſhing of wearied ſouls; I mean ſuch Miniſters as he hath furniſhed with great gifts and graces, ſuch as are not (as the Apoſtle Jude compareth ſome Teachers) Clouds without water, but (as true and faithful Teachers ſhould be) full of water. The waterings of any Apollo are at the Lord's diſpoſe: He ſaith, drop thy word here, drop thy word there, and thou ſhalt not drop thy word any more here or there. The Lord hath often been ſo bountiful to Nations and Churches, that he hath even wearied many thick clouds to water them with the rain of his word. That of the Pſalmiſt (though it be true of the rain properly taken, falling upon the earth) is moſt true of ſpiritual rain falling upon the Churches (Pſal. 65. 10.) Thou watereſt the ridges thereof abundantly, thou ſetleſt the furrows thereof. And ſo is that alſo to be underſtood (Pſal. 68. 9.) Thou, O God, didſt ſend a plentiful rain (or rain of liberalities) whereby thou didſt confirm thine inheritance when it was weary. Thou didſt even weary the thick cloud, to confirm, that is, to refreſh thy weary people.

And ſeeing they who carry and diſpence the Word are in Scripture emblematically expreſſed by Clouds (Iſa. 60. 8.) Who are theſe that flee as a cloud, and as the doves to their windows? The Preachers of the Goſpel come as ſo many clouds, and the Prophet tells us, the Word cometh down as rain and ſnow from heaven (Iſa. 55. 10.) which ſuppoſeth a cloud from whence it cometh; for, ſaith the Lord, So ſhall my word be that goeth out of my mouth, it ſhall not return unto me void, but it ſhall accompliſh that which I pleaſe;

Seeing, I ſay, the diſpenſers of the Word are compared to clouds) let them that ſit under the droppings of theſe clouds take heed they be not unfruitful, or like that ground which drinketh in the rain, yet beareth nothing but briars and thorns, whoſe end is to be burned. God hath wearied and quite ſpent many of theſe thick clouds by continual dropping upon, and watering the Souls of men, yet how barren, how fruitleſs are they! If but one of the clouds of Heaven be wearied in watering the earth, we ſoon after diſcern the face of the earth refreſhed and renewed by it: And ſhall God weary thoſe heavenly clouds by watering men on earth, and men remain unrefreſhed, unrenewed! Clouds of ſorrow and darkneſs will at laſt weary all thoſe with their waterings and droppings upon them, who, when God hath wearied his Clouds by watering them with the word of life from Heaven, yet remain altogether barren and unfruitful. By watering he wearieth the thick Cloud.

He ſcattereth his bright Cloud.

Nubes ex cujus diſcuſſione lucem reſtituit. Hanc appellat nubem lucis Dei, quâ diſpulſa lux & ſerenitas inducitur. Merc.

The former part of the verſe ſpake of a thick Cloud, this latter ſpeaks of a bright Cloud: The Hebrew is, The Cloud of this light; which I conceive is here added; Firſt, to ſhew that Clouds of all ſorts ſerve the purpoſes of God; the thick Cloud, and the bright Cloud, the dark Cloud, and the light Cloud, are made uſe of by him. And as he doth weary the Cloud, that is full of water, ſo he ſcattereth the Cloud that is full of light, or, he ſcattereth his bright Cloud.

Nubem lucis, non dicit lucidam, ſed quæ lucem abſcondit. Coc.

Yet ſome conſidering it is not ſaid in the letter of the Text, A light Cloud, but a Cloud of light, underſtand by a Cloud of light, ſuch a Cloud as hides and hinders the light, and which being ſcattered, light and fair weather ſucceed. Yet rather as before. But why is it here ſaid, that he ſcattereth his bright Cloud? Poſſibly, becauſe he hath no uſe of his bright Cloud, but of his thick Cloud only, when he would water the earth. And indeed Clouds which are only bright, or which have much light, but no water, are of little uſe. Some have much light of knowledg, but no water of inſtruction to drop upon others; ſuch Clouds God diſperſeth and ſcatters. It is not an outward fair appearance, which can bring us into acceptance with God, The bright Cloud ſhall be ſcattered, if it have no rain in it, to water the earth.

Again, Some Tranſlate, His light ſcattereth the Cloud. So the Text may be read according to the letter of the Hebrew; as if the meaning were this, God by the Sun-beams diſpels or diſperſeth the Cloud; for Clouds are ſcattered ſometimes by the wind, ſometimes by the Sun. That which gathered the Cloud, may alſo ſcatter it. The Sun draweth up the vapours, of which Clouds are formed or compacted, and ſoon after the Sun diſſolveth the clouds, which it had gathered. The ſame power makes and unmakes the Cloud, gives it a body, and takes it away; His light ſcattereth the Cloud. That's a truth alſo: For as brightneſs or light is ſcattered among the Clouds, and makes the Clouds appear bright, ſo brightneſs or light ſcatters Clouds, or cauſeth them to diſappear.

Elihu having thus diſcourſed of wind and cold, of freezing and thawing, of working ſome Clouds to wearineſs, and of ſcattering others, proceeds in the two following verſes, to ſhew the ſpecial uſes which the Lord makes of all thoſe motions in the air, and impreſſions upon the Earth, with the Inhabitants of it, whether in a way of Judgment or of Mercy.

VERS. 12, 13.

And it is turned about by his counſel: that they may do whatſoever he commandeth them upon the face of the world in the earth.

He cauſeth it to come, whether for correction, or for his land, or for mercy.

IN the former verſe Elihu ſpake of the Clouds, of the thick Cloud wearied with watering, and of the bright Cloud, ſcattered by the Wind or Sun. In theſe two verſes he further ſets down two things more generally concerning the Clouds.

Firſt, He ſhews whence the motion of the Cloud is, and by what or whom directed; It is turned about by his counſel, in the beginning of the 12. verſe, and he cauſeth it to come, at the beginning of the 13. verſe. There we have the Spring of the Clouds motion.

Secondly, Elihu ſhews the purpoſe, or the deſign of the Lord in turning about the Clouds by his counſel; which deſign is laid down two ways.

Firſt, In general, That they may do whatſoever he commandeth them upon the face of the world in the earth; that's the firſt purpoſe of God in moving the Clouds, they are to execute his Commands; and that's his general purpoſe.

Secondly, We have his ſpecial purpoſes or deſigns laid down in the cloſe of the 13. verſe, and they are three-fold. He turneth about the Cloud, and cauſeth it to come,

Firſt, For Correction.
Secondly, For his Land.
Thirdly, For Mercy.

He cauſeth it to come (ſaith Elihu) whether for Correction, for Land, or for Mercy; all theſe purpoſes and deſigns God hath in moving and ordering theſe vaſt and mighty bodies of the Clouds, which hang like Mountains in the Air. Thus you have the parts of theſe words, with their ſcope and tendency. More diſtinctly.

Verſ. 12. And it is turned by his counſel.

Firſt, Vapours are raiſed and condenſed into Clouds by the counſel of God, he cauſeth the vapours to aſcend from the ends of the earth, (Pſal. 135.7.) Which vapours (as was ſhewed before) are the material cauſe or matter of the Clouds.

Secondly, As by the counſel of God the vapours are raiſed, of which Clouds are made; ſo this Text tells us, that by his counſel the Clouds are moved, and order'd in their motion; which motion of the Clouds is very various; ſometimes one way, ſometimes another, ſometimes forward, ſometimes backward, or retrograde; ſometimes their motion is circular, as the word here uſed by Elihu ſeemeth to imply, It is turned or whirled about; according to that of Solomon (Eccl. 1.6.) The wind goeth toward the South, and turneth about unto the North; it whirleth about continually, and the wind returneth again according to his Circuit. We have here three words expreſſing the motion of the wind; Firſt, it goeth; Secondly, whirleth about; Thirdly, returneth again; and all this according to its circuits. It is ſaid of Samuel (1 Sam. 7.16.) He went from year to year in circuit, to Bethel and Gilgal, and Mizpeh, and judged Iſrael in all thoſe places. Thus the winds according to the Commiſſion they receive from God, ride every year in circuit, now they are in one quarter, and anon in another, and whereſoever they come they may be ſaid to do judgment in a way of favour to ſome, and in a way of diſpleaſure unto others. The wind hath his Circuits, and as the Circuit of the wind is, ſuch is the Circuit of the Clouds; the motion of the Clouds is from the wind, ſome ſay from the Starrs, but moſt generally, as to the natural cauſe, it is from the wind, which way the wind moves, that way the clouds move. And though the motion of the clouds and Winds ſeems exceeding unſteady and changeable, up and down, without any certain rule in Nature, yet they Obſerve their Circuits, and run their compaſs as God appoints them. Mr. Broughton renders, And for varieties, he turneth himſelf in his wiſe Counſels for their operation, for whatſoever he Commandeth them; It is turned about (ſay we)

By his Counſel.

It ſhould ſeem that God even calls a Council, which way the clouds ſhall be directed, they go by his Counſel: The word in the Hebrew is a very ſignificant one (that I mean) which we render his Counſel, others his skill, his art or cunning, and there are not a few who render it, they are turned about by his Engines, as if God did uſe (as it were) artificial Engines to turn about thoſe mighty bodies of the clouds; Properly the Word ſignifieth the Ropes and Tackling of a Ship, in ordering which Ropes and Tackling the whole management of the Ship doth conſiſt. The Mariner

Convertuntur artificio ipſius. Lev. Ipſa quoq; incircuitibus volvitur machinis ejus. Merc. Vertitur ſolertius ejus. Druſ.

ſhews his skill and art in ſteering his Ship a right courſe, which he doth, not only by guiding the Rudder, but by ordering the Ropes and Tackling this way and that way, to compaſs or avoid the wind. And the Hebrew word (Tachbuloth) here uſed, hath a very great nearneſs in ſound, to the Tackling of a Ship. This is a moſt elegant Metaphor, ſhewing how the Lord doth, as it were, ſteer the courſe of the Clouds, or guide the Clouds, as the Sea-man doth his Ship; his Counſels may be compared to the Tackling and the Ropes, or rather to the Helm, by which the Ship is guided; God is as the great Pilot ſitting at the Stern, and he turns theſe Clouds as his Ship, he turns them about as a Ship tacks this way and that way, to reach her Port and there unlade. The Rain, Snow, and Hail, are the Lading which theſe ſwift Ships, the clouds, carry from place to place, to ſerve the providences of God towards man. This divine conduct of the Clouds is very admirable! The Lord knowing what parts of the Earth need thoſe Commodities, Rain, Snow, &c. Which thoſe aerial Veſſels are laden with, for the enriching of the world. We render it by his Counſel, That is, by thoſe means which he in his Wiſdom and Counſel uſeth to turn the Clouds about, they are turned: we tranſlate the word (*Pro.*1.5.) Wiſe Counſels, and (*Pro.*20.18.) Good advice, there Solomon ſaith, With good advice make war. And indeed good advice is the beſt tackling for Ships in a war at Sea, and the beſt ammunition for a war at Land: Councel is a noble, a notable Engin: The greateſt things on Earth are turned about by it, and ſo are thoſe great things in the air, the Clouds, They are turned about by his Counſel,

That they may do whatſoever he Commandeth them.

Here's the general deſign and purpoſe of God, in turning about the Clouds witherſoever he pleaſe, it is that they may do whatſoever he Commandeth them; where we have the Clouds ſet forth, Firſt, In their obedience, They do the Commands of God.

Secondly, In the univerſality of their obedience, They do whatſoever he Commandeth. Elihu compares the Clouds and Meteors to good ſervants, who are ready to do what God their Maſter requireth of them; and not only ſo, but they do his Commands every where, or whereſoever he requires them, they do all his Commands, and that in all places, as the Text ſpeaks in the next words,

Upon the face of the world in the Earth.

תכל Orbis pars terra habitabilis, Græce, οἰκουμένη.

That is, whereſoever there is Earth, or a World, habitable or unhabitable, thither, or ſo far doth God ſend the Clouds in his ſervice, or for the executing of his will.

Further, when he ſaith, Upon the face of the World. his meaning is, upon the outſide or uppermoſt part of the World; and becauſe the Heavens, even the uppermoſt Heavens are a part of the world, with which the Clouds have nothing to do, their buſineſs lying here below, therefore (I conceive) Elihu determines it expreſly, in the Earth. The Clouds are not raiſed or made for the uſe and ſervice of the world above, but of the world below. They do whatſoever he Commandeth them upon the face of the world in the Earth.

Hence Obſerve; Firſt, The motion of the Clouds is not of themſelves, nor meerly from any natural cauſe or power, but of God;

He as it were by certain Engins and weights, turns them about; they move not unawares, nor by the uncertain changes of the Air, but according to his direction and unchangeable purpoſe; It is turned about by his Counſel. The creatures do not govern themſelves, nor are they Maſters of their own motions; The way of man is not in himſelf, ſurely then the way of the Cloud is not in it ſelf. Clouds take their courſe according to the order and command which they receive from God.

Again, The Clouds are thus turned about by the Counſel of God, that they may do whatſoever he commandeth them.

Hence Note; Clouds are ſent about work; there's ſomewhat to be done by every cloud.

God will not have a Vapour ariſe, nor a Cloud ſtir for nothing, he commands them to be doing. And if God ſend Clouds abroad to work, much more doth he ſend man forth into the world to do work, and appoints him what work to do. The firſt Man was no ſooner made, and ſet up in a ſtate of created perfection, but he was preſently ſet to work, he muſt be doing, (*Gen.*2.15.) And the Lord God took the man (or Adam) and put him into the Garden of Eden, to dreſs and to till it. From the Angels in Heaven to the worms that creep upon the earth, there's no creature but hath ſomewhat to do; yea, not only the living and rational creatures, but (as here in the Text) the very inanimate creatures, the ſenſeleſs creatures, the Clouds, have ſomewhat to do, God ſends them forth upon his buſineſs. Every creature hath a ſervice, hath ſomewhat to do: And therefore, it will be ill with thoſe whom God finds idle, or doing nothing, or nothing to any good purpoſe. That ſervant had been doing, to whom Chriſt in the Parable is repreſented thus ſpeaking at the laſt day, Well done good and faithful Servant.

Thirdly Obſerve; The clouds are faithful and ready Servants, they do whatſoever the Lord commands them.

They are Gods Meſſengers, and they will do any or every Errand, which he ſends them about, and truſts them with. Tis the duty and commendation of a Servant, to do whatſoever he is commanded. A mans ſervant muſt do all his Maſters juſt and lawful commands; he muſt not take up this or that command to do it, and paſs by the reſt. The Rule is plain (*Col.*3.22.) Servants obey your Maſters in all things: Much more muſt a Servant of God obey him in all things. (Acts 13.22.) I have found David a man after mine own heart; he ſhall fulfil all my Will. David was a truſty ſervant; he was not like Saul, who did the Lords work to halves. The Clouds are truſty Servants, they do whatſoever God commands them; and we may diſtribute the commands which God gives the Clouds, into two Ranks.

Firſt, The command of God to the Clouds is ſometimes for the hurt or puniſhment of man. God threatens and he executes vengeance by the Clouds (Ezek. 13. 13.) Winds conveigh the Clouds, and the Clouds pour down overflowing ſhowrs in the anger of God, and great hail-ſtones in his fury, to conſume and ruin all before them.

Secondly, Clouds execute the command of God in a way of favour; as they execute his threatnings, ſo they fulfil his promiſes (*Hoſ.*2.21,22.) Both theſe commands to the Clouds are expreſly mentioned in the next verſe, I only touch them here.

Now foraſmuch as the Clouds are here deſcribed under the notion of the preſt and faithful Servants of God, doing whatſoever he commands, take theſe Inferences from it.

Firſt, If Clouds do whatſoever God commands them, then ſurely Chriſtians ought to do whatſoever Chriſt commands them: Shall the clouds of God out-do the children of God in obedience? We find that admonition often urged in the Scripture of the New Teſtament, eſpecially in the 13. of Matthew, and in the 1, 2, and 3. Chapters of the Revelation, He that hath ears to hear, let him hear. But behold a wonder, they that have no ears hear! The clouds have no ears, and yet they hear, and more than hear, they do the commands of God. What ſhall we ſay, when clouds hear and obey, and men do neither? Let us learn Duty from the clouds. We are ſent to the School of Nature in holy Scripture, almoſt throughout. Elihu ſeems to ſay, Go to the clouds, O ye that are either ſlothful or diſobedient, conſider their work and be wiſe; they are continually doing whatſoever the Lord commands them.

Secondly, If the clouds do whatſoever God commands them, then here's matter of comfort to all who do what God commands them; ſurely God will not command the clouds to do them any hurt who are doing his commands. If you can ſay that you do the commands of God, you may reſt aſſured God will never give the clouds a command to do you hurt. I do not ſay but an affliction may drop out of the clouds upon a man that is doing the commands of God; or, the Clouds may have a command to drop affliction upon him that is doing the commands of God: but the clouds drop no hurt upon any that do the commands of God. And therefore ſeeing the clouds, even thoſe clouds that carry Storms and Tempeſts, Thunder and Lightning, Snow, Hail, and Rain, the great Rain of his ſtrength, ſeeing I ſay, theſe clouds, that are the Treaſuries and Magazines of ſuch terrible things, are at the command of God, let not his faithful people fear; for when the Winds are Stormy, when the clouds are black, and carry, as we think, nothing but wrath and death in them, God will take care of them, and charge his clouds to do them no harm. Clouds, whatſoever they are doing, are doing Gods commands, and doubtleſs he will not give them any commands for their hurt who keep and do his commands.

And as 'tis matter of comfort to the faithful Servants of God, that he commandeth the clouds in the Air, ſo that he alſo commands thoſe clouds which are raiſed in the hearts of men, or that ſit and appear in their faces and foreheads. We often ſee clouds gather in the Brows of diſpleaſed mortals. As ſome are clouded with ſorrow, ſo others are clouded with anger and wrath. Thoſe black clouds in the faces of men are as dreadful as the blackeſt clouds in the Air; yet the Lord who commands the clouds in the Air, commands the clouds of anger and choler, of wrath and indignation, riſing out of the hearts, and appearing in the faces of men, and can blow them over, or blot them out, whenſoever he pleaſeth.

Thirdly, If the Lord by his commands orders the clouds, and the clouds are ready to execute his commands, then let us have high thoughts of the power of God, and of his commands. If men refuſe the commands of God, if the ſtout and hard hearts of men will not ſtoop to them, the clouds of Heaven, yea, the clods of the earth will. Whatſoever God commands, he will have it done; not one title, not one Iota (as Chriſt ſpake of the Law) ſhall fall ſhort, or fail, or be unfulfilled. If ſuch and ſuch will not, others ſhall; if Jews will not, Gentiles ſhall; if the Jews will not carry it like the children of Abraham, God can and will raiſe up children unto Abraham of the Stones of the ſtreet; he will not want inſtruments to anſwer his Counſels, nor to execute his commands. God will ſhake Heaven and Earth, but he will have his Will done, and his decrees perfected, yea, he will diſſolve and ruin them rather then not have his Word fulfilled. That of David (Pſal. 136. 2.) Thou haſt magnified thy Word above all thy Name, is true of the word of command, as well as of the word of promiſe. God will magnifie the word of his promiſe above all his Name, and he will alſo magnifie the word of his command above all his Name; that is, his Word is as a glaſs, wherein his Name, that is, his Holineſs, his Power, his Goodneſs, his Faithfulneſs, his Mercy, his Juſtice, and his Wrath, are to be ſeen, and ſhall be ſeen in the accompliſhments of it towards the Children of Men. Therefore fear and admire this mighty God, who will find means for the executing of his Word, for the doing of all that he hath ſpoken; The clouds ſhall do whatſoever he commandeth them, upon the face of the World in the Earth.

Fourthly, If the clouds are turned about by his Counſel, if he doth, as it were, hale the Ropes to turn the clouds which way ſoever he pleaſeth, then, Whenſoever you ſee the Clouds gathered by the wind, remember God hath ſomewhat to do, there's ſomewhat to be done; theſe clouds are the Servants of God, there's ſome command or word of God or other to be fulfilled. We do not, as we ought, conſider the Counſel of God in the motion of the clouds; Yea, ſome when the clouds gather, and the ſtorms of Wind or Rain, of Thunder and Lightning, break forth, are more ready to think of the Counſel of the Devil, than of God, they are apt to ſay, ſurely, There's Conjuring abroad: What's that, but the executing of the Devils Counſel? Whereas we ſhould ſay, God doth it by his Counſel. Take heed of neglecting God when you ſee the clouds; do not attribute their motion, or the moſt dreadful Storms that proceed from them, to any thing beſide the Counſel of God; for there is not the leaſt vapour can riſe out of the earth, for the making of a cloud, but he cauſeth it to aſcend; there are not any materials gathered toward the conſtituting of a cloud, but they are under Gods hand, he cauſeth the vapours to aſcend: and there is not the leaſt breath of wind can ſtir to move the clouds (clouds are moved with the wind) but as God hath appointed; neither bad Angel, nor good, can ſtir a cloud, but as God willeth. And therefore look to the hand and counſel of God in all theſe things, take heed of ſtaying in any work of Nature, do not aſcribe theſe impreſſions and perturbations in the Air to the power of the Devil and wicked Arts; all is of the Lord, whatſoever is done. One of the Ancients ſaid concerning the Devils, when they deſired leave to enter the Swine, Why ſhould any of the ſheep of God be afarid of the Devil, when the Devils cannot have power over the Swine without leave from God? The Devil cannot move a breath of wind, but according to the will of God; though he be the Prince of the Air, yet there is a Prince above him, to whoſe commands all are ſubject, both in Heaven and in Earth.

Fifthly, If it be ſo, that God commands the clouds whenſoever they come with their ſtorms or ſhowers, then aſcribe the praiſe of all the good you receive from the clouds to God, and be humbled under the hand of God, whenſoever you receive outward dammage from the clouds do not ſay it is a chance.

Sixthly, Learn hence the greatneſs and the Soveraignty of God, ſay as they did admiringly (Matth. 8 27.) Who is this, that both the Winds, and Seas, and clouds obey him! None of the words of the Lord ſhall fall to the ground, as an Arrow or Dart that miſſeth the Mark, or as water ſpilt, that cannot be gathered up again; which latter alluſion is ſpecially intimated (1 Sam. 3. 12, 19.) Here in the Text Elihu ſets forth the Power and Soveraignty of God, having all creatures at his beck and command, as hath been ſhewed already from other paſſages in this Book, and more will occur hereafter. The Soveraignty of God over men can never be duly acknowledged, till we acknowledge, his Soveraignty over Winds and Rain, Hail and Snow, which lie in the Bowels and boſom of the clouds, and from thence are diſpenſed to the earth, at the will of God.

Seventhly and laſtly, If the clouds do whatſoever God commands them, if they be ſuch faithful ſervants to God, then ſurely the clouds will one day riſe up, or come forth as witneſſes againſt all that reſiſt the commands of God: Not to obey them is bad enough, but to reſiſt them is far worſe. Chriſt would awaken the Scribes and Phariſees, by telling them (Matth. 12. 41.) The men of Nineveh ſhall riſe up in the Judgment againſt this Generation, and ſhall condemn it, becauſe they repented at the preaching of Jonah; as alſo the Queen of the South, becauſe ſhe came from far to hear the wiſdom of Solomon. If Jeſus Chriſt urged thoſe inſtances of the men of Niniveh, and of the Queen of the South, to terrifie that Generation for not obeying his commands, or for not receiving the Promiſes of the Goſpel; doubtleſs then in the great Day, the very clouds and winds ſhall come in as witneſſes againſt all thoſe that have reſiſted the will of God in any of his commands. Have the clouds (will he ſay) done whatſoever I commanded them? And have you reſiſted? Have you caſt my words behind your back, when the very clouds have taken up, embrac'd, and fulfilled them? The clouds will be a ſwift witneſs againſt all thoſe that rebel againſt the commands of God: The Snow and Rain, the Winds and Storms fulfilling his word, will bring in a caſting Evid[illegible] againſt all thoſe who have caſt his word behind their backs. All this we may read and ſee in the commanding power of God over the clouds, and in their readineſs to obey.

Elihu proceeds.

Verſ. 13. He cauſeth it to come, whether for Correction, or for his Land, or for Mercy.

He, that is, God cauſeth, It, that is, the cloud; He cauſeth the cloud to find (ſo the Hebrew) to find every place and every perſon, concerning whom it hath received command and commiſſion from God. Thus the word is uſed by Moſes (Numb. 32. 23.) If ye will not [illegible] ſo, behold, ye have ſinned againſt the Lord, and be ſure your ſin will find you out; That is, the puniſhment of your ſin, and that Judgment which God will pour out upon you for your ſin, will find you out whereſoever ye are. In this ſenſe the cloud will find us out; we render well, He cauſeth it to come, that is, to come to that place or perſon, to that Nation or People, to which himſelf hath appointed it: He cauſeth it to come,

Whether for Correction, or for his Land, or for Mercy.

Here are three ends or purpoſes of God, in communicating and commanding forth the clouds, and we may take thoſe three ends two ways.

The firſt of theſe and the laſt concern Man more ſpecially; the ſecond concerns all other creatures, both Plants and Beaſts of the earth; it concerns all, from the Cedar in Lebanon to the Hyſop on the wall, among the Plants, and from the Lion to the Mouſe, or to the leaſt of living or ſenſible creatures among the Beaſts; all which God, according to his Soveraign Power, and Juſtice, doth either comfort or afflict as he pleaſeth.

Again, The ends which God aimeth at reſpecting Man, are either for Correction or for Mercy.

Firſt, He cauſeth the cloud, with whatſoever is its burden, Hail, or Rain, or Snow, to unlade and diſburden it ſelf, for correction, The Hebrew is, for a Rod, ſo we put in the Margin. A Rod is for correction; therefore we tranſlate for correction, for diſcipline. God ſends the clouds to whip or diſcipline a people. Further, the word ſignifies a Rod under a twofold Notion.

Firſt, A Rod or a Staff to ſmite or ſtrike with, in which ſenſe it is called (Prov. 22. 15.) The Rod of correction; and at the 8. Verſe of the ſame Chapter, The Rod of anger; as alſo (Iſa. 10. 5.) O Aſſyrian, the Rod of mine anger (ſaith God) Here's a Rod to ſmite with.

Secondly, It ſignifies a Rod to govern with, or to rule with; and hence this word denotes the Scepter of a Prince. The two great Emblems of Magiſtracy are a Sword and a Scepter. The Scepter is in the faſhion of a Rod or Wand, which imports chaſtening and correction; and from hence it was that the chief of the Tribes of the Children of Iſrael (Numb. 17.2.) were commanded to take every one of them a Rod, according to the houſe of their Fathers, twelve Rods, and to write every mans Name upon his Rod, and lay them up in the Tabernacle of the Congregation, &c. Now thoſe Rods given in by the Princes of the Tribes, were as ſo many Emblems of their Power and Authority, becauſe to the chief Magiſtrate the puniſhment of the faults and miſcarriages of all under his government did belong. And hence the ſame word ſignifies a Magiſtratical Rod or Scepter of Government, and a Tribe or whole Family under the Rod or Scepter of a Governour, becauſe as Rods or Branches grow from one Root, ſo many Tribes or Families from one Father; thus the Twelve Tribes of Iſrael ſprung from Jacob. And that's the reaſon why the Latin Tranſlator renders this place, not as we, (whether for correction) but, Whether for a Tribe; the meaning of which reading, Whether for a Tribe, or for his Land, is thus given, Whether it be for one particular place, or for the whole Country or earth in general, as will further appear in opening thoſe words, For his Land. This Tranſlation of the Vulgar Latin, and the Interpretation given upon it, ſutes well with that of the Prophet (Amos 4. 7.) where the Lord ſaith, I cauſed it to Rain upon one City, and not upon another: Here was Rain for a Tribe, and not for his Land, not an univerſal Rain all the Land over; he cauſeth it to rain upon one City, not upon another, upon one Tribe, not upon another; that's a good ſenſe, and the word will bear it.

Yet I rather take it here for Rod, which imports chaſtening or correcting, as we Tranſlate, Whether it be for Correction. They that carryed the Rod or the Scepter, had alſo the power of correction in their hand, as was toucht before: and that may be one reaſon why when God ſent Moſes to Pharaoh (Exod. 4. 17.) upon that great Meſſage, the deliverance of the Children of Iſrael out of Egypt, he commanded him to take his rod in his hand; which rod held out theſe two things. Firſt, that Moſes came not as a private man to him, but like a Prince, like an Embaſſador from the great King, or like one whom he had appointed to take upon him the government of that people, with a Scepter in his hand. Secondly, to let Pharaoh know, that as God ſent him with a power, or cloathed him with a Commiſſion to treat with him, ſo with a power to ſcourge or plague him, even with ten Plagues. As if the Lord had ſaid. O Pharaoh, Seeſt thou this rod in the hand of my ſervant Moſes; aſſure thy ſelf, thou ſhalt have ſtroke upon ſtroke, plague upon plague, if thou wilt not let my people go. But of that by the way. He cauſeth it to come for correction, or for a rod.

Hence Note; God can correct us by any of his Creatures.

He can make any thing a rod; he can make neareſt Relations a rod. A Son is ſometimes a rod to his Father; how often have miſcarrying and undutiful Children been made a Rod of correction to their Parents; And they are uſually ſo, when Parents have not duly corrected their Children for their undutifulneſs and miſcarriages. What are cruel men but rods to other men? Some men have been the ſcourges of Mankind. Attila, once a great Commander in War, and King of the Hunnes, was called The rod or the ſcourge of God. And ſo God himſelf called the Aſſyrian the rod of his anger (Iſa. 10. 5.) David called all wicked men in general the Sword of God, in his prayer for deliverance from them (Pſal. 17. 13, 14.) Deliver my Soul from the wicked, thy ſword, from men which are thy hand, O Lord (thy correcting hand, men ordain'd for Judgment, and eſtabliſht for Correction, as the Prophet ſpake of the Chaldeans, (Hab. 1. 12.) Who have their portion in this life. And as the Lord makes men, ſo the Beaſts of the earth, a Rod for the correction of Man. Thus the Lord theatned by his Prophet, I will ſend among them, Sword, and Peſtilence, and noiſome Beaſts.

Flagellum Dei.

Here in the Text we have a rod made of a Cloud, a ſtrange kind of rod; I'le ſend it for a rod, it ſhall come for correction. Parents correct their Children with rods, God corrects the world with Floods; Firſt, with unſeaſonable, Secondly, with ſuperfluous rains. O what ſevere corrections hath God laid upon the world by the Clouds! The Clouds have been terrifying, deſtroying rods (Exod. 9. 18, 23.) Clouds have deſtroyed the Fruits of the earth for the ſin of Man, and taken away the hopes of the Harveſt. Rain from the Clouds hath ruined the dwellings of men, and ſpoyled both Corn and Cattel; Rain from the clouds was that overflowing ſcourge, which deſtroyed the whole earth in the days of Noah; then God cauſed the cloud to come, I cannot ſay for correction, but for ruin, for an univerſal ruin and devaſtation. And as God then made the clouds a ruin to the world, ſo he often makes them a correction (1 Sam. 12. 18, 19. Ezra 10. 9.) we have had many examples, both of ſweeping Rains, and dreadful Thunders, Lightning and Tempeſt, coming forth from the clouds.

The Apoſtle ſaith (Rom. 1. 18.) The wrath of God is revealed from Heaven againſt all ungodlineſs, &c. God hath revealed his wrath from Heaven chiefly in and by the Miniſtry of his Word; he may be ſaid alſo to reveal his wrath from Heaven againſt ſinful man in and by the Miniſtry of the clouds; they have often lifted up their Voyce like a loud Trumpet, and louder than a Trumpet, to tell the ſons of men of their tranſgreſſion, and to reprove them for their ſin. And therefore when we ſee extraordinary gatherings of the clouds, we ſhould take inſtruction, leſt we provoke the Lord to ſend, or cauſe them to come for correction. The clouds drop down many good Leſſons and admonitions, and if they are not attended to, the next thing they drop is a rod or Correction; He cauſeth it to come, whether for correction,

Or for his Land.

For whoſe Land? Some refer it to the cloud, that is, for the Land out of which the cloud was made; for the Vapours which ariſe out of the Land by the attractive power of the Heavens make clouds. As if the meaning were, he cauſeth the cloud to fall down upon that Land out of which it was raiſed: whereas oftentimes a cloud is made of Vapours raiſed from one Land or Country, and by the command of God is carryed to another Land or Country very far off.

Pronomen (ſua) alii ad nubem referant, ut dicat, pro terra in qua genita fuit. Druſ.

But I rather take the Antecedent to his to be God himſelf; His Land, that is, Gods Land, or the Land of God. But then the Queſtion is, what are we to underſtand by his Land? Hath God a Land diſtinct from others, as the Princes of the World have? Are not all Lands his? I anſwer, Firſt, The truth is, all the World is Gods Land; ſo that whereſoever the Clouds fall they fall upon his Land (Pſal. 50.12.) The World is mine, and the fulneſs of it, ſaith the Lord. God is the great Land-lord of all the World.

Secondly, Sometimes in ſpecial the habitable part of the World is called the Land of God (Pſal. 24.1.) there being a part of the World ſuppoſed uninhabitable, or wherein no man dwels.

Thirdly, His Land, that is, the Land which God doth peculiarly own (Exod. 19.5.) You are a peculiar Treaſure unto me above all people, for all the Earth is mine. As the Iſraelites were the Lords peculiar people, ſo ſome Lands are his peculiars, he ſpecially calls them his Land, and Entitles himſelf to them beyond all other Lands, The Land of Canaan was called The Lords Land, becauſe he was known and worſhipped there (Hoſ. 9.3.) We may ſay in general, Look in whatſoever Country or place God is truly known, honour'd, and worſhipped, that is his Land, and that's the Land here chiefly intended (ſay ſome) by his Land. He cauſeth it to come, whether for correction, Peculiariter terra Dei vocatur terra ſancta in qua Dei cultus exercetur. Sic nominat unamquamq; gentem cui bene vult.

Or for his Land.] That is, for the good and benefit of that Land wherein his Name is profeſſed, and himſelf truly worſhipped. That's a good ſenſe; For doubtleſs the Lord takes more care of ſuch a Land, than of any other Land. The eyes of the Lord were upon the Land of Canaan, he took care of it from the beginning of the Year to the end thereof, even to water it with the Rain of Heaven (Deut. 11.12.) Thus 'tis ſaid (Pſal. 68.9, 10.) Thou O God didſt ſend (or ſhake out) a plentiful Rain (a Rain of munificences or liberalities) whereby thou didſt confirm thine Inheritance when it was weary: Thy Congregation hath dwelt therein. Every Land to which God bears ſpecial reſpect and good-will (which whenſoever he doth, he doth it with reſpect to the people inhabiting there) may be emphatically called His Land. Yet,

Fourthly, Foraſmuch as the latter word for mercy, ſeems to imply that ſpecial favour which God beſtows upon his own people, in ſending forth the Clouds with Rain; therefore by His land I rather conceive the earth in general is meant; or yet, to take it more particularly, that part of the earth which no man claims, which is ſcarce habitable by man, that which is a waſt Wilderneſs or Deſart for wild beaſts, that Land which is overgrown with Trees and Buſhes, a Land which no man dreſſeth or beſtoweth any culture or husbandry upon, even for that Land doth God take care, as his Land, thither he ſends Rain, that the Beaſts may have Paſture, and Plants moiſture, that it may be watered and provided for, as well as thoſe Lands that men by their care and induſtry manure as their own peculiars. 'Tis ſaid (Chap. 38.26.) He (that is, God) cauſeth it to rain on the earth, where no man is, on the Wilderneſs, wherein there is no man. Thus in the Text, He cauſeth it to come for his Land, a Land which hath no owner but himſelf.

Hence Obſerve; God hath an univerſal reſpect to, and care over all his Creatures.

Whereſoever God hath a foot of Land in the World (though no foot of man comes there) he ſends the Clouds to do it ſervice, for the ſake only of wild Beaſts living there, and of Trees and Plants growing there. (Pſal. 36.6.) Lord, thou preſerveſt man and beaſt: Not only doth God preſerve men, but beaſts; and where no men are God provides for beaſts, that they may have food and live. We may hence argue as the Apoſtle did in another caſe, (1 Cor. 9.9.) Doth God take care for Oxen? Hath he reſpect to the waſt Lands, to the wild Beaſts of the Wilderneſs? Surely then he will take care of inhabited Lands, he will cauſe the Cloud to come and water the Land where men dwell, eſpecially where good men dwell; to them he cauſeth it to come (as it followeth in the Text)

For Mercy.] The third Meſſage about which the Clouds are ſent or cauſed to come, is for favour. God diſpenceth mercy by the Cloud, he cauſeth it to come for mercy. The Original word rendred mercy hath a great ſignificancy in it, this eſpecially, a bountiful good-will towards others, without reſpect to merit, or any antecedent obligation. When here 'tis ſaid He cauſeth it to come for Mercy, we are to underſtand much more than was meant before, when 'tis ſaid, He cauſeth it to come for his land, to feed the beaſts, and nouriſh the Plants; and I conceive we may give a twofold interpretation of it.

Firſt, For Mercy, that is, for ſome eminent uſes, beſides thoſe that are for meer neceſſity, to water the earth. Rain is ſent, Firſt, To purge; Secondly, to cool the air; Thirdly, to cheriſh and comfort the fruits of the Earth. But beſides theſe common and ordinary ends of ſending rain, ſomewhat extraordinary ſeems to be intended, when the Text ſaith, He cauſeth it to come for mercy, or favour. What's the favour or ſpecial mercy that comes by rain? Surely it is the ſending of ſuch a rain and ſuch a bleſſing with it, as cauſeth the earth to bring forth abundantly. The Lord can more than ſupply wants, he can give plenty, he can give as much in one year as may ſerve for two or three. Thus he promiſed (Levit. 25.21.) Then I will Command my bleſſing upon you in the ſixth year, and it ſhall bring forth fruit for three years; the ſixth year was the year before the Sabbath-year, for then they were not to till the ground; Now if you carefully obſerve my Sabbath-year (ſaith God) you ſhall have no want, though you do not ſow. This is a mercy, when God ſends in a double or treble Crop, when he not only ſends enough to ſerve the turn or to keep us alive, but abundance and plenty, ſo that the floors ſhall be full of wheat, and the fats ſhall overflow with wine and oyl, as the promiſe is expreſſed, Joel 2.24.

Sive ad Benignitatem, ſc. ut benigna fiat terra citra neceſſitatem, ut cum pluvia deſcendit ſummo æſtu ad aerem refrigerandum. Druſ.

Hence Note; God is not only a juſt, but a bountiful Maſter.

He doth not only give us enough for neceſſity, but for delight and contentment; if we uſe his bounty well, and turn not his bleſſings to his diſhonour, plenty will be our mercy. The Clouds come ſometimes for Correction, God ſweeps away even our neceſſaries, by rains which are therefore in Scripture called ſweeping rains; at other times the Clouds come for mercy, and empty themſelves to fill us with the bleſſings of the earth; that we, both by corrections and favours may be led to repentance, and receive further mercy, not only mercy from the Clouds, but mercy above the Clouds. Thus the words ſtand in a fair oppoſition, and one part of the verſe illuſtrates the other.

Yet I conceive there is ſomewhat further in theſe words, for mercy, or in mercy and free benignity; which may intimate thus much to us,

That even the Rain from the Clouds, and fruits of the Earth, are not given us of deſert, but of free favour and mercy.

They come for mercy, or as a mercy. God doth not feed the World becauſe he owes them any thing, but becauſe he is merciful: we do not oblige him to give us a drop of rain, or a morſel of bread; ſweet ſhowrs from Heaven, and plentiful harveſts on Earth, are acts of grace, mercy, favour, and good-will unto man. God payeth men wages in nothing but in puniſhment; when God puniſheth, he pays wages, that which is deſerv'd; if God ſend the Clouds for Correction, we have what our ſins have procured and brought upon us; but if he ſend plenty, we have mercy, a gracious bounty or largeſs from the hand of God; our daily bread is not pay nor wages, but reward and mercy, much leſs is that which is more or beyond our daily bread. We by ſin deſerve that the Heavens ſhould be (as the Lord threaten'd his ancient people in caſe of diſobedience) as braſs, and the Earth as iron; but we have not deſerv'd that the Heavens ſhould drop fatneſs, and the Earth yield her increaſe; this is mercy. Not only are we to look upon the Pardon of ſin as a mercy, and Redemption by the blood of Chriſt as a mercy, and Juſtification through his Righteouſneſs as mercy, and eternal life as a mercy, or coming from mercy, and free grace; but we are to receive every bit of bread as coming to us through mercy, freely, and not upon any account of our own workings or deſervings. And if we cannot deſerve a ſhower, no not a drop of rain from the Clouds, if we cannot deſerve a Crop of Corn from the earth, then ſurely we cannot deſerve grace or peace from God, or eternal life and happineſs with God.

Therefore how ſhould we magnifie and admire the mercy and free grace of God for ſpiritual things, when we ſee ſuch caſe of magnifying him, even for temporal good things! If the clouds are favourable to us, it is of mercy.

Further, That notion may be well improv'd, which ſome give of this word, reading the Abſtract by the Concrete; we ſay, For mercy, they ſay for the merciful, that is, for the liberal, benign, and merciful man, the man of a large heart to do good: God cauſeth the cloud to come ſometimes for Correction, uſually for his Land, to conveigh common comforts, and he hath his times wherein he cauſeth it to come for the merciful, That is, in ſpecial favour to thoſe that are merciful, and good, and gracious, both as they have received grace from God, and as they have done good things for and among men: He that watereth, ſhall be watered alſo himſelf, (Pro. 11. 24.) Thus you ſee the three-fold Meſſage that God ſends the Clouds upon, either to Correct men for their ſin, or for his Land, that the Creature in general may have ſubſiſtence, or for ſpecial favour and mercy to his peculiar people, and for thoſe above the reſt, of good men, who are merciful and ready to do good.

VERS. 14, 15, 16.

Hearken unto this, O Job, ſtand ſtill and conſider the wondrous works of God.
Doſt thou know when God diſpoſed them and cauſed the light of his cloud to ſhine?
Doſt thou know the ballancings of the Clouds, the wonderous works of him which is perfect in knowledg?

THis context begins the ſecond part of the Chapter, wherein Elihu, Firſt, Exciteth Job to a ſerious contemplation of the wonderful works of God; this is expreſſed in the 14. Verſe.

Secondly, He urgeth the weakneſs and inability of Job, and indeed of any man, to underſtand the full compaſs of thoſe works: And this he doth, Firſt, In general, as to them all, in the beginning of the 15. Verſe, Doſt thou know when God diſpoſed them?

Secondly, He ſheweth his inability as to particulars, or the ſeveral kinds of the works of God:

Firſt, As to his cauſing of the Light to ſhine, in the cloſe of the 15. Verſe.

Secondly, As to his weighing or ballancing of the Clouds, Verſe 16.

The ſum of theſe three verſes, together with the two next which follow, make up an earneſt exhortation, that Job conſidering, and comparing that great power and wiſdom of God, which appear and ſhine in thoſe forementioned works, with his own weakneſs and inſufficiency, would therefore humble himſelf, and not venture any further to conteſt or plead with God.

And becauſe many of the Lords providential works are unſearchable, as well as theſe which are natural, therefore Elihu would not have Job buſie himſelf in any curious prying into thoſe which concerned his preſent condition. For, if there be infinite and unerring wiſdom tempered with mercy, and juſtice with goodneſs, in all the outward diſpenſations of God, ordering the motions and Meteors of the Heavens, the Clouds, the Rain, the Snow and Hail, the Lightning and the Thunder; then ſurely Job ought to ſit down convinced, that there is a like temperament of equity with ſeverity, and of goodneſs with ſharpneſs in all his dealings with men, and was with him in particular. That's the ſcope and purpoſe of Elihu all along, in reading Job this Philoſophical Lecture, or in putting queſtions to him about the things of Nature, and the regiment of God in theſe inferiour Heavens, the Air, where all things ſeem to move without rule, or by no rule other than what Nature alone impoſeth.

Verſ. 14. Hearken unto this, O Job.

We have more than once met with this awakening exhortation, which calleth for ſuch an harkening, as if a man were to be all ear in attending what is ſpoken. We may well render it, Ear this, O Job, take it, drink it in at thine ear; Hearken,

Unto this;] Elihu doth not exhort him to attention in general, but draws it down to ſome ſpecial matter, Hearken unto this, O Job. Which words may have a double reference, either

Firſt, To what he had before ſaid (Ver. 13.) telling him how God ſends the Rain and cauſeth the Cloud to come, either for correction, or for his Land, or for mercy; Hearken unto this, O Job, here's a leſſon for thee, remember it well, God ſends forth theſe ſervants of his, the Clouds to do his work, either for correction or for mercy, either in favour or in judgment; Hearken unto this, O Job: Or,

Secondly, The words may refer to that which followeth, and ſo, as one calls them, they are an Exordium, a brief Exordinm, or ſhort preface to what Elihu had further to ſay; as if he would a little relieve the ſpirits and quicken the attention of Job, by acquainting him, that he had ſome new matter to lay before him. As if he had ſaid, I have not yet uttered all my mind, I have ſomewhat more upon my heart, which I cannot hold in, both for thy conviction and inſtruction; Hearken unto this, O Job.

Yet it may be queſtioned, why Elihu ſhould thus ſtir up his attention, either to conſider what he had ſpoken, or what he was now about to ſpeak? Was Job a heedleſs, an un-attentive hearer? We may conceive he was occaſioned to give him this ſpur, or excitation, for theſe three reaſons, or at leaſt ſome of them.

Firſt, We may ſuppoſe, that Job having been entertained with a long diſcourſe, began to grow weary and ſlacken his attention, and therefore, as when we ſee one in a congregation remiſs in hearing, or ſleeping out a weighty point, we jog him, or ſay, Hearken to this; ſo Elihu here.

Hence Note; Firſt, A good hearer of the Word, may ſometimes want an awakening word.

He that is not (as Job was not) a firſt, nor ſecond, nor third-ground-hearer, but (as Job was) a fourth-ground-hearer, one that heareth with a good and honeſt heart, yet, even he may a little let down his watch, and give juſt occaſion to the ſpeaker for ſuch a ſhort diverſion as Elihu here uſed, Hearken (I pray) to this. There is a willingneſs of ſpirit in all fourth-ground, or right-hearted-hearers, yet, there is alſo, even in them, a weakneſs of the fleſh; corruption may be ſtirring, temptation may be working, therefore 'tis no unneceſſary jealouſie in the Miniſters of the Goſpel, ſometimes to mingle or interweave ſuch paſſages as theſe, in ſpeaking to them, pray hearken, ſtir up and awaken your ſelves: There may be need of this (I ſay) where there is a general good bent of heart. Some pretending hearers are like the Idols of the heathen, who have eyes and ſee not, ears and hear not; who, when they are hearing, ſet themſelves, at leaſt give way, to ſleep, and willingly yield to the drowſineſs of their ſpirits; this ſheweth an evil heart: but a good man may be overtaken with drowſineſs, and find much indiſpoſition to duty, while he is in duty, and then he will Count it a Favour, to hear ſuch a word as this caſt in, Pray hearken.

Secondly, Elihu might afreſh provoke him to more ſerious attention, becauſe the matter he had to deliver, was of more importance, or did more nearly concern him, than what he had ſaid before.

Hence Note; Though the whole truth of God is to be attended to, yet there are ſome truths that call for ſpecial attention.

Here is an accent put upon the point in hand, Hearken to this. We ſhould not let any truth fall to the ground, truth is precious quite through, and we may ſay of truth as of Gold, the very filings of it are precious. We ſave the leaſt duſt of Gold, every grain of it is of worth, and ſo is every grain, or the leaſt duſt of Divine truth. One jot, one tittle of the Law (ſaith Chriſt, Matth. 5. 18.) Shall in no wiſe paſs till all be fulfilled; Surely then, no jot, no tittle of it ſhould be lightly paſſed by, by us. Yet there are ſome Divine truth like ſtuds of maſſie Gold, or as Jewels, which ought to be more carefully attended to, and laid up in the cabinet of the heart; Some truths have an emphaſis, a Selah ſet upon them, O hearken to theſe. Chriſt ſaith in the Goſpel, about the tithing of mint, anniſe and cummin, Theſe things ye ought to do, but be ſure ye do not leave the weightier matters of the Law, Judgment, Mercy and Faith undone (Matth. 23.23.) ſo ſay I, attend to the leaſt truths, but be ſure ye attend to fundamental truths, to thoſe truths upon which the whole weight of the Soul ſtands; Such is, The great Myſtery of Godlineſs, God manifeſt in the fleſh; and the great Grace of Faith in that Myſtery: Theſe, with ſeveral others are the fundamentals, the very vitals of Religion; all falls and dies, unleſs ye ſtand faſt and live in theſe: O hearken unto them.

Thirdly, Elihu may be conceived to ſpeak thus to Job, becauſe he ſaw him about to interrupt him; poſſibly he might perceive a little paſſion ſtirring in him, therefore, not only to keep up his attention, or to wind up his watch, but to repreſs and keep down ſome ſtormy troubled motions riſing in his ſpirit, Elihu made this ſhort interlocution or digreſſion, Hearken to this, O Job, ſuffer me to ſpeak out, do not take me off, I have not yet done.

Hence Note; Patience is neceſſary in a good hearer;

And that not only for the doing what is heard, but for the hearing of it. As we can never bring forth the fruit of that which we hear without patience, ſo neither can we without patience hear that which ſhould make us fruitful. The great grace to be exerciſed in hearing the Word, is Faith; yet we have need of Patience in hearing the Word, and that in a double reſpect.

Firſt, We have need of Patience, as to continuance in hearing. Some would fain have done preſently, they cannot ſit it out, an hour is a year to them, the word is a wearineſs to them, they ſoon think they have enough.

Secondly, There is need of patience for ſubmiſſion to what is heard. How ſhort ſoever the Sermon is, yet when it pincheth the conſcience and pricketh the heart, it is not eaſily born. They who hear quietly ſome words of truth, will not endure ſome other; we hardly continue hearing with any patience, when to us, the word heard, is a hard ſaying, and bears hard upon either, our conſciences or our practiſes; when the finger is, as it were, laid upon, and preſſeth the ſore, few can endure it. 'Tis eaſie to hear pleaſing things, but that which croſſeth our ſpirits or our ways calls for patience. When Stephen, the Proto-martyr, preached to the Jews, and brought the word home to their conſciences, by that cloſe application (Acts 7. 51.) Ye ſtiff-necked and uncircumciſed in heart and ear, ye do always reſiſt the Holy Ghoſt; as your Fathers did, ſo do ye. At this word, or, when they heard theſe things, they were cut to the heart (ſaith the Text) and they gnaſhed on them with their teeth; their patience was quite ſpent, they could hear no longer. And when St. Paul ſpake to that great Aſſembly (Acts 22. 1,—22, 23.) They gave him audience unto this word (I will ſend thee to the Gentiles) and then liſt up their voices and ſaid, away with ſuch a fellow from the earth, for it is not fit that he ſhould live: Then they cryed out, and caſt off their cloths, and threw duſt in the air. Thus they raved and were enraged, like angry, yea like mad dogs, when once their Title was queſtioned, or (as we ſpeak) their coppy-hold toucht, by the mention of the Gentiles, whom they greatly deſpiſed, and judged themſelves ſo much above. Hearken to this, to this pinching word, to the word that ſtrikes upon your luſts. The length of a Sermon ſpoils the patience of ſome, but the ſtrength and ſearching power of it, ſpoils the patience of more. A ſincere heart is willing to hear all, and is moſt pleaſed to hear that word, which gives deepeſt wounds to any corruption of heart or tranſgreſſion of life. Such words are wholeſome, though bitter or ſharp, and the more they make us ſmart, the more medicinal and healing they are. Hearken unto this, O Job, עמר Stat. ſc. per mentis rectitudinem. Aquin.

Stand ſtill and conſider the wonderous works of God.

Elihu not only deſires Job to hearken, but to ſtand ſtill and conſider.

There is a twofold ſtanding ſtill.

Firſt, Bodily. I do not conceive Elihu impoſing any ſuch geſture or compoſure upon Job, as to ſtand ſtill and not ſtir his body. The Hebrew is but one word, ſtand up. There is a liberty as to any comely geſture of the body in hearing; a man may lawfully ſit as well as ſtand and hear, yet to ſtand up and hear, ſheweth a readineſs of the mind, and a hungring deſire after the Word.

Secondly, There is a ſtanding ſtill of the mind. The body may ſtand as ſtill as a ſtake or ſtone, while the mind is in ſtrong motion, yea, while there are moſt vehement commotions and perturbations in the mind. This ſtill-ſtanding of the mind in hearing what is ſpoken may be taken in a double oppoſition.

Firſt, To any impatience, unquietneſs or uncompoſedneſs of the mind when the word is ſpoken.

Secondly, To any irreverence, ſlighting or diſregarding of the word ſpoken. To ſtand ſtill is to get the ſpirit quiet, to hear patiently; or to ſtand ſtill is to get the heart into a reverential frame, to hear affectionately. So then, to ſtand ſtill implieth both patience and reverence. We have like admonitions in the 30. Chapter of this Book (Verſ. 20.) and Chapter 32. (Verſ. 16.) Yea, that admonition of Balaam was of like ſenſe with this (Num. 23. 18.) Riſe up Balak, and hear. When Balaam was about to deliver his parable, and declare the mind of God concerning Iſrael, he called upon Balak to riſe and ſtand up, that is, to entertain the meſſage with reſpect. Hearken unto this, O Job, ſtand ſtill.

Hence Note; We ought to be in a gracious quietneſs and compoſure of ſpirit when we are called to hear and mind what God hath done or ſpoken.

Further, We ought to have a quiet, ſedate, compoſed ſpirit, not only when we hear doctrinal truths delivered from the word of God, but alſo when we hear of the providences and various works of God. As this word, ſtand ſtill, may refer to the words going before, Hearken unto this, ſo to thoſe which follow, Conſider the wonderful works of God: And then the duty required in them reaches both his Word and Works. It is a great power of grace which cauſeth the heart to ſtand ſtill in this ſenſe, that is, to be in a quiet frame when the works of God trouble us, or are troubleſome to us. Thus Moſes beſpake the Iſraelites (Exod. 14. 12.) Stand ſtill, and ſee the Salvation of God. It was a very troubleſome time with the Iſraelites, they were ready to give themſelves and all they had for loſt, when Moſes exhorted them to ſtand ſtill. Nothing but faith in God can make us ſtand ſtill when we are ready to fall, and that will certainly do it. Unbelief makes the heart as unquiet as their's was upon the report of a War againſt Judah (Iſa. 7.2.) And his heart (that is, the heart of Ahaz) was moved, and the heart of his people as the trees of the wood are moved with the wind. 'Tis hard travel of ſoul to ſtand ſtill and ſee the ſalvation of God, when every thing ſeen threatens deſolation. The Lord is repreſented requiring us to do ſo (Pſal. 46. 10.) Be ſtill, and know that I am God. When the Pſalmiſt had ſpoken of the deſolating works of God, he added this word from the Lord, be ſtill; as if he had ſaid, the Lord commandeth you to be of a quiet and compoſed ſpirit, when all things ſeem to be in a hurry or confuſion; for, he had ſaid before (Verſ. 8.) Come, behold the works of the Lord, what deſolations he hath made in the Earth! Yet even now (ſaith the Lord) Be ſtill, and know that I am God. David at the beginning of the Pſalm had profeſſed a firm purpoſe in himſelf and in all the faithful with him, for ſuch a ſtill-ſtanding, how-ever things moved or matters ſhould go, yea tumble in this world (Verſ. 1. 2.) Though the Earth be moved, and though the mountains be carried into the midſt of the Sea, though the waters thereof roar, &c. We will not fear, God is our refuge and ſtrength. How comely is it for man thus to ſtand ſtill in a ſilent and believing conſideration of what God hath done or is doing; to which Elihu calleth Job expreſly, in the next words, ſtand ſtill;

Conſider the wonderous works of God.

Here is, Firſt, Conſideration.

Secondly, Conſideration of the works of God.

Thirdly, Conſideration of the wonderous works of God.

ההתבובנ בות • Intelligere.

To conſider, is the ſpecial work of the Underſtanding, or of the intellectual Powers. To conſider, is the moſt proper work of a rational creature. It is no eaſie matter to conſider our ſelves, what we are, and what we have done, or what we are doing (Hag. 1.7.) Conſider your ways: But 'tis a harder matter to conſider God, as good in his being and nature, and as good in his workings and operations. That's the buſineſs of this Text, Conſider the wonderous works of God; conſider them in the fullneſs of them, and conſider them fully. In which ſenſe the Prophet reproves the Jews for their non-conſideration, Iſrael doth not know, my people do not conſider (Iſa. 1.3.) They do not conſider what I have done, nor what I am doing; they are an inconſiderate and regardleſs people, and therefore a people not to be regarded. There's nothing worth the taking notice of in a people or perſon, who take no notice of the works of God. They who will not conſider his doings will quickly be inconſiderable, and of no account with him. Conſider the wonderful works of God.

Conſideration is oppoſed to two things;

Firſt, To ſlightneſs of Spirit, or the light paſſing over, of what we hear or ſee.

Secondly, to unquietneſs and paſſionateneſs of ſpirit, becauſe of what we hear or ſee. Some lightly paſs things by, others think of the works of God in a paſſion, or with a kind of rage; they are rather vexing themſelves about the wonderous works of God, then conſidering them. Conſideration is a work that ſtands between theſe two extreams, ſlightneſs and unquietneſs of ſpirit. Conſideration requires a ſerious Soul, and if right, it makes the Soul patient. They who once conſider the works of God rightly, will reſt in them ſatisfiedly. Conſider the wonderful works of God.

Elihu was ſpeaking of thoſe works of God in the Air, the Meteors, Clouds and Rain, &c. As under the rule of his providence; now ſaith he, Conſider

The wonderful works of God.

This informs us, that the works of God are very conſiderable.

Firſt, In natural things; That is, what God doth in diſpoſing the courſe of nature, muſt be duely conſidered by man.

Secondly, In civil things, that is, in what he doth in ordering the affairs of men; and theſe either publick in Nations, or private in Families: In all theſe God hath his workings, and his works in all muſt be conſidered.

Thirdly, In ſpiritual things, what he doth in ways of grace upon the Souls of men, in convincing and converting them, in humbling and comforting them, which are his choiceſt and moſt excellent works of all. Now, though all theſe works of God are to be conſidered, the laſt eſpecially; yet the works of God here ſet before Job, are thoſe in Nature, and the providential diſpoſure of them: theſe are no ſmall matters; Elihu calls them, and ſo they are, wonderful;

Conſider the wonderful works of God.] Theſe works of God in and about natural things, may be diſtributed into thoſe that are common and ordinary, or thoſe that are rare and extraordinary. Elihu is not treating here about the rare, extraordinary works of God, but about the common and ordinary works of God in the Clouds, the Rain and Winds, &c. Yet he calls them wonderful; Conſider (ſaith he) the wonderful works of God.

From the connexion, in that Elihu bids Job ſtand ſtill, and then conſider the wonderful works of God;

> Obſerve, Firſt; We can never conſider things aright, till our minds come to a reſt and are quiet.

We cannot make a true uſe of our reaſon, when we are much moved with paſſion; we muſt ſtand ſtill before we can conſider. Moſes when the buſh burned and did not conſume, ſaid, I will now turn aſide and ſee this great ſight, why the buſh is not burnt, (Exod. 3.3.) He went near and ſtood, conſidering that wonderful work of God; He was not in a fright, he was not ſcared to ſee a burning buſh, but he ſtood in a well compoſed frame of mind, to conſider what his eyes beheld, or the meaning of that ſtrange ſight.

> Secondly, Note; The works of God are matter of great conſideration.

As the word of God is to be conſidered, ſo his works, and none can profitably conſider the word of God, unleſs they conſider the works of God too; His works are a Comment upon his word, the word of God is exemplified in his works; what God ſpeaketh that he doth. We may find the word of God tranſcribed in his works, I (ſaith David, Pſal. 77.12.) will meditate alſo of all thy works, and talk of thy doings. The Character given of a godly man (Pſal. 1.2.) is, He meditates in the Law of God night and day: and (Pſal. 119.148.) Mine eyes prevent the night watches, that I might meditate in thy word. Now as a godly man ſhould meditate the word, ſo the works of God night and day. David was reſolved to do ſo in the place before-mentioned; as alſo (Pſal. 143.5.) I (ſaith he) remember the days of old, I meditate on all thy works: I muſe on the work of thy hands. Did we rightly conſider the works of God, how juſt, how good they are, we would be more in doing good works, and we ſhould do our good works better. If any ask, How are we to conſider the works of God? I anſwer, Firſt, Conſider them in their number, that they are many. The wonderful works of God are innumerable; he doth not only one, not only two or three, but many, very many wonderful works: Many, O Lord my God (ſaith David, Pſal. 40.5.) are the wonderful works which thou haſt done.

Secondly, Conſider the wonderful works of God in their kinds or ſorts, works of Creation, or works of Providence. The works of God in Providence are very various; His works in the Heavens, and his works on the Earth, his works of judgment, and his works of mercy, his works of patience, and his works of vengeance, his works in delivering us from evil, and his works for the continuance of our good, are very various; and 'tis our duty to conſider them all. Whatſoever or howſoever God is pleaſed to work, the thoughts of man ſhould work upon it, and give him the glory of it.

Thirdly, The works of God are to be conſidered, as in their number and kinds or ſorts, ſo in their circumſtances. As we are to conſider our ſins, not only in their kind, but circumſtances, which exceedingly aggravate and heighten ſin; ſo circumſtances in the works of God muſt be conſidered, for they exceedingly heighten the works of God: As the circumſtances of a ſin may make a ſin, little for the matter, very great and exceeding ſinful; ſo a circumſtance in any work of God may make it (though little in it ſelf) great and wonderful. We leave out the very ſtrength of a work of mercy, when we paſs by the circumſtances of it: A work of mercy done in ſuch a time, in ſuch a way, a work done for ſuch a people, for a people ſo undeſerving, renders the work much more conſiderable, and valuable. The Lord (ſaith David, Pſal. 111.4.) hath made his wonderful works to be remembred. The old tranſlation ſaith, The merciful and gracious Lord hath ſo done his marveilous works, that puts a ſo upon his works, he hath not only done them, but, he hath done them ſo, in ſuch a way, with ſuch circumſtances, he hath put ſuch marks, ſuch accents upon them, that they are to be remembred, that they cannot but be remembred. It is but an half conſideration of the works of God, to conſider them abſtractly and nakedly, without their cloathings, that is, their circumſtances of time, place, perſons, when, where, how, for whom, and by whom they were done.

Fourthly, We ſhould conſider the works of God, in their aims, ends, and tendencies; not only what they are, but what they lead to, what the purpoſe of God may be in them, with reſpect to our ſelves, with reſpect to the Church, with reſpect to the world, is very conſiderable. There is not a drop of rain that falls from Heaven, but it hath a purpoſe in it, and that not only to feed and nouriſh man by making the earth fruithful, but to make our hearts and lives fruitful.

Or thus, We are to conſider the works of God in their aims, Firſt, as to God, to ſet forth his power, wiſdom, goodneſs. Secondly, as to man; Firſt, to draw man nearer to God; Secondly, to raiſe him up in thankfulneſs; Thirdly, in holineſs and conformity to the will of God.

Now, if this be to conſider the works of God; then we may infer;

Though there be many who ſee the works of God, yet there are but few who conſider them.

It is an eaſie thing to ſee the works of God, that's only eye-work, but to conſider them is difficult, that's head-work and heart-work too. Though I conceive, that word rendred to ſee, is ſometimes uſed in the ſenſe of this Text, for conſideration (Iſa. 26. 11.) When thy hand is lifted up they will not ſee. They could not chooſe but ſee with their eyes, that ſuch things were done, but they did not ſee, or rather would not ſee, as ſeeing notes conſidering, the hand and aim of God in doing them: They who have no mind to anſwer and ſubmit to, to profit by, and conform to the works of God, have no care, nor will they take the pains, to get ſuch a ſight of them. So that while moſt ſee the works of God ocularly, while they ſee the outſide, the bulk and body of them, they ſee not the works of God ſpiritually, no nor ſo much as rationally. 'Tis not a glance of the eye, but the ſtudy of the mind which is required in ſeeing the works of God. And hence it is that though there are ſtore of ſpectators and talkers of the works of God, yet there are few conſiderers of them. Every one almoſt will be ſpeaking of the great things which God doth, ſaying, What do you hear? Or do you not hear what is done, what is come to paſs? But where is the conſideration of what is done, or of what hath paſſed? Who ſtayeth his thoughts, and breathes wiſely upon the works of God? They are wiſe indeed who do ſo, as David concluded, after a long and moſt excellent diſcourſe of the works of God, (Pſal. 107. 43.) Who is wiſe and will obſerve theſe things (as if he had ſaid, None but the wiſe will nor can obſerve them) even they ſhall underſtand the loving kindneſs of the Lord.

Thirdly, What are thoſe works which Elihu here calls the wonderful works of God? Surely thoſe deſcribed both in the foregoing and ſubſequent part of this Chapter are (which are no prodigies in Nature) the Winds, Rain, Froſt, Snow, Thunder and Lightning: Theſe are the matter of his diſcourſe, and of theſe he ſaith, Conſider the wonderful works of God.

Hence Obſerve; The common, conſtant, and ordinary works of God, are full of wonders.

Though we rightly diſtinguiſh the works of God (as was touched before) into ordinary and extraordinary, common and wonderful, yet did we fully underſtand them, there is a kind of wonder and miraculouſneſs in all the works of God, even in his moſt common, ordinary, or every days works. What is more ordinary and common than the generation and formation of man, Yet (ſaith David, Pſal. 139. 15.) I will praiſe thee; for I am fearfully and wonderfully made; marvellous are thy works, and that my ſoul knoweth right well. And the reaſon why we do not look out the wonders of that and of many other common works of God, is, becauſe they are ſo common. The very falling of the Rain hath a wonder in it, the blowing of the Wind hath a wonder in it, the motion of the clouds hath a wonder in it, the growing of every ſpire of graſs out of the earth hath a wonder in it, the budding out of every leaf and bloſſom on the tree hath a wonder in it; yet becauſe theſe things are common, we do not think nor call them wonderful. Every one would think it a wonder to ſee a dry rod, a rod cut off from the tree, bloſſom, as Aarons did (Numb. 17. 8.) but who thinks it a wonder, to ſee a tree well rooted in the earth bloſſom every Spring? Yet there is a wonder, a wonderful work of God in that alſo. A Heathen Philoſopher could ſay from his own obſervation of things and perſons, Cuſtom takes away admiration. Such is the genius or ſpirit of mankind, that we never admire what we often ſee or meet with, though in it ſelf it be never ſo admirable. Who admires the motion of the Sun every day? Yet the Suns motion every day is as miraculous and ſtupendious, as its ſtanding ſtill was in that day of Joſhua's battel with the Kings, or as its retrograde motion or going back was in that day of King Hezekiah's recovery from a mortal diſeaſe. That ſuch a vaſt body as the Sun, ſhould take and fulfil ſuch a journey, ſhould paſs ſuch an unconceivable ſpace in twenty-four hours, is an amazing wonder, yet no man wonders at it. It hath been ſaid, The Sun and Moon have hardly any beholders (they can ſcarcely get a look from us) unleſs when Eclipſed, and then all men ſtand gazing and wondering at them, every one will be looking towards them with hands lifted up, and ſay, O ſtrange! yet the Eclipſes of the Sun and Moon are far eaſier to the conceptions of Reaſon, then the motion of the Sun and Moon is, conſidering the vaſt courſe they run and perform every day. We admire things out of courſe, or when their courſe is diſturbed, yet the conſtant courſe of things is much more admirable; every time the Sun riſeth, every time the rain falleth, every time the wind bloweth, every time the tide turneth, we have a wonderful work of God preſented to our contemplation. Though Aſtronomers and Philoſophers have ſpoken much of the reaſon or cauſe of theſe things, yet they cannot reach the bottom of them. The Stoicks differ from the Peripateticks, each having probable and plauſible arguments for their opinion about natural things; yet none of them hit the matter fully, becauſe there is a wonderfulneſs in them which God is pleaſed to hide from man, as alſo becauſe they were not at all guided by a divine Light in the diſquiſition of them, but meerly by human Reaſon and natural underſtanding.

Magnitudine rerum conſuetudo ſubducit: ita enim compoſiti ſumus, ut nos, quotidiana etiamſi admiratione digna ſint, tranſeant. Sen. l. 7. Nat. quæſt. c. 11.

Sol ſpectatorem, niſi cum deficit, non habet; nemo obſervat lunam, niſi laborantem.

Let this be remember'd, The ordinary works of God have wonders in them. I ſhall conclude this point with paralleling the extraordinary and ordinary works of God, as to the real wonderfulneſs of them, by two Scripture miracles. The ſtopping of the fire from burning the three Children, was a wonderful work of God; ſo alſo is the making of ſuch a creature as burning Fire, yet who wonders at it? It was a wonderful work of God to ſtop the mouths of thoſe hungry Lions from devouring Daniel; ſo alſo is the making of a devouring Lion, yet who wonders at it? Now, ſeeing there are wonders even in the ordinary works of God,

We may take much comfort in our ſtraits, for 'tis no hard matter with God to work wonders; he works ſome for us every day, they are his daily works. If we need a miracle to ſave us in an eminent danger, God can do it; when we ſee no means in the World to produce ſuch an effect, yet we are never the further from it. Gods ordinary works are full of wonder; He doth the hardeſt things with as much eaſe, as thoſe which we call and count the eaſieſt.

Elihu having thus awakened the attention of Job, and called him in general to that internal work of conſideration about the external works of God, he (I ſay) having done this, deſcends to particulars in the next verſe, and thoſe which follow.

Verſ. 15. Doſt thou know when God diſpoſed them, and cauſed the Light of his Cloud to ſhine?

Here Elihu begins to come upon Job thick and threefold (as we ſay) with his Queſtions, he puts him many Queſtions, and hard ones; and ſo doth God alſo, Chapter 38, 39, and 40. And as here Elihu, ſo there God poſeth or examineth Job in the things of Nature. If we look from this verſe to the end of Gods diſcourſe with Job, we may find this Queſtion, Doſt thou know? Put more than twenty times to Job. But why are theſe poſing Queſtions put ſo often? I anſwer, to humble Job and ſilence him from Queſtioning the dealings of God with him; why did God alter my condition? Why have I been thus afflicted? Why emptied from veſſel to veſſel, ſaid Job? I would fain know the Reaſon of my ſufferings. Well, ſaith God, anſwer my Queſtions firſt; I would know this or that of thee; and ſo ſaith Elihu in the behalf of God,

Doſt thou know when God diſpoſed them?

The word rendred diſpoſe, ſignifieth to order, direct, appoint, and determine; to diſpoſe is all theſe. Doſt thou know when God diſpoſed

שום Ordinare, ſtatuere, decernere.

Them?] What? Some refer the them, to all that had been ſpoken of before, to the Clouds, the Rain, the Thunder, the Lightning, the light; Doſt thou know when God did order the clouds to Thunder and Rain, or the Sun to ſhine? As if he had ſaid, God diſpoſed of theſe without asking thy advice; did he acquaint thee with the orders he ſent to the clouds, or with the commands which he gave to the Lightning and the Thunder? Canſt thou tell when God will work, or what he will work in the clouds? He may be making preparation for fair weather or foul weather there, and thou never the wiſer, but altogether uncertain of what he is about. Thus he humbleth Job, and labours to take him off from his murmurings and complainings, as alſo from over-bold queryings and queſtionings about the providential workings of God with, and towards him, by bringing him under a full conviction of his great inability to underſtand or comprehend the natural works of God, or when God ſet the Law and gave the Rule to or about theſe things; Doſt thou know when God diſpoſed them?

Hence Note; Firſt, God did not only make the world, and all the furniture of it, but he diſpoſeth the motions of every creature in it:

All things move as they are influenced by his power, and directed by his wiſdom. The date of Gods order for diſpoſing the creature is from the beginning, yea from everlaſting. As the model of the Creation, what things ſhould be, was with him from everlaſting, ſo was the model of Providence, how all things ſhould be governed and diſpoſed of. The government of the world is as much of God as the Creation or giving of it a being. From the Stars in Heaven, to the Worms creeping upon the Earth, all creatures were and are guided in their courſe by him; he hath ſet them bounds which they cannot paſs, and ſent out his word to them which they fail not to obſerve. Heathens, generally, did not acknowledg God to be the Maker of the world, nor did they acknowledg him the diſpoſer of it, but aſcribed all the viciſſitudes here below to blind Fortune, or to uncertain Chance. Ariſtotle, the fore-man, the wiſeſt of that rank, thought the World was eternal; he could not find how it had a beginning, and therefore concluded it had none: yet others of the wiſe Heathen had a notion that there was a beginning, that there was a firſt-worker, but when or how he wrought they could not tell. And as the wiſeſt men, who had but the light of nature and reaſon to teach them, were very dark about the beginning of all things, ſo alſo about their motion, they thought that all things either moved of themſelves, or that the ſupream Power having put Nature into a courſe, it acted alone, ſo that God never medled about particulars. Whereas we are taught and aſſured, by this Scripture-Text, and many more, that God not only made all things, but diſpoſeth all things, even to the fall of a Sparrow upon the ground, or to the loſs of an hair of the head (*Matth.*10.20.) Chriſt ſaith alſo (John 5.17.) My Father worketh hitherto, and I work. Creation was a work ended in ſix days, but Providence is a work that never ends; thus God always worketh, though always at reſt. That's the leſſon here intended.

It may be matter of much comfort to us, that all things are ordered by God, that he diſpoſeth of Thunder and Lightning, of Rain and Wind, of Snow and Froſt; much more may it comfort us, that he diſpoſeth the affairs of men, of his Church and People. Known unto God are all his works, from the beginning of the world (Acts 15.18) and therefore the Prophet brings in the Lord thus ſpeaking of himſelf (*Iſa.*46.9,10.) I am God and there is none elſe, I am God and there is none like me, declaring the end from the beginning, and from ancient times the things that are not yet done. He that knoweth what the end of all things will be, muſt needs diſpoſe of all ſecond cauſes, and intermediate acts leading thereunto. The reaſon why men often miſ-reckon and fail of their expectation about the ends and iſſues of things, is, becauſe they have not all the means in their power, yea, I may ſay, they have not any of the means fully, no nor at all in their own power. The way of man is not in himſelf, how then can his ends be? Only God knoweth what ſhall be the concluſion, becauſe he hath the full diſpoſure of all the premiſes, means, and ways, by which the concluſion is brought about. Let us adore and conſider the power of God, as well in diſpoſing of the creature, as in making of it.

Again, Doſt thou know? &c. Surely thou doſt not. The queſtion here, as often elſewhere, carrieth in it a ſtrong denial.

Hence Note; Men know little of the works and ways of God.

Some men are called knowing, and others ignorant, but all men are deficient in their knowledg both of the nature and works of God. Doſt thou know? But was Job ſome ignorant ſimple perſon? Surely no, Job was one of the wiſeſt as well as greateſt men of that age, he was as well verſed as any in the ſtudy and knowledg both of natural and ſpiritual things; Nor is he charged by Elihu here with ignorance ſimply, but with ignorance as to this, this was too high and too hard for him. We may with reverence enough queſtion their knowledg in ſome things, who are very knowing men in moſt things.

There are ſome things which 'tis a ſhame for a man not to know. The Apoſtle ſpeaks often in that language (Rom. 2.4.) Deſpiſeſt thou the riches of his goodneſs, and forbearance, and long-ſuffering, not knowing that the goodneſs of God leadeth thee to repentance? What a ſhame is it that any who know any thing ſhould not know and underſtand the ſcope of the mercy of God to ſinners; What! knoweſt thou not, that forbearance leads to repentance? Again, the ſame Apoſtle in the ſame Epiſtle puts the like upbrayding queſtion (Rom. 7.1.) Know ye not (for I ſpeak to them that know the Law) how that the Law hath dominion over a man as long as he liveth. He is not worthy to be reckoned as a piece of mankind, who is altogether unknowing; nor is he worthy to be reckoned among the men of his profeſſion, who knows not the common principles of it. While the Apoſtle ſpake to thoſe who knew the Law, he preſumed they were not ignorant of that Rule in Law, that the Law which hath or ſhould have dominion over all men living, hath no dominion over any man beyond this life. Now (I ſay) as it is a ſhame for any man not to know thoſe things which are required of him, and ſpecially concern him; ſo 'tis a preſumption for any man to ſeek the knowledg of thoſe things which are purpoſely reſerved and hidden from him, (Deut. 29.29.) Secret things belong to God, revealed things to us and to our Children. Chriſt ſaith of the latter day, of the day of Judgment, (Matth. 24.36.) Of that day and hour knoweth no man, no not the Angels of Heaven, but my Father only: and he reproved the curioſity of his Apoſtles immediately before his aſcenſion, for enquiring after that kind of knowledg (Acts 1.7.) It is not for you to know the times or the ſeaſons which the Father hath put in his own power. As it is not profitable, ſo not lawful for us to look after the knowledg of thoſe things, which God hath lockt up and kept ſecret. Let us take heed we be neither found unknowing in thoſe things which it is a ſhame for us not to know, nor curiouſly prying into the knowledg of thoſe things which are reſtrained from our knowledg. But (to the preſent point) it may be much matter of humiliation to us, that of thoſe things which we have a liberty, and 'tis our duty to know, we know ſo little. Job had free liberty to know, and ſearch after the knowledg of thoſe things about which Elihu put his queſtions, the Meteors of the Air, and the motions of thoſe ſuperiour bodies; yet Elihu knew he could ſay little in anſwer to theſe queſtions, when he asked him, Doſt thou know? &c. And therefore his purpoſe was to humble Job, while he made him ſee and know his own ignorance. And did the moſt knowing man in the world know his own ignorance, that would (I am ſure it might) make him very humble. We are apt to be very proud of a very ſmall portion of knowledg, a little puffs us up; whereas the ſenſe of our defects in knowledg may both make and keep us little in our own eyes: We ſhould be thank-ful for that little which we know, and humble becauſe we know ſo little.

Elihu having by the Queſtion now opened, convinced Job in general that he knew but little of the works of God, proceeds in the cloſe of this verſe, and further forwards, to convince him further of his defectiveneſs in knowledg, by putting the ſame queſtion about many other particulars: And the firſt particular about which he puts the ſame queſtion, is the Light of the Cloud; Doſt thou know when God diſpoſed them,

And cauſed the light of his Cloud to ſhine?

He queſtions Job again about another point, the weighing the clouds (*Verſ.*16.) Doeſt thou know the ballancing of the clouds, the wonderful works of him that is perfect in knowledg? As if he had ſaid, Gods cauſing the light of his cloud to ſhine, and his ballancing the clouds, are wonderful works, even the wonderful works of him who is perfect in knowledg; and tell me Job, Doeſt thou know theſe things? Doeſt thou know when God diſpoſed them,

And cauſed the light of his Cloud to ſhine? We muſt here repeat the former queſtion; and, Doeſt thou know when God cauſed the light of his Cloud to ſhine? Yea, ſome read this latter part of the verſe in dependance upon the former; Doeſt thou know when God diſpoſed them, that he might cauſe the light of his Cloud to ſhine? But I rather take it as a diſtinct Queſtion. In which, conſider, he doth not ſay, That he may cauſe the light of his Sun, but of his Cloud, to ſhine. 'Tis the Sun properly that ſhineth, clouds do not: The Sun is the Candle of the World, the receptacle and veſſel of light. Clouds are but veſſels or receptacles of water, they are not properly diaphanous, but opacous, or groſs, thick bodies: How then is it here ſaid, He cauſeth the light of his Cloud to ſhine? I anſwer, The cloud doth not ſhine by any connatural or intrinſick light, but by that which is adventitious, and accidental to it. And,

There is more in that word ſhine, than the ordinary ſhining of the Sun; the Hebrew root ſignifies not only to ſhine, but to break forth with ſhining in ſome very illuſtrious manner (*Deut.*33.2.) The Lord came from Sinai, and roſe up from Seir unto them, he ſhined forth from Mount Paran. Moſes carrieth a metaphor or borrowed ſpeech quite through the verſe, repreſenting God as the Sun ſhining forth and ſhewing himſelf to the people of Iſrael, in three ſeveral places, and as it were in as many diſtinct degrees of glorious manifeſtation. His glory ſhined firſt from Mount Sinai, where he gave the Law. Secondly, from Mount Seir or Edom, where (as I may ſay) he gave the Goſpel, commanding Moſes to make a Brazen Serpent, that they who looked on it might be cured of the poyſonous wounds given them by the fiery Serpents, (Numb. 21.) An illuſtrious tipe of Chriſt (*Joh.*3.14.) Thirdly, the glory of the Lord ſhined from Mount Paran, where Moſes, by command from the Lord, made repetition of the Law, adding ſundry Evangelical explications of it. In all which the Lord ſhined forth with a glorious brightneſs, infinitely exceeding that of the Sun. David in three of his Pſalms ſpeaking of the wonderful appearances and diſcoveries of God, Firſt, to ſave his people; Secondly, to judg and deſtroy his enemies, uſeth this word which here we tranſlate ſhine, (Pſal.50.1.) The mighty God, even the Lord, hath ſpoken and called the Earth from the riſing of the Sun, to the going down of the ſame; out of Zion the perfection of beauty God hath ſhined. That beauty with which God ſhines out of Zion in the divine ſplendor and holineſs of his worſhip and ordinances is very glorious. Again, (*Pſal.*80.1.) Give ear, O Shepherd of Iſrael, thou that leadeſt Joſeph like a flock, thou that dwelleſt between the Cherubims, ſhine forth; That is, declare thy ſelf in thy mighty power, as it followeth (Verſ. 2.) Before Ephraim Benjamin and Manaſſeh, ſtir up thy ſelf, and come and ſave us. And as the gracious appearances of God for the ſaving of his people, ſo likewiſe the dreadful appearances of God for the deſtruction of his enemies, are expreſſed by this word (*Pſal.*94.1.) O Lord God, to whom vengeance belongeth, O God, to whom vengeance belongeth, ſhew thy ſelf: The Hebrew is (and ſo we put it in the Margin) ſhine forth. Thus the word notes no ordinary ſhining, but ſhining both with vengeance, and with Salvation, which latter falls in well with the Interpretation of the light ſhining in the cloud which I ſhall open a little further.

And cauſeth the light of his Cloud to ſhine.

There are three Interpretations of theſe words.

Firſt, Some by the light of the Cloud, underſtand the lightning, which (all know) breaks through the Cloud, and ſhines out wonderfully before it Thunders. The light of lightning is a wonderful light.

Secondly, Others underſtand, by the light of his Cloud, the light of the Sun ſcattering the cloud, and as it were, turning the cloud into light, making light where none was, or nothing but a thick dark cloud.

Thirdly, Several learned Interpreters expound the light of his Cloud, by the Rainbow, which is alſo a very illuſtrious light, and that is eminently the light of Gods Cloud, 'tis his light in the cloud. We may alſo call it a light of the cloud; for though the light of the Sun falleth upon the clouds, yet the light of the Sun at other times is not ſo properly called the light of the cloud, as the light of the Rainbow is, or as when the light of the Sun, reflecting from or upon the cloud, cauſeth that Meteor, which we call the Rainbow; and therefore 'tis emphatically expreſt by this circumlocution, the ſhining of the light of his cloud. The ſhining light of the Rainbow hath in it a great appearance of God, for the help, Salvation, and deliverance of his people, 'tis a token of the good-will of God to man. And that we ſhould rather expound this place of the Rain-bow, than either of the Lightning, or the Sun-ſhine, I ſhall briefly give theſe four Reaſons, upon which I ground the Expoſition.

Sciſne quod Deus nubem eſſet diſcuſſurus ac ea diſcuſſa ſerenitatem invecturus. Merc.

Iris eſt lux in nube rorida & egregium opus Dei; de illa maluimus exponere, cum ante fulguris mentionem fecerit. Scult.

Firſt, Elihu had ſpoken of the Lightning and of the Sun-ſhine in the former parts of his diſcourſe, and therefore it is not probable that he ſhould return to either ſo ſoon.

Secondly, In this whole philoſophical Lecture of Elihu, wherein he enters into the treaſures of theſe lower Heavens, there is no mention at all of the Rain-bow, unleſs we fix it upon this place; therefore ſeeing he had ſpoken of the Lightning and of the Sun-ſhine, in the former parts of his diſcourſe, and ſpeaks not at all afterward of the Rain-bow, it is moſt probable that he intends it here.

Thirdly, He is ſpeaking of the wonders of God in the clouds; and ſurely his diſcourſe would have been imperfect, if he had omitted this, which as ſome expreſs it, is the moſt wonderful of wonderful things among the clouds, and one of the great ſecrets in Nature; I ſay he ſhould have omitted a great part of that which belongs to the doctrin of the Meteors (all Meteorological Writers particularly handling this doctrin of the Rain-bow) if it be not found here.

Mirabilium mirabiliſſimum; Naturæ arcanum. Græci vocant iridem Thaumantias, ἀπὸ τοῦ θαύματος ab admiratione, cum admirabilem figuram in aere exprimat.

We may take a fourth Reaſon of this Expoſition, becauſe this light is ſaid to ſhine in his Cloud: 'Tis true, all Clouds are his, that is, Gods clouds; but the cloud in which the Rain-bow doth at any time appear, is in a way of peculiarity and higher ſignificancy called the cloud of God, or Gods cloud. All the clouds are as Gods Bow, out of which he ſhoots his Arrows and Bolts; they are alſo called the Seat of God, on them he ſitteth as upon his Throne. Again, they are called his Chariot, upon them he rideth in his Majeſty; but the Rain-bow-cloud, is, as it were, the Royal Robe or Diadem of God, the ſpecial clothing of God. The Lord ſaith at the 13. Verſe of the 9. of Geneſis, where we have the firſt mention of the Rainbow, I do ſet my Bow in the cloud; the Bow is Gods, and the cloud is Gods, he is entitled to them both in a very eminent and ſpecial manner. God calleth it his cloud, and his Bow; Not only, Firſt, becauſe he made the cloud, and the Sun-beams by which the Bow is made. But, Secondly, and chiefly, becauſe he hath put it to a ſpecial uſe, and given it a myſtical ſignification.

And therefore here we may take notice, that whereas the Rain-bow is naturally a ſign of Rain, for it is always accompanied with clouds, or at leaſt with a cloud ready to diſſolve and melt into Rain, and is therefore called by the Poet (*Nuncia Junonis, Virg. Æneid.*4.) the Harbingreſs of Juno: Yet on the contrary God appoints it as a ſign of fair weather. And indeed God often works by contrary means, leſt we ſhould ſtick in means, and aſcribe the effect, more then is due, to them. So then the Rain-bow hath two different ſignifications, the firſt natural, of Rain, nor doth God promiſe to hinder or alter this courſe of nature. Secondly, preternatural or inſtituted, of fair weather; which Philoſophy, and the world, is altogether ignorant of; only the Church and people of God underſtand it by faith upon the teſtimony or revealed will of God, that as often as the Bow appeareth in the cloud, they have a renewed aſſurance that God will remember the Earth, and moderate the Rain: nor doth this depend upon the nature of, or various colours appearing in the Rain-bow, but purely upon the will and inſtitution of God. And therefore we ought by a firm faith to embrace the word of promiſe, to which this ſign is annexed; without that, the Rain-bow is nothing elſe to us, but the image or repreſentation of the raies of the Sun or Moon, impreſſed upon the clouds.

I ſhall not inſiſt upon any large diſcourſe of the Rain-bow, only take two or three things. This Meteor hath three Attributes above the reſt; Firſt, it is the moſt Illuſtrious and beautiful; Secondly, the moſt deſirable and comfortable; Thirdly, the moſt ſtrange and wonderful of all the impreſſions viſible in the air. This is properly expreſſed by a Bow, becauſe the form of it uſually is ſemicircular. Luther ſaith he ſaw a Rain-bow in the form of a perfect Circle; and others report they have ſeen it in the form of a ſtrait line: But in what-ever form it appears the natural cauſe of it is the reflection of the Sun or of the Moon (for there are Rain-bows in the night as well as in the day) it is cauſed; I ſay, by the reflection of the light (of the Sun or Moon) upon or from a watery or dewey cloud oppoſite to either. The Latin word Iris, is derived from a greek word, which ſignifieth to ſpeak or to relate ſomething: The Rain-bow is elegantly ſo called, becauſe it foreſhews ſometimes rain, ſometimes fair weather. A Rain-bow in the morning is a ſign of ſhowers, in the afternoon it betokens ſerenity, and always it proclaims to us the promiſe of God for the moderation of rain; or it ſpeaks thus much to all the world, that God will ſo meaſure out the Rain from the clouds, that it ſhall never ſwell to an univerſal Deluge, or to a drowning of the whole world again. Thus the Rain-bow hath a ſpeech, a language of mercy in it towards the preſent world. It ſpeaks alſo the Juſtice of God upon the old world, minding us of that Deluge of water that drowned them for their ſin; they had ſo defiled the Earth by their evil manners and prophaneſs, by their will-worſhip, Superſtition and Idolatry, that God in wrath ſent a Flood of water, not to waſh, or refreſh, but to deſtroy them: The Rain-bow minds us of that dreadful Judgment of God upon a corrupt World. And although the Rain-bow gives us aſſurance that the World ſhall not be drowned again, how ſinfull-ſoever it is, yet ſome, from the various colours of the Rain bow, whereof one is red and fiery, tell us, it proclaims that the World ſhall at laſt be conſumed by Fire. The Apoſtle Peter is plain that it ſhall be ſo, (2 Ep. 3.10.) The Elements ſhall melt with fervent heat; nor is it meerly a phancy, to ſay, that the fiery colours in the Rain-bow are ſet there by God, to mind us of it.

Iris ab εἴρω quod eſt dicere ſive loqui. Iris eſt arcus, qui ex reflexione luminis, cum ſolaris tum lunaris, in nubem roridam oppoſitam gignitur. Garcæ.

Some have queſtioned whether the Rain-bow were before the Flood or no? The reaſon or ground of the queſtion is given from that ſaying of God (*Gen.*9.13.) I will ſet my Bow in the Cloud: it ſeems then there was no Rain-bow before the Flood.

I anſwer, The Rain-bow may be conſidered two ways; Firſt, as to its natural being; Secondly, as to its myſtical uſe. If we conſider the Rain-bow as to its natural being, it was before the Flood, for the cauſes of it were before the Flood, which are watery clouds and the ſhining of the Sun: Now when ſufficient cauſes appear in act, the effect doth certainly follow. But as to its myſtical uſe, it was not before the Flood. Water had its natural elementary being and uſe, before Baptiſm was inſtituted, but it had not a ſpiritual uſe till then: we may ſay the ſame of the Rain-bow. Some I know of the Moderns, Luther and Melancthon aſſert, it was not in being till then; but we have reaſon to vary from that opinion, with reverence to thoſe worthy men: For God did not ſay in the 9. of Geneſis, I will make or create my Bow in the cloud, but, I do ſet my Bow in the cloud, and it ſhall be there for a token of a Covenant between me and the Earth. The Rain-bow had no ſuch ſignification, nor was it ſet in the cloud for any ſuch purpoſe, before that time. So then,

Take the Rain-bow as to its myſtical uſe, ſo I grant, it was not before the Flood; till then God had never cauſed the light of his cloud to ſhine as a Covenant-token. The Rain-bow, had always a natural ſignification in it, but that is not all, it hath now alſo a Theological, divine and myſtical ſignification, and is become as the Seal of that Covenant with mankind; for God inſtituted the Rain-bow as a Sacramental ſign (ſo we may expreſs it for our better underſtanding) both between himſelf and the whole World in general, and in ſpecial between himſelf and his Covenant people (Gen. 9. *Verſ.*12,13,14,15.) It was given (I ſay) on purpoſe to Seal the truth of the Promiſe, that the whole Earth ſhould no more be overwhelm'd with a Deluge or Flood of water: Which though it be ſuch a promiſe as the whole Creation hath the benefit of, yet the faithful only underſtand the myſtery of it, and have their faith exerciſed upon it, and ſtrengthened by it. So that while the Rain-bow is the ſign of a temporal Covenant to all creatures, the godly may look upon it, with reference to all ſpiritual and eternal mercies by Chriſt, in whom all the promiſes of mercy are Yea and Amen, (*2Cor.*1.20.) And there is a great fitneſs in it to hold forth mercy both temporal and ſpiritual, in ſeveral particulars.

Firſt, This Rain-bow is in the cloud, and God placed it in the cloud, becauſe out of the cloud came the Rain which drowned the old world. God could have drowned the world only by letting out, or breaking up the Springs of water from the earth, but he opened the Cataracts of Heaven alſo to do it. And therefore God, to ſecure the world againſt ſuch another vengeance from the clouds, put his Bow in the cloud.

A ſecond ſignificancy of mercy in the Rain-bow, is, becauſe the Bow is bended upwards, or Heaven-ward, the Bow doth not ſtand bent to the Earth, or downward, the ſtring of the Bow is towards us, not the back of it. He that would ſhoot hath the bottom or back of the Bow in his hand, and the ſtring is towards himſelf; but God, that he might ſhew he doth not intend to ſhoot that Arrow any more, holds the ſtring of the Bow downwards, which no man doth that hath a mind to ſhoot. The Lord by this Bow in the cloud ſhoots no man, unleſs it be (as one well expreſſeth it) with admiration and love; or I may ſay, the Lord having ſhot his Arrows of immoderate Rain from the Region of the air for mans chaſtning, ſeems to return to Heaven with his Bow reverſed, as a token of peace and ſerenity to the world, or that in Judgment he remembers his Covenant-mercy. The wicked are ſaid to bend their Bow, they make ready their arrow upon the ſtring, that they may privily ſhoot at the upright in heart, (Pſal. 11.2.) But he that turns the ſtring of his Bow downwards, is not ready, nor ſeems minded to ſhoot at all.

Thirdly, This bow ſhews mercy, becauſe there is no Arrow ſeen at it, or with it.

Fourthly, It ſheweth or ſignifieth mercy, becauſe the Rain-bow uſually appears when Rain is ready to come, implying that the Rain ſhall not hurt us; and ſo we have a ſupport of our faith, as ſoon as we have any appearance of fear.

Concipit iris aquas alimentaq; nubibus affert. Ovid. 1. Metam.

Fifthly, When-ever the Rain-bow appears, there is clearneſs in ſome part of the air; for it cannot be but when the Sun ſhines. In the time of the Flood the light of the Sun was wholly obſcured. All the days which the world had during that dreadful Rain, were (like the day deſcribed, Joel 2.2. *Zeph.*1.15.) days of darkneſs, and of gloominess, days of Clouds and of thick darkneſs. Therefore 'tis ſaid, (*Gen.*8.22.) Day and night ſhall continue for ever: Intimating that in the time of the Flood the day was ſo obſcured, ſo black, that it could ſcarcely be known to be day, or diſtinguiſhed from night. But now when the Rain-bow is ſeen, the Sun ſhines, to give aſſurance that though there be an appearance of Rain, yet the light of the day ſhall not ceaſe.

Sixthly, The various colours of the Rainbow are very ſignificant for our comfort, making (as ſome Naturaliſts have told us) a thouſand ſweet delights for the eye, by the admirable mixtures and ſhadowings of colours therein diſcernable.

Seventhly, The Natural Hiſtorians aſſureth us, that where the Rain-bow at any time toucheth the Earth (as we may often obſerve it doth) it leaveth a fragrant ſmell upon the graſs, ſhrubs and buſhes. Thus you ſee how properly and fitly the Rain-bow is called The ſhining of the light of his Cloud, as alſo what ſignifications of favour are diſcernable in it. From this explication of the words, we may note;

Lux in nube rorida mille efficit colores & varias & pulcherrimas lucis temperationes. Plin. Nat. Hiſt. l. 12. c. 24.

First, After troubles and ſtorms, God will give his people comforts and calms.

He cauſeth the light of his Cloud to ſhine.] Clouds are dark things, but while the Cloud ſhews Rain, Gods light in the Cloud ſhews fair weather. That's matter of rejoyceing to all that fear God, as with reſpect unto that particular Judgment of the Deluge, ſo of all evils and troubles which fall upon them in this world. This light ſhining in the Cloud may comfort and refreſh us in the darkeſt night of ſorrow. It is ſaid (Pſal. 97. 11.) Light is ſown for the righteous, and joy for the upright in heart: And in the 4. of the Revelations (which is as it were a Prologue or Preface to all the Propheſies of the dark times that ſhould come upon the world, and over the Church of God in this world) we find Jeſus Chriſt is preſent with a Rainbow about him (verſ. 3.) I was in the ſpirit, and behold a Throne ſet in Heaven, and one ſat on the Throne, and he that ſat was to look upon like a Jaſper and Sardix ſtone, and there was a Rainbow round about the Throne, in ſight like to an Emrald. From this Throne it is that Jeſus Chriſt doth, as I may ſay, diſpence all the affairs of his Churches and people. Now though Jeſus Chriſt in the providential or mediatorial government of his Churches, doth often ſend Clouds upon them, and though Clouds and darkneſs are round about him, yet the Throne hath a Rainbow about it: And why a Rainbow? to ſhew that Jeſus Chriſt is mindful of his Churches and people, to ſave them when the Serpent caſts out Floods to drown them. 'Tis ſaid (Rev. 12.15.) The Serpent caſt out of his mouth water as a Flood after the Woman, that he might cauſe her to be carried away of the Flood; but Jeſus Chriſt that ſitteth upon the Throne, hath a Rainbow about him, which gives aſſurance that the Floods ſhall not quite overwhelm the Church, ſhe ſhall be delivered, though it be in a Wilderneſs, from thoſe mighty water floods of perſecution raiſed and cauſed by the Serpent and his ſeed againſt the ſeed of the Woman, or againſt the Woman and her ſeed. Though Chriſt may ſuffer great Floods of ſorrow and tribulation to be poured upon them, yet there is a Rainbow about the Throne to which we may look, and get our faith confirmed, that the Woman and her Seed ſhall not be ſwallowed up.

Take one place more (Rev. 10. 1.) I ſaw another mighty Angel coming down from heaven (that was Jeſus Chriſt) cloathed with a cloud (that is, with dark diſpenſations, ſuch as his people ſhould not well know what to make of; but what follows?) and a Rainbow was on his head. That Propheſie leads into a deſcription of the greateſt preſſures and troubles that ever the Church of God was to ſuffer in this world. Jeſus Chriſt was cloathed with a Cloud, but, for the comfort of his Church, there was a Rain-bow on his head, there was light ſhining in this Cloud, to bear up the ſpirits of his people, that the miſchief ſhould not be to their deſtruction, though it might be very much not only to their tryal, but Correction. And we find the Church ſupported, though not directly under this notion of a Rain-bow, yet by a promiſe plainly hinting, if not referring to it (Iſa. 54. 9.) In the 8. verſe the Prophets tells us, that the poor Church was in very great trouble: Why? Surely becauſe of ſome cloudy providences, which interrupted the light of Gods countenance from ſhining upon them, at leaſt to their apprehenſion; thus he beſpake the Church, In a little wrath have I hid my face from thee, for a moment (there was the Cloud) but with everlaſting loving kindneſs will I have mercy on thee, ſaith the Lord thy Redeemer (there's the Rainbow) for this is as the waters of Noah; for as I have ſworn the waters of Noah ſhall no more go over the earth (which was ſignified by the Rainbow) ſo have I ſworn that I will be no more wrath with thee, nor rebuke thee: For the mountains ſhall depart, and the hills ſhall be removed, but my kindneſs ſhall not depart from thee, neither ſhall the Covenant of my peace be removed any more, ſaith the Lord that hath mercy on thee. Then follows, O thou afflicted and toſſed with tempeſt, and not comforted, behold, I will lay thy ſtones with fair colours, and thy foundations with ſapphyrs, and I will make thy windows of agats, and thy gates of carbuncles. As if he had ſaid, though I have hid my face yet I will return, for this is as the waters of Noah, that is, I have as certainly reſolved in my ſelf that this unnatural flood ſhall not drown thee, as I once promiſed, and am ſo reſolved ſtill, that the natural flood ſhall never drown the world again; and mark how he expreſſeth it, as I have ſworn. When we read the hiſtory in Geneſis, it is not ſaid, that the Lord ſwore; but the Lord to ſhew that his word is as good as his oath, tells us that what he ſpake to Noah, was as if he had ſworn it, eſpecially ſeeing he gave ſuch a ſign for the performance of it. I might ſhew from other Scriptures, that God is ſometimes repreſented ſwearing, when yet we read of no oath formally given: It is ſaid (Exod. 32.13.) God ſware to Abraham and his Seed; to which the Apoſtle refers (Heb. 6.13,17.) God confirmed it by an oath; yet if we look thoſe Scriptures, (Gen. 12. 2, 3. Ch. 15. 7. Ch. 17.7.) we find only the Lord ſaid, &c. The Lords ſaying is as good that is, as ſure as his ſwearing, and ſhall as certainly be performed.

For a concluſion of this matter; let it be remembred, that the Lord by cauſing the light of his Cloud to ſhine, at firſt gave, and ſtill gives a ſign, or a ſeal to ſtrengthen faith. Signs and ſeals are appendices to the Covenant, or great Charter of all our mercies. Signs and ſeals are viſible words. God ſpeaks by them to the eye. I will ſet my Bow in the Cloud; God ſaith, the Bow ſhall be a ſign, he alſo hath made Water a ſign in the holy Sacrament of Baptiſm, and he hath made Bread and Wine ſigns in the holy Sacrament of the Supper; God hath been pleaſed, from the beginning ſo far to condeſcend to mans weakneſs, as to give him, not only his Word or Promiſe, but Signs to confirm it. And therefore did the Lord give a ſign, becauſe, as himſelf hath both an all-ſufficient power, and full purpoſe to perform his promiſe, ſo he would have the faith of all that are under the Covenant well aſſured of his faithfulneſs in performing it.

Thus we ſee the ſpiritual uſefulneſs of this interpretation, taking, the light of his Cloud, for that illuſtrious ſign the Rainbow ſet by God in the Cloud, and moſt fitly called the light ſhining in his Cloud; which he doth not cauſe to ſhine ordinarily or every day as the Sun doth, but at ſpecial times teſtifying his eminent favour to ſome, and his care over all mankind. Knoweſt thou when he cauſed the light of his Cloud to ſhine? Elihu proceeds further with Job upon interrogatories.

Verſ. 16. Doſt thou know the ballancing of the Clouds, the wonderful work of him that is perfect in knowledge.

Here's another queſtion. The general ſcope of all theſe queſtions was handled before, I ſhall now only point at that which this queſtion ſpecially aims at. Mr. Broughton reads, Doſt thou know the poyſing of the thick vapours? This is a wonderful work of God. The Clouds are huge ponderous bodies; who is able to gueſs how much a Cloud weighs? yet God ballanceth the Clouds, he, as it were, puts them into ſcales, and knows what they weigh; he ſo orders them, that one part doth not over-power the other, but both hang with an even poiſe in the air; this is a wonderful work of God. Doſt thou know how God doth this? or, how he makes the Clouds bigger or leſſer, how he placeth them higher or lower, according to the ſervice and uſe to which he hath appointed them? Can any man do this? Can any man fully underſtand how ſuch vaſt bodies as the Clouds ſhould be poiſed or ballanced? how they hover over our heads, and are kept from falling upon us? We muſt have recourſe to the wiſdom and power of God for this. Doſt thou know the ballancing of the Clouds?

Librationes nubis appellat eleganter meo quidem judicio, cum in aere appenſæ velut liberantur à Domino. Merc. מפלשי Vertitur libramenta, à פלס ponderavit, ad trutinam direxit mutato ס in ש.

Hence we may infer, Firſt, If man knoweth not the ballancing of the Clouds, then much leſs can he ballance them.

And Secondly, Note, 'Tis by a divine power that the Clouds are upheld and ballanced.

All heavy things tend downward; what then but God keeps the Clouds up, which are ſo heavy? 'Tis a wonder that we have not Seas of waters rather than ſhowers poured upon us from the Clouds. They that travel far at Sea, ſee the Rain coming down by ſpots, or like a flood in ſome places; and certainly the Clouds would come down every where like a flood if God did not hold them up. From which particular inſtance Elihu would have us take up this general truth, that,

All things are kept in an even ballance by the wiſdom and power of God. The things of the world, if God did not ballance them, how would they tumble and fall awry, yea, run to ruine! were there not a ballancing operation in the arm of God, over all the affairs and buſineſs of men, what a huddle and confuſion would all be in? We read in Scripture of four things which God is ſaid to weigh or to ballance, they are all very conſiderable.

Firſt, It is ſaid, God weigheth the Waters (Job 28. 25.) which may be underſtood, not only of the waters above in the Clouds, but of the waters alſo in the Sea; he knows to a dram, to a grain, how much all the waters weigh.

Secondly, Which are alſo vaſt things, It is ſaid (*Iſa.*40. 12.) He weigheth the mountains in ſcales, and the hills in a ballance. And as both theſe are true taken litterally, ſo they are true alſo if you take them myſtically or metaphorically. St. John was ſhewed the judgment of the great whore; in a viſion, who ſitteth upon many waters (Rev. 17. 1.) Who are meant by waters is explained there (verſ. 15.) even Peoples, and Multitudes, Nations, and Tongues. The people of the world are compared to waters, and well they may, for their inſtability; Unſtable they are as water (Gen. 49. 4.) and for their aptneſs to ſwell and riſe up into floods. Now the Lord weigheth theſe myſtical Waters, Multitudes, and Nations: he knows exactly what they are, what they would be, and what they would do. And as by waters common people or nations, ſo by mountains and hills the great and mighty ones of the nations are expreſt; Princes and honourable men are as great mountains. Thus ſpake the Prophet, The day of the Lord ſhall be againſt the mountains (Iſa. 2.) that is, againſt the mighty men of this world; Hence that deriding queſtion Who art thou O great mountain before Zerubbabel? (Zac. 4 7.) That is, O thou great man, who art thou? ſurely, thou art not ſo much as a mole-hill before the God of Zerubbabel, who when he comes down, the mountains melt down at his preſence (Iſa. 64. 1.) who, if he doth but touch the mountains they ſmoak (Pſal. 144. 5.) as if ſtruck with Thunder. God weighs theſe mountains of the earth, that is, he conſiders and underſtands them exactly. God weighed him who was the greateſt mountain, of a man, in his time; Belſhazzar was the ſole Monarch of the earth, he had almoſt the whole known world at his command, yet the Lord ſaid of him (Dan. 5. 22.) Thou art numbred, thou art weighed, and thou art found too light.

Thirdly, As God weigheth men of all ſorts, ſo he weigheth the actions of all ſorts of men (1 Sam. 2. 3.) By him actions are weighed, that is, all actions are weighed by him; the leaſt actions are weighed by the mighty God, and ſo are the greateſt, he knoweth how to poiſe them, and ſo make uſe of them, that they may effect what is anſwerable to his own counſel and purpoſe. This is it which the Prophet intended, when he ſaid of the Lord, Thou moſt upright doſt weigh the path of the Juſt (Iſa: 26 7.) that is, the motions, and goings, or doings of the Juſt. The paths of the Juſt come often into very uneven ballances in this world, every one will be weighing them, one gives this judgement of them, and another that, few hit right, the moſt of men being either blinded with ignorance of them, or prejudiced with malice againſt them: But the comfort of the juſt is, the moſt upright weigheth their path, and will give the juſt weight of them.

Fourthly and laſtly, God weigheth the very ſpirits of men. All the ways of man are clean in his own eyes, but the Lord weigheth the ſpirits (ſaith Solomon, Prov. 16.2.) The Lord doth not only weigh actions and paths, that is, the whole outward courſe and tenour of our lives, but he weighs our ſpirits, that is, the principles from which our actions flow, and by which we are carried on in our pathes; he finds one man to be of a light, of a vain ſpirit, and another man to be of a proud high ſpirit; a third to be of a covetous, having, holding ſpirit; a fourth of an envious ſpirit, that cannot bear the good of another; and a fifth to be of a revengeful ſpirit, that will do another as much hurt as he can. Again, the Lord by weighing finds out them, whoſoever they are that have a weighty, ſerious ſpirit, that have an upright ſincere ſpirit, that have a heavenly gracious ſpirit; God knows who they are that have a ſpirit for the things and ways of God in the midſt of all contradictions of men; and having thus weighed the ſpirits of men, he diſpoſeth of them and deals with them accordingly. And I may add this to the queſtion in the Text, Doſt thou know the ballancing of ſpirits? Surely no, for thou knoweſt not the ballancing of the Clouds (which may be known much eaſier)

The wondrous work of him which is perfect in knowledge.

Mr. Broughton renders, The miracles of the perfect in knowledge. As if he had ſaid; the ſhining of the light in his Cloud, and the ballancing of the Clouds, are to be numbred among the wonderous works of him that is perfect in knowledge. The wonderouſneſs of Gods works was touched at the 14. verſe, I ſhall not ſtay upon that here; only mark how Elihu deſcribes God by a periphraſis or circumlocution; he doth not ſay the wonderful works of God, but, the wonderful works of him

That is perfect in knowledge.] This is a deſcription of God, and ſuch a deſcription as will fit none but God; who hath and who only hath, not only knowledge, but the perfection of it. We need not name God, when we ſpeak of him that is perfect in knowledge, it can be meant of none but him. Elihu, at the 4. verſe of the former Chapter, ſaid to Job, He that is perfect in knowledge, (meaning himſelf, as that Text was expounded) is with thee. In what ſenſe Elihu might ſay of himſelf, that he was perfect in knowledge, was there ſhewed; and here it muſt be ſhewed and confeſſed, that neither Elihu was, nor any, the moſt knowing, are perfect in knowledge like God, or as God is. The Apoſtle ſaith of the beſt knowers in this world (1 Cor. 13. 9.) We know in part, and we propheſie in part; we behold darkly, as in a glaſs. They that have the cleareſt eye-ſight, the pureſt intellectuals, know but in part, and ſee but darkly, which is far from perfectly; therefore, I ſay, this deſcription of perfect in knowledge, hath a peculiar meaning here, proper only to God, as will appear more particularly in opening this Obſervation from it.

God is not only full of knowledge, but perfect in knowledge; or, The knowledge of God is perfectly perfect.

That's perfectly perfect to which nothing can be added, and from which nothing can be taken. Such is the knowledge of God; it is impoſſible to add any thing to it, and it is as impoſſible to diminiſh it: God cannot forget or unlearn any thing already known, nor can he know any more things, no nor any thing more, than he already knoweth; therefore he is perfect in knowledge. More diſtinctly, the knowledge of God is perfect; For,

Firſt, He knoweth all things; what-ever is knowable he knoweth. He knows.

Firſt, All things paſt.

Secondly, He knows all things preſent.

Thirdly, He knows all things to come (Iſa. 46. 10.) He declareth the end from the beginning. Now he that knows all things paſt, preſent, or to come, is perfect in knowledge.

Secondly, He is perfect in knowledge, for he knows all things at once, in one proſect or by one aſpect; he doth not know one thing after another, nor one thing by another, he knows all at once.

Thirdly, He is perfect in knowledge, for he knows all things as they are, he doth not know things according to appearance only, or as they are held forth to be. Many will make fair ſhews, and offer both themſelves and their actions as very good, holy, righteous, religious, yet the Lord who ſeeth through them, ſeeth them ſtark naught quite through (Heb. 4. 12.) All things are naked and maniſeſt to him: He ſeeth to the skin and all, he ſeeth through cloaks and vizards, yea, he ſeeth through skin and all, he looks into the breaſt; the breaſts of men are to him, as if they were cut open, as the word there imports.

Fourthly, He is perfect in knowledge, For he knoweth all things in himſelf. God doth not go out of himſelf to ſearch here and there for knowledge and information. We run to this and that book, to this and that man, to fetch in knowledge and yet we know but little when we have done all; but the Lord knows all things in himſelf, without ſearch or ſtudy.

Fifthly, He knows all things unerringly; he knoweth them ſo as there is not the leaſt miſtake in his knowledge; that's perfect knowledge. How many errors are there in our knowledge? how much darkneſs in our light? But God is light, and in him is no darkneſs at all.

Sixthly, He knows all things everlaſtingly; all things are before him always. Some men quite loſe the knowledge of many things which they have known, but all that God knoweth (which is all) abideth the ſame clearneſs and fulneſs with him for ever.

Seventhly, He knows all things as perfectly as if he had but one thing to know, therefore he is perfect in knowledge. We uſe to ſay of a man that hath a knowledge ſcattered upon many matters, or that is knowing in many Arts, and Trades, and buſineſſes, we ſay, this man is ſomething in every thing, and nothing in any thing; he hath no full knowledge of any one thing, his knowledge being divided upon or among ſo many things. But ſuch is the perfection of Gods knowledge, that he knows all things as perfectly as if he had but one thing to know. To him that is infinite, one and all, is all one. And from hence (to cloſe up the whole point and this verſe) take theſe five Inferences.

Aliquis in omnibus, nullus in ſingulis.

Firſt then, To know, is to be like God, for God is a God of knowledge. O how unlike God are ignorant perſons!

Secondly, The more perfect our knowledge is, the more like we are to God, for he is abſolutely perfect in knowledge.

Thirdly, If God be perfect in his knowledge, then, We need not fear any good which we do, unſeen of men, ſhall be loſt, for God ſees and knows it. Though your left hand know not what your right hand doth, yet never fear what you have done ſhall be buried, for God is perfect in knowledge.

Fourthly, If God be perfect in knowledge, No evil doer hath any ground of hope, that any evil he doth can be hid, though done never ſo much hiddenly, or in the dark. God is ſo perfect in knowledge that to him, darkneſs is no darkneſs; the darkneſs and the light to him are both alike.

Fifthly, If God be perfect in knowledge, Then he fully knows the needs of his people all the world over; he knows the ſtate of every one for ſoul and body. This Chriſt makes an argument of ſupport in our greateſt needs (Math. 6. 32.) Be not careful what ye ſhall eat, &c. be not deſpondently careful or fearful about any thing, for your heavenly father knoweth that ye have need of all theſe things. Men in ſtraits uſe to ſay, if ſuch a friend did but know of our wants, he would help us. Here is comfort to the people of God, he knows their ſtate in general, and their ſtraits in particular, for he is perfect in knowledge. We may reſt aſſured, that he who hath ſo perfect a knowledge, mingled with perfect compaſſions, will in due time give us perfect help out of all our ſtraits, and a perfect ſupply of all our wants.

VERS. 17, 18.

Doſt thou know, &c.

How thy garments are warm, when he quieteth the earth by the ſouth wind?

Haſt thou with him ſpread out the ſkie which is ſtrong, and as a molten looking-glaſs?

THis context ſheweth yet further, the utter inſufficiency of man to comprehend thoſe wonderful works of God, concerning which Elihu ſpake in the cloſe of the 15. verſe. And here we have a conviction of mans inſufficiency two ways.

Firſt, In reference to his ignorance of what God doth upon him, verſ. 17. Doſt thou know how thy garments are warm? &c.

Secondly, To his weakneſs, in giving God any aſſiſtance about what he hath done, verſ. 18. Haſt thou, with him, ſpread out the ſkie which is ſtrong? &c.

Thus Elihu cometh nearer to Job than before, not only convincing him of his ignorance in thoſe things which were far above him, but even in thoſe that were about him; not only with reſpect to the Clouds of heaven, but to the Clothes upon his back. And it hath troubled ſome Interpreters upon theſe words, while they conſidered the ſeeming lowneſs and meanneſs of the matter in queſtion, which their Elihu puts to Job, as alſo, how Elihu (having diſcourſed of ſo many wonderful works of God, in the former part of the Chapter, his wonderful works in Lightning, in Thunder, in Rain and Snow, in the motion of the Winds, in ballancing of the Clouds, and in the admirable aſpect and appearances of the Rain-bow; It troubles ſome Interpreters, I ſay, to conſider how Elihu, after a large diſcourſe of theſe greater matters) ſhould come at laſt to ſpeak of Jobs garments, and the warmth received by them. What cognation or proportion is there between thoſe high and great things above, and the garments which he daily wore? Do theſe deſerve to be reckoned up among the ſecrets of Nature? or, was Job ſo ſtupid, that he could not give a reaſon of their warmth? Knoweſt thou

Verſ. 17. How thy garments are warm, when he quieteth the earth by the South wind?

So we are to reſume that part of the queſtion out of the former verſe, though not expreſſed here. As there he ſaid expreſly, Doſt thou know when God diſpoſed them? Doſt thou know the ballancing of the Clouds? So here he ſaith impliedly, Doſt thou know how thy garments are warm?

Some make this and the former verſe one entire ſentence, quite leaving out thoſe words, Doſt thou know, in the latter part; Doſt thou know the ballancing of the Clouds, O thou whoſe garments are warm upon thee, when the earth is quieted by the South-wind? Haſt thou, with him, ſpread out the Skie, which is ſtrong, and as a molten looking glaſs? The meaning of which reading is briefly this: O thou, who canſt not bear thy clothes in a hot day, but art forced to leave thy labour, and retire to thy reſt, when the earth is quieted, the Sun being far aſcended to the South (that's the time of heat) Didſt thou, with him, ſpread out the Skie, which is ſtrong as a molten looking-glaſs? Didſt thou work in the Furnace, or in that fiery heat with God, when he did, as it were, like a mighty Founder, caſt the whole Heavens into that glorious mould, or form, in which they appear and ſeem to move? The words are an alluſion to thoſe Artiſts who work in Mettals, and caſt them into Veſſels of one ſort and ſize or another, for the ſeveral uſes and ſervices of man: Such a thing is the Skie over us, which is therefore here compared to a molten looking-glaſs, that is, to a glaſs made of molten mettal. Thus, I ſay, ſome read the context as one entire ſentence, and there is a clearneſs in it.

But I ſhall keep to our own reading, and ſo we have two diſtinct queſtions; Doſt thou know how thy garments are warm? Haſt thou, with him, ſpread out the Skie?

אשר Pro כאשר Ut Exod. 34. 18.

I begin with the firſt, Doſt thou know

How thy garments are warm?] Canſt thou give an account of that ſudden change, whence it is that the South wind ceaſing to raiſe ſtorms in the earth, there ſhould preſently ſucceed ſuch fervent heat, that thou art not able to bear thy own ordinary clothes? The Text is, that, or how it cometh to paſs, that thy garments are warm. As if Elihu had ſaid, I have dealt with thee about higher and greater matters; I will now put a queſtion to thee which is more familiar, Canſt thou tell me how thy garments are warm? Surely if thou art not able to give me a clear reaſon about that, how thou art able to enter into the more reſerved ſecrets of God? tell me, if thou canſt, How thy

Garments are warm?] The word which we Tranſlate garments, hath a very conſiderable ſignificancy in it, coming from a root rendred deceit, falſhood, and a lie. The garments which we wear are both a tegument or covering of our nakedneſs, and a teſtimony of our perfidiouſneſs and falſeneſs with the great God. Before man ſinned he wore no garments, nor had he need to to wear any, innocency was his cloathing; nor was the natural man ever ſo gloriouſly adorned, deckt and dreſt, as when he had no garments beſides his innocency. When man prevaricated and dealt falſly with God, when he ſinned and broke the commandment (his nakedneſs appearing and his ſhame) he then got a ſimple covering, ſuch as he could make for himſelf of fig leaves, till God provided him a covering of skins. Garments began with our ſin till then (ſaith Moſes, Gen. 2.) the man and the woman were both naked, and were not aſhamed; but when once man had ſinned, then ſhame came into the world and then both God and Nature provided garments to cover his ſhame. All this the word imports, that we, through ſin, having loſt our natural garments, our robe of created innocency and integrity, we are conſtrained by ſhame to take up theſe artificial garments or coverings to hide our nakedneſs. It is not unprofitable for us to remember, that the Spirit of God in the Original language hath expreſſed our garments by ſuch a word, as leads us to the original of them, our dealing falſly with God and ſinning againſt him. Doſt thou know how thy garments

חמם Incaluit, calidus fuit; itaque Chami nomen vel à colore, vel à nigredine factum; Neque ut videtur ſine numine, cum quæ Chamo contingit Aphrica immodico æſtu laboret. Bochart. Aphrica Ammonia dicta, cum ob cultum Ammonis i. e. Solis, tum præcipue ob æſtus ſolares quibus expoſita eſt. Fuller Miſc.

Are warm?] The word which ſignifieth to heat, or make warm (I note that by the way alſo) was the name of one of the ſons of Noah; he had three, called Sem, Ham, and Japheth. Ham or Cham was that ſon who ſaw his fathers nakedneſs, and told his two brethren without, not grievingly, but deridingly, which brought a curſe upon him. This Cham had his name from heat; and that portion and part of the world which, according to the opinion of the learned, was aſſigned to the poſterity of Cham, is one of the hotteſt climates in the world; the inhabitants of thoſe Countries by reaſon of the extream heat of the Sun, being black, are called Blackmores. And all Affrica was called Ammonia, either becauſe the Idol of the Sun was worſhipped there, or becauſe the Sun-beams are always hot and fiery upon it. Yet as the word notes that extream heat which cauſeth blackneſs, ſo any moderate heat; Doſt thou know how thy garments are warm?

From the notation of the word rendred garments,

> Obſerve firſt, When we put on our clothes we ſhould remember our ſin, or, Our garments are memorials of our ſin.

The covering of our natural nakedneſs is a diſcovery of our ſpiritual; and therefore when we cover our natural nakedneſs we ſhould think of our ſpiritual. 'Tis ſin alone which makes us ſhamefully naked. Moſes ſaw the people were naked, when they had made the golden Calf (Exod. 32. 25.) not that they had no clothes on them, but they had got a new ſin upon them, and had loſt their former integrity, which was a better ornament than clothing, as alſo the protection of God, which was a better guard or defence than armour. Our garments, which are an occaſion of pride to many, ſhould be an occaſion of humiliation to all. Let us take heed of ſinning in the uſe of garments, ſeeing it was ſin that brought in the uſe of garments. I only mind the reader of it from the notation of the word.

Secondly, what is here ſaid of garments? Knoweſt thou how thy garments are warm? That is, warm thee, or, keep thee warm.

> Hence Note, Garments are given for warmth.

That's one uſe or ſervice of garments. There is a fourfold uſe of garments.

Firſt, To cover our nakedneſs and hide our ſhame.

Secondly, To diſtinguiſh our ſex, man from woman. The law of Moſes forbad the man to wear the womans apparel, or the woman the mans (Deut. chap. 22. verſ. 5.)

Thirdly, Garments are uſeful for ornament. There are garments of glory and honour, garments to ſet forth the ſtate and condition, as well as the ſex of the perſon wearing them. Aaron and his ſons had garments made them by Gods own appointment, for glory and for beauty (Exod. 28. 2, 40.) The Kings and Princes of the world wear garments becoming their ſtate and Majeſty; and inferior Magiſtrates have their proper garments, ſuiting their offices and dignity.

Fourthly, (Which is the common uſe of garments, and that which the Text ſpeaks of) they are for warmth, to keep out the cold, and to defend us from the injuries and violence of the weather; yet we ſcarce know, or do not fully know, how that comes to paſs.

> Hence obſerve, Thirdly, How our garments warm us is a ſecret, and that they warm us is from the bleſſing of God.

Though there be a natural cauſe of this warmth, yet there is ſome-what of God, yea, much of God in it. The effect of that natural cauſe dependeth wholly upon the concurrence and power of God. That Speech of the Prophet to the Jews newly returned from Babylon, and neglecting the Lords houſe, while they too much attended the building of their own, doth fully evince this for truth (Haggai 1. 6.) Ye have ſown much, but bring in little (naturally they that ſow much, ſhould bring in much; but God can ſtop the influences of the heavens, and the increaſe of the earth, and though the ſeed-time be great, the harveſt ſhall be ſmall) again, ye eat (and then ſure they were ſatisfied; no, ſaith the Prophet, ye eat) but ye have not enough; which not only implyeth that they had not enough to eat (though that might be a truth) but, that though they did eat enough, yet there was not a nutritive vertue in the meat, it did not content or ſatisfie the ſtomach and renew their ſtrength: He adds, ye drink but are not filled with drink, which alſo implyeth, not only that they had but a little to drink was not comfortable or thirſt-quenching to them. Laſtly (which is the inſtance of the Text) Ye cloath you, but there is no warmth. What was the reaſon of all this, That they did eat and had not enough, drink and were not filled, put on cloathing and were not warm? The Text gives anſwer (verſ. 9.) Becauſe I did not blow upon it, or blow it away; that is, I ſent out a curſe which blaſted all your creature injoyments, and blowed away the comforts and uſual efficacy of them; ſo that ye had only a ſhell without a kernel, or only ſkin and bones without the marrow and fatneſs of all, my favour and bleſſing. That our cloaths warm us, as well as that our meat and drink nouriſh us, is from the bleſſing of God.

Fourthly, When he ſaith, Knoweſt thou how thy garments are warm?

> Note, Man cannot give a full account or reaſon of common things, or of his dayly comforts and enjoyments.

What's more common than for a man to wear garments? what then to find his garments warm upon him, or himſelf warm in his garments? and why a mans cloaths warm him we need not go to enquire of a great Philoſopher, any man, any common man can give or aſſign a cauſe of it. Yet there is ſomewhat in it beyond natural cauſes, which few take any notice of, and none can ſufficiently or fully apprehend. Secondly, cauſes produce their effects, the temperature of the air is a cauſe of warmth, and the garments we wear, warm us by exciting and drawing out the congenial warmth within us; yet Elihu puts on the queſtion further than that, Knoweſt thou how thy garments are warm,

When he quieteth the earth with the South-wind?

Quum tranquilla eſt terra. השקט pleruma; intranſitivè uſurpatur. Piſc. A meridie. דרם Meridies quaſi דר רום habitatio alta, quod Sol in iſta plaga altius incedat. Quieſcit ab auſtro dum non flagellatur ab auſtro procelloſo. Loc. vide cum.

Or as ſome tranſlate, When the earth is quiet by the South-Wind. Mr. Broughton reads, when the land is ſtill. The original is only the South, When he quieteth the earth, or when the earth is quiet by the South; that is, when gentle winds or briezes blow from the Southern parts. The word rendred South or South wind, comes from a root ſignifying an high habitation, becauſe the Sun is higheſt when 'tis in the South, that's its Meridian or high both elevation and habitation. And as when the Sun cometh into the South, 'tis in its higheſt elevation above us, ſo 'tis hotteſt in operation upon us.

So that, by the South, he meaneth the Spring and Summer time, when the Sun makes his Southern progreſs. And becauſe uſually our garments are warmeſt upon us, when the South wind bloweth, therefore we render it by the South wind. The South wind ſometimes bringeth ſtorms, as was ſhewed at the ninth verſe, Out of the South cometh the whirlwind; but moſtly the South wind bringeth a calm and heat (Luke 12. 55.) When ye ſee (ſaith Chriſt) the South wind blow, ye ſay, there will be heat, and it cometh to paſs. As the North wind uſually blows cold, ſo the South wind uſually blows hot, or bringeth heat. Here's a natural cauſe of warmth, the quieting of the earth by the South wind.

But is the earth at any time unquiet? If not, why is it ſaid, he quieteth the earth? Here by the earth we are to underſtand that part of the Air which is neareſt to the Earth. The Earth taken ſtrictly is not unquiet, but the Air, in which we (who are upon the Earth) breath, the wind blowing, is unquiet and ſtormy, and when God commands down the ſtorm and ſends a calm he is ſaid to quiet the Earth. So then, by the Earth, we are to underſtand the Air immediately compaſſing us, who dwell and move upon the Earth; and God quieteth the earth with the South, or South wind, when we on Earth are quiet and quit from troubleſom or tempeſtuous weather.

Terra eſt aer propinqua terra.

Hence Note, The natural quietneſs of the Air which we have on Earth, is of God.

When there are no ſtorms nor bluſtring winds in the Air, God ſhews both his power and goodneſs, he then quieteth the Earth; we are to acknowledge God in it, and bleſs him for it, when the Earth is quiet. The diſciples (Math. 8. 26.) being in a great ſtorm at Sea, and fearing the Veſſel would be over-ſet, and that they ſhould periſh in the Waters, Chriſt ſaid to the Sea, Peace, be ſtill, and preſently there was a great calm. He that quiets the Sea, quiets the Earth too. Chriſt hath calms or peaceable winds, as well as ſtorms and ſtormy winds at his diſpoſe.

And if the natural quietneſs of the Earth be the work of God, then much more is the civil quietneſs of it. God alone giveth quietneſs among men, he maketh them of one Houſe, and them of one Nation to live quiet. VVhen there are no winds, no tempeſtuous winds blowing in the sky, there may be ſtorms and tempeſts in the Spirits of men; and when there is a tempeſt within, only he who forms the ſpirit of man within him (Zech. 12. 1.) can keep it from breaking out. There are civil ſtorms as well as natural, and the former are much more troubleſom and dangerous than the latter: God raiſeth thoſe ſtorms in judgment. He ſent an evil Spirit between Abimelech and the men of Sichem (Judg. 9. 23.) That is, he either gave Satan (the great maſter of miſrule) leave to kindle jealouſies and animoſities between them, or he gave them up to their own evil, envious and malicious ſpirits, which hurried them on to their mutual vexation and deſtruction: now, as God raiſeth theſe ſtorms in judgment, ſo he either prevents or rebukes them in mercy. It is God who quiets both the ſpirits of Princes in governing, and the ſpirits of people in ſubmitting and obeying. He hath a South wind, ſome benign and favourable wind, which he breathes upon the children of men, and then they are quiet, and then all's quiet: God being quiet towards, that is well-pleaſed with, and favorable unto man, he quiets all things. If the Lord do but ſay the word, what ſtorm, what tempeſt, what wrath, what rage, what outrage ſoever there is in the earth, all's huſht and ſtill. Elihu affirmed this ſtrongly when he put that challenging queſtion (Chap. 34. 29.) When he giveth quietneſs, who then can make trouble; whether againſt a nation or a man only? Natural quietneſs, much more civil, but above all, ſpiritual quietneſs is of the Lord.

Tranquillus Deus tranquillat omnia.

When there is the greateſt unquietneſs in the Air, and in the affairs of this world, (when as it is ſaid of thoſe times, 2 Chron. 15. 5.) There is no peace to him that goeth out, nor to him that comes in, but great vexations are upon all the inhabitants of the countreys, men contending with and (like beaſts) tearing one another, yet even then there may be ſpiritual quietneſs in the ſoul of a believer; he may ſit ſtill and unmoveable, in the favour and love of God, though the earth be moved (yea removed) and the hills carried into the midſt of the Sea. This is eminently the work of God; he can give quietneſs to the ſoul in the midſt of all worldly unquietneſs. Chriſt ſaid to his diſciples, and in them to all believers (John 16. 33.) Theſe things have I ſpoken to you that ye might have peace; in the world ye ſhall have tribulation. The meaning of Chriſt is not to aſſure his diſciples, that they ſhall have peace in him after they have had tribulation in the world, but that their inward ſpiritual peace ſhall Synchronize or be contemporary with their outward worldly tribulations. To have trouble without, and peace within, at the ſame time, This is the ſpecial gift of God. The Text tells us, God quieteth the earth; and as that gift of natural quietneſs is a mercy, ſo civil quietneſs is a great mercy, and ſpiritual quietneſs, quietneſs of heart and tranquillity of mind, eſpecially in the midſt of tribulations, is the greateſt mercy of all. We ſhould pray earneſtly, that God would keep the earth quiet, or quiet the earth, whenever we find it unquiet, by ſome gracious South wind, but above all, that he would quiet our ſpirits by the ſweet breathings of his bleſſed Spirit, that though at any time there ſhould be nothing (which God forbid) but unquietneſs on the earth, yet we have much quietneſs in our hearts.

Again conſider, the former context told us of ſtorms and tempeſts, of thunder and lightning, of ſnow and rain, driving men from their labour in the field, to their homes and houſes, and the wild beaſts of the fields to their dens and coverts: Now this Text ſpeaks of warmth, of calms, and quietneſs, He quieteth the earth by the South wind.

Hence obſerve, There is a continual viciſſitude in natural things.

As no day of the year is of the ſame continuance or length as to light, ſo very few are of the ſame complexion or temper as to heat and cold, fair or foul weather, ſtorms or calms. Now if there be ſuch a viciſſitude in natural things, then do not wonder that there is a viciſſitude in civil things, or in the affairs and conditions of men in this world. If after the fair weather of health and peace, the foul weather of ſickneſs and trouble come upon us, if after calms we meet with ſtorms, let us not be troubled. A heathen Poet ſaid, We ſhould not be diffident in a ſtormy day, that we ſhall never have quietneſs, nor ſhould we be confident in a quiet day, that we ſhall never have a ſtorm. David, a holy man, was once exceedingly out in both; in his adverſity he ſaid, I ſhall never be eſtabliſhed; that was the ſenſe of his ſaying, when in his haſte he ſaid, all men are liars (Pſal. 116. 11.) In his proſperity he ſaid, I ſhall never be moved. The Lord's favour had made his mountain ſtand ſtrong, and he began not only to think but conclude it would always ſtand in the ſame ſtrength, till his experience confuted that fancy, Thou didſt hide thy face, and I was troubled (Pſal. 30. 6, 7.) 'Tis good for us to be in expectation of, and preparation for all ſorts of changes, ſeeing all things here below are changeable. That great Monarch ſaid (Dan. 4. 4.) I Nebuchadnezar was at reſt in mine houſe, and flouriſhing in my palace, yet preſently he ſaw in a dream, that all his flouriſhing proſperity was but like a dream that paſſeth away; and while thoſe boaſts of an earthly greatneſs and ſettlement were in his mouth (v. 30.) Is not this great Babylon that I have built for the houſe of the Kingdom, &c. There fell a voice from Heaven (verſ. 31.) ſaying, O King Nebuchadnezar, to thee it is ſpoken, the Kingdom is departed from thee. All ſublunary things, the ſureſt and beſt ſetled eſtates, not only of the men of this world, or of worldly men, but of all men, even of good men, in this world, are as ſubject to changes, as the Moon is, or as the wind and weather.

Nemo confidat nimium ſecundis, nemo deſperet meliora lapſis: Res Deus noſtras celeri rotatas turbine verſat. Sen. in Thyeſte.

Laſtly, Whereas, when Elihu to the queſtion, Knoweſt thou how thy garments are warm, puts this addition, when he quieteth the earth with the South wind? Job might ſay, that's an anſwer to the queſtion. If you aſk me, how my garments are warm? I anſwer, By Gods quieting the earth with the South wind. But here is ſomething more intended, though this be a cauſe of warmth, yet not all the cauſe. It is poſſible for the weather to be warm, and our garments not warm. It was ſhewed before, that God is able to ſuſpend the working or effects of nature: as, through his power a man may be in the fire and yet the fire not burn him (it was ſo with the three Children in Daniel) ſo a man may be in the Sun-ſhine, and his clothes not warm him. God can ſtay or ſtop the influences and effects of the Sun. The ſhining of the Sun and the quietneſs of the Air are true reaſons of the warmth we feel in our garments, yet not all the reaſon. And therefore Elihu would convince Job by this queſtion, that if he could not give the whole reaſon of Naturals, much leſs could he of Providentials. And as he convinceth him of his inſufficiency, and incompetency to deal and debate with God, by his ignorance about the warmth of his garments that covered him: So in the next Verſe, he convinceth him of weakneſs and inability, by calling him to conſider the mighty power and ſelf-ſufficiency of God, who alone, without any of his or of any man's aſſiſtance, made and ſpread out the mighty garment, the Sky, which enwraps and covers all men and all things on earth. That's the general import of the following queſtion.

Verſ. 18. Haſt thou with him ſpread out the Sky, which is ſtrong, and as a molten looking-Glaſs?

תרקיע Ponitur pro præterito; hoc ex ipſa ſententia liquet. Deus enim ſemel expandit cœlos cum eos crearet, non expendit eos amplius. Piſc.

The word which we render, and is here uſed as a Verb, to ſpread, beareth an alluſion to Metals, which are beaten out by an hammer into plates. The Noun ſignifies the Firmament (Gen. 1.) becauſe it is an expanſion, or thing ſpread out. I find the Verb is applied to the work of God upon the Earth (Pſal. 136. 6.) where the Pſalmiſt puts this among the praiſes of God, or the things for which God is to be praiſed, To him who ſtretched out the earth. The ſtretching or ſpreading out of the earth is the work of God, as well as the ſpreading out of the Heaven. The earth is a ſolid opacous and globous body, yet it is ſaid to be ſtretched out, becauſe as there is a roundneſs in the Earth, ſo a mighty extent and vaſtneſs. To him that ſtretched out the earth above the waters, to him give thanks. But though the Earth be alſo ſtretched out, yet more properly (of which Elihu here ſpeaks) the Sky. Haſt thou with him ſpread out לשחקים Cœlum vel nubes vel aerem ſignificat, unde aliqui conjunctim de omnibus accipiunt. Scult. Cœli ſic dicti à tenuitate ſubſtantiæ, & ל valet articulum accuſativi caſus. Piſc. Apud Hebræos idem ſignificant Shamaim & Schthhkim; ita apud Latinos cœlum & Æther; interdum aer mediæ regionis ubi ſunt nubes hoc nomine ſignificatur. Merc.

The ſky?] The word rendred Sky, is put ſometimes for the Air, ſometimes for the Clouds, as alſo for the Heavens above both the Clouds and Air. Several of the learned expound it here of the Air, that is, of all below the Moon; others of the Heavens which are above. Haſt thou with him ſpread out the Sky, or the Heaven?

This ſpreading forth of the Skie may have a three-fold reference.

Firſt, To the eternal Counſel of God before time. As if he had ſaid, Waſt thou with God when he decreed or purpoſed to ſpread out the Heavens?

Secondly, To the work of God in the beginning of time. Waſt thou with God, when he did actually ſpread out the Sky or Firmament in the ſecond days work of Creation? (Gen. 1. 6.)

Thirdly, (which ſome inſiſt much upon) to the daily or frequently renewed work of God in ordering and altering the face and motion of the Heavens. As if he had ſaid, Haſt thou with him, when the Skie ſeeming to be wrapped up in darkneſs, and rent with thunder and ſtorms; haſt thou then with him ſcattered the darkneſs, and cleared up the air, making all ſtrong or whole again? Thus he is ſuppoſed ſpeaking of a thing often done, even after every ſtorm, not of ſpreading the Sky at firſt.

Tu forſitan cum illo fabricatus es cœlos. Vulg.

The Vulgar Latine renders it ironically, in the ſecond ſenſe; Thou perhaps didſt joyn with him in making the Heavens! As if Elihu had ſaid, 'Tis like, or belike thou waſt with him when he made the Heavens; Thou ſurely waſt the Giant or Mighty man who aſſiſted at the ſpreading out of that vaſt Canopy. Didſt thou poor worm, contribute thy help, or lend thy hand to God in the creation of the World? are we beholden to thee that the Heavens which we behold, compaſs in all things with their embraces? you ſpeak of your ſelf at ſuch a rate, as if you had been a partner or a coadjutor with God in the Creation, and had with him ſpread out the Heavens. Thus the words are as a ſtrong Negation; Thou hadſt nothing to do with God when he ſpread out the Heavens in the work of Creation; why then art thou ſo buſie with God about the works of his Providence, and particularly about his dealing with thy ſelf? The ſum of Elihu's argument in this matter may be thus conceived; If God call not man in other things as a Counſellor or Judge of his actions, nor can be required of any man to do ſo, nor may any man preſume to ſpeak againſt his ordering the Heavens and Meteors, which yet concern the great good or hurt of thouſands; then it muſt needs be a very unequal thing that any one man ſhould expect of God a reaſon of his particular dealing with him, but patiently ſubmit unto it, not at all queſtioning, either his juſtice or his goodneſs, how greatly and grievouſly ſoever he is afflicted.

Firſt, Taking the Heavens, either ſtrictly, or, as many do, ſynecdochically, a part being put for the whole work of Creation,

Note, God made the world;

He ſpread the Heavens, and ſtretched out the Earth, Heaven and Earth are the work of his hands.

Secondly, God hath no partner in his work. Haſt thou with him ſpread out the Skie? The Scripture is much in exalting the honour of God, as the ſole Agent and Efficient in ſetting up the frame of the World, (Iſa. 44. 24.) Thus ſaith the Lord, I am the Lord that maketh all things, that ſtretcheth forth the Heavens alone, that ſpreadeth abroad the Earth by my ſelf. The Prophet brings in God ſpeaking thus, to comfort his ancient people when they ſaw none to help them. What cannot God do alone, who ſtretcheth out the Heavens alone? Cannot he bring back the Church of the Jews out of Babylon alone, who ſtretcheth out the Heavens alone? cannot he raiſe up Cyrus for his Shepherd, and move him to make Proclamation for their return, when there was none to move him about it? He fruſtrateth the tokens of the liars, and maketh Diviners mad. Thoſe lying Diviners ſaid, the Jews were faſt enough for coming out, but God fruſtrated their tokens, and made them mad at their diſappointments. Now as this may exceedingly comfort and encourage the people of God all the world over in their greateſt ſtraits, that God made the world, and ſpread out the Sky alone, ſo it doth exceedingly advance the power and glory of God. If a man have but a great Carpet or Coverlet to unfold, he muſt call in the help of two or three to ſpread it and hold it up, one man cannot do it alone: But God ſpread out the Heaven, that mighty Canopy of the Heavens alone. And his ſpreading of it was the making of it; The mighty God by one act gave the Sky both its being and its form: And all this he did without either Counſellor or Coadjutor. No man ever did any very great thing in the world, but it was either by the help of other mens heads in contriving, or by the help of their hands in effecting. To be a ſole-Agent of Great things, is the ſole-priviledge of the Great God. And ſurely if the Lord God had no aſſiſtant in the great work of Creation, he needs no aſſiſtance in his greateſt works of Providence. He who made the world without help, can do what he pleaſeth in the world without help. Our help (ſaith the Pſalmiſt 124. 8.) is in the name of the Lord, who made Heaven and Earth; but the Maker of Heaven and of Earth, fetcheth all his help from his own Name.

Elihu having magnified the power of God in ſpreading out the Sky, takes occaſion to give us a deſcription of the Sky, Haſt thou with him ſpread out the Sky

Which is ſtrong, and as a molten Looking-Glaſs?

We have here two things conſiderable in the Sky; Firſt, the ſtrength of it; Secondly, the clearneſs of it. But is the Sky ſtrong? that may be thought an improper and incongruous Epithete: The Sky ſeemeth to be a weak thing, and the Air will ſcarce bear a feather; yet ſaith he, Haſt thou with him ſpread out the Sky which is ſtrong? How are the Heavens or Sky ſtrong? Philoſophers and Interpreters upon this place, have largely diſcourſed the matter of the Heavens, which to our ſenſe are a very thin ſubſtance, and therefore ſeem to have little ſtrength in them.

I anſwer, Though to ſenſe and view the Sky or Heavens ſeem to have little ſtrength in them, yet indeed their ſtrength is beyond that of Rocks and Mountains. The learned Languages, both Greek and Latine, expreſs the Sky by words which properly ſignifie ſtrength and firmneſs; and we following the Latine word commonly call it in our Engliſh Tongue, The Firmament, as much as to ſay, a firm thing. When the Apoſtle would ſet forth the ſteadineſs (or as we tranſlate) the ſtedfaſtneſs of the faith of the Coloſſians, he makes uſe of this word (στερέωμα Chap. 2. 5.) As if he had ſaid, I rejoyce to behold the firmament mament of your faith, or that your faith is as firm as the Firmament. Surely then the Sky or Firmament is very ſtrong, elſe the ſtrength of faith (which being ſtrong, is the ſtrongeſt thing, both actively and paſſively, in the world) had never been expreſſed by it. The Heavens are ſaid to be ſtrong (as faith is) becauſe of their laſtingneſs and duration. The Angels are pure Spirits, they are purer and of a more ſpiritual ſubſtance than the Sky or Heavens, yet they are ſtrong, ſo ſtrong and powerful, that they are called Powers; their ſtrength is not a corporal ſtrength of fleſh and bone, as ours, and that of beaſts is, nor is it a ſtrength by compactneſs of earthy parts, as that of Stones and Metals is, but 'tis a ſtrength of laſtingneſs and activity ariſing from their ſpiritualneſs. Thus the Sky, eſpecially taking it for the Heavens above the air, is pure, there is a ſpiritualneſs in its nature, and ſo a ſtrength of laſtingneſs in it, beyond that of any earthly or elementary body. The Heavens are not made up of contrary qualities, as elementary bodies are: In them heat and coldneſs, moiſture and drineſs, are mingled together, and theſe contending with each other, at laſt ſubdue each other; whence all elementary bodies become weak and corruptible. The Heavens have ſome cognation with elementary bodies, yet without the contrariety of active qualities. Heaven is like the Element of the Earth, in regard of firmneſs and ſolidity; it is like the water, in regard of its moveableneſs; it is like the air, in regard of its pellucidneſs or clearneſs; it is like the fire, with reſpect to its activeneſs. Heaven ſhines, yet 'tis without heat; 'tis ſolid, yet without drineſs; 'tis compact, yet without moiſtneſs; 'tis diaphanous and pellucid, yet without pores, or thoſe ſmall and unſenſible holes, whereby ſweat and vapours paſs out of the body. So then the Scripture calls Heaven ſtrong or firm, not as groſs bodies are called firm and ſtrong, but becauſe of its perpetual conſiſtency and (as to nature) indiſſolubility; which doth the more highly advance and commend the power of God, who hath given it a ſtrength and firmneſs, beyond that of Rocks and Adamants: For how fluid and moveable ſoever the Heavens are to view, yet they are the moſt ſtrong and durable part of the whole Creation. Haſt thou with him ſpread out the Sky which is ſtrong, מוצק fuſile à יצק fundere liquefacere, non à צוק coarctare. Merc.

And as a molten Looking-Glaſs?

Some read theſe words as an entire ſentence, Which is ſtrong as a molten Looking-Glaſs. So Mr. Broughton, Couldſt thou make a Firmament with him of the Air, ſetled as Glaſs molten? We put it diſtinctly in two parts, which is ſtrong, and as a molten Looking-Glaſs. Some of the old Poets uſed a like Epithete concerning Heaven, they called it, The Brazen Heaven. What the Lord threatens as a judicial affliction (Deut. 28. 23.) The Heaven that is over thine head ſhall be Braſs, that Heaven reſembles in its natural conſtitution, 'tis like Braſs, or like a molten Looking-Glaſs, by reaſon of its ſhining brightneſs. That which we commonly call Glaſs, or a Looking-Glaſs is molten: of which we read (Exod. 38. 8.) Moſes made the Brazen Laver of the Looking-Glaſſes of the Women. The godly women among the Jews made a better uſe of their Looking-Glaſſes, than to dreſs themſelves by, they offered them to the ſervice of God in the Tabernacle.

Poetæ veteres χαλκὲον ὤρανον appellarunt.

One of the Jewiſh Doctors warns us to conſider that the wonder which we render a Looking-Glaſs, may be taken for a look, or for the appearance of a thing: As if he had ſaid, The Heavens are not only ſtrong, but clear, looking like, or being, to look on, like a thing that is molten. Glaſs is a diaphanous ſplendid body, we may ſee through it, or ſee the repreſentation of objects in it. Thus the Heavens are ſtrong as ſteel, and clear as a molten-Looking Glaſs.

ראה Eſt videre; inde viſus & ſpeculum. Fab. Kimhi in lib. rad.

Hence obſerve, Firſt; The Heavens are durable, they are ſtrong.

Secondly, The Heavens are tranſparent, they are as a Looking-Glaſs.

From this latter we may infer,

There is much to be ſeen in the Heavens;

They are a Looking-Glaſs which repreſent many things to us. It hath been ſaid, The whole world is a Looking-Glaſs, every Age we live in is a Looking-Glaſs, in which many, both things and perſons, are diſcovered: I may ſay much more, the Heavens are a Looking-Glaſs, wherein we may behold much of God, and much of our ſelves. And becauſe the Heavens are called a Looking-Glaſs, it ſhould mind us to look upon the Heavens; they may mind us, Sæculum ſpeculum.

Firſt, What God is, who hath made the Heavens (Pſal. 19. 1.) The Heavens declare the glory of God, and the Firmament ſheweth his handy work. We may ſee God by the Heavens;

Firſt, In his nature, that he is pure and holy. He that hath made ſuch a pure thing as the Heaven is, how pure is he! There is no dirt in the Sky, no filth in the Heavens, no uncleanneſs there; the duſt or filth of this world can get but a little into the air, it cannot reach the Heavens. The purity of God is ſuch as may ſhame the purity of the Heavens, and make them bluſh; though the Heavens are the pureſt part of the world, yet comparatively to God they are impure. This Eliphaz aſſerts expreſly (Chap. 15. 15.) Behold he putteth no truſt in his Saints: yea, the Heavens are not clean in his ſight. Bildad puts it yet further (Chap. 26. 5.) Yea, the Stars (which are the moſt pure and reſplendent part of the Heavens) are not pure in his ſight.

Secondly, The Heavens are a Glaſs, wherein we may behold the power of God. How unconceiveable is his power, who hath made ſuch a Canopy, and ſpread it over the heads of all Creatures! And if the viſible Heavens are ſo glorious, what is the Heaven of Heavens! The Heaven which we ſee, is but the pavement of that which is unſeen. God hath made ſuch a Cieling for this Houſe below, as never needed mending, or repair, he hath ſet ſuch a Roof upon it as abides all weathers.

Thirdly, We may ſee in this Glaſs the wiſdom of God, his wonderful wiſdom in contriving and fitting ſuch a beautiful Roof for this great Houſe, the World. We admire the skill and wiſdom of Architects in ſome pieces of their work. O the wiſdom of God in this!

Fourthly, We may ſee in the Heavens the unchangeableneſs of God. If he hath made the Heavens of ſuch a laſting nature, that they have continued many thouſand years without alteration; ſurely then he himſelf hath continued and will continue for ever without change, as he is at this day. The unchangeableneſs of God infinitely exceeds that of the Heavens. We find the Spirit of God by holy David infinitely preferring the God of Heaven, before the Heavens of God, in his unchangeableneſs (Pſal. 102. 26, 27.) Of old haſt thou laid the foundation of the Earth, and the Heavens are the work of thy hands; they ſhall periſh, but thou ſhalt endure; yea, all of them ſhall wax old like a garment, and as a veſture ſhalt thou change them, and they ſhall be changed: but thou art the ſame. The Heavens have but a ſhadow of unchangeableneſs, compared with God, With whom is no variableneſs nor ſhadow of changing.

Fifthly, In this Glaſs of the Heavens we may look upon or contemplate the wonderful goodneſs of God to the ſons of men, (Pſal. 8. 3.) When I conſider the Heavens, the work of thy fingers, the Moon, and the Stars, which thou haſt ordained: What is man that thou art mindful of him? and the ſon of man that thou viſiteſt him? Whenever we behold the Heavens, it ſhould mind us of the mercy and goodneſs of God to man two ways. Firſt, in making the Heavens for his uſe, while he dwels on the Earth. Secondly, that he hath prepared and provided him ſuch a dwelling houſe, when he ſhall leave this Earth (2 Cor. 5. 1.) We know that when the earthly houſe of this Tabernacle ſhall be diſſolved, we have a building of God, an houſe not made with hands, eternal in the Heavens.

Again, The Heavens are a Looking Glaſs, wherein we may behold our ſelves.

Firſt, We may behold our weakneſs and impurity, and ſo our unlikeneſs to the Heavens, much more to the God of Heaven. When oppoſites are ſet one by or over againſt the other, they illuſtrate each other. In the ſpotleſs Heavens, we may ſee our ſpots; The pure Heavens may ſhew us our impurity.

Secondly, As in the Heavens we may ſee what we are, ſo what we ſhou'd be. The purity of the Heavens tell us we ſhould be pure, they tell us we ſhould be heavenly-minded, that is, ſet our minds chiefly upon heavenly things; yea, that our minds ſhould be like the Heavens, pure and ſpotleſs. It is ſaid of the Church (Cant. 6. 10.) Who is this that looketh forth as the morning, fair as the Moon, clear as the Sun? Such, in a qualified ſenſe, are all the parts and true members of the Church. Shall a man ſay, he hopes for an inheritance in the Heavens, when his mind is earthly, or when he minds only earthly things? Worldly men are not only earthly-minded, but their minds are earth, and themſelves are called earth (Jer. 22. 29. and Rev. 12. 16.) Surely then they are earthly. On the other hand, godly men ſhould not only mind heavenly things, but be a Heaven before they come to Heaven. The Church on Earth is called Heaven (Heb. 12. 26.) Yet once more I ſhake not the Earth only, but alſo Heaven; that is, the Church ſtate. St. John ſaith (Rev. 12. 7.) There was war in Heaven: But is there war in Heaven? is it not all peace and joy there? How then ſaith that Scripture, There was war in Heaven? By Heaven there he means the Church on earth, which is called Heaven: Firſt, becauſe there is not a more lively repreſentation or reſemblance of the higheſt Heavens (which is the habitation of Gods holineſs, and of his glory) than the Church here below, which is a company of Saints and faithful ones. Secondly, becauſe the Church, while on Earth, hath more to do in Heaven, and for Heaven, then in or for the Earth; and that in three reſpects.

Firſt, Her birth is from Heaven, being born of God.

Secondly, Her traffick is in and for Heaven. The Apoſtle ſaith of himſelf, and of all ſuch as are truly the Church of God (Phil. 3. 20.) Our Converſation is in Heaven; our Trade is in Heaven. Though we have buſineſs on Earth, yet that which is our buſineſs indeed is in Heaven. The Church hath more to do in Heaven than on Earth; her pains and labours, her cares and endeavours are more for heavenly than for earthly things. They that beſtow moſt of their labour upon earthly things, are earthly. In all things we ought to be heavenly, and in every thing we do, we ought to be doing for Heaven.

Thirdly, Becauſe her Head and her Inheritance is in Heaven. Here ſhe is a ſtranger, there is her home; nor is ſhe ever truly at home, till ſhe comes thither.

Thus as Heaven is a Glaſs, wherein we may ſee what we ought to be now; we ſhould labour to be pure, conſtant and of an unvariable temper, as the Heavens are; ſo what we ſhall be, and ſhall have hereafter: 'Tis ſuch a Glaſs as God hath made for us to behold our ſelves in, and above all to behold himſelf, his bleſſed ſelf in. Let us dreſs our ſelves by this Glaſs every day.

Let it not ſatisfie us to look upon the Heavens, that we may ſee and be taken with their own beauty and excellency, as Philoſophers do in their diſcourſes of Heaven; but let us ſee God in them, let us ſee Grace and Glory in them. There is ſo little of God in the diſcourſes of Philoſophers (ſaith one) that they are colder than the Froſt and Snow, of which they often diſcourſe. But let us ſee God in this Looking-Glaſs of the Heavens, and therein alſo let us ſee our ſelves, and learn to be fitting and preparing our ſelves for heavenly joys and enjoyments. We have never looked well upon or in this Glaſs, till we have mended our dreſs, and are become better and more beautiful by looking in it.

VERS. 19, 20.

Teach us what we ſhall ſay unto him, for we cannot order our ſpeech by reaſon of darkneſs.
Shall it be told him that I ſpeak? if a man ſpeak, ſurely he ſhall be ſwallowed up.

ELihu having (in the former part of the Chapter) rehearſed many of the wonderful works of God in natural things, beyond his reach, bids Job reach them if he could, or, he invites Job, if he could, to give him ſome direction, what account to give unto God about them, profeſſing that he himſelf knew not, could not tell what to ſay; telling him alſo, that he was much aſſured no man elſe could; If a man ſpeak, ſurely he ſhall be ſwallowed up.

As if Elihu had ſaid, Now thou haſt heard the works of God thus at large diſcourſed, I appeal to thee, if any man know how to diſpute or fault his doings; as for our parts, we cannot tell what to alledge or reply againſt them, becauſe we cannot ſee the depth of his wiſdom, nor reach the bottom of his adminiſtrations. And ſo the whole context may contain an argument from the leſs to the greater. If we are ignorant of, or can hardly apprehend theſe natural things, how much more muſt we be ignorant of, and unable to ſearch into the ſecrets and reſerved caſes of divine Providence? We know little of our ſelves, how much leſs of God! That's the general ſcope and intendment of theſe two verſes.

Verſe 19. Teach us what we ſhall ſay, for we cannot order our ſpeech by reaſon of darkneſs.

There is a twofold interpretation of the former part of this nineteenth verſe; ſome expounding it as a ſerious motion, or a motion in good earneſt made by Elihu in his own name, or in the name of thoſe about him, that Job would give them counſel in that matter, Teach us, ſhew us what we ſhall ſay unto him; as for our parts, we are compaſſed about with ſo much darkneſs, that we know not to ſay further, or more than we have already, about theſe matters; from whence he would infer or intimate, that much leſs did he or they about him, know what to ſay more of Job's matters, or of the dealings of God with him. Thus, according to this interpretation, Elihu ſeemeth to proſecute what he ſpake formerly; I deſire to juſtifie thee, I would gladly undertake the patronage of thy cauſe, or find out a way how to acquit thee of all thoſe raſh ſpeeches, and impatient complaints, that proceed from thee; but as yet, for my part, I ſee not how to do it, and therefore, if thou doſt, pray ſhew me.

Secondly, And that more generally, theſe words are expounded, as if in them Elihu had put kind of ſlight or ſcorn upon Job, triumphing and inſulting over him, as his inferiour in diſputation. As if he had ſaid, Go to now, O Job, ſeeing thou thinkeſt thy ſelf ſo wiſe and juſt, that thou art able to plead and debate thy cauſe with God himſelf; teach us, who are nothing to thee, and who ingenuouſly confeſs our ſelves ignorant, how to reſolve thoſe queſtions lately propoſed to thy conſideration: We are overwhelmed with deep darkneſs, and have no hope to diſpel it, or get out of it, unleſs thou canſt give us light. Thus, I ſay, the words are generally expounded, as ſpoken with a kind of ſtomach, or carrying in them the ſenſe of a ſecret ſubſannation? as if Job were more able to ſee than they all that were about him, as if they were dull and blind, and he alone had the wit. Now you that are ſo great a Maſter, and ſo ready a Teacher, come ſhew us, play the Maſter, and act the Tutors part, teach us what we ſhall ſay to him.

Irriſoriè ſubdit dicens, oſtende nobis, &c. Aquin.

Age magiſtrum.

But I rather adhere to the former expoſition, taking the words as a plain motion, though not altogether without a mixture of reproof. Teach us what we ſhall ſay; If thou wouldeſt have us ſay any thing in thy cauſe, give us inſtruction. An Advocate, when his Client comes for counſel, tells him, if you would have me plead your cauſe give me inſtructions, open your caſe to me, that I may plead it for you; thus here, teach us, ſhew us what we ſhall ſay, give us directions if thou art able. Job had ſaid (Chap. 23. 4.) He would order his cauſe before God, and fill his mouth with arguments; pray, ſaith Elihu, give us ſome of thoſe arguments now, as for me, and thoſe that are with me, we are utterly unprovided what arguments to uſe, how to argue, how to plead any thing for the juſtification of thy ſpeeches and behaviour in thy affliction; Therefore teach us what we ſhall ſay unto him.

The Text is, make us to know. Teaching makes men knowing; he that teacheth another endeavours to conveigh knowledge into him; and therefore the ſame word may very well ſignifie, to teach and make to know, foraſmuch as the tendency of teaching is for the beginning or for the increaſing of knowledge. Teach us

What we ſhall ſay unto him:

That is, to the Almighty. God is the Antecedent to this Relative he, what ſhall we ſay to God in thy defence? we would do our beſt, our utmoſt, if we knew how. There are two ſorts of perſons who call for teaching.

Firſt, Uſually they deſire others to teach them, who are convinced or ſenſible of their own ignorance, and would be delivered from or brought out of it. Thus David prayed that God would teach him, that he would teach him his Statutes (Pſal. 119. 33, 66.) The ſick man in the 34th Chapter of this Book is repreſented humbly craving this favour (verſ. 32.) That which I ſee not teach thou me. Here's the true genius and deſire of a learner, he would be taught, he is convinced that he wants knowledge very much or is very ignorant, and therefore he would be taught. But,

Secondly, Some call upon others to teach them, meerly to convince them of their ignorance and inability to teach them, or to ſhew that it is a great preſumption in them to pretend to the knowledge of ſuch things as they call upon them to teach. In this latter ſenſe we are to underſtand this deſire or motion of Elihu, ſaying to Job, Teach us what we ſhall ſay unto him, that is, what defence we ſhall make for thee, or what for our ſelves, if we were in thy caſe, or had ſuch a mind to plead with God, as thou haſt expreſt more than once. Elihu moves Job to teach them, knowing that he was not able to teach them, or to let him know that he had not knowledge enough to teach them in that matter. Teach us what we ſhall ſay unto him,

For we cannot order our ſpeech by reaſon of darkneſs.

A facie tenebrarum. Heb.

In this latter part of the verſe Elihu gives Job a reaſon why he and his fellows would (though they knew he could not teach them) be taught by him. As if he had ſaid, we plainly and clearly acknowledge that we are in the dark about theſe matters, and cannot order our ſpeech by reaſon of darkneſs.

The word here rendred to order, may have a double alluſion;

First, To a Military;

Secondly, To a Judiciary ordering.

It is an alluſion to the Military ordering of an Army or Camp, becauſe words in ſpeech ought to be put into good order, to be duly ranked and drawn out as ſouldiers to battel.

They alſo that have to do in Cauſes and Courts of Juſtice ought to order their words aright, they muſt not ſpeak at random, or what comes next, but they muſt weigh the plea they make, and put every thing in its due place. Thus ſaith Elihu here, We cannot order our ſpeech, we cannot tell how to draw up our reaſons, we are overmatcht in this buſineſs, we know not how to plead before God in thy caſe, nor what defence to make for thee; thou pretendeſt to be able to contend with him, but we are not we cannot order our ſpeech. Why not?

By reaſon of darkneſs.

It is darkneſs that uſually hinders the putting of things in order: Darkneſs in the Air doth ſo, much more darkneſs of the Underſtanding. There muſt be light of one kind or other for the ordering of every matter. Where darkneſs is there muſt needs be confuſion: and therefore Elihu gives a very good account, why they could not order their ſpeech, when he ſaith, We cannot do it by reaſon of darkneſs. What darkneſs? there is a twofold darkneſs, Firſt, There is darkneſs proper, or natural. Once there was darkneſs, becauſe light was not come or created; of that Moſes ſpeaks (Gen. 1. 3, 4.) Darkneſs was upon the face of the deep. Now there is darkneſs every night, cauſed by the departure of light, or the going down of the Sun; as alſo ſometimes by the Eclipſe of the Sun (Matth. 27. 45.) There was darkneſs over all the land, when Chriſt was crucified. It was not this kind of darkneſs, that hindred Elihu from ordering his ſpeech; for a man may order his ſpeech though he have neither Sun-light nor Candle-light; a man needs no other light, but that of Reaſon and Underſtanding to order his ſpeech by.

Secondly, Darkneſs in Scripture is taken improperly and metaphorically; and ſo we are to underſtand it here, We cannot order our ſpeech by reaſon of darkneſs And this darkneſs, which I call improper or metaphorical, is of ſeveral kinds.

Firſt, Trouble and ſorrow in Scripture language are called darkneſs (Pſal. 18. 28.) Thou, O Lord, wilt lighten my darkneſs, that is, thou wilt bring me out of a ſorrowful, into a joyful ſtate. (Joel 2. 2.) It is a day of darkneſs; what is that? a day of trouble and affliction. Hence the ſtate of the damned in Hell is called darkneſs, yea, utter darkneſs (Matth. 22. 13.) becauſe it is a ſtate of ſorrow, even of everlaſting ſorrows. This darkneſs of ſorrow and trouble will hinder a man very much from ordering his ſpeech. He that is compaſſed about with, eſpecially if diſcompoſed by ſorrow, is unfit to ſpeak before men of underſtanding; yet, I conceive, this was not the darkneſs here meant.

Secondly, Darkneſs in Scripture notes the ſtate of a natural man, as unregenerate and without faith. Ye were ſometimes darkneſs, ſaith the Apoſtle (Eph. 5. 8.) that is, ye were ſometimes unconverted, or in a ſtate of nature, which is called darkneſs, not only there, but often elſewhere (1 Theſ. 5. 4.) Brethren, ye are not in darkneſs, that is, ye are not in a ſinful condition, grace hath ſhined unto you, yea, it hath ſhined into you, or as the Apoſtle ſpeaks (2 Cor. 4. 6.) it hath ſhined in your hearts, to give you the light of the knowledge of the glory of God, in the face of Jeſus Chriſt; he it was who came on purpoſe into the world, as to give life to them that were dead, ſo to give light to them that ſit in darkneſs (Luke 7.9.) 'Tis a truth alſo that this kind of darkneſs doth exceedingly hinder a man in ſpeaking, eſpecially when ſome things are to be ſpoken. He that is in the darkneſs of a natural condition, will be to ſeek (as we ſay) or knoweth not how to order his ſpeech before God, in any ſpiritual matter. Yet, neither is this here meant; for Elihu was not a man in this kind of darkneſs, he was doubtleſs a godly man, a man that had much acquaintance with, and in the things of God: Therefore it was not becauſe of this darkneſs that he could not order his ſpeech before God.

Thirdly, Darkneſs is put for the deſerted eſtate of a godly man (Iſaiah 50. 10.) Who is among you that feareth the Lord, and obeyed the voyce of his ſervant? he that doth ſo is ſurely a godly man, or in the ſtate of grace; who is there of this ſort among you that walketh in darkneſs, and hath no light, God having with-drawn the light of his countenance from him? Now 'tis a very great truth (and ſadly experienced by ſome) that this kind of darkneſs doth exceedingly hinder a man from ordering his ſpeech before God. A poor ſoul, that is walking in the darkneſs of a ſpiritual, troubled, deſerted ſtate, that is bewildred with fear and doubt about the favour of God to him, and his acceptance with him, knoweth not what to do or ſay before God, he knoweth not how to order his ſpeech in prayer or diſcourſe.

This darkneſs hindereth us mightily in ordering our ſpeech before God. Yet I conclude, that neither is this the darkneſs here underſtood, which is a darkneſs following upon the preſent going down or ſetting of the Sun of Righteouſneſs upon the ſoul, who was himſelf once thus grievouſly benighted, when nailed to the Croſs, he cryed out, my God, my God, why haſt thou forſaken me.

Fourthly, Darkneſs is taken for that remaining ignorance or imperfection of knowledg, which abides even in the beſt, in the holieſt of men after their converſion, while on this ſide Heaven. This ignorance is darkneſs (1 Cor. 13 9.) and this is that darkneſs which Elihu here intends, when he ſaith, we cannot order our ſpeech by reaſon of darkneſs. As if he had ſaid, Though I, and they with me, are not altogether rude nor ignorant of God and his ways; though we have received (through grace) a competency of divine light, to guide us through this world, yet we are ſenſible of ſo much dimneſs and darkneſs, that we cannot order our ſpeech before God, nor direct our ſelves what to ſay for thee, as thou haſt handled the matter.

Further, The darkneſs that (as Elihu ſaith) hindereth man in ordering his ſpeech before God, may be taken, not only for the darkneſs of the man, or of the perſon ſpeaking, as hath been ſhewed already, but alſo for the darkneſs of the matter, or of the things about which he is called or occaſioned to ſpeak. As there is a darkneſs of the Subject, ſo a darkneſs of the object, which David thus expreſſeth (Pſal. 49. 4.) I will utter dark ſayings upon the harp: And again (Pſal. 78. 2.) I will open my mouth in a parable, I will utter dark ſayings of old. A parable is a dark ſaying, that is, a myſterious ſaying, a ſentence not obvious to every underſtanding; there is a ſecret in parables (Prov. 1. 5, 6.) A man of underſtanding ſhall attain unto wiſe counſels, to underſtand a proverb (or parable) and the interpretation, the words of the wiſe and their dark ſayings. When Elihu ſaith, We cannot order our ſpeech by reaſon of darkneſs, we may take it in this latter ſenſe, as well as in the former; for as there is, and will be, ſome mixture of darkneſs with light in our minds, till we come to that inheritance of the Saints in light (Col. 1. 12.) ſo there may be a darkneſs in the matter to be ſpoken of. Some truths are ſo myſterious, ſecret and hidden, they are ſo obſcure, or lye ſo deep, that they are, by us, even unſearchable and unperceivable; and then we cannot order our ſpeech about them by reaſon of their darkneſs, though poſſibly our ſelves may have attained ſome good meaſure of light. And as there are many things in the doctrine of Faith very dark to us, ſo alſo in thoſe dealings of God with us, which reach our ſenſe; we ſee and feel that which we know not how to give a reaſon or an account of. The light of the Sun is clear and ſhines into our eyes, yet there is a difficulty to underſtand the nature of Light. We are in the dark, even about Light it ſelf; how much more are we in the dark about the hidden and dark works of God, in many of his diſpenſations towards the children of men! And ſurely then, we cannot order our ſpeech (concerning them) by reaſon of darkneſs.

If that ignorance which remaineth after converſion be darkneſs, then ſurely much more is that which dwelleth in a natural man unconverted. Knowledg is the light of the mind: The underſtanding, if furniſhed with knowledg, is as the Sun in the Firmament; but a man who hath no knowledg nor underſtanding, is like the Air without the Sun, nothing but darkneſs; and ſo much ignorance as abideth in any man, ſo much darkneſs abideth in him. The natural man is altogether ignorant, as to the underſtanding of ſpiritual things ſpiritually, that is, ſavingly, and therefore he (as to them) is altogether darkneſs, he is (as Job ſpake in another caſe of a land, Chap. 10. 22.) a man of darkneſs, as darkneſs it ſelf, and in him the light is as darkneſs; he cannot ſee by reaſon of darkneſs, nor can he ſpeak, to purpoſe, of the things of God, though he may ſpeak very wiſely about the things of the world, by reaſon of darkneſs, or becauſe his very Reaſon (which is the natural light of man) is darkened.

There are ſix things, which a natural man, by reaſon of this darkneſs, cannot ſee to order, neither his ſpeech nor his perſon about.

Firſt, He cannot ſee what he ſhould be, and what he is commanded to be, holy, juſt and righteous.

Secondly, He cannot ſee what he ſhould do, or is commanded to do, juſt and righteous things.

Thirdly, By reaſon of this darkneſs he cannot ſee, what he ought not to do, or is commanded not to do, unjuſt, evil and unrighteous things. He hath not a diſcerning about either the affirmative or the negative part of divine commandments; and hence it comes to paſs, that as he doth not what he ought, ſo he doth what he ought not.

Fourthly, By reaſon of this darkneſs, it muſt needs be, that he cannot ſee what he hath done againſt the commandment, his ſins of commiſſion, nor what he hath neglected to do according to the commandment, his ſins of Omiſſion.

Fifthly, If ſo, he cannot ſee what he ought to repent of, and turn from. Some repent not of that which they ſee to be evil, but no man can repent of that, in particular, which he ſeeth not to be evil. I grant every godly man makes it his daily work, to repent of his unknown ſins, as well as of thoſe which he knows (Pſal. 19. 12.) Who can underſtand his errors? that is, all the errors, wandrings and miſtakes of his life; and therefore David prayed in the cloſe of the verſe, cleanſe thou me from ſecret faults, that is, from thoſe faults and failings which are ſecrets to me, or which I know not of. But though a man may truly repent of his unknown ſins, yet no man repents of ſin, who doth not know ſin.

Sixthly, By reaſon of darkneſs a man doth not ſee, nor knows he the things that he hopes for; he poſſibly hath great hopes of heaven, or of eternal life, yet knows not in any meaſure what they are indeed, nor how to order his ſpeech about either, becauſe he is in darkneſs. So then, the ſtate of an unregenerate perſon is darkneſs, and therefore he cannot ſee at all, and much darkneſs may remain in a perſon regenerate, and therefore he cannot ſee all (1 John 1. 5.) God is light, and in him there is no darkneſs at all; but though the people of God have light and are light, yet in them there is darkneſs. And becauſe whereſoever ignorance is, there is darkneſs, according to the degree of that ignorance, we may take theſe Inferences from it.

Firſt, To be in an ignorant condition is to be in a very uncertain condition, for ſuch are in darkneſs. Now, as Chriſt ſpeaketh (John 12. 35.) He that walketh in darkneſs knoweth not whither he goeth. In what an uncertain condition is that man who is daily going, yet knows not whither he goeth? whether he be going right or wrong, whether he be going for his good or for his hurt, whether he be going homeward or from home, whether he be going to a Palace or a Priſon, whether to Life or Death, to Heaven or Hell. Thus 'tis with a man in darkneſs, and proportionable to the darkneſs that is in any man, is the uncertainty of that man's condition; and therefore till a man be got out of this darkneſs of ignorance, he is in a very uncertain condition, he knoweth not whither he is going, though he be certainly going downward, and that to deſtruction.

Secondly, If ignorance be darkneſs, in what degree ſoever it is, then, ignorance is very dangerous. Darkneſs ſubjects us to danger. As a man is in an uncertain condition while he is in darkneſs, ſo in a dangerous condition. If the blind lead the blind, both fall into the ditch. O how dangerous is the ſtate of that man who is altogether in darkneſs! We find theſe two put together (Iſa. 9. 2. repeated Matth. 4. 16.) To them that ſate in darkneſs, and in the valley of the ſhadow of death, is light riſen up. How near are they to danger, who are even in the valley of the ſhadow of death? Thus 'tis with thoſe that are in a ſtate of darkneſs; and ſo far as darkneſs is in any man, he is in danger to be miſled, and to erre both in opinion and practice. Woe to thoſe who, when light is come into the world ſhall be found loving darkneſs rather than light (Joh. 3. 19.) theſe are in the greateſt danger, the danger of condemnation, yea, this is the condemnation.

Thirdly, To be in an ignorant condition, is to be in a very uncomfortable condition; darkneſs is uncomfortable. And though ſuch as are in ſpiritual darkneſs are not ſenſible of their danger (and therefore take up their comforts, rejoyce in the creature, and ſing care away) yet their danger is not the leſs, but more; and when once a man is made ſenſible of his darkneſs, he is compaſt about with many fears, doubts and ſorrows, &c. The darkneſs of the night is very uncomfortable, in compariſon of the light of the day; what then is the darkneſs of ſin and ignorance, in compariſon of the light of grace and of the knowledge of God! And therefore we ſhould, Firſt, Pity the ignorant, thoſe eſpecially who are totally ignorant and alienated from the life of God, through the ignorance that is in them, as the Apoſtle deſcribes them (Eph. 4. 18.) We pity thoſe that are bodily blind, becauſe (as we ſay) they are dark, they cannot ſee the Sun; ſurely, if bodily darkneſs or the darkneſs of the bodily eye, be to be pittied, if ſuch are to be prayed for that they may receive light, how much more is the darkneſs of the ſoul to be pittied, and the blindneſs of the mind! and therefore are others to pity them the more, becauſe they (not ſeeing their danger, nor their miſery by it) do not at all pity themſelves.

Secondly, If ignoronce be darkneſs, and that an uncertain, a dangerous and an uncomfortable condition, then we ſhould uſe and improve all the means we can, or, within our compaſs, for the curing of our own ſouls and others of this evil; how ſhould they that are in a ſtate of ignorance deſire knowledge! The great end of ſending the miniſtry of the Goſpel to any people, is to open their eyes, and turn them from this darkneſs to light (Acts 26. 18.) Chriſt ſaith to the Church of Laodicea, in that caſe (Rev. 3. 18.) I counſel thee to anoint thy eyes with eye-ſalve that thou mayſt ſee; that is, uſe thoſe means that are proper for the gaining of true knowledge in the things of God. Thou pretendeſt to have knowledge, but thy darkneſs is more than thy light, and thy ignorance more than thy knowledge; therefore I counſel thee to buy of me eye-ſalve, that thou mayeſt ſee.

Secondly, Foraſmuch as Elihu ſaith, We cannot order our ſpeech by reaſon of darkneſs; we, though knowing men, know not what to ſay;

> Note, There is much darkneſs remaining in thoſe that have moſt light in this world.

They that know much and have the cleareſt ſight, are yet dark in many things; what they ſee is but little to what they ſee not (1 Cor. 13. 9.) We know but in part, and (verſ. 12.) We ſee through a glaſs darkly. The ſight that we have of things, though in a Goſpel-way, is but a kind of dark ſight, we ſee through a glaſs darkly. Elihu ſaw himſelf compaſt about with much darkneſs; and who may not find darkneſs yet abiding in him? What-ever our light or knowledge is, all that we know is not half ſo much as that which we know not; this ſhould humble us. We are very apt to be proud of that knowledge we have (Knowledge puffs up) but did we remember how much ignorance is mixed and amaſſed with our knowledge, how much darkneſs with our light, we ſhould ſee little reaſon to be proud of it, or puſt up with it.

Take theſe Inferences of duty from this ſecond Note.

Firſt, We ſhould always be praying for Light. Every good gift, and every perfect gift is from above, and cometh down from the Father of Lights: If we would have light from the Father of lights we muſt ask it.

Secondly, Let the moſt ſeeing take heed of preſuming that they ſee all. Some think they know enough, yea, that they have all knowledge, what is it that they know not? But Elihu and his friends ſaid well, We cannot order our ſpeech by reaſon of darkneſs. Do not ſay you know all, how much ſoever you know. It is an old rule and a true one, whether you take it with reſpect to actions or propoſitions, The wiſeſt man ſeeth not all. And one of the Ancients hath rightly taught us, That the beſt and higheſt point of our knowledge, is to confeſs our ignorance in the things of God.

Bernardus non vidit omnia. In his quæ dicuntur de Deo maxima ſcientia eſt ignorantiam fateri. Cyril. Cat. 6.

Thirdly, If the darkneſs of ignorance be not quite diſpelled from the moſt enlightened and knowing ſouls, Then, As they who have received moſt light of knowledge, have cauſe enough to be humbled in themſelves, ſo to beware of deſpiſing others.

Thirdly, When Elihu ſaith, We cannot order our ſpeech by reaſon of darkneſs,

> Obſerve, Ignorance is a very great hinderance in our approaches and addreſſes to God.

As God himſelf is light, ſo they who come to God, need much light: They need light,

Firſt, About their own condition.

Secondly, About the diſpenſations of God under which they are.

Thirdly, About the nature and tenour of the Covenant.

Fourthly, About the nature and divine properties of God, with whom they have to do.

Fifthly, About the excellency, faithfulneſs and all-ſufficiency of Chriſt, who hath done all for them.

Sixtnly, About the freeneſs of the grace of God towards them.

Seventhly, About the power and working of grace in them, eſpecially of that grace of Faith.

If we want the grace of Faith, we know not how to order our ſpeech before God, nor can we come to God without faith (Heb. 11. 6.) and if we want the knowledge of theſe things, we muſt needs want faith in them, or rather in God concerning them. A dark ſoul is a confuſed ſoul; how then is it poſſible that he ſhould order his ſpeech before God, who is himſelf confuſed and out of order? Perſons muſt be well compoſed, before their actions, ſpeeches or addreſſes can. Therefore if you would have free acceſs to God, and order your ſpeech before him aright, labour for a clear light, or as the Apoſtle ſpeaks (Col. 2. 3.) for the full aſſurance of underſtanding, to the acknowledgment of the myſtery of God, and of the Father, and of Chriſt; that is (as I conceive) of God the Father, in and through his Son, our Lord Jeſus Chriſt. That's the great ſtudy, and glory of Chriſtians; they have the moſt excellent ſubject in the world to ſtudy upon, and grow up in the knowledge of. Other Sciences conſider and contemplate the Creature, and the things of this Life; but Chriſtianity winds up the ſoul to the meditation of the Creator in the Mediator, whom to know is Eternal Life.

Fourthly, As darkneſs is conſidered in the Object,

> Note, The things of God are ſo myſterious, that we know not how to ſpeak of them as we ought: Or, There is a darkneſs in the Word, Ways and Works of God, which we cannot overcome.

The beſt have not light enough to look through all the darkneſs and obſcurity that is in the Works and Word of God. I do not affirm this, to caſt that reproach of obſcurity upon the Word of God, which the Papiſts do: The Word of God hath in it abundance of light, yea, 'tis a light; there is enough in it ſo plain, that any who have any true light, may ſee much of it, and be able to order their ſpeech, comfortably and competently, that is, acceptably, before God about it. Yet there is a myſterious darkneſs in many parts of the Word and Works of God, which our light is not clear enough to maſter and get through. God hath purpoſely done and ſpoken ſome things, which ſtand as ſecrets which our eye cannot pierce into, that he might keep us low and little in our own eyes. As there is enough in the Word, which the ſimpleſt may underſtand and ſpeak of to ſalvation, ſo there are ſome things there to poſe the wiſeſt, and hold them in a ſilent admiration. The Apoſtle Peter (2 Epiſt. 3. 16.) ſpeaking about the Epiſtles of Paul, ſaith, In them there are ſome things hard to be underſtood: He doth not ſay, all things in the Epiſtles of Paul are hard to be underſtood, but ſome things are, and they are ſo for our exerciſe and tryal. As thoſe things are altogether ſecrets to us, which God hath not revealed, ſo ſome things are in a great degree ſecrets to us, though God hath revealed them; and if ſo,

Then, Firſt, Let us believe when we cannot underſtand. Faith hath a knowledge about all general Principles; yet he that hath no more Faith in ſome ſpecial Scripture-Principles and Myſteries than he hath knowledge, will have but little Faith in them. Though we muſt have a knowledge about every thing we believe, yet we may be much more in believing many things, than we are in knowing them; we may have much Faith in that, of which we have but little knowledge. As Faith is the evidence of thoſe things which cannot be ſeen at all by the eye of ſence, ſo it is the evidence of ſome things to us, which are very little ſeen by the eye of the underſtanding. The bleſſed Virgin ſaid, How ſhall this be? When ſhe was told ſhe ſhould have a Son, ſhe could not underſtand the thing, there was a darkneſs in it, yet ſhe believed it.

Secondly, When we find darkneſs in the Works or Truths of God, which are the Object of our Faith, Let us adore what we cannot ſee, and admire where we cannot apprehend.

Thirdly, When we find darkneſs in any of the works of God, Let us be ſure to forbear to cenſure or queſtion thoſe works. How vain a thing is it to judge, when we do not underſtand, or to ſay that is not done well, which we know not how it is done! Doubtleſs, We cannot order our ſpeech (about ſuch things) before God, by reaſon of darkneſs; and therefore we ſhould tremble to ſpeak raſhly or hardly of them. Elihu heightens the point yet further in the next words.

Verſ. 20. Shall it be told him that I ſpeak? if a man ſpeak, ſurely he ſhall be ſwallowed up.

I find another rendring of theſe words, in ſuch a tenor as this; Is there any need that he ſhould be told what I ſpeak? As if Elihu's meaning were, that God, being omniſcient and every were preſent, needeth not any to bring him a report what men ſay or do; he knows our doings, and hears all our ſayings, though none tell him. I hearkned and heard (ſaith the Lord, Jer. 8. 6.) He that planted the ear, ſhall he not hear? he that formed the eye, ſhall he not ſee? If any man behave himſelf amiſs, or ſpeak amiſs, God ſeeth it, God heareth it. The Omnipotent needs no helper, the Omniſcient needs no informer, no intelligencer, to bring him an account of what is done or ſpoken: Is there any need (ſaith Elihu, according to this reading) that he ſhould be told what I ſpeak? We render Shall it be told him that I ſpeak?] Here ſome, inſtead of the word told tranſlate record; ſhall it be recorded, regiſtred or written in a book, that I ſpeak, that is, that I have undertaken thy cauſe as thou haſt ſtated it? Shall this be recorded, and the record ſent to God, that I intended to be thy Advocate? Surely no; neither I, nor any man of wiſdom or diſcretion will undertake to ſpeak in this matter, after thy manner. Shall it be told him that I ſpeak? I dare not, I would not have it told him that I will, for a World.

Verbo forenſi videtur uſus eſſe initio verſus. An narrabibitur, vel in acta referretur. Merl. An aliquis audibit ei narrare quum locutus fuero ſic; nempe ut tu locutus es de gubernatione Dei. Piſc.

Hence Note, Firſt, No man who underſtand himſelf, will venture upon the doing or ſpeaking of any thing that may provoke God, or be diſpleaſing to him.

Will any wiſe man be an Advocate to plead a Cauſe, which he knows will, upon juſt grounds, offend and diſtaſte an earthly Judge? The Preacher (ſaith Solomon, meaning himſelf, Eccleſ. 12. 10.) ſought to find out acceptable words; the Hebrew is, words of delight, or, words of the will: He meaneth not flattering words, or men-pleaſing words, but ſuch words as may profit men, or pleaſe men for their profit, that is (as the Apoſtle ſpeaks, Rom. 15. 2.) for their good to edification. Now, if we ſhould not provoke men, but ſeek to find out (in the ſence given) words acceptable to them, ſhould we not much more take heed of ſpeaking any thing to the provocation of God? ſhould we not ſeek to find out words of delight and acceptation with him, words of his Will, that is, words every way agreeable to his holy will?

Secondly, As Elihu feared ſuch a report ſhould be made to God,

Note, It is high preſumption to do or ſpeak amiſs, not fearing God ſhould know of it.

We are afraid to do that evil which may be reported to great perſons, who have power to puniſh us: If ſuch a man be told (ſay ſome) what we have done, what will become of us; Many are not afraid to do evil, who yet are afraid ſhould be told their betters what evil they have done. Servants will ſometimes thus check children in a Family, when they have done amiſs, We will tell your Father, we will do your errand to your Mother: that's a dreadful word to a child that hath any reverence of Father or Mother, to ſay, I will tell your Father and Mother of you. The Lord knoweth all that we do amiſs (as was ſaid before) though no man tell him; but ſhall it be told to God what ſuch and ſuch men ſpeak or do, and will they ſpeak or do it ſtill? ſhall it be told God what they ſpeak, and againſt whom they ſpeak? ſhall it be told God whom they reproach, whom they revile? and will they venture it? 'Tis dangerous when ſuch Tales are truly told in the ears of God againſt the men of the World; they were better have Tales told, and reports made againſt them to all the Princes of the earth, than to have reports made to God againſt them. To have a poor ſoul, upon juſt grounds, telling God what evil men have done againſt him, how they have ſlandred and reproached him, how they have oppreſt and vext him, will come at laſt to a ſad account againſt them. Shall it be told God that I ſpeak? ſaith Elihu) And ſhall it be told God that we do evil, and we regard it not? Shall we anſwer thoſe that tell us, they have told, or will tell God of our evil doings, as impudent children and ſervants do ſuch as threaten them with telling their Parents and Maſters of their evil doings, What care we? do if you will. O let us take heed how we do or ſpeak that, which, if told in the ears of God, may cauſe blame, and brings his diſpleaſure upon us. There are a ſort of Tale-bearers very odious in the ſight of God and all good men; ſuch are ſpoken of, (Prov. 11. 13. Prov. 18. 8.) But they who bring reports to God (as Joſeph did to his Father Jacob, concerning his brethren, Gen. 37. 2.) of the evils done by men, ſuch Tale bearers (if I may ſo call them) do but their duty; and as their reports are accepted with God, ſo they haſten wrath upon evil men (Luke 18. 7.) Shall it be told him that I ſpeak?

If a man ſpeak, ſurely he ſhall be ſwallowed up.

That is, if any man ſpeak, if a wiſe man ſpeak, and if he ſpeak as wiſely as he can, and place his words in the beſt order he can, yet if he ſhall deſire (as Job hath done) to come near unto God, and plead with him, ſurely he ſhall be ſwallowed up. Job, in the hotteſt of thoſe deſires to plead with God, did not (as hath formerly been noted in favour of him) challenge God; he did not think himſelf a Match for God in pleading his cauſe before him, he (good man) was far from ſuch a preſumptuous ſpirit: yet becauſe he inſiſted ſo much upon that deſire of pleading his cauſe with God, Elihu had reaſon to check him in ſuch language as this, If a man ſpeak, ſurely he ſhall be ſwallowed up. We that are duſt and aſhes may not be ſo bold with God, 'tis beſt for us to lie at his foot, and let him do what he will with us, only beg of him that we may improve his dealings, and profit by his corrections; if the wiſeſt and holieſt of men ſhall ſpeak otherwiſe, Surely they ſhall be

Si dixerit, Heb. ſcil. apud ſe, illud nempe, ſe velle talem ſermonem Deo narrare. Piſc.

Swallowed up.] The word implies, that a man ſo ſpeaking ſhall be ruined and brought to nought. Mr. Broughton renders, Would any man plead when he ſhall be undone? No man but a mad man would ſpeak in a buſineſs wherein he muſt needs be ruined. We ſay well, ſwallowed up, that is, both he and his underſtanding ſhall be utterly confounded. This phraſe of ſpeech is often uſed in Scripture when a greater power undertakes a leſſer: thus fire ſwalloweth up ſtubble, and oppreſſors their poor underlings. David ſaith of his enemies with reſpect to the greatneſs of their malice (Pſal. 56. 1. Pſal. 57. 3.) They would ſwallow me up. Poſſibly they had not power enough to do it, but they wanted no will to do it, They would ſwallow me up if they could, that is, they would make an utter end of me, or diſpatch me quite. So this word is uſed in ſeveral other places (Iſa. 28. 7.) They are ſwallowed up of wine. Some ſwallow down the wine ſo long, till the wine ſwallows them up, the wine gets the maſtery over them, and they are no longer (as we ſpeak proverbially) their own men. The Apoſtle gives order concerning the inceſtuous perſon that had been caſt out of the Church (2 Cor. 2. 5.) receive him (ſaith he) leſt he be ſwallowed up of over-much ſorrow, that is, leſt ſorrow get the maſtery of him. It is not good that the floods of ſorrow (though it be a ſorrow for ſin) ſhould prevail over us, ſo as to ſwallow us up in the gulph of deſpair. Again, while the Apoſtle aſſure us, and would have us triumph in that aſſurance, that death ſhall never do a godly man any hurt, he thus expreſſeth it (1 Cor. 15. 54.) Death is ſwallowed up in victory, that is, in and by the victory of Jeſus Chriſt: He, by dying, quite overcame death; he did not only wound it, and worſt it, or get the better of it, or rout it, but totally ruin'd it, as to any power of hurting us; all which, and whatſoever elſe concerns the death of death, and the deſtruction of the grave, is wrapt up in that one word, Death is ſwallowed up in victory. And therefore alſo it is ſaid by the ſame Apoſtle, (2Cor.5.4) Mortality ſhall be ſwallowed up of Life. Jeſus Chriſt hath brought in ſuch a life through the Goſpel, as ſhall at laſt put an utter end to Mortality. Our Mortality now by degrees puts an end to, or ſwalloweth up our Lives, but then Life will quite ſwallow up, or put an end to our Mortality; that is, our Mortality ſhall be quite removed and taken out of the way, by that Life which Chriſt hath purchaſed for his people by his own death. All theſe Scriptures ſhew the force of the word, here uſed by Elihu, when he ſaith, If a man ſpeak, ſurely he ſhall be ſwallowed up.

If a man ſpeak.] How? Or to whom? The anſwer is, If a man ſpeak to God, he ſhall be ſwallowed up. But ſhall every one that ſpeaks to God be ſwallowed up? Not ſo; therefore we muſt go to the manner of ſpeaking. If a man ſpeak to God, not keeping his diſtance, if a man ſpeak to God without a Mediatour, he ſhall be ſwallowed up, as a drop of water is ſwallowed up of the Ocean, or as a ſpark of fire is ſwallowed up with a great flame, or as the light of a Candle, or Glow-worm is ſwallowed up by the Sun; there is no ſtanding for the Creature before God, in ſuch a nearneſs of acceſs, but by faith in a mediator; If a man ſpeak, he ſhall be ſwallowed up. Man is no match for God, or he is a moſt unequal match.

Perdetur vir ille fulgore celſitudinis & Majeſtatis ejus perſtrictus.

Yet further, theſe words may note the conqueſt of the mind or underſtanding of man, by an object which is too high and excellent for it; for then his thoughts, yea and his Reaſon too, are ſwallowed up, and he is carried out of himſelf, as a man in an extaſie or trance. When St. Paul was caught up to the third Heavens, and heard unſpeakable words, he was ſwallowed up with the greatneſs of the matter, and was in a divine extaſie, whether in the Body he could not tell, or whether out of the Body he could not tell (2Cor.12.2,3,4.) Thus (ſaith Elihu) ſhall that man be ſwallowed up, who overboldly ſpeaks to God about the great myſteries of providence, or about any matter too high for him. And therefore, O Job, thou haſt not done well to ſpeak ſo often of pleading with God; and ſurely, if any man after thy example, ſpeak complainingly of what God hath done, or himſelf hath ſuffered at the hand of God, he is ſure to be undone, He ſhall be ſwallowed up.

Hence Obſerve, Man is not able to bear the Glory and Majeſty of God.

God dwells in the light which no man can approach unto (1Tim.6.16.) Mans darkneſs is not able to comprehend Gods light; if he venture too near it, he will ſoon be ſwallowed up. The Vulgar Latine renders that place (Prov. 25.27.) He that is a ſearcher of Majeſty ſhall be oppreſſed by the Glory; that is, whoſoever ſearcheth boldly into the Majeſty of God, ſhall be ſwallowed up by the Glory of God. We tranſlate that Text in the Proverbs thus, For men to ſearch their own Glory, is no Glory. There is a truth in the former tranſlation, though it be not a true tranſlation, for, a man that ſearcheth into the Majeſty of God, ſhall be over-powred with his Glory. And as man is ſoon over-powered, or ſwallowed up by the Majeſty of God, ſo alſo by and in the myſteries of God. Chriſt told his Diſciples (John 16.12.) That he had many things to ſay unto them, which they were not able to bear. If they who had received ſo much grace, could not bear the deeper myſteries of the Goſpel, ſpoken to them by Chriſt clothed with frail fleſh, how much leſs can any man bear the Majeſty of God in ſpeaking to him, or, God ſpeaking to him in his Majeſty! And ſo ſome tranſlate and read the words of Elihu in the Text under hand, For if he ſpeak, man ſhall be devoured or ſwallowed up, that is, if God ſpeak, man (who before thought himſelf Somebody, or that he was able to reaſon with him) will be quite confounded in himſelf by the infinite wiſdom of God, his tongue will faulter or cleave to the roof of his mouth, and he rendred unable to ſpeak one word in his own defence. Moſes (*Exod.*19.12.) was commanded to ſet bounds about Mount Horeb, that the people might not come too near; the reaſon was, that the people might by thoſe bounds be warned, not to be curious or over bold in their approaches to the Majeſty of God, nor over-buſie in prying into his Secrets. As if it had been ſaid, if you come too near, you will be even ſwallowed up. Moſes repeating to the Iſraelites the terrible Majeſty of God in giving the Law at Mount Horeb, minds them in what a trembling frame they then were (*Deut.*5. 24,25,26.) And ye ſaid, Behold the Lord our God hath ſhewed us his Glory, and his greatneſs, and we have heard his voice out of the midſt of the fire; we have ſeen this day that God doth talk with man, and he liveth (which implieth, that man, in this life, cannot bear the fuller manifeſtation of God, and live) Now therefore, why ſhould we die? For this great fire will conſume us: If we hear the voice of God any more, then we ſhall die. What was that great fire? It is God himſelf, that is, an extraordinary appearance of God, who is ſeveral times in Scripture expreſt by fire. As if they had ſaid, We acknowledg that we have had wonderful condeſcenſion and mercy from God, that we have heard ſome ſpeak and live; but, that we live, is not only a mercy but a miracle; therefore we poor worms dare not run the hazzard a ſecond time, if we hear him ſpeak any more, we ſhall die: Therefore they deſired Moſes (who in that was a type of Chriſt, Gal. 3. 19.) to go near, and be as a Mediator between them and God, that they might not have to do with God immediately, but receive the Law by his hand. Such is the infinite Majeſty of God (though it will be our bleſſedneſs, in the next life, for ever to enjoy it) that here in this life we are not able to receive it. The Glory of God is ſo pure, that man clothed with corruptible fleſh and blood cannot ſtand before it; the very glimpſes of it aſtoniſh, and leave us for dead, Rev. 1. 16, 17. Man muſt die before he can ſee God and live; his Body muſt be glorified before, he can bear that weight of Glory, which conſiſts in beholding the face of God, or, in knowing him (in our proportion) as we are known (1Cor.13. 12.)

Qui perſcrutator eſt Majeſtatis opprimetur à gloria. Vulg.

But though (as the Iſraelites there ſaid of themſelves) we cannot hear God ſpeak and live, yet cannot we ſpeak to God and live, or, and not be ſwallowed up?

I anſwer it in theſe three things. Firſt, If a man ſpeak to God, as queſtioning his dealings with him, or, as calling God to an account (which in ſome ſence Job did, and therein went beyond his line) he ſhall be ſwallowed up.

Secondly, If any man ſpeak to God, as preſuming that he can compaſs, fathom, and underſtand God, or all the dealings of God with man, that man ſhall ſurely be ſwallowed up. The thoughts of God are above our thoughts, and his ways above our ways, as high as the Heaven is above the Earth, Iſa.55.9.

Thirdly, If we ſpeak to God in our own name, or in a ſelf-righteouſneſs, then alſo we ſhall ſurely be ſwallowed up. Job (as we have acquitted him before, never attempted to ſpeak to God in his own righteouſneſs, though he often magnified his own righteouſneſs both before and towards men. Woe to all the righteouſneſs of man before the moſt righteous God. But Job was too bold (according to the firſt anſwer) in asking an account, or a reaſon of God, concerning his ſufferings; there was his failing, and for that he received this check by Elihu, If a man ſpeak, he ſhall be ſwallowed up.

The meaneſt, the pooreſt believing Soul may come and ſpeak, and ſpeak boldly to God in the name of Jeſus Chriſt (*Heb.*4.16.) Thus we may come and welcome, coming thus we ſhall not be ſwallowed up with the Majeſty, much leſs with the wrath or diſpleaſure of God. If coming thus we are ſwallowed up, it will be only with the love and favour of God, with the goodneſs and kindneſs of God: And to be ſwallowed up thus, will be the ſweeteſt morſel that ever we ſwallowed, even perfect bleſſedneſs and life [illegible] evermore. When once death is ſwallowed up in victory, and mortality of life, then ſhall we be ſwallowed up in glory. And therefore whatſoever the Lord doth with us or ours in this World, let us be ſilent before him, humbly adoring his Soveraignty and Wiſdom, not in the leaſt queſtioning either his Righteouſneſs or his Goodneſs; for if a man ſpeak ſo, Surely he ſhall be dreadfully ſwallowed up.

VERS. 21, 22.

And now men ſee not the bright light which is in the Clouds: But the wind paſſeth and cleanſeth them.
Fair weather cometh out of the North: With God is terrible Majeſty.

THE two verſes laſt opened, may be taken as a Parentheſis to the former diſcourſe concerning Gods wonderful works in Nature forming thoſe dreadful impreſſions of Thunder and Lightening, Storms and Tempeſt, in the Air; whereby Elihu having repreſt (as he ſuppoſed) the ſwelling of Job's Spirit, by calling him to teach them what to ſay to God in his cauſe, for they (as he had handled it) could not order their ſpeech, by reaſon of darkneſs, nor durſt Elihu venture that it ſhould be told God, he intended to ſpeak, knowing, or foreſeeing that he made ſuch an attempt, he might ſoon be ſwallowed up by the incomprehenſible greatneſs and glory of God.

Elihu, I ſay, having made this little diverſion, or digreſſion (as he had done ſometimes before) to cool and calm the Spirit of Job, he returns to his former matter, in theſe words, and conſider further the works of God, in thoſe higher Regions, the Aerial Heavens, how he muffles up, and covers the light, and how he unvails and opens it again by his own power, and according to the pleaſure of his will. The words are plain, according to our tranſlation; I ſhall open them briefly as they are here ſet down; and then give out a further reading of them, which raiſes the ſcope and intendment of Elihu yet higher.

Verſe 21. And now men ſee not the bright light which is in the Clouds.

And now.] Some have conjectured, that at this very inſtant of time while Elihu was diſcourſing, there hapned a ſudden change in the Air, or in the face of the Heavens; therefore he ſaith, and now, do not the Heavens grow dark, ſo that men cannot ſee the bright light which is in the Clouds? As if here were a preparation to that Whirlwind or Tempeſt, out of which God himſelf is ſaid to ſpeak to Job, at the beginning of the next Chapter.

Yet, I apprehend, we need not expound the word [now] ſo ſtrictly, with reſpect to the preſent ſeaſon or moment of time, but rather to the preſent matter; as we often uſe that particle Now, both in ſpeech and writing, not ſo much to denote the direct inſtant, or preſent time, as for a leading word to the matter which is to follow.

And, now men ſee not (or they cannot ſee) the bright light which is in the Clouds.

Light is the moſt viſible thing in the World; though indeed we are not ſo properly ſaid to ſee the Light at all, as to ſee all things by the light; for it is Light which maketh manifeſt, as the Apoſtle ſpeaks (Epheſ. 5. 13.) But though light be (in Vulgar ſenſe) ſo viſible in its own Nature, and (in ſtricteſt ſenſe) that which maketh all things viſible, yet by accident, or by ſome providential interpoſition, light it ſelf is not always to be ſeen. Light is often hidden from our eyes, and then (as Elihu ſpeaks here) men ſee not the bright light. The word which we tranſlate bright light, ſignifies the whiteneſs of Snow, and I find it applied (Levit. 13. 2.) to the whiteneſs of Leproſie; if there ſhall appear in the fleſh a bright (or ſhining) ſpot, a ſpot like Snow, then, &c. And hence it is ſaid of Gehazi (2 Kings 5. 27.) that when his Maſter called him to an account about his going after Naaman, and found him faltering and faulty, he laid that ſore Judgment upon him, The Leproſie therefore of Naaman ſhall cleave unto thee and unto thy ſeed for ever; and he went out of his preſenc[illegible] Leper as white as Snow. It is this word, which ſignifies, as any extraordinary whiteneſs and clearneſs, ſo the clearneſs and whiteneſs of Snow in particular, which hath a kind of tranſparency in it, and is full of light: Yet the light which is in the Clouds when the Sun ſhineth, is much more bright than Snow. Now, men ſee not the bright light

Which is in the Clouds.] Or, in the Skie; for the word here uſed (as hath been ſhewed before) ſignifies the Skie, the Firmament, and ſometimes the Air, as well as the Clouds, and it imports the natural thinneſs of thoſe Cœleſtial Bodies, in that higher and upper Region of the World. Men ſee not the bright light which is in the Clouds. Light is properly in the Sun; the Sun is the Veſſel, the Vehicle, the Seat, the Chariot of Light; but as Light is in the Sun ſubjectively, ſo Light is in the Clouds objectively, and alſo as they are a Medium through which the Light is conveighed and paſſeth to us. Yet ſometimes men ſee not that bright Light which is in the Clouds, for Clouds being very thick or thickened, they become to us as an opacous Body, through which the Light can neither find nor make its way, and then there's no beholding the Light of the Sun ſhining upon them in its greateſt brightneſs; while the Air is thus Clouded, Men ſee not the bright light which is in the Clouds.

שחק Æthera tenui ejus ſubſtantia, nam שחק ſignificat comminuere. Druſ.

Hence Note, God can make that which is moſt viſible in it ſelf, inviſible unto us.

There is always bright Light in the Air, when and where the Sun is up, and gotten above the Horizon. The Sun ſhines continually, how dark ſoever the weather be; but God can draw ſuch a Curtain of Clouds, Vapours and Miſts, in the day time, between us and the bright face of the Sun, that we cannot behold it. Light always is, but Light is not always to be ſeen; when Clouds come between, the Sun is darkened in the clear day.

We may infer as a further improvement of natural things, to thoſe which are ſpiritual, that the light of God's face or countenance, that is, the light of his favour, ſhines ever towards his faithful Servants, though it be not always ſeen. Clouds coming between may ſhadow them from that bleſſed Light (Pſal. 97. 2.) Clouds and darkneſs are round about him, that is, his diſpenſations are dark and cloudy; yet, as then, Righteouſneſs and Judgment are the habitation of his Throne, that is, as then he doth right to all ſorts of men, ſo, then alſo Mercies and Loving-kindneſs ſtand round about his Throne, or, as the Apoſtle expreſſeth it (Heb. 4. 16.) his Throne is then, A Throne of Grace, that is, he hath Grace or Favour in his heart, to beſtow upon all his People, who come to him, not with a preſuming, but a believing boldneſs. Our ſins and tranſgreſſions are called, a Cloud, a thick Cloud (Iſa. 44. 22.) I have blotted out as a thick Cloud thy tranſgreſſions, and as a Cloud thy ſins. Sins are Clouds, and thoſe Clouds often hinder us from ſeeing the bright light of the face of God ſhining upon us; and as our ſins uſually hinder us from ſeeing that bright light which is in the face of God, ſo God ſometimes to try the graces, the faith, the patience of his people, or to ſee what they will do, how they will behave themſelves in a dark and deſerted ſtate (God I ſay, ſometimes for theſe and ſuch like ends) with-draws himſelf, and will not ſuffer them to ſee the bright light of his pleaſed face. As the light of the things of this World, ſo of that other and better World, is often hid, or the comfort of them is concealed from us. Light is ſown for the Righteous; it doth not always ſpring up and appear to the righteous. Luther chiefly inſiſts upon this myſtical interpretation or application of the Text, giving it out by way of ſimilitude; As (ſaith he) the light of the Sun is many times covered with a Cloud, and ſometimes hindred by Eclipſes, ſo the light of comfort, or peace and joy in this World, is hidden from the eyes of the people of God; yet by and by he ſends a comfortable and powerful gale, to blow away or diſperſe thoſe Clouds, and then the light of his countenance and favour ſhines freely upon them again. And let this be remembred, that when their day is a day of darkneſs and gloomineſs, yet the Light ſhines ſtill, the favour of God is towards them ſtill, though it appears not; and when they have been a while exerciſed under this darkneſs, light will return as it followeth in the Text, Men ſee not the bright light which is in the Clouds,

But the wind paſſeth and cleanſeth them.

The wind paſſeth.] Queſt. But what is the wind?

Anſw. The wind is a hot and dry exhalation, raiſed from the Earth by the power of the Heavenly Bodies, which being repell'd or forced back by the coldneſs of the middle Region, moves obliquely or ſlantingly, ſometimes very violently through the Air. The Latine word (ventus) ſignifying the wind, is derived by ſome Grammarians from a word (vehementia) noting the vehement or forcible motion of it, or as others (a veniendo) from a word ſignifying to come, becauſe it comes this way and that way, at times every way; or as our bleſſed Saviour expreſſeth it (John 3. 8.) The wind bloweth where it liſteth, and thou heareſt the ſound thereof, but canſt not tell whence it cometh, and whither it goeth.

The ſupream or ſupernatural cauſe, both making and moderating or governing the wind, is God himſelf: For though that Text in the Holy Goſpel laſt mentioned ſaith, The wind bloweth where it liſteth, yet is to be underſtood only in reference to man; it bloweth where it liſteth, for all man, man can neither direct it, nor controul or check it. But as to God, the wind bloweth where he liſteth, not where it ſelf liſteth; 'tis he who gathereth the wind in his fiſts (Prov.30.4.) 'Tis he who bringeth them out of his treaſures (Pſal.135.7.)

The natural remote cauſe of the wind, is the power of the Sun and Stars (as Philoſophers well agreeing with reaſon tell us) drawing up theſe exhalations, and attenuating them into a fitneſs for that purpoſe.

The natural, near, or next cauſe (ſay they) of the winds, is the coldneſs of the middle Region, which will not ſuffer the aſpiring exhalation to riſe higher, but thruſts it back, and ſo it moves hither or thither, ſide-wiſe, or along this lower Region of the Air towards the Earth, doing thoſe ſervices, and ſometimes ſtrange exploits, with which experience acquaints us daily.

By this Meteor, the wind, the life of man is in a great meaſure maintained. For though it be a truth, that no man can live (as we ſay) by the Air; yet it is as true, that no man can live without the Air: Did not the Lungs inſpire and expire, draw in and ſend out freſh Air, man would ſoon be ſuffocated and die; and tis moſt certain, that the heart, and blood, and whole Body of man, are very much affected, according to the nature of the Wind or Air, in which they breath. Pliny tells us, that man may live without food ſeven days, but no man can live one hour, being wholy intercluded from Wind and Air. And hence the Latine word (anima) which ſignifies the Soul, not only as to the ſubſtance of it, (which is immortal) but as to the ſubſiſtence of it in the Body (in which reſpect 'tis mortal, being no more than life, this word I ſay in the Latine) is ſuppoſed to come from that Greek word (ἄνεμος) which properly ſignifies the wind. The ſame notion of life may be collected from the Hebrew word Nepheſh, wnich is indifferently tranſlated, Soul, Life, Wind. And ſo the life of man is not only called Wind, (as Job called his, *Chap.*7.7.) becauſe of the frailty or ſpeedy paſſing of it away; but becauſe the continuance or abiding of it in the Body, is by the taking in and ſending out of Wind.

I have already at the 9. verſe of this Chapter, ſhewed the ſeveral uſes which God hath appointed the winds unto, both in a way of Mercy, and of Judgment: They purge the Air, they gather the Clouds for Rain, they ſcatter them, and ſo make fair weather, they move the waters, which otherwiſe by ſtanding ſtill would putrifie, corrupt, and grow unwholſome, yea infectious both to man and Beaſt, they refreſh the Earth, and cauſe all ſorts of Vegetables to flouriſh, they are alſo, as it were, the food and nouriſhment, the meat and drink of mans life; there's no living without them.

I ſhall not ſtay further to diſcourſe or diſcover the nature and the wonders, or the wonderful nature of the wind, having done ſomwhat towards it (as was ſaid) before at the ninth verſe. Only take notice of this uſe of the wind, with reſpect to the Clouds, mentioned expreſly in this Text, The wind paſſeth

And cleanſeth them.] It was ſaid in that former part of this Chapter (where Elihu ſpake of the wind) That the Winds are the brooms of Heaven, they ſweep the Heavens, they drive away the Clouds, the Miſts and Foggs which dull and obfuſcate the Air. The expreſſion here in the Text ſorts well with that Metaphor, The wind paſſeth and cleanſeth them, that is, the wind paſſing through the Air, cleanſeth it from thoſe Clouds, and ſo cauſeth the light of the Sun to ſhine forth freely and fully to us again. The wind at one time gathers the Clouds, and the wind at another time ſcatters them: The wind is a cleanſer. So much is ſuppoſed in that Negative expreſſion (Jer. 4. 11.) where the Lord threatens to ſend a high wind from the Wilderneſs, but not to fan nor to cleanſe. I (ſaith the Lord) will ſend a high wind; but to what purpoſe? Not for thoſe profitable and comfortable purpoſes, to fan, cool, and cleanſe the Air, but rather to wither and blaſt the fruits of the Earth, or to overthrow and bear down all before it. The Text in hand ſpeaks of a comfortable purpoſe of God in letting the wind out of his Treaſures, it bloweth away the Clouds which obſtruct the paſſage of the light to us: The wind paſſeth and cleanſeth them.

Hence Note, What-ever ſtands in the way of our comforts, God can quickly remove it.

When Clouds cover the light from us, God hath his wind ready to chaſe them away, and clear up the weather. Never did any ſuch thick and dark Cloud of ſorrow and trouble hang over the heads, or fill the hearts of the people of God, but he had means at hand to diſpel and ſcatter it, or he could ſcatter it himſelf without means. When dreadful Clouds of danger looked black upon and threatned the Church of God during the Reign of Julian the Apoſtate, Athanaſius ſaid, It is but a little Cloud, a wind will ſhortly cleanſe it away. His meaning was, now we are compaſſed about with fear and trouble, but peace and proſperity will not ſtay long before they return.

Nubecula eſt, cito tranſibit.

This is true alſo if we carry it yet in a more ſpiritual way, as to thoſe Clouds of ſorrow which often darken and afflict our minds in the midſt of outward proſperity, or in the cleareſt Sun-ſhine-day of peace that ever was in this World; when theſe inward Clouds dwell, as it were, upon the Soul, the Lord hath a wind which paſſeth and cleanſeth them away too. What is that wind? It is his holy Spirit. The word in the Text, is uſed often to ſignifie, not only the natural wind in the Air, but that Divine wind the Holy Ghoſt, who is compared unto the wind in many places of Scripture, and his operations are like thoſe of the wind: For as the wind bloweth where it liſteth, we hear the ſound thereof, but know not whence it cometh, nor whither it goeth; ſo (ſaith Chriſt) is every one that is born of the Spirit (John 3.8.) And as our Regeneration is wrought by that ſecret, yet ſtrong and powerful wind, ſo likewiſe is our conſolation. The Spirit of God doth thoſe offices in our hearts which the winds do in the Air: As the wind diſpels and ſweeps away the Clouds which are gathered there; ſo the Spirit of God cleanſeth our Souls from thoſe Clouds and foggs of ignorance and unbelief, of ſin and luſt, which are gathered in, and would, elſe, abide for ever upon our hearts. From all theſe Clouds the holy Spirit of God cleanſeth us in the work of Regeneration: And from all thoſe Clouds which trouble our Conſciences, the holy Spirit cleanſeth us in the work of Conſolation.

Bolduc.

Some Interpreters expound the words only in this myſtical ſenſe, quite rejecting the proper. But though, by alluſion, we may improve the words to this ſpiritual ſenſe, yet doubtleſs Elihu ſpeaks here of the winds properly taken, or of the natural winds, and their ſenſible effects; and ſo, according to our reading, this Text, as it hath been opened, teacheth us what ſudden changes God makes in the Air. Now the light is ſhut up, or ſhut in, and anon it is let out again, and all by the powerful hand of God, who doth adminiſter theſe things to us interchangeably, as himſelf pleaſeth.

Secondly, The Text, according to another reading (which others inſiſt much upon, and conceive pertinent to the ſcope of Elihu) runs thus; For now men cannot ſee the bright light in the Clouds, when the wind paſſeth and cleanſeth them. Mr. Broughton tranſlates clearly ſo, his words are theſe; And now men cannot look upon the light, when it is bright in the Air, then a wind paſſeth and cleanſeth it. And then the ſence of the whole verſe is plainly a ſetting forth of the excellency, or ſuperexcellency rather, of the light of the Sun, which is ſo clear and ſplendid, that if the Air be but cleanſed from Clouds, if it be but a pure Air, no man is able to face it, nor his eye directly to behold it. We behold all things by the light of the Sun, but no man can ſtedfaſtly behold the light in the Sun; no man can look right up to the Sun, when it caſts forth its fiery rays, and ſhineth bright upon us. And this ſome conceive ſo genuine and clear an expoſition of the Text, that the light of it may ſeem to obſcure and darken all others. Now, according to this ſecond reading, the whole verſe, with that which followeth, contains an argument to confirm the former propoſition, laid down at the 20. verſe: If a man ſpeak, he ſhall be ſwallowed up, that is, if a man come too nigh unto God, and be over-bold with him, he ſhall even be ſwallowed up of his brightneſs and that it is ſo, I prove thus (ſaith Elihu) The very light of the Sun, which ſhines in the Air, is ſo bright and ſo powerful, that no man is able to hold up his eyes againſt it: And if ſo, then from the leſſer to the greater, his argument riſeth thus; If when the Sun ſhineth brightly, no man is able to look upon it, then much leſs are we able to behold the bright Majeſty of God, or to comprehend his greatneſs. This rendring hath a very profitable ſenſe in it, leading Job to reaſon thus with himſelf, I plainly ſee by all that hath been diſcourſed, that for as much as I am not able to bear the brightneſs, which breaks through the Clouds, nor the noiſe of Thunder (of which Elihu ſpake before) for as much as I am not able to bear the fierceneſs of a great Rain, nor the coldneſs of the Froſt, nor the impetuouſneſs of the Wind, nor the violence of a Tempeſt, for as much as I am not able to bear the clear light of the Sun ſhining in my face, therefore ſurely I am much leſs able to bear the Majeſty and Glory of God, if he would unvail or open himſelf unto me. Thus I ſay, Elihu leads Job to an humbling conviction, that he could not ſtand before the glorious Majeſty of God, becauſe he was not able to endure the brightneſs of the Sun ſhining upon him. If the light of the Sun, the Created light, be too excellent for mortal eyes, then what is God the Created light? What is God, who dwelleth in light, who is light, and in whom there is no darkneſs at all? 'Tis a Maxim in Nature, A viſible object exceeding bright, dazles the eye, and even deſtroys the ſight. And why was all this ſpoken to Job? Surely to bring him upon his knees (as afterwards it did) to humble him, to take him off from his frequent appeals or deſires of approach to God for the debate and determination of his cauſe. The ſum of all in a word is as if Elihu had ſaid, O Job, thou canſt not ſee the bright light of the Air, if the Wind do but fan it and cleanſe the Clouds, how then ſhalt thou be able to diſpute thy cauſe before God, to whom the moſt glorious light of the Sun, is but a Cloud, yea but as a clod of Earth? The next words carry on this conviction yet further.

Jam enim non reſpiciciunt (homines) lucem (quum) nitida eſt in ſuperioribus nutibus, quas ventus tranſiens purgavit. Tranſlatio Jun.

Nemo poteſt adverſis oculis nitidum ſolem contueri, quis ergo ferat præſentiam Majeſtatis Dei. Jun.

Excellens viſibile viſum deſtruit.

Verſe 22. Fair weather cometh out of the North: with God is terrible Majeſty.

The former part of this verſe hath a reſpect to the latter part of the former; The wind paſſeth and cleanſeth them, fair (or bright) weather cometh out of the North. It hath been ſhewed before in opening the 9. verſe of this Chapter, that the South wind ingenders the Rain, and cauſeth foul weather, here (ſaith Elihu) fair weather cometh out of the North. The North wind (ſaith Solomon, Prov. 25. 22.) driveth away Rain, ſo doth an angry countenance a backbiting tongue. The North wind blows coldly, yet it blows clearly, it clears the Air from Clouds. We render, Fair weather cometh out of the North. The word tranſlated fair weather, ſignifieth Gold; Gold cometh out of the North. Fair weather in its ſeaſon, is worth much Gold, and may be called Golden weather; the Sun in ſuch ſeaſons gilds both the Air and Earth with his precious beams. And I find an ancient Interpreter ſticking much upon the ſtrict ſignification of the Hebrew word, maintaining that Gold is to be taken here properly; Out of the North cometh Gold, becauſe (ſaith he) in the Northern Countries, through the greatneſs of Cold, the heat in thoſe parts is ſo pent in the bowels of the Earth, that it more fully concocts and refines the Gold, than in other places: Out of the North comes Gold, that is, the pureſt Gold. But, I conceive, that was not all the buſineſs of Elihu here; and I find the Scripture in another place expreſſing that which is ſhining, beautiful, and precious, by Gold. (Zach. 4. 12.) The oil with the two Olive-branches emptied out of themſelves through the two Golden pipes, is called Gold, or Golden oil, that is, bright oil, pure oil; and ſo becauſe the light of the Sun ſhining in fair weather is purer and more defecate than the pureſt Gold, therefore this Scripture expreſſeth it by Gold; through the North a Golden cometh, ſaith Mr. Broughton.
